START

Microfilmed By:

NORTHEAST DOCUMENT CONSERVATION CENTER
Andover, MA 01810

DECEMBER 1993

Camera Operator:
Kathy Wilder

MASTER NEGATIVE NUMBER: BSO-56-008

MICROFILMED
August 1993 - April 1994

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCRAPBOOK MICROFILMING PROJECT

Funded in part by

THE NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE HUMANITIES

Grant No. PS-20709-93

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MICROFILMING PROJECT

A Cooperative Project Between the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives and the Boston Public Library (August 1993 - April 1994)

The Microfilming Project incorporates two collections of scrapbooks housed in two separate repositories. The first set of scrapbooks (80 volumes) resides within the Allen A. Brown Collection of the Boston Public Library (BPL) Music Department. Their call number is M.125.5. The second set of scrapbooks (132 volumes) resides within the Press Clippings collection of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (BSO) Archives. They have the designation Pres 56.

The BPL scrapbooks begin with the founding of the BSO in 1881 and continue, through 79 seasons, to 1960. Articles consist mainly of reviews and feature stories from Boston and New York newspapers. Occasionally, magazine articles and press releases are also included. The scrapbooks cover most aspects of the BSO.

The BSO scrapbooks run from 1889, the Orchestra's 9th season, to 1973. In addition to local reviews and features, the volumes contain articles culled from national and international publications. The scrapbooks document, in detail, all aspects of the BSO: The Symphony Orchestra (including subscription concerts, tours, and trips), the Boston Pops, the Tanglewood Festival, the Tanglewood Music Center, and Symphony Hall.

The two sets of scrapbooks have been filmed as two separate entities. Researchers wanting to look at specific seasons or subjects must examine both sets of films to ensure full coverage.

The scrapbooks do not represent the complete holdings of either location on the subject of the BSO.

Requests for positive microfilm copies of individual rolls, or of film sets, should be directed to the respective repository:

Music Department
Boston Public Library
Post Office Box 286
Boston, MA 02117

Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives
Symphony Hall
Boston, MA 02115

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCRAPBOOKS

1889 - 1973

132 VOLUMES

Source: Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives

FINDING AID

Boston Symphony Orchestra Scrapbooks (Series 56, Sub-Series 1)

Source: Press Office (Office of the Public Relations Director)

The BSO scrapbooks comprise part of one series in the BSO Archives. Series 56, Press Clippings, is divided by format into 3 sub-series: 1) Scrapbooks, 1889-1973 (132 volumes); 2) Loose Clippings, 1931-1991 (9 record cartons); and 3) Oversize Newspapers and Journals, 1919-1979 (1 oversize box). Each sub-series is arranged chronologically.

The scrapbooks contain concert notices and reviews, record reviews, and feature articles. Early scrapbooks may also contain programs, tickets, and subscription orders. Materials are organized by concert season into the following categories: BSO (including tours); Kneisel Quartet (and later Boston Symphony Chamber Players); Boston Pops (referred to in early years as Promenade concerts); and Tanglewood (including the Tanglewood Music Center, the Tanglewood Festival, Tanglewood-on-Parade, and the Fromm Festival of Contemporary Music).

Reviews and articles cover a wide range of subjects: Founder H.L. Higginson; BSO conductors, players, trustees, and other personnel; guest artists and composers; BSO and Pops performances and recordings; U.S. and overseas tours; BSO/Cecilia Society joint performances; open rehearsals; and special events connected to anniversary celebrations and fundraising.

Feature stories document changes in the size, composition, and location of the orchestra. Topics include the hiring of women and minorities; the unionization of players; controversies (such as the internment of conductor Karl Muck during World War II); the sale of the old Music Hall; and the construction of Symphony Hall and other structures (such as the Koussevitsky Music Shed at Tanglewood).

Reproductions of the materials in the collection may not be made without permission from the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives.

GUIDE TO CONTENTS

Institution: BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Series Name: PRESS CLIPPINGS
Series Number: 56
Series Dates: 1889-1991

Sub-series Name: SCRAPBOOKS
Sub-series Number: 1
Sub-series Dates: 1889-1973

VOLUME LISTING

VOL	TITLE	DATES
1	BSO	1889-1890
2	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1890-1891
3	BSO	1891-1892
4	Promenade (Pops)	1892
5	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1892-1893
6	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1893-1894
7	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1894-1895
8	BSO	1895-1896
9	Promenade (Pops)	1895-1896
10	BSO	1896-1897
11	BSO	1897-1898
12	Promenade (Pops)	1897-1898
13	BSO	1898-1899
14	BSO	1899-1900
15	Pops	1899-1900
16	BSO	1900-1901
17	BSO	1901-1902
18	Pops	1901-1903
19	BSO	1902-1903
20	BSO	1903-1904
21	BSO	1904-1905
22	Pops	1904-1905
23	BSO	1905-1906
24	BSO	1906-1907
25	BSO	1907-1908
26	BSO	1908-1909
27	BSO Pops	1909-1910
28	BSO Pops	1910-1911
29	BSO Advertisements	1910-1911
30	BSO Pops	1911-1912
31	BSO Pops	1912-1913
32	BSO Pops	1913-1914
33	BSO Pops	1914-1915
34	BSO Pops	1915-1916
35	BSO Pops	1916-1917
36	BSO Pops	1917-1918
37	Karl Muck	1918
38	BSO Pops	1918-1919
39	BSO Pops	1919-1920
40	BSO Advertisements	1919-1920
41	BSO Pops	1920-1921
42	BSO Pops	1921-1922
43	BSO BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1922-1923
44	BSO Pops	1922-1924
45	BSO Pops	1924
46	BSO BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1924-1926
47	BSO Pops	1925-1926
48	BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1926-1927
49	BSO Pops	1926-1928
50	BSO	1928
51	BSO Pops	1928-1929
52	BSO Pops U.S. Tour	1929-1930
53	BSO	1930-1931
54	BSO Pops	1931-1932
55	BSO Pops	1932-1933
56	BSO	1933-1934
57	BSO	1934-1935
58	BSO	1935-1936
59	BSO	1936-1937

VOL	TITLE	DATES
60	Pops Tanglewood	1936-1937
61	BSO	1937
62	BSO	1937-1938
63	Pops Tanglewood	1938
64	BSO	1938-1939
65	Pops Tanglewood	1939
66	BSO	1939-1940
67	Tanglewood	1939-1941
68	BSO Pops	1940
69	BSO	1940-1941
70	Tanglewood	1940-1944
71	BSO	1941-1942
72	BSO	1942-1943
73	BSO	1943-1944
74	BSO Pops Tanglewood	1944-1945
75	BSO Pops Tanglewood	1945-1946
76	BSO Pops Tanglewood	1946-1947
77	Tanglewood	1947-1948
78	BSO	1947-1949
79	Tanglewood	1949-1950
80	BSO	1949-1951
81	Tanglewood	1950-1951
82	BSO Pops	1951-1952
83	BSO Pops	1952-1953
84	Tanglewood	1952-1953
85	BSO	1953-1955
86	Tanglewood	1953-1954
87	Tanglewood	1954-1955
88	BSO Pops	1955-1956
89	Tanglewood	1955-1956
90	Tanglewood	1955-1956
91	European Tour	1956
92	European Tour	1956-1957
93	BSO Pops	1956-1957
94	Tanglewood	1957
95	BSO	1957-1958
96	BSO Pops	1958-1959
97	BSO	1958-1959
98	Tanglewood	1958-1959
99	Tanglewood	1959
100	BSO Pops	1959-1960
101	Tanglewood	1959-1960
102	Far Eastern Tour	1959-1960
103	BSO Pops	1960-1961
104	Tanglewood	1961
105	BSO Pops	1961-1962
106	Tanglewood	1962
107	BSO Pops	1962-1963
108	Tanglewood	1963
109	BSO Pops	1963-1964
110	Tanglewood	1963-1964
111	BSO Pops	1964-1966
112	Tanglewood	1965
113	BSO 85th Anniversary	1965
114	BSO Pops	1965-1966
115	Tanglewood	1966
116	BSO Pops	1966-1967
117	Tanglewood	1967
118	BSO Pops	1967-1968
119	Tanglewood	1968-1969
120	BSO Pops	1968-1969
121	Tanglewood	1969
122	BSO Pops	1969-1970
123	Tanglewood	1970
124	BSO Pops	1970-1971
125	Tanglewood	1971
126	BSO Pops	1971-1972
127	European Tour	1970-1971
128	European Tour	1971
129	Tanglewood	1972
130	BSO Pops	1972-1973
131	Tanglewood	1973
132	BSO Pops	1973-1974

MATERIALS NOT FILMED

SUB-SERIES NUMBER	SUB-SERIES NAME	SUB-SERIES DATES
2	Loose Clippings	1931-1991
3	Oversize Newspapers and Journals	1919-1979

COPYRIGHT STATEMENT

The copyright law of the Unites States - Title 17, United States Code - concerns the making of photocopies or other reproductions of copyrighted material.

Under certain conditions specified in the law, libraries and archives are authorized to furnish a photocopy or other reproduction. One of these specified conditions is that the photocopy or other reproduction is not to be "used for any purpose other than private study, scholarship, or research." If a user makes a request for, or later uses, a photocopy or reproduction for purposes in excess of "fair use," that user may be liable for copyright infringement.

This institution reserves the right to refuse to accept a copy order if, in its judgment, fulfillment of the order would involve violation of the copyright law.

TECHNICAL DATA

IMAGE PLACEMENT: (IA) IB IIA IIB

REDUCTION RATION: 12X

FILM STOCK:

REEL 8

Volume 15-17

Pops
1899-1900
to
BSO
1901-1902

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

3.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

MULTIPLE EXPOSURES DUE TO COLOR VARIATIONS AND OVERLAPPING MATERIAL

VOLUME 15

Pops

1899 - 1900

SHIPMAN'S
Invoice & Scrap
BOOK

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL. | BOSTON, MONDAY, MAY 8, 1899. | SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIV. No. 1.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

Save half your money

do not throw it away in half-smoked cigars! You will find that 50% of your cigar money is thrown away every day if you recall how few cigars you really have time to smoke "up."

BETWEEN THE ACTS

Little Cigars

are pure—clean—all good tobacco, and are in every way a very satisfactory short smoke. While you are listening to the music to-night, try a 10-cent box. The waiter will get them for you as they are for sale here. You will enjoy them!

THE .... MUSIC .. HALL ... Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

MONDAY, MAY 8.

PROGRAMME.

1. POLONAISE, from "Eugene Onéguin" . . . . Tschaikowski
   (First Time.)
2. WALTZ, "Gross-Wien" . . . . . Strauss
3. OVERTURE, "Orpheus aux Enfers" . . . . Offenbach
   Violin Obligato, MR. KARL ONDRICEK.
4. ORIENTAL MARCH . . . . . Zach

5. BALLET MUSIC from "Coppelia" . . . . . Delibes
   (a) Dance of the Automatons.
   (b) Valse.
   (c) Czardas.
6. (a) SPRING SONG . . . . . Mendelssohn
   (b) SEVILLANA . . . . . Massenet
7. VALSE CAPRICE, "Honeymoon" . . . . . Stix
   For String Orchestra.
   (First Time.)

   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
8. OVERTURE, "Mignon" . . . . . Ambroise Thomas
9. TWO SLAVONIC DANCES . . . . . Dvorak

10. POLKA, "Tic-tac" . . . . . Strobl
11. WALTZ, "Grubenlichter" . . . . . Zeller
12. MARCH, "Stars and Stripes Forever" . . . . Sousa

THE TWO
MOST POPULAR TWO-STEPS
OF THE SEASON.

THE RUNAWAY GIRL, by Van Baar, ... 60c.
THE CECIL, by Megone, ... 50c.

FOR ORCHESTRA OR PIANO SOLO.

BOOSEY & CO.,
9 EAST 17th STREET, NEW YORK.

LAGER BEER

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager"

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH. EDWARD RUHL. | Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1153 Boston.

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, TUESDAY, MAY 9, 1899.

SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIV. No. 2.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

In no other way

are men as wasteful and extravagant as in cigar smoking—because cigars are thrown away half smoked half the time.

BETWEEN THE ACTS

Little Cigars

are just right for all short smokes. They light right, they burn right and taste right. Have you ever seen them? At all stores; 10 for 10 cts., or, as they are for sale here, you can try them to-night. Tell the waiter to bring you a 10-cent box of "Between the Acts." They will add to your enjoyment of this concert.

THE MUSIC HALL

Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

TUESDAY, MAY 9.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Under the Double Eagle" . . . . . Wagner
2. OVERTURE, "Light Cavalry" . . . . . Suppé
3. WALTZ, "Snowballs" . . . . . Ziehrer
4. PEARLS FROM THE OPERAS OF . . . . . Meyerbeer

---

5. MARCH from "El Capitan" . . . . . Sousa
6. WALTZ, "Emperor" . . . . . Strauss
7. BOSNIAN SONG AND KOLO (National Dance) . . . Komzak
   (First Time.)
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
8. FINALE from Act I., "Lohengrin" . . . . . Wagner

---

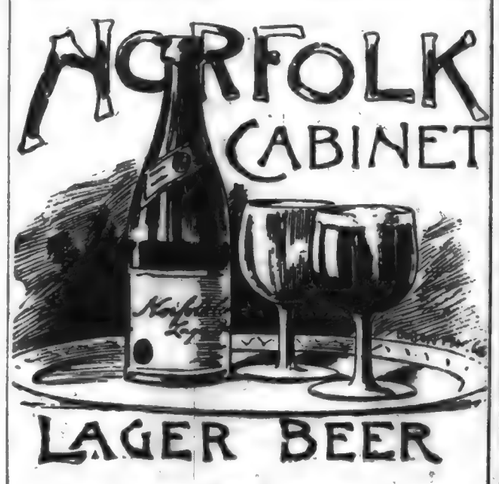
9. TWO SPANISH DANCES . . . . . Moszkowski
10. LARGO . . . . . Händel
    Violin Solo, Mr. K. ONDRICEK.
11. WALTZ, "Jolly Fellows" . . . . . Vollstedt
12. TEUFELSMARSCH . . . . . Suppé

Now the rage of the LONDON Concerts and Drawing-rooms:

YOU AND I, by Liza Lehmann, ... 60c.
KING CHARLES, by M. V. White, . . . 60c.
LIKE VIOLETS PALE, by F. Allitsen, . . 60c.
WHEN THE WORLD IS FAIR, by F. H. Cowen, 60c.
QUEEN OF MY LIFE, by E. T. Lloyd, . . 60c.

BOOSEY & CO.,

9 East 17th Street, New York.



LAGER BEER

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:

"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager"

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH.
EDWARD RUHL.
Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR CIGARS AT THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGAR STORE.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

• THE MUSIC HALL •

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL. | BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, MAY 10, 1899. | SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIV. No. 3.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

Knowledge differs from Experience.

You may know "all about"

BETWEEN THE ACTS

Little Cigars

but have you ever tried them yourself? Do you know how desirable they really are—how good they are—how economical they are—how convenient they are—how satisfactory they are? You can know—once for all—by having the waiter bring you a 10-cent box of ten—to smoke now—to-night—while you are enjoying this concert.

They are for sale here.

THE MUSIC HALL

Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 10.

PROGRAMME.

1. PERSIAN MARCH . . . . . Strauss
2. OVERTURE, "Merry Wives of Windsor" . . . . Nicolai
3. WALTZ, "Nachtschwärmer" . . . . . Ziehrer
   (First Time.)
4. SELECTION from "Wizard of the Nile" . . Victor Herbert

---

5. WALTZ, "Du und Du," from "The Bat" . . . . Strauss
6. EN RÊVE . . . . . Gabriel Marie
   (First Time.)
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
7. TWO MOVEMENTS from "Feramors" . . . . Rubinstein
8. OVERTURE to "The Mastersingers" . . . . Wagner

---

9. GAVOTTE for String Orchestra . . . . . Bach
10. SELECTION from "Erminie" . . . . . Jakobowsky
11. WALTZ, "España" . . . . . Waldteufel
12. MARCH, "Vienna Dude" . . . . . Wagner

HERE ARE A FEW NAMES FROM OUR LIST OF COMPOSERS:

ENGLISH.— Stephen Adams, F. H. Cowen, S. Liddle, C. V. Stanford, A. C. Mackenzie, R. H. Walthew, H. R. Shelley, Goring Thomas, Frances Allitsen, Maude V. White, Edward German, Mary Carmichael, Liza Lehmann, etc.

FRENCH.— C. Chaminade, Jane Vieu, L. Denza, P. Delmet, Bemberg, Guy d'Hardelot, De Leva, F. P. Tosti, etc.

ITALIAN.— F. P. Tosti, P. Mascagni, G. Puccini, G. Verdi, Don Lorenzo Perosi, etc.

THE MOST REPRESENTATIVE PUBLISHING HOUSE IN AMERICA.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th Street, New York.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager"

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH.
EDWARD RUHL.
Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 8 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

[4]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL. | BOSTON, THURSDAY, MAY 11, 1899. | SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIV. No. 4.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

If you are open to conviction, to-night

try one 10-cent box of

BETWEEN THE ACTS Little Cigars

to smoke now—or at any time when you want a short smoke and haven't time for a long one. They are real cigars, but small ones.

They cost so little that you can use them every day as well as not and actually save on your daily cigar expense by substituting them for larger cigars.

FOR SALE HERE.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

THURSDAY, MAY 11.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Princess Ninetta" . . . . . Strauss
2. OVERTURE, "Le roi l'a dit" . . . . . Delibes
3. WALTZ, "Arlequin en Voyage" . . . . . Zach
4. SELECTION from "Aïda" . . . . . Verdi

5. NARCISSUS . . . . . Nevin
6. WALTZ, "Landeskinder" . . . . . E. Strauss
7. INTRODUCTION to "Lohengrin" . . . . . Wagner
8. POLKA, "Tyrolean" . . . . . Zeller

9. ANDANTE for String Orchestra . . . . . Tschaikowsky

The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.

10. WALTZ, "Meerleuchten" . . . . . Ziehrer
11. PIZZICATI, from "Sylvia" . . . . . Delibes
12. MARCH from "The Serenade" . . . . . V. Herbert

ALBUMS OF SONGS,

Containing many popular compositions not published in single form.

IRISH FOLK SONGS, by Charles Wood,	$2.00
RUSSIAN SONGS, by F. Wishaw (2 vols.),	1.00
NINE SONGS, by S. Liddle,	1.00
NINE SONGS, by Liza Lehmann,	1.00
FIVE SONGS, by Francis Korbay,	2.00

Beautifully illustrated by J. S. SARGENT, R.A.

BOOSEY & CO.,
9 East 17th Street, New York.

LAGER BEER

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager"
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH. EDWARD BUHL. | Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL. | BOSTON, FRIDAY, MAY 12, 1899. | SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIV. No. 5.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

Save half your money

do not throw it away in half-smoked cigars! You will find that 50% of your cigar money is thrown away every day if you recall how few cigars you really have time to smoke "up."

BETWEEN THE ACTS
Little Cigars

are pure—clean—all good tobacco, and are in every way a very satisfactory short smoke. While you are listening to the music to-night, try a 10-cent box. The waiter will get them for you as they are for sale here. You will enjoy them!

THE MUSIC HALL

Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

FRIDAY, MAY 12.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Trial Kiss" . . . . . Millöcker
2. OVERTURE, "Black Domino" . . . . . Auber
3. WALTZ, "Freut euch des Lebens" . . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION from "The Fortune-teller" . . . . V. Herbert
   (First Time.)

5. TWO ENTR'ACTES from "Carmen" . . . . . Bizet
6. INTRODUCTION to Act III., "Lohengrin" . . . . Wagner
7. SELECTION from "Cavalleria Rusticana" . . . . Mascagni
8. GALOP CHROMATIQUE . . . . . Liszt

9. POTPOURRI, "The Brigands" . . . . . Offenbach
10. RONDE D'AMOUR . . . . . Westerhout
    The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
11. WALTZ, "Pomone" . . . . . Waldteufel
12. MARCH, "Boccaccio" . . . . . Suppé

THE TWO
MOST POPULAR TWO-STEPS
OF THE SEASON.

THE RUNAWAY GIRL, by Van Baar, ... 60c.
THE CECIL, by Megone, ... 50c.

FOR ORCHESTRA OR PIANO SOLO.

BOOSEY & CO.,
9 EAST 17th STREET, NEW YORK.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager"
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH.
EDWARD RUHL.
Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH. CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

• THE MUSIC HALL •

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL. | BOSTON, SATURDAY, MAY 13, 1899. | SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIV. No. 6.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

In no other way

are men as wasteful and extravagant as in cigar smoking—because cigars are thrown away half smoked half the time.

BETWEEN THE ACTS

Little Cigars

are just right for all short smokes. They light right, they burn right and taste right. Have you ever seen them? At all stores; 10 for 10 cts., or, as they are for sale here, you can try them to-night. Tell the waiter to bring you a 10-cent box of "Between the Acts." They will add to your enjoyment of this concert.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

SATURDAY, MAY 13.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Bride Elect" . . . . . Sousa
2. OVERTURE, "Pique Dame" . . . . . Suppé
3. WALTZ, "Grubenlichter" . . . . . Zeller
4. SELECTION from "The Gondoliers" . . . . . Sullivan

5. OVERTURE, "Prince pro Tem." . . . . . Thompson
6. TWO MOVEMENTS from Suite "Peer Gynt" . . . Grieg
7. AMERICAN PATROL . . . . . Meecham
8. OVERTURE, "Tannhäuser . . . . . Wagner

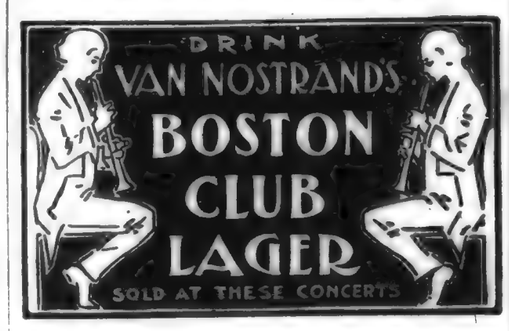
9. INTERMEZZO, "Forget me not" . . . . . McBeth
10. SELECTION from "The Belle of New York" . . . Kerker
11. LOVE'S DREAM AFTER THE BALL . . . . Czibulka
12. GEORGIA CAMP-MEETING . . . . . Mills

Now the rage of the LONDON Concerts and Drawing-rooms:

YOU AND I, by Liza Lehmann, ... 60c.
KING CHARLES, by M. V. White, . . . 60c.
LIKE VIOLETS PALE, by F. Allitsen, . . 60c.
WHEN THE WORLD IS FAIR, by F. H. Cowen, 60c.
QUEEN OF MY LIFE, by E. T. Lloyd, . . 60c.

BOOSEY & CO.,

9 East 17th Street, New York.



A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager"
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH. EDWARD RUHL. { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, MONDAY, MAY 15, 1899.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIV. No. 7.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S
W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

Knowledge differs from Experience.

You may know "all about"

BETWEEN THE ACTS
Little Cigars

but have you ever tried them yourself? Do you know how desirable they really are—how good they are—how economical they are—how convenient they are—how satisfactory they are? You can know—once for all—by having the waiter bring you a 10-cent box of ten—to smoke now—to-night—while you are enjoying this concert.

They are for sale here.

THE MUSIC HALL

Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

MONDAY, MAY 15.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "For the Country" . . . . . Millöcker
2. WALTZ, "Les Patineurs" . . . . . Waldteufel
3. OVERTURE, "Donna Diana" . . . . . Reznicek
4. SELECTION from "The Serenade" . . . . . Herbert

5. FANTASIE, "Il Trovatore" . . . . . Verdi
6. ENTR'ACTE, "La Colombe" . . . . . Gounod
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
7. WALTZ, "Jolly Fellows" . . . . . Vollstedt
8. RIDE OF THE HUSSARS . . . . . Spindler

9. OVERTURE, "Poet and Peasant" . . . . . Suppé
   'Cello Obligato, Mr. KELLER.
10. RETRAITE CROATE . . . . . G. Marie
11. LOIN DU BAL . . . . . Gillet
12. AUSTRIA MARCH . . . . . Zach

HERE ARE A FEW NAMES FROM OUR LIST OF COMPOSERS:

ENGLISH.— Stephen Adams, F. H. Cowen, S. Liddle, C. V. Stanford, A. C. Mackenzie, R. H. Walthew, H. R. Shelley, Goring Thomas, Frances Allitsen, Maude V. White, Edward German, Mary Carmichael, Liza Lehmann, etc.

FRENCH.— C. Chaminade, Jane Vieu, L. Denza, P. Delmet, Bemberg, Guy d'Hardelot, De Leva, F. P. Tosti, etc.

ITALIAN.— F. P. Tosti, P. Mascagni, G. Puccini, G. Verdi, Don Lorenzo Perosi, etc.

THE MOST REPRESENTATIVE PUBLISHING HOUSE IN AMERICA.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th Street, New York.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager"

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH.
EDWARD RUHL.
Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, TUESDAY, MAY 16, 1899.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIV. No. 8.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S
W. L. Grosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

If you are open to conviction, to-night

try one 10-cent box of

BETWEEN THE ACTS
Little Cigars

to smoke now—or at any time when you want a short smoke and haven't time for a long one. They are real cigars, but small ones.

They cost so little that you can use them every day as well as not and actually save on your daily cigar expense by substituting them for larger cigars.

FOR SALE HERE.

THE MUSIC HALL

Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

TUESDAY, MAY 16.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Am I a Wiz?" . . . . . Herbert
2. WALTZ, "Artists' Life" . . . . . Strauss
3. OVERTURE, "Ruy Blas" . . . . . Mendelssohn
4. SELECTION, "La Fille de Madame Angot" . . . . Lecocq

5. OVERTURE to "Zampa" . . . . . Hérold
6. (a) ENTR'ACTE, "Rosamunde" . . . . . Schubert
   (b) GAVOTTE from "Mignon" . . . . . Thomas
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
7. WALTZ, "Gil Blas" . . . . . Czibulka
   (First Time.)
8. ENTRÉE TRIOMPHALE DES BOYARDS . . . Halvorsen

9. OFFENBACHIANA . . . . . Conrad
10. WALTZ, "Blue Danube" . . . . . Strauss
11. POLKA, "Papa-Mama" . . . . . Bayer
12. MARCH from "Puppenfee" . . . . . Bayer

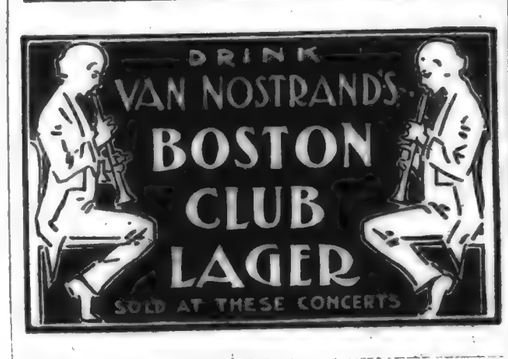
ALBUMS OF SONGS,

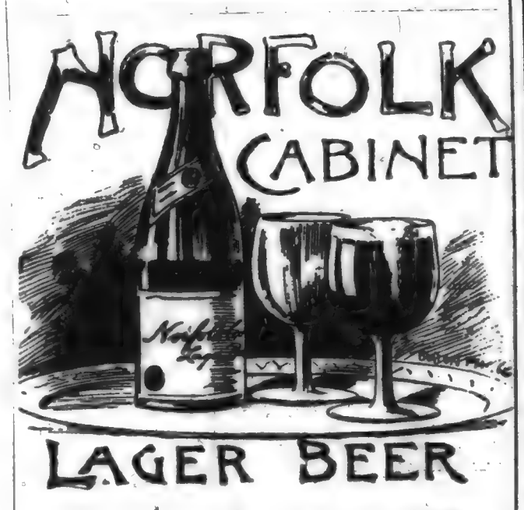
Containing many popular compositions not published in single form.

IRISH FOLK SONGS, by Charles Wood,	$2.00
RUSSIAN SONGS, by F. Wishaw (2 vols.),	1.00
NINE SONGS, by S. Liddle,	1.00
NINE SONGS, by Liza Lehmann,	1.00
FIVE SONGS, by Francis Korbay,	2.00

Beautifully illustrated by J. S. SARGENT, R.A.

BOOSEY & CO.,
9 East 17th Street, New York.





A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager"
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH.
EDWARD RUHL.
Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, MAY 17, 1899.

SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIV. No. 9.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

Save half your money

do not throw it away in half-smoked cigars! You will find that 50% of your cigar money is thrown away every day if you recall how few cigars you really have time to smoke "up."

BETWEEN THE ACTS

Little Cigars

are pure—clean—all good tobacco, and are in every way a very satisfactory short smoke. While you are listening to the music to-night, try a 10-cent box. The waiter will get them for you as they are for sale here. You will enjoy them!

THE MUSIC HALL

Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 17.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Der flotte Reservist" . . . . . Sabathil
2. OVERTURE, "Martha" . . . . . Flotow
3. WALTZ, "Arabian Nights" . . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION from "Faust" . . . . . Gounod

5. HUNGARIAN MARCH, "Szeghenyi" (First Time.) . . . . . Fahrbach
6. MENUET for String Orchestra . . . . . Bolzoni
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
7. WALTZ, "Barcarolle" . . . . . Waldteufel
8. ENTR'ACTE from "Philemon and Baucis" . . . . . Gounod

9. TWO HUNGARIAN DANCES . . . . . Brahms
10. HYMN TO ST. CECILIA . . . . . Gounod
    Violin Obligato, MR. K. ONDRICEK.
11. WALTZ from "Puppenfee" . . . . . Bayer
12. MARCH, "Obersteiger" . . . . . Zeller

THE TWO

MOST POPULAR TWO-STEPS

OF THE SEASON.

THE RUNAWAY GIRL, by Van Baar, ... 60c.
THE CECIL, by Megone, ... 50c.

FOR ORCHESTRA OR PIANO SOLO.

BOOSEY & CO.,

9 EAST 17th STREET, NEW YORK.

LAGER BEER

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New-England.

Other Brands in Bottles:

"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager."

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH.
EDWARD RUHL.
Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, THURSDAY, MAY 18, 1899.

SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIV. No. 10.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

In no other way

are men as wasteful and extravagant as in cigar smoking—because cigars are thrown away half smoked half the time.

BETWEEN THE ACTS

Little Cigars

are just right for all short smokes. They light right, they burn right and taste right. Have you ever seen them? At all stores: 10 for 10 cts., or, as they are for sale here, you can try them to-night. Tell the waiter to bring you a 10-cent box of "Between the Acts." They will add to your enjoyment of this concert.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

THURSDAY, MAY 18.

PROGRAMME.

1.	WERNER MARCH	Ziehrer
2.	OVERTURE, "Raymond"	Thomas
3.	WALTZ, "Faschingskinder" (First Time.)	Ziehrer
4.	SELECTION, "Carmen"	Bizet
5.	BALLET MUSIC, "Queen of Sheba" 'Cello Obligato, MR. KELLER.	Goldmark
6.	WALTZ, "Wine, Woman, and Song"	Strauss
7.	TRAUM DER SENNERIN Violin Obligati, MESSRS. ONDRICEK and HOFFMANN. The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.	Labitzky
8.	OVERTURE, "Rienzi"	Wagner
9.	WALTZ, "Forest Spirits"	Zach
10.	WEDDING MARCH	Mendelssohn
11.	LA MOUSMÉ	Ganne
12.	MARCH, "Wien, bleibt Wien"	Schrammel

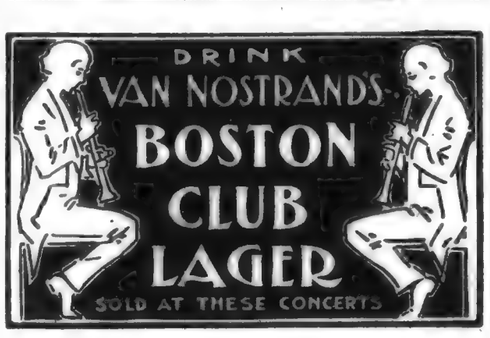
Monday, May 22, Soloists' Night.

Now the rage of the LONDON Concerts and Drawing-rooms:

YOU AND I, by Liza Lehmann, ... 60c.
KING CHARLES, by M. V. White, . . . 60c.
LIKE VIOLETS PALE, by F. Allitsen, . . 60c.
WHEN THE WORLD IS FAIR, by F. H. Cowen, 60c.
QUEEN OF MY LIFE, by E. T. Lloyd, . . 60c.

BOOSEY & CO.,

9 East 17th Street, New York.



LAGER BEER

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:

"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager".

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH.
EDWARD RUHL.
Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, FRIDAY, MAY 19, 1899.

SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIV. No. 11.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

Knowledge differs from Experience.

You may know "all about"

BETWEEN THE ACTS

Little Cigars

but have you ever tried them yourself? Do you know how desirable they really are—how good they are—how economical they are—how convenient they are—how satisfactory they are? You can know—once for all—by having the waiter bring you a 10-cent box of ten—to smoke now—to-night—while you are enjoying this concert. They are for sale here.

THE MUSIC HALL . . . Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

FRIDAY, MAY 19.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Fra Bombarda" . . . . . Czibulka
2. WALTZ, "Doctrinen" . . . . . E. Strauss
3. OVERTURE, "Oberon" . . . . . Weber
4. SELECTION from "Traviata" . . . . . Verdi

5. SELECTION from "Mikado" . . . . . Sullivan
6. OVERTURE, "Semiramide" . . . . . Rossini
7. VALSE CAPRICE, "Honeymoon" . . . . . Stix
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
8. POLONAISE . . . . . Tschaikowski

9. PRELUDE to "Le Déluge" . . . . . Saint-Saëns
   Violin Solo, MR. ONDRICEK.
10. WALTZ, "Vienna Beauties" . . . . . Ziehrer
11. LA CINQUANTAINE . . . . . G Marie
12. MARCH, "Washington Post" . . . . . Sousa

Monday, May 22, Soloists' Night.

HERE ARE A FEW NAMES FROM OUR LIST OF COMPOSERS:

ENGLISH.— Stephen Adams, F. H. Cowen, S. Liddle, C. V. Stanford, A. C. Mackenzie, R. H. Walthew, H. R. Shelley, Goring Thomas, Frances Allitsen, Maude V. White, Edward German, Mary Carmichael, Liza Lehmann, etc.

FRENCH.— C. Chaminade, Jane Vieu, L. Denza, P. Delmet, Bemberg, Guy d'Hardelot, De Leva, F. P. Tosti, etc.

ITALIAN.— F. P. Tosti, P. Mascagni, G. Puccini, G. Verdi, Don Lorenzo Perosi, etc.

THE MOST REPRESENTATIVE PUBLISHING HOUSE IN AMERICA.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th Street, New York.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager"
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH. EDWARD RUHL. Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

[12]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL. | BOSTON, SATURDAY, MAY 20, 1899. | SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIV. No. 12.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 90 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

If you are open to conviction, to-night

try one 10-cent box of

BETWEEN THE ACTS

Little Cigars

to smoke now—or at any time when you want a short smoke and haven't time for a long one. They are real cigars, but small ones.

They cost so little that you can use them every day as well as not and actually save on your daily cigar expense by substituting them for larger cigars.

FOR SALE HERE.

THE MUSIC HALL

Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

SATURDAY, MAY 20.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Stars and Stripes"	Sousa
2.	OVERTURE, "Mignon"	Thomas
3.	WALTZ, "Meerleuchten"	Ziehrer
4.	SELECTION, "The Fortune-teller"	Herbert
5.	FUNERAL MARCH of a Marionette	Gounod
6.	FINALE to Act I., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
7.	INTERMEZZO, "Naila"	Delibes
8.	OVERTURE, "William Tell"	Rossini
9.	SELECTION, "Robin Hood"	De Koven
10.	(a) SERENADE	Moszkowski
	(b) MARCH, "Welcome to Dewey"	André
11.	WALTZ, "Estudiantina"	Waldteufel
12.	MARCH, "A Nigger Fricassee" (First Time.)	Clark

Monday, May 22, Soloists' Night.

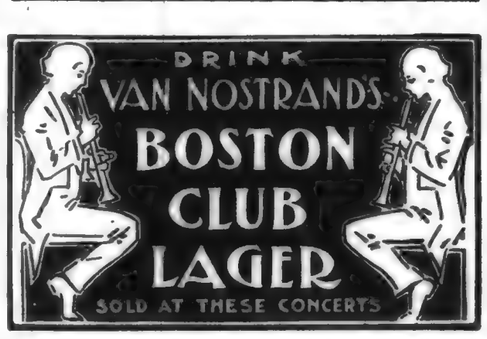
ALBUMS OF SONGS,

Containing many popular compositions not published in single form.

IRISH FOLK SONGS, by Charles Wood,	$2.00
RUSSIAN SONGS, by F. Wishaw (2 vols.),	1.00
NINE SONGS, by S. Liddle,	1.00
NINE SONGS, by Liza Lehmann,	1.00
FIVE SONGS, by Francis Korbay,	2.00

Beautifully illustrated by J. S. SARGENT, R.A.

BOOSEY & CO.,
9 East 17th Street, New York.



A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager"
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH.
EDWARD RUHL.
Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

• THE MUSIC HALL •

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, MONDAY, MAY 22, 1899.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIV. No. 13.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

Save half your money

do not throw it away in half-smoked cigars! You will find that 50% of your cigar money is thrown away every day if you recall how few cigars you really have time to smoke "up."

BETWEEN THE ACTS

Little Cigars

are pure—clean—all good tobacco, and are in every way a very satisfactory short smoke. While you are listening to the music to-night, try a 10-cent box. The waiter will get them for you as they are for sale here. You will enjoy them!

THE MUSIC HALL

Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

MONDAY, MAY 22.

SOLOISTS' NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1. RADETZKY MARCH . . . . . Strauss
2. WALTZ, "Violets" . . . . . Waldteufel
3. OVERTURE, "Phèdre" . . . . . Massenet
4. FLUTE SOLO, "Air Varié, Tremolo" . . . Demessermann
   M. A. MAQUARRE.
5. OVERTURE, "Strawberry Leaves" . . . . Constance Tippett
6. VIOLIN SOLO, (a) Andante . . . . . De Bériot
   (b) Spanish Dance . . . . . Sarasate
   Mr. K. ONDRICEK.
7. INVITATION TO DANCE . . . . . Weber
8. RIDE OF THE WALKYRIES . . . . . Wagner
9. MARCH from "Strawberry Leaves" . . . . Constance Tippett
10. WALTZ, "Gross Wien" . . . . . Strauss
11. POLKA, "Love-letter" . . . . . Ziehrer
    (First Time.)
12. ORIENTAL MARCH . . . . . Zach

THE TWO
MOST POPULAR TWO-STEPS
OF THE SEASON.

THE RUNAWAY GIRL, by Van Baar, ... 60c.
THE CECIL, by Megone, ... 50c.

FOR ORCHESTRA OR PIANO SOLO.

BOOSEY & CO.,
9 EAST 17th STREET, NEW YORK.

LAGER BEER

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager"
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH.
EDWARD RUHL. Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

• THE MUSIC HALL •

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL. | BOSTON, TUESDAY, MAY 23, 1899. | SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIV. No. 14.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

In no other way

are men as wasteful and extravagant as in cigar smoking—because cigars are thrown away half smoked half the time.

BETWEEN THE ACTS

Little Cigars

are just right for all short smokes. They light right, they burn right and taste right. Have you ever seen them? At all stores: 10 for 10 cts., or, as they are for sale here, you can try them to-night. Tell the waiter to bring you a 10-cent box of "Between the Acts." They will add to your enjoyment of this concert.

THE MUSIC HALL

Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

TUESDAY, MAY 23.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Hoch Habsburg" . . . . . Kral
2. WALTZ, "Nachtschwärmer" . . . . . Ziehrer
3. OVERTURE, "Benvenuto Cellini" . . . . . Berlioz
4. SELECTION from "The Wizard of the Nile" . . . Herbert

5. WALTZ, "Vienna Bonbons" . . . . . Strauss
   (First Time.)
6. NOCTURNE . . . . . Marshall
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
7. PROLOGUE to "Pagliacci" . . . . . Leoncavallo
8. SLAVONIC DANCE . . . . . Dvorak

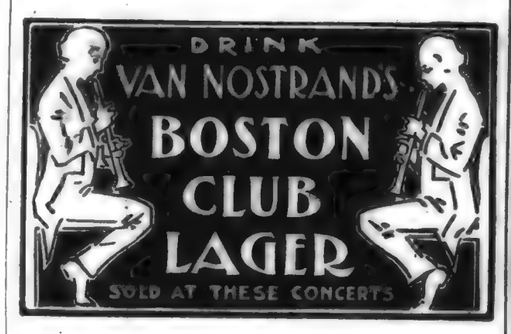
9. SELECTION, "Cavalleria Rusticana" . . . . . Mascagni
10. WALTZ, "Amour et Printemps" . . . . . Waldteufel
11. GALOP, "Kosackenritt" . . . . . Millöcker
12. MARCH, "Donna Juanita" . . . . . Suppé

Monday, May 29, Bicycle Night.
Tuesday, May 30, Patriotic Night.
Wednesday, May 31, Wagner Night.
Saturday, June 3, Conductor Zach's Farewell Appearance.

Now the rage of the LONDON Concerts and Drawing-rooms:

YOU AND I, by Liza Lehmann, ... 60c.
KING CHARLES, by M. V. White, . . . 60c.
LIKE VIOLETS PALE, by F. Allitsen, . . 60c.
WHEN THE WORLD IS FAIR, by F. H. Cowen, 60c.
QUEEN OF MY LIFE, by E. T. Lloyd, . . 60c.

BOOSEY & CO.,
9 East 17th Street, New York.



NORFOLK CABINET

LAGER BEER

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager."

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH.
EDWARD RUHL.
Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

SMOKE THE POPULAR HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, MAY 24, 1899.

SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIV. No. 15.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

Knowledge differs from Experience.

You may know "all about"

BETWEEN THE ACTS

Little Cigars

but have you ever tried them yourself? Do you know how desirable they really are—how good they are—how economical they are—how convenient they are—how satisfactory they are? You can know—once for all—by having the waiter bring you a 10-cent box of ten—to smoke now—to-night—while you are enjoying this concert. They are for sale here.

THE MUSIC HALL PROMENADE CONCERTS

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 24.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "King Cotton" . . . . . Sousa
2. OVERTURE, "Pique Dame" . . . . . Suppé
3. WALTZ, "Die Schönbrunner" . . . . . Lanner
4. POTPOURRI, "Grande Duchesse" . . . . . Offenbach

5. WALTZ, "Kaiser" . . . . . Strauss
6. LIEBESGESTÄNDNISS . . . . . Keller

The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.

(First Time.)

7. THE DARKIES' DREAM . . . . . Langey
8. FESTIVAL MARCH . . . . . Converse

(First Time.)

9. SELECTIONS FROM THE OPERAS OF . . . Meyerbeer
10. WALTZ, "Grubenlichter" . . . . . Zeller
11. POLKA MAZOURKA, "Die Libelle" . . . . Josef Strauss
12. SZECHENYI MARCH . . . . . Fahrbach

Monday, May 29, Bicycle Night.
Tuesday, May 30, Patriotic Night.
Wednesday, May 31, Wagner Night.
Saturday, June 3, Conductor Zach's Farewell Appearance.

HERE ARE A FEW NAMES FROM OUR LIST OF COMPOSERS:

ENGLISH.— Stephen Adams, F. H. Cowen, S. Liddle, C. V. Stanford, A. C. Mackenzie, R. H. Walthew, H. R. Shelley, Goring Thomas, Frances Allitsen, Maude V. White, Edward German, Mary Carmichael, Liza Lehmann, etc.

FRENCH.— C. Chaminade, Jane Vieu, L. Denza, P. Delmet, Bemberg, Guy d'Hardelot, De Leva, F. P. Tosti, etc.

ITALIAN.— F. P. Tosti, P. Mascagni, G. Puccini, G. Verdi, Don Lorenzo Perosi, etc.

THE MOST REPRESENTATIVE PUBLISHING HOUSE IN AMERICA.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th Street, New York.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager."

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH. EDWARD RUHL. | Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH. CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL. | BOSTON, THURSDAY, MAY 25, 1899. | SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIV. No. 16.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

If you are open to conviction, to-night

try one 10-cent box of

BETWEEN THE ACTS
Little Cigars

to smoke now—or at any time when you want a short smoke and haven't time for a long one. They are real cigars, but small ones.

They cost so little that you can use them every day as well as not and actually save on your daily cigar expense by substituting them for larger cigars.

FOR SALE HERE.

THE MUSIC HALL

Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

THURSDAY, MAY 25.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Hands across the Sea" (First Time.) . . . . . Sousa
2. WALTZ, "Rosen aus dem Süden" . . . . . Strauss
3. OVERTURE, "Le Roi l'a dit" . . . . . Delibes
4. SELECTION, "The Belle of New York" . . . . . Kerker

5. INTRODUCTION to Act III., "Lohengrin" . . . . . Wagner
6. BOSNIAN SONG AND KOLO (National Dance) . . . . Komzak
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
7. WALTZ, "Pomone" . . . . . Waldteufel
8. MARCH from "Tannhäuser" . . . . . Wagner

9. OVERTURE, "Banditenstreiche" . . . . . Suppé
10. LARGO . . . . . Händel
    Violin Obligato, MR. ONDRICEK.
11. GAVOTTE, "Amaryllis" . . . . . Ghys
12. TIMBUCTOO MARCH (First Time.) . . . . . Ramsdell

Monday, May 29, Bicycle Night.
Tuesday, May 30, Patriotic Night.
Wednesday, May 31, Wagner Night.
Saturday, June 3, Conductor Zach's Farewell Appearance.

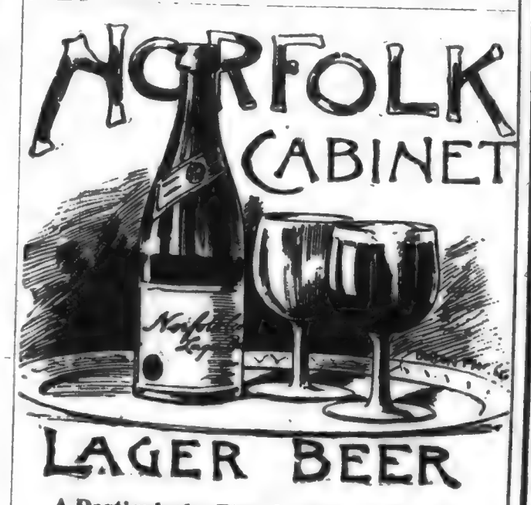
ALBUMS OF SONGS,

Containing many popular compositions not published in single form.

IRISH FOLK SONGS, by Charles Wood,	$2.00
RUSSIAN SONGS, by F. Wishaw (2 vols.),	1.00
NINE SONGS, by S. Liddle,	1.00
NINE SONGS, by Liza Lehmann,	1.00
FIVE SONGS, by Francis Korbay,	2.00

Beautifully illustrated by J. S. SARGENT, R.A.

BOOSEY & CO.,
9 East 17th Street, New York.



A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager."

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH.
EDWARD RUHL.
Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

• THE MUSIC HALL •

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL. | BOSTON, FRIDAY, MAY 26, 1899. | SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIV. No. 17.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Grosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

Save half your money

do not throw it away in half-smoked cigars! You will find that 50% of your cigar money is thrown away every day if you recall how few cigars you really have time to smoke "up."

BETWEEN THE ACTS
Little Cigars

are pure—clean—all good tobacco, and are in every way a very satisfactory short smoke. While you are listening to the music to-night, try a 10-cent box. The waiter will get them for you as they are for sale here. You will enjoy them!

THE MUSIC HALL

Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

FRIDAY, MAY 26.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "The Charlatan" . . . . . Sousa
2. OVERTURE, "Orpheus aux Enfers" . . . . . Offenbach
3. WALTZ, "Myrthenblüthen" . . . . . Strauss
4. PRELUDE to "Lohengrin" . . . . . Wagner

5. HUNGARIAN MARCH . . . . . Berlioz
6. OVERTURE, "Semiramide" . . . . . Rossini
7. EN RÊVE . . . . . Gabriel-Marie
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
8. GALOP CHROMATIQUE . . . . . Liszt

9. MILITARY MARCH . . . . . Zach
   (First Time.)
10. HYMN TO ST. CECILIA . . . . . Gounod
    Violin Solo, Mr. ONDRICEK.
11. WALTZ, "Cagliostro" . . . . . Strauss
12. MARCH from "The Serenade" . . . . . Herbert

Monday, May 29, Bicycle Night.
Tuesday, May 30, Patriotic Night.
Wednesday, May 31, Wagner Night.
Saturday, June 3, Conductor Zach's Farewell Appearance.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—Owing to a long-standing engagement of Music Hall, there will be no concert on the evening of Thursday, June 1.

THE TWO
MOST POPULAR TWO-STEPS
OF THE SEASON.

THE RUNAWAY GIRL, by Van Baar, ... 60c.
THE CECIL, by Megone, ... 50c.
FOR ORCHESTRA OR PIANO SOLO.

BOOSEY & CO.,
9 EAST 17th STREET, NEW YORK.

LAGER BEER

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager."
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH.
EDWARD RUHL.
Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

[18]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

• THE MUSIC HALL •

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, MAY 27, 1899.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIV. No. 18.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

In no other way

are men as wasteful and extravagant as in cigar smoking—because cigars are thrown away half smoked half the time.

BETWEEN THE ACTS

Little Cigars

are just right for all short smokes. They light right, they burn right and taste right. Have you ever seen them? At all stores: 10 for 10 cts., or, as they are for sale here, you can try them to-night. Tell the waiter to bring you a 10-cent box of "Between the Acts." They will add to your enjoyment of this concert.

THE MUSIC HALL

Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

SATURDAY, MAY 27.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Up the Street" . . . . . Morse
2. OVERTURE, "Light Cavalry" . . . . . Suppé
3. WALTZ, "Jolly Fellows" . . . . . Vollstedt
4. SELECTION, "The Serenade" . . . . . Herbert

5. TWO HUNGARIAN DANCES . . . . . Brahms
6. NARCISSUS . . . . . Nevin
7. OVERTURE, "Flying Dutchman" . . . . . Wagner
8. MARCH, "Hands across the Sea" . . . . . Sousa

9. INTERMEZZO from "Cavalleria Rusticana" . . Mascagni
10. OVERTURE to "Zampa" . . . . . Hérold
11. AT A GEORGIA CAMP-MEETING . . . . . Mills
12. MARCH, "Runaway Girl" . . . . . Ch. v. Baar

Monday, May 29, Bicycle Night.
Tuesday, May 30, Patriotic Night.
Wednesday, May 31, Wagner Night.
Saturday, June 3, Conductor Zach's Farewell Appearance.
Tuesday, June 6, Technology Night.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—Owing to a long-standing engagement of Music Hall, there will be no concert on the evening of Thursday, June 1.

Now the rage of the LONDON Concerts and Drawing-rooms:

YOU AND I, by Liza Lehmann, ... 60c.
KING CHARLES, by M. V. White, . . . 60c.
LIKE VIOLETS PALE, by F. Allitsen, . . 60c.
WHEN THE WORLD IS FAIR, by F. H. Cowen, 60c.
QUEEN OF MY LIFE, by E. T. Lloyd, . . 60c.

BOOSEY & CO.,

9 East 17th Street, New York.

NORFOLK CABINET

LAGER BEER

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager."

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH.
EDWARD RUHL. } Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c, SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

• THE MUSIC HALL •

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL. | BOSTON, MONDAY, MAY 29, 1899. | SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIV. No. 19.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

Knowledge differs from Experience.

You may know "all about"

BETWEEN THE ACTS

Little Cigars

but have you ever tried them yourself? Do you know how desirable they really are—how good they are—how economical they are—how convenient they are—how satisfactory they are? You can know—once for all—by having the waiter bring you a 10-cent box of ten—to smoke now—to-night—while you are enjoying this concert.

They are for sale here.

THE.... MUSIC.. HALL... Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

MONDAY, MAY 29.
BICYCLE NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1. BRIDE-ELECT MARCH . . . . . Sousa
2. INTERMEZZO, "Naila" . . . . . Delibes
3. CARMEN SELECTION . . . . . Bizet
4. YOUR REQUEST . . . . . .
5. CORONATION MARCH . . . . . Meyerbeer
6. LUSTIGE BRÜDER (Jolly Fellows) WALTZ . . . Vollstedt
7. ENTRÉE TRIOMPHALE DES BOYARDS . . Halvorsen
8. NOCTURNE . . . . . Marshall
   (b) Last Movement of Suite, "Peer Gynt" . . . Grieg
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
9. IL TROVATORE SELECTION . . . . . Verdi
10. GRUBENLICHTER WALTZ . . . . . Zeller
11. HUNTER'S YARN POLKA . . . . . Komzak
12. THE STARS AND STRIPES FOREVER . . . . Sousa

Tuesday, May 30, Patriotic Night.
Wednesday, May 31, Wagner Night.
Saturday, June 3, Conductor Zach's Farewell Appearance.
Tuesday, June 6, Technology Night.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—Owing to a long-standing engagement of Music Hall, there will be no concert on the evening of Thursday, June 1.

HERE ARE A FEW NAMES FROM OUR LIST OF COMPOSERS:

ENGLISH.—Stephen Adams, F. H. Cowen, S. Liddle, C. V. Stanford, A. C. Mackenzie, R. H. Walthew, H. R. Shelley, Goring Thomas, Frances Allitsen, Maude V. White, Edward German, Mary Carmichael, Liza Lehmann, etc.

FRENCH.—C. Chaminade, Jane Vieu, L. Denza, P. Delmet, Bemberg, Guy d'Hardelot, De Leva, F. P. Tosti, etc.

ITALIAN.—F. P. Tosti, P. Mascagni, G. Puccini, G. Verdi, Don Lorenzo Perosi, etc.

THE MOST REPRESENTATIVE PUBLISHING HOUSE IN AMERICA.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th Street, New York.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager"
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH.
EDWARD RUHL. | Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

[20]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL. | BOSTON, TUESDAY, MAY 30, 1899. | SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIV. No. 20.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers,
Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

If you are open to conviction, to-night

try one 10-cent box of

BETWEEN THE ACTS

Little Cigars

to smoke now—or at any time when you want a short smoke and haven't time for a long one. They are real cigars, but small ones.

They cost so little that you can use them every day as well as not and actually save on your daily cigar expense by substituting them for larger cigars.

FOR SALE HERE.

THE MUSIC HALL

Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

TUESDAY, MAY 30.

PATRIOTIC NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "The Stars and Stripes Forever"	Sousa
2.	WALTZ, "Près de Toi"	Waldteufel
3.	OVERTURE, "Jubel"	Weber
4.	SELECTION, "Robin Hood"	De Koven
5.	AMERICAN FANTASY	Herbert
6.	WALTZ CAPRICE, "Honeymoon"	Stix
7.	WHISTLING RUFUS	Mills
8.	OVERTURE, "William Tell"	Rossini
9.	MARCH from "The Runaway Girl"	C. von Baar
10.	OVERTURE, "Tabasco"	Chadwick
11.	IN THE MILL (for String Orchestra)	Gillet
12.	MARCH from "The Serenade"	Herbert

Wednesday, May 31, Wagner Night.

Saturday, June 3, Conductor Zach's Farewell Appearance.

Tuesday, June 6, Technology Night.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—Owing to a long-standing engagement of Music Hall, there will be no concert on the evening of Thursday, June 1.

ALBUMS OF SONGS,

Containing many popular compositions not published in single form.

IRISH FOLK SONGS, by Charles Wood,	$2.00
RUSSIAN SONGS, by F. Wishaw (2 vols.),	1.00
NINE SONGS, by S. Liddle,	1.00
NINE SONGS, by Liza Lehmann,	1.00
FIVE SONGS, by Francis Korbay,	2.00

Beautifully illustrated by J. S. SARGENT, R.A.

BOOSEY & CO.,
9 East 17th Street, New York.

LAGER BEER

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager"
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH,
EDWARD RUHL. | Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL. | BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, MAY 31, 1899. | SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIV. No. 21.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

Save half your money

do not throw it away in half-smoked cigars! You will find that 50% of your cigar money is thrown away every day if you recall how few cigars you really have time to smoke "up."

BETWEEN THE ACTS
Little Cigars

are pure—clean—all good tobacco, and are in every way a very satisfactory short smoke. While you are listening to the music to-night, try a 10-cent box. The waiter will get them for you as they are for sale here. You will enjoy them!

THE MUSIC HALL

Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 31.

WAGNER NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Under the Double Eagle" . . . . . F. Wagner
2. CHORUS OF THE SAILORS, from "Flying Dutchman," R. Wagner
3. WALTZ, "Vienna Bonbons" . . . . . Strauss
4. OVERTURE, "Tannhäuser . . . . . R. Wagner

5. PRELUDE to Act III., "Lohengrin" . . . . . R. Wagner
6. ALBUMBLATT . . . . . R. Wagner
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
7. PRELUDE to Act I., "Lohengrin" . . . . . R. Wagner
8. FIRE-CHARM . . . . . R. Wagner

9. PRIZE-SONG from "The Mastersingers" . . . . R. Wagner
   Trombone Solo, MR. C. HAMPE.
10. OVERTURE to "Rienzi" . . . . . R. Wagner
11. WALTZ, "Morgenblätter" . . . . . Strauss
12. MARCH, "Vienna Dude" . . . . . F. Wagner

Saturday, June 3, Conductor Zach's Farewell Appearance.

Tuesday, June 6, Technology Night.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—Owing to a long-standing engagement of Music Hall, there will be no concert on the evening of Thursday, June 1.

THE TWO
MOST POPULAR TWO-STEPS
OF THE SEASON.

THE RUNAWAY GIRL, by Van Baar, ... 60c.
THE CECIL, by Megone, ... 50c.

FOR ORCHESTRA OR PIANO SOLO.

BOOSEY & CO.,
9 EAST 17th STREET, NEW YORK.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager"
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH.
EDWARD RUHL. { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

[22]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, FRIDAY, JUNE 2, 1899.

SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIV. No. 22.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

In no other way

are men as wasteful and extravagant as in cigar smoking—because cigars are thrown away half smoked half the time.

BETWEEN THE ACTS

Little Cigars

are just right for all short smokes. They light right, they burn right and taste right. Have you ever seen them? At all stores: 10 for 10 cts., or, as they are for sale here, you can try them to-night. Tell the waiter to bring you a 10-cent box of "Between the Acts." They will add to your enjoyment of this concert.

THE MUSIC HALL . . .

Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

FRIDAY, JUNE 2.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Der flotte Reservist" . . . . . Sabathil
2. OVERTURE, "Fra Diavolo" . . . . . Auber
3. WALTZ, "New Vienna" . . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION, "Aïda" . . . . . Verdi

5. BALLET MUSIC, "Queen of Sheba" . . . . . Goldmark
   'Cello Obligato, MR. J. KELLER.
6. WALTZ, "Snowballs" . . . . . Ziehrer
7. (a) REVERIE
   (b) THE INDIAN } for String Orchestra . . . . Maquarre
   (First Time.)
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
8. RHAPSODY in F . . . . . Liszt

9. WALTZ, "Harlequin's Voyage" . . . . . Zach
10. TRÄUMEREI . . . . . Schumann
11. POLKA, "Tyrolean" . . . . . Zeller
12. MARCH, "Obersteiger" . . . . . Zeller

Saturday, June 3, Conductor Zach's Farewell Appearance.

Tuesday, June 6, Technology Night.

Now the rage of the LONDON Concerts and Drawing-rooms:

YOU AND I, by Liza Lehmann, ... 60c.
KING CHARLES, by M. V. White, . . . 60c.
LIKE VIOLETS PALE, by F. Allitsen, . . 60c.
WHEN THE WORLD IS FAIR, by F. H. Cowen, 60c.
QUEEN OF MY LIFE, by E. T. Lloyd, . . 60c.

BOOSEY & CO.,

9 East 17th Street, New York.

NORFOLK CABINET

LAGER BEER

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager"
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH.
EDWARD RUHL.
Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c, SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, MONDAY, JUNE 5, 1899.

SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIV. No. 24.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Grosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

If you are open to conviction, to-night

try one 10-cent box of

BETWEEN THE ACTS Little Cigars

to smoke now—or at any time when you want a short smoke and haven't time for a long one. They are real cigars, but small ones.

They cost so little that you can use them every day as well as not and actually save on your daily cigar expense by substituting them for larger cigars.

FOR SALE HERE.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

MONDAY, JUNE 5.

FIRST APPEARANCE OF CONDUCTOR GUSTAV STRUBE.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "U. S. Volunteers" (First Time.) . . . . . Strube
2. OVERTURE, "Merry Wives of Windsor" . . . . . Nicolai
3. WALTZ, "In's Centrum" . . . . . Strauss
4. WAR MARCH from "Rienzi" (First Time.) . . . . . Wagner
5. OVERTURE, "Oberon" . . . . . Weber
6. PROCESSION OF THE WOMEN, from "Lohengrin" . . . Wagner
7. MAZOURKA (First Time.) . . . . . Chopin
8. SELECTION, "Trovatore" . . . . . Verdi
9. GROSSMÜTTERCHEN . . . . . Langer
   Solo Violin, MR. ONDRICEK.
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
10. OVERTURE, "Light Cavalry" . . . . . Suppé
11. WALTZ, "Morgenblätter" . . . . . Strauss
12. MARCH, "Up the Street" . . . . . Morse

Tuesday, June 6, Technology Night.

To secure satisfactory service, patrons are URGED by the Management to report PROMPTLY any inattention. Complaints made so late that patrons cannot recall either the number of the table or the waiter are obviously useless.

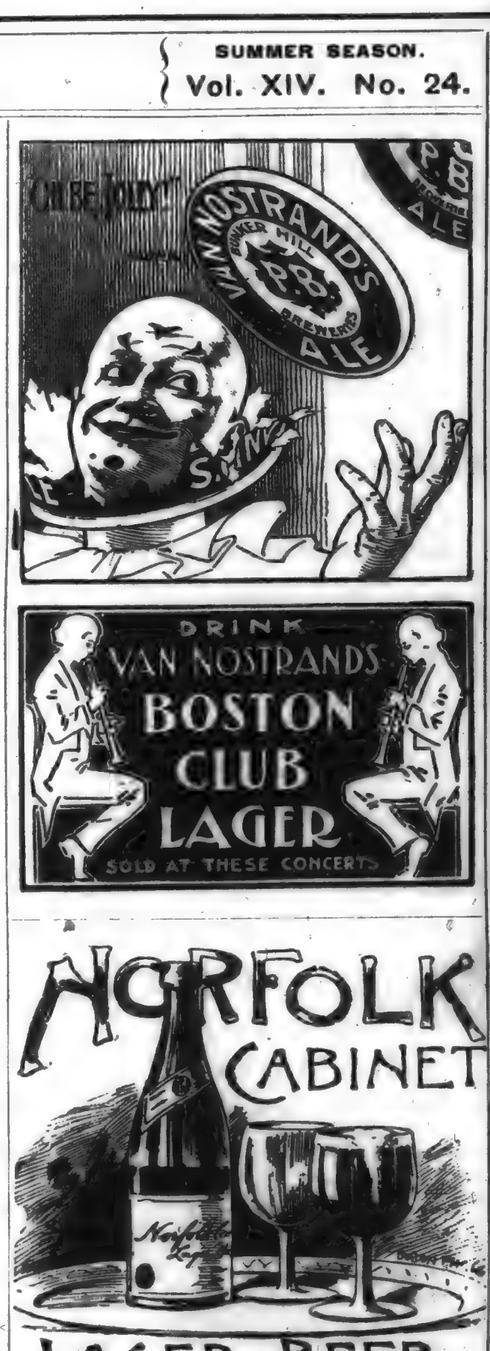
ALBUMS OF SONGS,

Containing many popular compositions not published in single form.

IRISH FOLK SONGS, by Charles Wood, . . $2.00
RUSSIAN SONGS, by F. Wishaw (2 vols.), . . 1.00
NINE SONGS, by S. Liddle, ... 1.00
NINE SONGS, by Liza Lehmann, ... 1.00
FIVE SONGS, by Francis Korbay, ... 2.00

Beautifully illustrated by J. S. SARGENT, R.A.

BOOSEY & CO.,
9 East 17th Street, New York.



A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:

"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager"

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH. EDWARD RUHL. { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 8 FOR 25c. SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

YOU CAN

RELY ON

LEWANDO'S

Say that

YOUR BUTCH'R

BETWEEN THE ACTS

Little Cigars

are pure ... and ... and ... not, don't smoke. When ... listening to the music ... try a couple. The ... will get them for you ... sale by ... You will enjoy them.

LOOSLEY & CO., 9 EAST 17th STREET, NEW YORK

THE MUSIC HALL

Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON

SUMMER SEASON
Vol. XIV. No. 25.

BOSTON TUESDAY JUNE [illegible]

THE MUSIC HALL

Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON

[illegible] CONDUCTOR

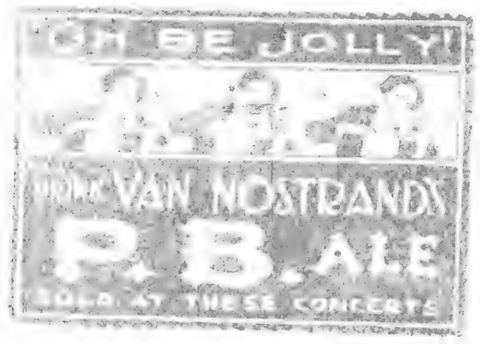
TUESDAY JUNE [illegible]

[illegible] CONCERT

[illegible] PROGRAMME

[illegible] BREWED

OH BE JOLLY!



DRINK VAN NOSTRAND'S P. B. ALE

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS

NORFOLK CABINET

LAGER BEER

[illegible] Family

[illegible] Club

[illegible] Bottled at

[illegible] Brewery

[illegible]

[illegible] Promenade Concerts

[illegible] Boston

MOST POPULAR TWO-STEPS

OF THE SEASON

[illegible] Boston

HABICH & CO.

[illegible] Brewery

Boston

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE [illegible] CIGAR

SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 7, 1899.

SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIV. No. 26.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

In no other way

are men as wasteful and extravagant as in cigar smoking—because cigars are thrown away half smoked half the time.

BETWEEN THE ACTS

Little Cigars

are just right for all short smokes. They light right, they burn right and taste right. Have you ever seen them? At all stores: 10 for 10 cts., or, as they are for sale here, you can try them to-night. Tell the waiter to bring you a 10-cent box of "Between the Acts." They will add to your enjoyment of this concert.

THE MUSIC HALL

Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 7.

PROGRAMME.

1. TEUFELSMARSCH . . . . . Suppé
2. OVERTURE, "Raymond" . . . . . Thomas
3. WALTZ, "Legends from the Vienna Woods" . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION, "Robin Hood" . . . . . De Koven

5. OVERTURE, "Zampa" . . . . . Hérold
6. PRELUDE, Act V., "Manfred" . . . . . Reinecke
   (First Time.)
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
7. TWO HUNGARIAN DANCES . . . . . Brahms
8. SUITE ALGÉRIENNE . . . . . Saint-Saëns

9. OVERTURE, "Marriage of Figaro" . . . . . Mozart
10. SELECTION, "Cavalleria Rusticana" . . . . . Mascagni
11. POLKA, "The Mill in the Forest" . . . . . Eilenberg
12. MARCH, "Hoch Habsburg" . . . . . Kral

Friday, June 9, Light Opera Night.
Monday, June 12, Wagner Night.

To secure satisfactory service, patrons are URGED by the Management to report PROMPTLY any inattention. Complaints made so late that patrons cannot recall either the number of the table or the waiter are obviously useless.

Now the rage of the LONDON Concerts and Drawing-rooms:

YOU AND I, by Liza Lehmann, ... 60c.
KING CHARLES, by M. V. White, . . . 60c.
LIKE VIOLETS PALE, by F. Allitsen, . . 60c.
WHEN THE WORLD IS FAIR, by F. H. Cowen, 60c.
QUEEN OF MY LIFE, by E. T. Lloyd, . . 60c.

BOOSEY & CO.,

9 East 17th Street, New York.

LAGER BEER

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager"

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH. EDWARD RUHL. { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

[26]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL. | BOSTON, THURSDAY, JUNE 8, 1899. | SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIV. No. 27.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years. Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

Knowledge differs from Experience.

You may know "all about"

BETWEEN THE ACTS

Little Cigars

but have you ever tried them yourself? Do you know how desirable they really are—how good they are—how economical they are—how convenient they are—how satisfactory they are? You can know—once for all—by having the waiter bring you a 10-cent box of ten—to smoke now—to-night—while you are enjoying this concert. They are for sale here.

THE MUSIC HALL

Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

THURSDAY, JUNE 8.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Hobson's Choice" . . . . . Strube
2. OVERTURE, "Semiramide" . . . . . Rossini
3. WALTZ, "Schöner Mai" . . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION, "Aïda" . . . . . Verdi

5. OVERTURE, "A Night in Granada" . . . . . Kreutzer
   (First Time.)
6. (a) EVENING SONG . . . . . Schumann
   (b) MARCH from "The Ruins of Athens" . . . . Beethoven
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
7. MELODY . . . . . Rubinstein
8. HUNGARIAN RHAPSODY No. 2 . . . . . Liszt

9. OVERTURE, "Orpheus" . . . . . Offenbach
10. POLKA, "Sängerlust" . . . . . Strauss
11. WALTZ, "Grubenlichter" . . . . . Zeller
12. MARCH, "Boccaccio" . . . . . Suppé

Friday, June 9, Light Opera Night.
Monday, June 12, Wagner Night.

To secure satisfactory service, patrons are URGED by the Management to report PROMPTLY any inattention. Complaints made so late that patrons cannot recall either the number of the table or the waiter are obviously useless.

HERE ARE A FEW NAMES FROM OUR LIST OF COMPOSERS:

ENGLISH.— Stephen Adams, F. H. Cowen, S. Liddle, C. V. Stanford, A. C. Mackenzie, R. H. Walthew, H. R. Shelley, Goring Thomas, Frances Allitsen, Maude V. White, Edward German, Mary Carmichael, Liza Lehmann, etc.

FRENCH.— C. Chaminade, Jane Vieu, L. Denza, P. Delmet, Bemberg, Guy d'Hardelot, De Leva, F. P. Tosti, etc.

ITALIAN.— F. P. Tosti, P. Mascagni, G. Puccini, G. Verdi, Don Lorenzo Perosi, etc.

THE MOST REPRESENTATIVE PUBLISHING HOUSE IN AMERICA.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th Street, New York.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager"

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH.
EDWARD RUHL.
Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL. | BOSTON, FRIDAY, JUNE 9, 1899. | SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIV. No. 28.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

If you are open to conviction, to-night

try one 10-cent box of

BETWEEN THE ACTS

Little Cigars

to smoke now—or at any time when you want a short smoke and haven't time for a long one. They are real cigars, but small ones.

They cost so little that you can use them every day as well as not and actually save on your daily cigar expense by substituting them for larger cigars.

FOR SALE HERE.

THE MUSIC HALL

Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

FRIDAY, JUNE 9.

LIGHT OPERA NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Am I a Wiz?" . . . . . Herbert
2. SELECTION, "The Runaway Girl" . . . . . Ch. von Baar
3. WALTZ from "Die Fledermaus" . . . . . Strauss
4. OVERTURE, "Sphinx" . . . . . Thompson

5. SELECTION, "La Fille de Madame Angot" . . . . Lecocq
6. WALTZ AND PIZZICATO from Ballet Music, "Sylvia" . Delibes
7. CAVATINA . . . . . Raff
8. OVERTURE, "Tabasco" . . . . . Chadwick

9. SELECTION, "The Belle of New York" . . . . . Kerker
10. WALTZ, "Vienna Blood" . . . . . Strauss
11. ENTRÉE TRIOMPHALE DES BOYARDS . . . Halvorsen
12. BOCCACCIO MARCH . . . . . Suppé

Monday, June 12, Wagner Night.

To secure satisfactory service, patrons are URGED by the Management to report PROMPTLY any inattention. Complaints made so late that patrons cannot recall either the number of the table or the waiter are obviously useless.

ALBUMS OF SONGS,

Containing many popular compositions not published in single form.

IRISH FOLK SONGS, by Charles Wood,	$2.00
RUSSIAN SONGS, by F. Wishaw (2 vols.),	1.00
NINE SONGS, by S. Liddle,	1.00
NINE SONGS, by Liza Lehmann,	1.00
FIVE SONGS, by Francis Korbay,	2.00

Beautifully illustrated by J. S. SARGENT, R.A.

BOOSEY & CO.,
9 East 17th Street, New York.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager"
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH.
EDWARD RUHL.
Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 2 FOR 25c, SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL. | BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 10, 1899. | SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIV. No. 29.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

Save half your money

do not throw it away in half-smoked cigars! You will find that 50% of your cigar money is thrown away every day if you recall how few cigars you really have time to smoke "up."

BETWEEN THE ACTS

Little Cigars

are pure—clean—all good tobacco, and are in every way a very satisfactory short smoke. While you are listening to the music to-night, try a 10-cent box. The waiter will get them for you as they are for sale here. You will enjoy them!

THE MUSIC HALL

Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

SATURDAY, JUNE 10.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Under the Double Eagle" . . . . . Wagner
2. OVERTURE, "Dame Blanche" . . . . . Boieldieu
3. KAISER WALTZ . . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION from "The Serenade" . . . . . Herbert

5. OVERTURE, "Freischütz" . . . . . Weber
6. NORWEGIAN DANCE . . . . . Grieg
   (First Time.)
7. SERENADE for String Orchestra . . . . . Pierné
   (First Time.)
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
8. AMERICAN FANTASY . . . . . Herbert

9. OVERTURE, "Banditenstreiche" . . . . . Suppé
10. GAVOTTE, "Stephanie" . . . . . Czibulka
11. AT A GEORGIA CAMP-MEETING . . . . . Mills
12. MARCH from "The Bride Elect" . . . . . Sousa

Monday, June 12, Wagner Night.
Monday, June 19, Harvard Night.

To secure satisfactory service, patrons are URGED by the Management to report PROMPTLY any inattention. Complaints made so late that patrons cannot recall either the number of the table or the waiter are obviously useless.

THE TWO

MOST POPULAR TWO-STEPS

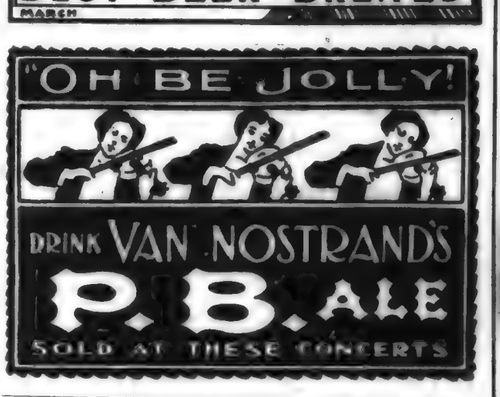
OF THE SEASON.

THE RUNAWAY GIRL, by Van Baar, ... 60c.
THE CECIL, by Megone, ... 50c.

FOR ORCHESTRA OR PIANO SOLO.

BOOSEY & CO.,

9 EAST 17th STREET, NEW YORK.



A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager"
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Bräu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH.
EDWARD RUHL.
Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH. CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, MONDAY, JUNE 12, 1899.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIV. No. 30.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

In no other way

are men as wasteful and extravagant as in cigar smoking—because cigars are thrown away half smoked half the time.

BETWEEN THE ACTS

Little Cigars

are just right for all short smokes. They light right, they burn right and taste right. Have you ever seen them? At all stores; 10 for 10 cts., or, as they are for sale here, you can try them to-night. Tell the waiter to bring you a 10-cent box of "Between the Acts." They will add to your enjoyment of this concert.

THE MUSIC HALL

Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

MONDAY, JUNE 12.

WAGNER NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Nibelungen" . . . . . Sonntag
2. WALTZ, "Thousand and One Nights" . . . . . Strauss
3. TRÄUME . . . . . Wagner
   (First Time.)
   Trumpet Solo, MR. KLOEPFEL.
4. OVERTURE, "Rienzi" . . . . . Wagner

5. INTRODUCTION, Act III., "Tannhäuser" . . . . Wagner
   (First Time.)
6. EVENING STAR . . . . . Wagner
   Solo Trombone, MR. HAMPE.
7. SAILORS' CHORUS from "The Flying Dutchman" . . Wagner
8. PRELUDE to "Meistersinger" . . . . . Wagner

9. PROCESSION OF WOMEN, from "Lohengrin" . . . Wagner
10. LOIN DU BAL . . . . . Gillet
11. POLKA, "Puppenfee" . . . . . Bayer
12. MARCH, "Stars and Stripes Forever" . . . . . Sousa

Monday, June 19, Harvard Night.

To secure satisfactory service, patrons are URGED by the Management to report PROMPTLY any inattention. Complaints made so late that patrons cannot recall either the number of the table or the waiter are obviously useless.

Now the rage of the LONDON Concerts and Drawing-rooms:

YOU AND I, by Liza Lehmann, ... 60c.
KING CHARLES, by M. V. White, . . . 60c.
LIKE VIOLETS PALE, by F. Allitsen, . . 60c.
WHEN THE WORLD IS FAIR, by F. H. Cowen, 60c.
QUEEN OF MY LIFE, by E. T. Lloyd, . . 60c.

BOOSEY & CO.,

9 East 17th Street, New York.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:

"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager"

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH.
EDWARD RUHL.
Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

[30]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL. | BOSTON, TUESDAY, JUNE 13, 1899. | SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIV. No. 31.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

If you are open to conviction, to-night

try one 10-cent box of

BETWEEN THE ACTS Little Cigars

to smoke now—or at any time when you want a short smoke and haven't time for a long one. They are real cigars, but small ones.

They cost so little that you can use them every day as well as not and actually save on your daily cigar expense by substituting them for larger cigars.

FOR SALE HERE.

THE MUSIC HALL... Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

TUESDAY, JUNE 13.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH from "Le Prophète" . . . . . Meyerbeer.
2. OVERTURE, "Fidelio" . . . . . Beethoven
3. GAVOTTE for String Orchestra . . . . . Bach
4. WALTZ, "Les Patineurs" . . . . . Waldteufel

5. OVERTURE, "William Tell" . . . . . Rossini
6. BALLET MUSIC from "Feramors" . . . . . Rubinstein
7. SPRING SONG . . . . . Mendelssohn
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
8. AN EVENING WITH BILSE . . . . . Schertz

9. SELECTION, "Fencing Master" . . . . . De Koven
10. WALTZ, "Wine, Woman, and Song" . . . . . Strauss
11. HUSARENRITT . . . . . Spindler
12. MARCH, "King Cotton" . . . . . Sousa

Monday, June 19, Harvard Night.

To secure satisfactory service, patrons are URGED by the Management to report PROMPTLY any inattention. Complaints made so late that patrons cannot recall either the number of the table or the waiter are obviously useless.

HERE ARE A FEW NAMES FROM OUR LIST OF COMPOSERS:

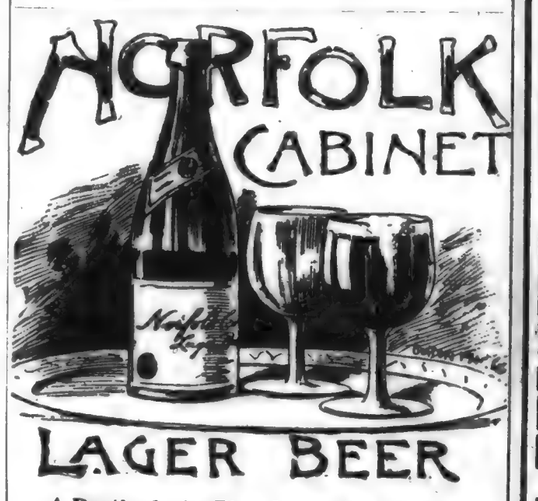
ENGLISH.— Stephen Adams, F. H. Cowen, S. Liddle, C. V. Stanford, A. C. Mackenzie, R. H. Walthew, H. R. Shelley, Goring Thomas, Frances Allitsen, Maude V. White, Edward German, Mary Carmichael, Liza Lehmann, etc.

FRENCH.— C. Chaminade, Jane Vieu, L. Denza, P. Delmet, Bemberg, Guy d'Hardelot, De Leva, F. P. Tosti, etc.

ITALIAN.— F. P. Tosti, P. Mascagni, G. Puccini, G. Verdi, Don Lorenzo Perosi, etc.

THE MOST REPRESENTATIVE PUBLISHING HOUSE IN AMERICA.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th Street, New York,



A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager"
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH.
EDWARD RUHL. | Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL. | BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 14, 1899. | SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIV. No. 32.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

Knowledge differs from Experience.

You may know "all about"

BETWEEN THE ACTS

Little Cigars

but have you ever tried them yourself? Do you know how desirable they really are—how good they are—how economical they are—how convenient they are—how satisfactory they are? You can know—once for all—by having the waiter bring you a 10-cent box of ten—to smoke now—to-night—while you are enjoying this concert.

They are for sale here.

THE MUSIC HALL

Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 14.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "El Capitan"	Sousa
2.	OVERTURE, "Masaniello"	Auber
3.	WALTZ, "Roses from the South"	Strauss
4.	WAR MARCH from "Rienzi"	Wagner
5.	OVERTURE, "Mignon"	Thomas
6.	HYMN TO ST. CECILIA (Violin Solo, MR. ONDRICEK.)	Gounod
7.	INTERMEZZO, "Naila"	Delibes
8.	HUNGARIAN RHAPSODY No. 12 (First Time.)	Liszt
9.	SELECTION, "The Fortune-teller"	Herbert
10.	WALTZ, "Coquetry"	Waldteufel
11.	MAZOURKA, "Libelle"	Strauss
12.	MARCH, "Washington Post"	Sousa

Monday, June 19, Harvard Night.

To secure satisfactory service, patrons are URGED by the Management to report PROMPTLY any inattention. Complaints made so late that patrons cannot recall either the number of the table or the waiter are obviously useless.

ALBUMS OF SONGS,

Containing many popular compositions not published in single form.

IRISH FOLK SONGS, by Charles Wood,	$2.00
RUSSIAN SONGS, by F. Wishaw (2 vols.),	1.00
NINE SONGS, by S. Liddle,	1.00
NINE SONGS, by Liza Lehmann,	1.00
FIVE SONGS, by Francis Korbay,	2.00

Beautifully illustrated by J. S. SARGENT, R.A.

BOOSEY & CO.,
9 East 17th Street, New York.

LAGER BEER

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager"

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH.
EDWARD RUHL.
Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, THURSDAY, JUNE 15, 1899.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIV. No. 33.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

Save half your money

do not throw it away in half-smoked cigars! You will find that 50% of your cigar money is thrown away every day if you recall how few cigars you really have time to smoke "up."

BETWEEN THE ACTS

Little Cigars

are pure—clean—all good tobacco, and are in every way a very satisfactory short smoke. While you are listening to the music to-night, try a 10-cent box. The waiter will get them for you as they are for sale here. You will enjoy them!

THE MUSIC HALL

Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

THURSDAY, JUNE 15.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Merry War" . . . . . Strauss
2. OVERTURE, "Ruy Blas" . . . . . Mendelssohn
3. WALTZ, "Ocean Waves" . . . . . Metra
4. SELECTION, "Wizard of the Nile" . . . . . Herbert

5. OVERTURE, "Martha" . . . . . Flotow
6. LOVE SONG (from an unfinished suite) . . . . . Farwell
7. INTRODUCTION to Act III., "Lohengrin" . . . . . Wagner
8. CONGRESS OF MELODIES . . . . . Conradi

9. (a) ELEGIE, (b) SERENADE } for String Orchestra . . . . . Strube
(First Time.)
The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
10. AMERICAN PATROL . . . . . Meecham
11. POLKA, "Hunter's Yarns" . . . . . Komzak
12. TABASCO MARCH . . . . . Chadwick

Monday, June 19, Harvard Night.

To secure satisfactory service, patrons are URGED by the Management to report PROMPTLY any inattention. Complaints made so late that patrons cannot recall either the number of the table or the waiter are obviously useless.

THE TWO

MOST POPULAR TWO-STEPS

OF THE SEASON.

THE RUNAWAY GIRL, by Van Baar, ... 60c.
THE CECIL, by Megone, ... 50c.
FOR ORCHESTRA OR PIANO SOLO.

BOOSEY & CO.,

9 EAST 17th STREET, NEW YORK.

LAGER BEER

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager"
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL. { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

SMOKE THE LA CELESTINA, THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, FRIDAY, JUNE 16, 1899.

SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIV. No. 34.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers,
Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

In no other way

are men as wasteful and extravagant as in cigar smoking—because cigars are thrown away half smoked half the time.

BETWEEN THE ACTS

Little Cigars

are just right for all short smokes. They light right, they burn right and taste right. Have you ever seen them? At all stores: 10 for 10 cts., or, as they are for sale here, you can try them to-night. Tell the waiter to bring you a 10-cent box of "Between the Acts." They will add to your enjoyment of this concert.

THE MUSIC HALL

Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

FRIDAY, JUNE 16.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "King Karl"	Eilenberg
2.	OVERTURE, "Stradella"	Flotow
3.	WALTZ, "Doctrinen"	Strauss
4.	SELECTION, "Faust"	Gounod
5.	INTRODUCTION to "Lohengrin"	Wagner
6.	TWO MOVEMENTS from "Bal Costumé"	Rubinstein
7.	LE DÉLUGE	Saint-Saëns

Solo Violin, MR. ONDRICEK.

The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.

8.	AUBADE PRINTANIÈRE	Lacome
9.	NOCTURNE AND WEDDING MARCH	Mendelssohn
10.	ESTUDIANTINA	Waldteufel
11.	POLKA, "Rosebuds"	Eilenberg
12.	MARCH, "Wien, bleibt Wien"	Schrammel

Monday, June 19, Harvard Night.

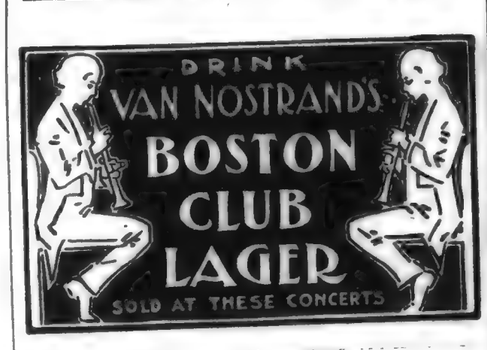
To secure satisfactory service, patrons are URGED by the Management to report PROMPTLY any inattention. Complaints made so late that patrons cannot recall either the number of the table or the waiter are obviously useless.

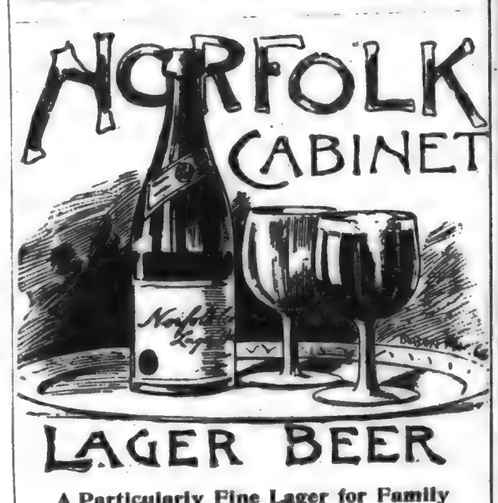
Now the rage of the LONDON Concerts and Drawing-rooms:

YOU AND I, by Liza Lehmann, ... 60c.
KING CHARLES, by M. V. White, . . . 60c.
LIKE VIOLETS PALE, by F. Allitsen, . . 60c.
WHEN THE WORLD IS FAIR, by F. H. Cowen, 60c.
QUEEN OF MY LIFE, by E. T. Lloyd, . . 60c.

BOOSEY & CO.,

9 East 17th Street, New York.





LAGER BEER

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:

"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager"
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH. EDWARD RUHL. { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

[34]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 17, 1899.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIV. No. 35.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

Knowledge differs from Experience.

You may know "all about"

BETWEEN THE ACTS

Little Cigars

but have you ever tried them yourself? Do you know how desirable they really are—how good they are—how economical they are—how convenient they are—how satisfactory they are? You can know—once for all—by having the waiter bring you a 10-cent box of ten—to smoke now—to-night—while you are enjoying this concert.

They are for sale here.

THE MUSIC HALL . . .

Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

SATURDAY, JUNE 17.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "U. S. Volunteers" . . . . . Strube
2. OVERTURE, "Fra Diavolo" . . . . . Auber
3. WALTZ, "Amour et Printemps" . . . . . Waldteufel
4. SELECTION, "Fledermaus" . . . . . Strauss

5. OVERTURE, "Poet and Peasant" . . . . . Suppé
6. TWO MOVEMENTS from "Henry VIII." . . . Saint Saëns
7. LARGO . . . . . Händel
   (Solo Violin, MR. ONDRICEK.)
8. HUNGARIAN MARCH, from "Damnation of Faust" . . Berlioz

9. PARAPHRASE on "Haste thee, Winter" . . . . Loud
   (First Time.)
10. WALTZ, "Blue Danube" . . . . . Strauss
11. MAZOURKA, "Czarina" . . . . . Ganné
12. MARCH, "Hoch Habsburg" . . . . . Kral

Monday, June 19, Harvard Night.

To secure satisfactory service, patrons are URGED by the Management to report PROMPTLY any inattention. Complaints made so late that patrons cannot recall either the number of the table or the waiter are obviously useless.

HERE ARE A FEW NAMES FROM OUR LIST OF COMPOSERS:

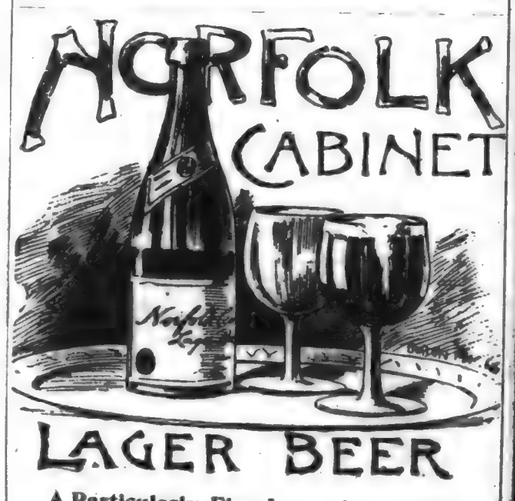
ENGLISH.— Stephen Adams, F. H. Cowen, S. Liddle, C. V. Stanford, A. C. Mackenzie, R. H. Walthew, H. R. Shelley, Goring Thomas, Frances Allitsen, Maude V. White, Edward German, Mary Carmichael, Liza Lehmann, etc.

FRENCH.— C. Chaminade, Jane Vieu, L. Denza, P. Delmet, Bemberg, Guy d'Hardelot, De Leva, F. P. Tosti, etc.

ITALIAN.— F. P. Tosti, P. Mascagni, G. Puccini, G. Verdi, Don Lorenzo Perosi, etc.

THE MOST REPRESENTATIVE PUBLISHING HOUSE IN AMERICA.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th Street, New York.



A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager"
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH.
EDWARD RUHL.
Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 8 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA." THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

BOSTON, MONDAY, JUNE 19, 1899. SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIV. No. 36.

YOU CAN
RELY ON
LEWANDO'S
W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
Fine Dyers, Fine Dyers.
Fine Dyers.
Fine Dyers, New York
Dyed and Delivered.

If you are open to conviction, to-night
try one 10 cent box of
BETWEEN THE ACTS
Little Cigars
to smoke now—or at any time when you want a short smoke and haven't time for a long one. They are real cigars, but small ones.
They cost so little that you can use them every day as well as not and actually save on your daily cigar expense by substituting them for larger cigars
FOR SALE HERE.

THE.... MUSIC.. HALL... PROMENADE CONCERTS

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. E. R. COREE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

MONDAY, JUNE 19.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "University" . . . Bergmiller
2. OVERTURE, "St. Petersburg" . . . Adam
3. WALTZ, "Jolly Fellow" . . . Vollstedt
4. SELECTION, "Rudolph, Jr." . . . Chas. von Bast
5. AMERICAN FANTASY . . . Herbert
6. OVERTURE to "Merry Wives of Bethesda," H. Fis Production, 1890.
7. SELECTION from "Tony Pastor" Productions.
8. SERENADE . . . Henry, '87
(First Time.)
9. MARCH, "The Crimson Harvard" . . . Strube
10. SELECTION, "Belle of New York" . . . Kerker
11. FAIR HARVARD
12. MARCH, "Under the Stars and Stripes Forever" . . . Sousa

To secure seats for any concert, application should be made by the Management to insure CERTAINTY, as many persons are disappointed every year by not making early application for the special concerts.

ALBUMS OF SONGS,
Containing many popular compositions not published in single form.

IRISH FOLK SONGS, by Charles Wood.	$2.00
RUSSIAN SONGS, by F. Wislaw (2 vols.).	1.00
NINE SONGS, by Liza Lehmann.	1.00
NINE SONGS, by Liza Lehmann.	1.00
FIVE SONGS, by Francis Korbay.	2.00

Beautifully illustrated by J. S. SARGENT, R.A.

BOOSEY & CO.,
9 East 17th Street, New York.

LAGER BEER
A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.
Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the D. A. Frost Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.
Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager."
"Queen Quality" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.
HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH. EDWARD RUBL. Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, TUESDAY, JUNE 20, 1899.

SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIV. No. 37.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

Save half your money

do not throw it away in half-smoked cigars! You will find that 50% of your cigar money is thrown away every day if you recall how few cigars you really have time to smoke "up."

BETWEEN THE ACTS

Little Cigars

are pure—clean—all good tobacco, and are in every way a very satisfactory short smoke. While you are listening to the music to-night, try a 10-cent box. The waiter will get them for you as they are for sale here. You will enjoy them!

THE MUSIC HALL

Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

TUESDAY, JUNE 20.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "The Harvard Volunteers" (First Time.) . . . Grace Weston Lunt
2. OVERTURE, "La Gazza Ladra" . . . . . Rossini
3. WALTZ, "Harlequin on a Voyage" . . . . . Zach
4. SELECTION, "The Brigands" . . . . . Offenbach

5. JUBEL OVERTURE . . . . . Weber
6. ANDANTE FOR STRING ORCHESTRA . . . Tchaikowsky
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
7. CZARDAS from "Der Geist des Wojewoden" (First Time.) . . . Grossmann
8. FINALE, Act I., "Lohengrin" . . . . . Wagner

9. SUITE DE BALLET (First Time.) . . . . . Levy
10. LOVE'S DREAM AFTER THE BALL . . . . Czibulka
11. POLKA, "Love Letter" . . . . . Ziehrer
12. GEORGIA CAMP-MEETING . . . . . Mills

Wednesday, June 21, Naval Night. Complimentary to the Officers of the North Atlantic Squadron.
Tuesday, June 27, Soloists' Night.
Friday, June 30, Request Night.

To secure satisfactory service, patrons are URGED by the Management to report PROMPTLY any inattention. Complaints made so late that patrons cannot recall either the number of the table or the waiter are obviously useless.

THE TWO

MOST POPULAR TWO-STEPS

OF THE SEASON.

THE RUNAWAY GIRL, by Van Baar, ... 60c.
THE CECIL, by Megone, ... 50c.

FOR ORCHESTRA OR PIANO SOLO.

BOOSEY & CO.,

9 EAST 17th STREET, NEW YORK.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager."

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH.
EDWARD RUHL.
Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 8 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

• THE MUSIC HALL •

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL. | BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 21, 1899. | SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIV. No. 38.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

In no other way

are men as wasteful and extravagant as in cigar smoking—because cigars are thrown away half smoked half the time.

BETWEEN THE ACTS

Little Cigars

are just right for all short smokes. They light right, they burn right and taste right. Have you ever seen them? At all stores: 10 for 10 cts., or, as they are for sale here, you can try them to-night. Tell the waiter to bring you a 10-cent box of "Between the Acts." They will add to your enjoyment of this concert.

THE .... MUSIC .. HALL ... Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 21.

Naval Night. Complimentary to the Officers of the North Atlantic Squadron.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Under the Double Eagle" . . . . . Wagner
2. OVERTURE, "Felsenmühle" . . . . . Reissiger
3. WALTZ, "Violets" . . . . . Waldteufel
4. SELECTION, "Mikado" . . . . . Sullivan

5. OVERTURE, "Sakuntala" . . . . . Goldmark
6. { a. "Reverie" / b. "The Indian" } for String Orchestra . . . . Maquarre

   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
7. INTRODUCTION, Act III., "Lohengrin" . . . Wagner
8. AMERICAN FANTASY . . . . . Herbert

9. MARCH, "Hobson's Choice" . . . . . Strube
10. OVERTURE, "Pique Dame" . . . . . Suppé
11. WALTZ, "Artist's Life" . . . . . Strauss
12. MARCH, "Austria" . . . . . Zach

Tuesday, June 27, Soloists' Night.
Friday, June 30, Request Night.

To secure satisfactory service, patrons are URGED by the Management to report PROMPTLY any inattention. Complaints made so late that patrons cannot recall either the number of the table or the waiter are obviously useless.

Now the rage of the LONDON Concerts and Drawing-rooms:

YOU AND I, by Liza Lehmann, ... 60c.
KING CHARLES, by M. V. White, . . . 60c.
LIKE VIOLETS PALE, by F. Allitsen, . . 60c.
WHEN THE WORLD IS FAIR, by F. H. Cowen, 60c.
QUEEN OF MY LIFE, by E. T. Lloyd, . . 60c.

BOOSEY & CO.,

9 East 17th Street, New York.

LAGER BEER

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager"

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH.
EDWARD RUHL.
Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL. | BOSTON, THURSDAY, JUNE 22, 1899. | SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIV. No. 39.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Grosby, General Manager.

French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

Knowledge differs from Experience.

You may know "all about"

BETWEEN THE ACTS

Little Cigars

but have you ever tried them yourself? Do you know how desirable they really are—how good they are—how economical they are—how convenient they are—how satisfactory they are? You can know—once for all—by having the waiter bring you a 10-cent box of ten—to smoke now—to-night—while you are enjoying this concert.

They are for sale here.

THE MUSIC HALL

Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

THURSDAY, JUNE 22.

PROGRAMME.

1. LOUISBURG MARCH . . . . . W. A. Rice
   (First Time.)
2. OVERTURE, "Banditenstreiche" . . . . . Suppé
3. WALTZ, "Vienna Blood" . . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION, "Trovatore" . . . . . Verdi

5. OVERTURE, "Merry Wives of Windsor" . . . . . Nicolai
6. SERENADE for String Orchestra . . . . . Moszkowski
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
7. TWO SLAVONIC DANCES . . . . . Dvorak
8. POLONAISE . . . . . Liszt

9. SELECTION, "Tabasco" . . . . . Chadwick
10. WALTZ, "Donau Wellen" . . . . . Ivanovici
11. THE DARKIES' DREAM . . . . . Lansing
12. MARCH, "The Bride Elect" . . . . . Sousa

Tuesday, June 27, Soloists' Night.
Friday, June 30, Request Night.

To secure satisfactory service, patrons are URGED by the Management to report PROMPTLY any inattention. Complaints made so late that patrons cannot recall either the number of the table or the waiter are obviously useless.

HERE ARE A FEW NAMES FROM OUR LIST OF COMPOSERS:

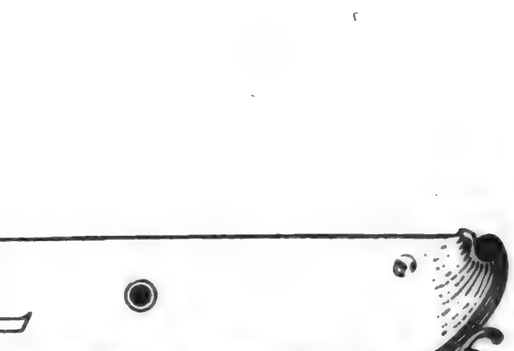
ENGLISH.—Stephen Adams, F. H. Cowen, S. Liddle, C. V. Stanford, A. C. Mackenzie, R. H. Walthew, H. R. Shelley, Goring Thomas, Frances Allitsen, Maude V. White, Edward German, Mary Carmichael, Liza Lehmann, etc.

FRENCH.—C. Chaminade, Jane Vieu, L. Denza, P. Delmet, Bemberg, Guy d'Hardelot, De Leva, F. P. Tosti, etc.

ITALIAN.—F. P. Tosti, P. Mascagni, G. Puccini, G. Verdi, Don Lorenzo Perosi, etc.

THE MOST REPRESENTATIVE PUBLISHING HOUSE IN AMERICA.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th Street, New York.



A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager"

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH.
EDWARD RUHL.
Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

[39.]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, FRIDAY, JUNE 23, 1899.

SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIV. No. 40.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

If you are open to conviction, to-night

try one 10-cent box of

BETWEEN THE ACTS

Little Cigars

to smoke now—or at any time when you want a short smoke and haven't time for a long one. They are real cigars, but small ones.

They cost so little that you can use them every day as well as not and actually save on your daily cigar expense by substituting them for larger cigars.

FOR SALE HERE.

THE MUSIC HALL

Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

FRIDAY, JUNE 23.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Washington Post" . . . . . Sousa
2. OVERTURE, "Light Cavalry" . . . . . Suppé
3. WALTZ, "Bei uns zu Haus'" . . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION, "Aïda" . . . . . Verdi

5. BALLET MUSIC from "Queen of Sheba" . . . Goldmark
   Violoncello Solo, MR. KELLER.
6. TWO MOVEMENTS from "Peer Gynt" . . . . Grieg
7. MELODIE . . . . . Rubinstein
8. RIDE OF THE VALKYRIES . . . . . Wagner

9. LE DERNIER SOMMEIL DE LA VIERGE . . . Massenet
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
10. OVERTURE, "Orpheus" . . . . . Offenbach
11. WALTZ, "Meerleuchten" . . . . . Ziehrer
12. MARCH, "Stars and Stripes" . . . . . Sousa

Tuesday, June 27, Soloists' Night.
Friday, June 30, Request Night.

To secure satisfactory service, patrons are URGED by the Management to report PROMPTLY any inattention. Complaints made so late that patrons cannot recall either the number of the table or the waiter are obviously useless.

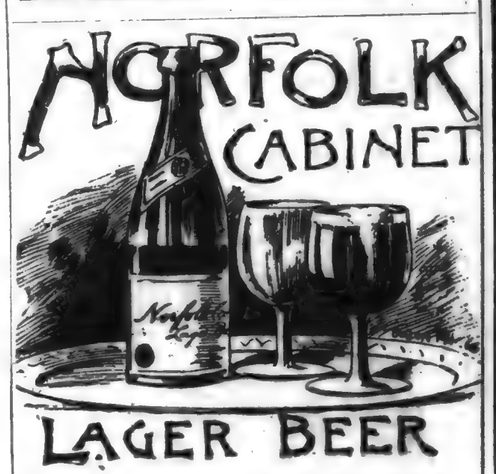
ALBUMS OF SONGS,

Containing many popular compositions not published in single form.

IRISH FOLK SONGS, by Charles Wood,	$2.00
RUSSIAN SONGS, by F. Wishaw (2 vols.),	1.00
NINE SONGS, by S. Liddle,	1.00
NINE SONGS, by Liza Lehmann,	1.00
FIVE SONGS, by Francis Korbay,	2.00

Beautifully illustrated by J. S. SARGENT, R.A.

BOOSEY & CO.,
9 East 17th Street, New York.



A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager"
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH. EDWARD RUHL. { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

[40]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL. | BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 24, 1899. | SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIV. No. 41.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

Save half your money

do not throw it away in half-smoked cigars! You will find that 50% of your cigar money is thrown away every day if you recall how few cigars you really have time to smoke "up."

BETWEEN THE ACTS
Little Cigars

are pure—clean—all good tobacco, and are in every way a very satisfactory short smoke. While you are listening to the music to-night, try a 10-cent box. The waiter will get them for you as they are for sale here. You will enjoy them!

THE MUSIC HALL

Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

SATURDAY, JUNE 24.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Under the Double Eagle" . . . . . Wagner
2. OVERTURE, "Elisabeth" . . . . . Rossini
3. WALTZ, "Vienna Girls" . . . . . Ziehrer
4. SELECTION, "Carmen" . . . . . Bizet

5. MARCH, "Queen of Sheba" . . . . . Gounod
6. SELECTION, "La Grande Duchesse" . . . . . Offenbach
7. (a) ERINNERUNG, (b) VALSE CAPRICE } for String Orchestra . . . . Keller (First Time.)
8. OVERTURE, "Tannhäuser" . . . . . Wagner

9. MENUET . . . . . Heilman (First Time.)
10. TWO HUNGARIAN DANCES . . . . . Brahms
11. WALTZ, "Grubenlichter" . . . . . Zeller
12. MARCH, "Liberty Bell" . . . . . Sousa

Tuesday, June 27, Soloists' Night.
Friday, June 30, Request Night.

To secure satisfactory service, patrons are URGED by the Management to report PROMPTLY any inattention. Complaints made so late that patrons cannot recall either the number of the table or the waiter are obviously useless.

THE TWO
MOST POPULAR TWO-STEPS
OF THE SEASON.

THE RUNAWAY GIRL, by Van Baar, ... 60c.
THE CECIL, by Megone, ... 50c.

FOR ORCHESTRA OR PIANO SOLO.

BOOSEY & CO.,
9 EAST 17th STREET, NEW YORK.

LAGER BEER

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager"

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH. EDWARD RUHL. { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL

BOSTON, MONDAY, JUNE [illegible]

SUMMER SEASON
Vol. XIV. No. 42.

YOU CAN

Have your [illegible] or cleansed [illegible] will look like [illegible] process. Wh[illegible] ing, when it can be [illegible] worn as [illegible]

RELY ON

Our method [illegible] not hesitate [illegible] of the most [illegible]

We dye or [illegible] PROPERLY [illegible] household [illegible] kinds.

LEWANDO'S
W. L. Crosby, General Manager
French Cleaners [illegible]
[illegible]
17 Temple Pl[illegible]
[illegible]
Bundles called for and delivered.

In no other way

are men as wasteful and extravagant as in cigar smoking—because cigars are thrown away half smoked half the time.

BETWEEN THE ACTS
Little Cigars

are just right for all short smokes. They light right, they burn right and taste right. Have you ever smoked them? At all stores: 10 for 10 cts.; or, as they are for sale here, you can try them to-night. Tell the waiter to bring you a 10-cent box of "Between the Acts." They will add to your enjoyment of this concert.

THE MUSIC HALL

Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. [illegible]

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

MONDAY, JUNE [illegible]

GRADUATES' NIGHT

PROGRAMME

[illegible]

Monday, June 27, St. [illegible]
Monday, June 30, Request Night.
Monday, July 7, Opening Night.

See the page of the Parisian Leaders and Drawing Cards

BOOSEY & CO.,
9 East 17th Street, New York.

LAGER BEER

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs

Other Brands in Bottles

HABICH & CO.

W. HABICH, EDWARD JUEHL. Telephone 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE [illegible] SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

• THE MUSIC HALL •

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, TUESDAY, JUNE 27, 1899.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIV. No. 43.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S
W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

Knowledge differs from Experience.

You may know "all about"

BETWEEN THE ACTS
Little Cigars

but have you ever tried them yourself? Do you know how desirable they really are—how good they are—how economical they are—how convenient they are—how satisfactory they are? You can know—once for all—by having the waiter bring you a 10-cent box of ten—to smoke now—to-night—while you are enjoying this concert.

They are for sale here.

THE.... MUSIC.. HALL... Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

TUESDAY, JUNE 27.
SOLOISTS' NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Obersteiger" . . . . . Zeller
2. WALTZ, "Lagunen" . . . . . Strauss
3. OVERTURE, "Robinson Crusoe" . . . . . Heberlein
   (First Time.)
4. LES RAMEAUX . . . . . Faure
   Baritone Solo, DR. G. DE AMEZAGA.
5. OVERTURE, "Tell" . . . . . Rossini
6. INVITATION TO DANCE . . . . . Weber
7. { a. LÉGENDE / b. MAZOURKA } . . . . . Wieniawski
   Violin Solo, MR. ONDRICEK.
   Piano Accompaniment by MR. NAGEL.
8. BACCHANALE, from "Samson and Dalila" . . . . Saint-Saëns
9. MARCH, from "Strawberry Leaves" . . . . . Tippett
10. OVERTURE, "Frau Meisterin" . . . . . Suppé
    (First Time.)
11. WALTZ, "Amour et Printemps" . . . . . Waldteufel
12. MARCH, "Wien bleibt Wien" . . . . . Schrammel

Friday, June 30, Request Night.
Saturday, July 1, Closing Night.

To secure satisfactory service, patrons are URGED by the Management to report PROMPTLY any inattention. Complaints made so late that patrons cannot recall either the number of the table or the waiter are obviously useless.

HERE ARE A FEW NAMES FROM OUR LIST OF COMPOSERS:

ENGLISH.— Stephen Adams, F. H. Cowen, S. Liddle, C. V. Stanford, A. C. Mackenzie, R. H. Walthew, H. R. Shelley, Goring Thomas, Frances Allitsen, Maude V. White, Edward German, Mary Carmichael, Liza Lehmann, etc.

FRENCH.— C. Chaminade, Jane Vieu, L. Denza, P. Delmet, Bemberg, Guy d'Hardelot, De Leva, F. P. Tosti, etc.

ITALIAN.— F. P. Tosti, P. Mascagni, G. Puccini, G. Verdi, Don Lorenzo Perosi, etc.

THE MOST REPRESENTATIVE PUBLISHING HOUSE IN AMERICA.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th Street, New York.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager"
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH.
EDWARD RUHL.
Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARQUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

[43]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 28, 1899.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIV. No. 44.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Crosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

If you are open to conviction, to-night

try one 10-cent box of

BETWEEN THE ACTS
Little Cigars

to smoke now—or at any time when you want a short smoke and haven't time for a long one. They are real cigars, but small ones.

They cost so little that you can use them every day as well as not and actually save on your daily cigar expense by substituting them for larger cigars.

FOR SALE HERE.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 28.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH OF THE PRÆTORIAN GUARD	Noll
2.	OVERTURE, "Pique Dame"	Suppé
3.	WALTZ, "In's Centrum"	Strauss
4.	SELECTION, "Wizard of the Nile"	Herbert
5.	a. "Der Lindenbaum"	Schubert
	b. "Annie Laurie"	Old Scotch Song

Boston Trombone Quartette: Messrs. HAMPE, MAUSEBACH, MEYER, THOMAE.

6.	OVERTURE, "Zampa"	Hérold
7.	a. "Spring Song"	Mendelssohn
	b. "Aubade Printanière"	Lacome
8.	SELECTION, "Robin Hood"	De Koven
9.	VISIONS IN A DREAM	Lumbye

Zither Solo, Mr. KELLER.

The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.

10.	OVERTURE, "Stradella"	Flotow
11.	WALTZ, "España"	Waldteufel
12.	MARCH, "With our Soldier Boys at Tampa Bay"	Slocum

Friday, June 30, Request Night.
Saturday, July 1, Closing Night.

To secure satisfactory service, patrons are URGED by the Management to report PROMPTLY any inattention. Complaints made so late that patrons cannot recall either the number of the table or the waiter are obviously useless.

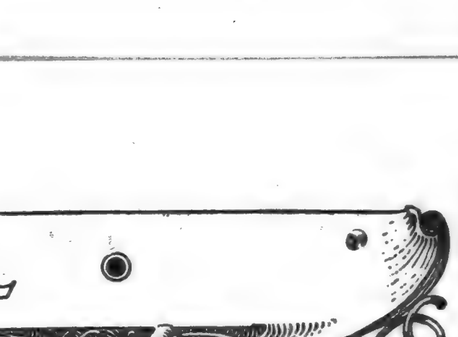
ALBUMS OF SONGS,

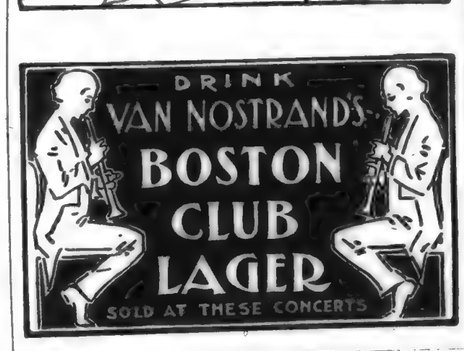
Containing many popular compositions not published in single form.

IRISH FOLK SONGS, by Charles Wood,	$2.00
RUSSIAN SONGS, by F. Wishaw (2 vols.),	1.00
NINE SONGS, by S. Liddle,	1.00
NINE SONGS, by Liza Lehmann,	1.00
FIVE SONGS, by Francis Korbay,	2.00

Beautifully illustrated by J. S. Sargent, R.A.

BOOSEY & CO.,
9 East 17th Street, New York.





A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager"
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH.
EDWARD RUHL.
Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

SMOKE THE CELEBRATED "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

[44]

BLANK PAGE

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

• THE MUSIC HALL •

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JULY 1, 1899.

SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIV. No. 47.

YOU CAN

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

RELY ON

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY, all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

LEWANDO'S

W. L. Grosby, General Manager.
French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Established 70 years.
Largest in America.
Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

Knowledge differs from Experience.

You may know "all about"

BETWEEN THE ACTS

Little Cigars

but have you ever tried them yourself? Do you know how desirable they really are—how good they are—how economical they are—how convenient they are—how satisfactory they are? You can know—once for all—by having the waiter bring you a 10-cent box of ten—to smoke now—to-night—while you are enjoying this concert.

They are for sale here.

THE MUSIC HALL

Promenade Concerts

FOURTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

SATURDAY, JULY 1.

CLOSING NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Tabasco" . . . . . Chadwick
2. OVERTURE, "Semiramide" . . . . . Rossini
3. WALTZ, "Bei uns zu Haus'" . . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION, "Faust" . . . . . Gounod

---

5. MARCH, "Cruiser Harvard" . . . . . Strube
6. OVERTURE, "Rienzi" . . . . . Wagner
7. TRIO for Harp, Violin, 'Cello . . . . . Oehlschlägel
   (Messrs. SCHUECKER, ONDRICEK, KELLER.)
8. HUNGARIAN RHAPSODY No. 2 . . . . . Liszt

---

9. WALTZ, "Blue Danube" . . . . . Strauss
10. SELECTION, "Serenade" . . . . . Herbert
11. AMERICAN PATROL . . . . . Meecham
12. MARCH, "Stars and Stripes" . . . . . Sousa

To secure satisfactory service, patrons are URGED by the Management to report PROMPTLY any inattention. Complaints made so late that patrons cannot recall either the number of the table or the waiter are obviously useless.

HERE ARE A FEW NAMES FROM OUR LIST OF COMPOSERS:

ENGLISH.— Stephen Adams, F. H. Cowen, S. Liddle, C. V. Stanford, A. C. Mackenzie, R. H. Walthew, H. R. Shelley, Goring Thomas, Frances Allitsen, Maude V. White, Edward German, Mary Carmichael, Liza Lehmann, etc.

FRENCH.— C. Chaminade, Jane Vieu, L. Denza, P. Delmet, Bemberg, Guy d'Hardelot, De Leva, F. P. Tosti, etc.

ITALIAN.— F. P. Tosti, P. Mascagni, G. Puccini, G. Verdi, Don Lorenzo Perosi, etc.

THE MOST REPRESENTATIVE PUBLISHING HOUSE IN AMERICA.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th Street, New York.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Other Brands in Bottles:
"Norfolk India Pale Stock Ale."
"Norfolk Extra Golden Ale" (blue label).
"Norfolk Standard Lager"

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH.
EDWARD RUHL.
Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

[46]

BLANK PAGE

Tomorrow (Monday) Evening 8 to 11
FIRST NIGHT.

MUSIC HALL | PROMENADE CONCERTS.

50—GRAND ORCHESTRA—50
MR. MAX ZACH, Conductor.
ADMISSION 25c. Reserved Seats on Floor or Balcony 50c.

First Night
Tomorrow (Monday) Evening, 8 to 11

Music Hall Promenade Concerts

50 Grand Orchestra — 50
MR. MAX ZACH, Conductor.
Admission 25c. Reserved Seats on Floor or Balcony 50c.

Boston Herald, April 30—'99

"Pop" Concert Season Will Open in Another Week.

Mr. Zach Will Conduct for the First Four Weeks—Last Music Students' Concert to Be Given Next Thursday Evening—Sousa Making His 14th Tour.

MONDAY evening, May 8, opens the 14th season of the Music Hall promenade concerts, with the 702d performance. It is worthy of comment that the impression is very general when this announcement is made each season that the time of beginning is earlier than usual. As a matter of fact, the date of opening has been the same for the past six years. While it is always more or less difficult to analyze satisfactorily success in amusement enterprises, there are certain unique features in these concerts which very largely account for their popularity. The orchestra of 50 musicians from the ranks of the Boston Symphony orchestra plays the light music which obtains with the same finish and attention to detail shown during the Symphony season. One can eat a little, drink a little and talk as much as one likes, all of which lends an air of sociability to the entertainments which is not their least attractive feature. In the matter of conductors, the custom which has prevailed for several seasons of selection from the Boston Symphony orchestra will again prevail. Mr. Max Zach will conduct for the first four weeks, Mr. Gustav Strube for the rest of the season, and it is safe to assume that they will repeat their successes of last year. All the old favorite numbers will be repeated, an effort will be made to discover some attractive novelties, and the management will be glad to consider any suggestions patrons care to make in the matter of programme. As it is always safe to "let well enough alone," there will be no startling innovations, but most of the special nights of last year will be repeated. The sale of tickets will open at Music Hall tomorrow (Monday) morning, May 1, at 9 o'clock.

Boston Globe April 30—'99

Promenade Concerts.

The Music hall promenade concerts will begin their 14th season Monday evening, May 8, with the 702d performance. For 13 years, with practically the same general plan of arrangement, these concerts have been a summer sequence to the symphony season. The symphony concert audiences continue their patronage and welcome the seasonable change to lighter music, with now and then a classic like the Largo of Handel to still the audience, and at the same time show the strength always existing in good music. And these lighter programs attract a larger and distinct clientele who like their music al fresco, with something to eat and drink and a chat with one's neighbors. And through it all, there has been maintained a standard of excellence both in music and attendance which has never varied.

Regarding the makeup of the program, it would be unwise to shelve the old favorites, but the usual effort to find attractive novelties will be made. The conductor, as for several seasons past, will be chosen from the Boston symphony orchestra, and the success made by both Mr Max Zach and Mr Gustav Strube last year justifies their retention, Mr Zach to conduct the first four weeks, Mr Strube the rest of the season. The sale of tickets will open at Music hall tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock.

Boston Journal April 30

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

Monday evening, May 8, opens the 14th season of the Music Hall promenade concerts, with the 702d performance.

It is remarkable how little these concerts have changed in their general arrangement, and perhaps herein lies the secret of their success. The same audiences are here, comprising both quality and quantity, and like the concerts themselves, never growing old in the prevailing atmosphere of perpetual youth. The same orchestra of 50 musicians from the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays the same Largo of Handel and the like. A description of these concerts used many years ago is sufficiently pertinent to quote again:

"The 'Pops,' like the Symphonies, are absorbing in a way. Boston loves them. Thed are democratic. Here is the clerk, business man, professional man, student, the various gradations of society, men and women alike. Everybody goes, smokes and drinks a little, and feels agreeably relaxed by observing his neighbors as well as hearing the tasteful music. To the right and left in the balconies are the conservative spectators who have come partly to hear the music and partly to see 'Bohemia.'"

Mr. Max Zach will conduct for the first four weeks, Mr. Gustav Strube the remainder of the season. As far as selections to be performed, patrons will surely welcom[illegible]

Times Apr 30

"POPS" NEXT WEEK.

Mr. Comee Again the Manager and Mr. Zach the Director, as Last Year.

It makes one feel that the summer is really upon us, now that the season of Promenade concerts is about to open. The assimilation of music and beer and tobacco smoke goes with hot weather, shirt waists and sailor hats, and we feel that the winds must of necessity have been robbed of their chill by the time the opening of this thoroughly Bostonese series of Pop concerts a week from tomorrow night. How every one is looking forward to them, and their six weeks run will as ever be all too short for the pleasure of their patrons. Of course a large proportion of the city's population has fled to summer homes at the country, mountains and seashore by the time the Pops close, but there are enough stay-at-homes, who are unable to leave their business for more than a few weeks at a time who would welcome these deliciously Bohemian affairs to make them pay. The musicians have to be considered though, and most of them have next summer engagements elsewhere, amid more comfortable surroundings than Music hall. There's where the rub comes.

So we'll have to take the Promenades just as they always have been, and thank our lucky stars for them as short as the season is. It is good to know that Mr. Fred R. Comee is to manage them again. He knows just how, and has made them the popular institution they have become. Mr. Max Zach will be the director again this year, and a right royal welcome he will receive at the opening on Monday evening, May 8.

SUNDAY POST.

In Society.

Now for the Pop concerts and the Military Tournament—two spring features to interest all alike! Boston without this Music Hall diversion would be deadly dull indeed. The Pops have long since been regarded as a regular institution and are eagerly looked forward to as the nearest approach to what New York gives. Some things grow stale by long usage—not so the Pops. The popular success of these concerts was considered at first a matter of doubt, and in the minds, too, of persons who desired them to succeed. All doubts were dispelled, however, thanks to the wise management of Mr. Charles Ellis and his genial "right bower," Fred Comee.

The Pops in this town have certain distinguishing characteristics and differ from beer gardens in other cities and in other countries. It is noticeable to the visitor from other parts that the men remove their hats, yet they quaff their beer and smoke their Havanas and cigarettes in the face of milady who dares not take anything stronger than the crimson claret punch.

Then, too, the people who look upon the "Pops" as something in the nature of a social affair are given an opportunity for peeping over the high wall of their own particular set and of catching a glimpse of the ones who figure chiefly in the society columns. It is the ambition of many to get a table near the elect and mingle if possible with the so-called smart set, and gaze superciliously over the rail to less favored (?) but in reality more comfortable acquaintances. They enjoy being stared at and in seeing their names in print. It is hoped they enjoy the music.

On Monday, May 8, the concerts open under the leadership of Max Zach. The last four of the eight weeks Mr. Gustav Strube will conduct. There will be incidental features, such as "Harvard Night," etc., and the season promises success. Seats go on sale tomorrow at Music Hall box office.

THE TIMES

The opening of the 14th season of Promenade conerts in Music hall this week will be the musical happening of moment. The orchestra will be composed of 50 musicians from the Symphony ranks, Mr. Max Zach will conduct for the first four weeks and Mr. Gustav Strube for the season. Mr. Comee will look out for the managerial end of the enterprise and the same general plan which has prevailed for the last 13 years will be sustained.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, MAY 6, 1899

The Promenade Concerts

Among the many forms of amusement offered to the public there are probably none which attract more attention than the Music Hall Promenade Concerts. The announcement that the fourteenth season would open on Monday has created a very large demand for seats, and the opening night promises to equal those of past seasons. The same general arrangement of past seasons will be in vogue this year. Mr. Max Zach, who will again conduct the orchestra, has selected the following numbers for his opening programme:

Polonaise, from "Eugene Onégin"...Tchaikovski
Waltz, "Gross-Wien".....Strauss
Overture, "Orpheus aux Enfers".....Offenbach
Violin Obligato, Mr. Karl Ondricek
Oriental march.....Zach
Ballet music from "Coppelia".....Delibes
(a) Spring song.....Mendelssohn
(b) Sevillana.....Massenet
Valse Caprice, "Honeymoon".....Stix
For String Orchestra
Overture, "Mignon".....Ambroise Thomas
Two Slavonic Dances.....Dvorak
Polka, "Tic-tac".....Strobl
Waltz, "Grugenlichter".....Zeller
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever".....Sousa

NEW COLOR SCHEME FOR THE "POPS"

An Innovation in the Arrangement of Tables for This Season

Patrons of the "Pop" concerts last season, while patriotic enough at the start, objected after awhile to being pulled to their feet every time "The Star Spangled Banner" was played, and they likewise saw so much of Sampson and Schley and the other "heroes" of the late unpleasantness with Spain that they shuddered every time thereafter they saw pictures of any of these personages. Manager Fred R. Comee is an observant man and he knows to a certainty when to make a change. Consequently when the doors of Music Hall are thrown open to the would-be joyous throng on Monday evening an entirely new color scheme in the way of decorations will be presented. Mr. Comee is modest and is unwilling to dwell at length on the spectacular effects which he proposes to "spring," but he did admit this morning that he hoped to be credited with doing as well as anybody ever has done in transforming a somewhat melancholy interior into a thing of partial beauty, at least. Further than that he diffidently declined to commit himself.

One innovation in the matter of tables which will be appreciated is this: those tables in the balcony, directly over the historic clock, which heretofore have been reserved, will be thrown open at admission prices to first comers, while as an offset, nineteen new tables have been placed in the balcony on the Hamilton-street side. Moreover, additional tables are included this season in the reserved space on the floor, which is the really popular section of the auditorium at "Pop" concerts. As to the attendance at the opening concert it is to Mr. Comee a gratifying evidence of a prosperous season that practically every reserved table and seat have been sold, and that Max Zach, who is to conduct for the first weeks, will be given a royal ovation when he waves his baton for the opening number.

Boston Journal.

SUNDAY, MAY 7, 1899.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The promenade concerts at Music Hall, with the many attractive features which have given them their great popularity in seasons past, will begin tomorrow evening, and for the next two months fine music of the lighter sort will be played, each evening from 8 until 11 by a superb orchestra drawn from the Boston Symphony players. Mr. Max Zach will be the conductor. An excellent buffet will be provided and smoking will be permitted at the tables. The following is the program for tomorrow night:

Polonaise, from "Eugent Oneguin".....Tschaikowsky
(First time.)
Waltz, "Gross-Wien".....Strauss
Overture, "Orpheus aux Enfers"...Offenbach
Violin obbligato, Mr. Karl Ondricek.
Oriental March.....Zach
Ballet music from "Coppelia".....Delibes
Dance of the Automatons.
Valse.
Czardas.
Spring Song.....Mendelssohn
Sevillana.....Massenet
Valse Caprice, "Honeymoon".....Stix
For string orchestra.
(First time.)
Overture, "Mignon".....Ambroise Thomas
Two Slavonic dances.....Dvorak
Polka, "Tic-tac".....Strobl
Waltz, "Grubenlichter".....Zeller
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever".....Sousa

[48]

Tomorrow (Monday) Evening 8 to 11
FIRST NIGHT.

MUSIC HALL | PROMENADE CONCERTS.

50—GRAND ORCHESTRA—50
MR. MAX ZACH, Conductor.
ADMISSION 25c. Reserved Seats on Floor or Balcony 50c.

First Night
Tomorrow (Monday) Evening, 8 to 11

Music Hall Promenade Concerts

50 Grand Orchestra — 50
MR. MAX ZACH, Conductor.
Admission 25c. Reserved Seats on Floor or Balcony 50c.

Boston Herald
April 30-'99

"Pop" Concert Season Will Open in Another Week.

Mr. Zach Will Conduct for the First Four Weeks—Last Music Students' Concert to Be Given Next Thursday Evening—Sousa Making His 14th Tour.

MONDAY evening, May 8, opens the 14th season of the Music Hall promenade concerts, with the 702d performance. It is worthy of comment that the impression is very general when this announcement is made each season that the time of beginning is earlier than usual. As a matter of fact, the date of opening has been the same for the past six years. While it is always more or less difficult to analyze satisfactorily success in amusement enterprises, there are certain unique features in these concerts which very largely account for their popularity. The orchestra of 50 musicians from the ranks of the Boston Symphony orchestra plays the light music which obtains with the same finish and attention to detail shown during the Symphony season. One can eat a little, drink a little and talk as much as one likes, all of which lends an air of sociability to the entertainments which is not their least attractive feature. In the matter of conductors, the custom which has prevailed for several seasons of selection from the Boston Symphony orchestra will again prevail. Mr. Max Zach will conduct for the first four weeks, Mr. Gustav Strube for the rest of the season, and it is safe to assume that they will repeat their successes of last year. All the old favorite numbers will be repeated, an effort will be made to discover some attractive novelties, and the management will be glad to consider any suggestions patrons care to make in the matter of programme. As it is always safe to "let well enough alone," there will be no startling innovations, but most of the special nights of last year will be repeated. The sale of tickets will open at Music Hall tomorrow (Monday) morning, May 1, at 9 o'clock.

"POPS" NEXT WEEK.

Mr. Comee Again the Manager and Mr. Zach the Director, as Last Year.

It makes one feel that the summer is really upon us, now that the season of Promenade concerts is about to open. The assimilation of music and beer and tobacco smoke goes with hot weather, shirt waists and sailor hats, and we feel that the winds must of necessity have been robbed of their chill by the time the opening of this thoroughly Bostonese series of Pop concerts a week from tomorrow night. How every one is looking forward to them, and their six weeks run will as ever be all too short for the pleasure of their patrons. Of course a large proportion of the city's population has fled to summer homes at the country, mountains and seashore by the time the Pops close, but there are enough stay-at-homes, who are unable to leave their business for more than a few weeks at a time who would welcome these deliciously Bohemian affairs to make them pay. The musicians have to be considered though, and most of them have next summer engagements elsewhere, amid more comfortable surroundings than Music hall. There's where the rub comes.

So we'll have to take the Promenades just as they always have been, and thank our lucky stars for them as short as the season is. It is good to know that Mr. Fred R. Comee is to manage them again. He knows just how, and has made them the popular institution they have become. Mr. Max Zach will be the director again this year, and a right royal welcome he will receive at the opening on Monday evening, May 8.

Boston Transcript
SATURDAY, MAY 6, 1899

The Promenade Concerts

Among the many forms of amusement offered to the public there are probably none which attract more attention than the Music Hall Promenade Concerts. The announcement that the fourteenth season would open on Monday has created a very large demand for seats, and the opening night promises to equal those of past seasons. The same general arrangement of past seasons will be in vogue this year. Mr. Max Zach, who will again conduct the orchestra, has selected the following numbers for his opening programme:

Polonaise, from "Eugene Onégin"...Tchaikovski
Waltz, "Gross-Wien".....Strauss
Overture, "Orpheus aux Enfers".....Offenbach
Violin Obligato, Mr. Karl Ondricek
Oriental march.....Zach
Ballet music from "Coppelia".....Delibes
(a) Spring song.....Mendelssohn
(b) Sevilliana.....Massenet
Valse Caprice, "Honeymoon".....Stix
For String Orchestra
Overture, "Mignon".....Ambroise Thomas
Two Slavonic Dances.....Dvorak
Polka, "Tic-tac".....Strobl
Waltz, "Grugenlichter".....Zeller
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever".....Sousa

NEW COLOR SCHEME FOR THE "POPS"

An Innovation in the Arrangement of Tables for This Season

Patrons of the "Pop" concerts last season, while patriotic enough at the start, objected after awhile to being pulled to their feet every time "The Star Spangled Banner" was played, and they likewise saw so much of Sampson and Schley and the other "heroes" of the late unpleasantness with Spain that they shuddered every time thereafter they saw pictures of any of these personages. Manager Fred R. Comee is an observant man and he knows to a certainty when to make a change. Consequently when the doors of Music Hall are thrown open to the would-be joyous throng on Monday evening an entirely new color scheme in the way of decorations will be presented. Mr. Comee is modest and is unwilling to dwell at length on the spectacular effects which he proposes to "spring," but he did admit this morning that he hoped to be credited with doing as well as anybody ever has done in transforming a somewhat melancholy interior into a thing of partial beauty, at least. Further than that he diffidently declined to commit himself.

One innovation in the matter of tables which will be appreciated is this: those tables in the balcony, directly over the historic clock, which heretofore have been reserved, will be thrown open at admission prices to first comers, while as an offset, nineteen new tables have been placed in the balcony on the Hamilton-street side. Moreover, additional tables are included this season in the reserved space on the floor, which is the really popular section of the auditorium at "Pop" concerts. As to the attendance at the opening concert it is to Mr. Comee a gratifying evidence of a prosperous season that practically every reserved table and seat have been sold, and that Max Zach, who is to conduct for the first weeks, will be given a royal ovation when he waves his baton for the opening number.

Boston Globe
April 30-'99

Promenade Concerts.

The Music hall promenade concerts will begin their 14th season Monday evening, May 8, with the 702d performance. For 13 years, with practically the same general plan of arrangement, these concerts have been a summer sequence to the symphony season. The symphony concert audiences continue their patronage and welcome the seasonable change to lighter music, with now and then a classic like the Largo of Handel to still the audience, and at the same time show the strength always existing in good music. And these lighter programs attract a larger and distinct clientele who like their music al fresco, with something to eat and drink and a chat with one's neighbors. And through it all, there has been maintained a standard of excellence both in music and attendance which has never varied.

Regarding the makeup of the program, it would be unwise to shelve the old favorites, but the usual effort to find attractive novelties will be made. The conductor, as for several seasons past, will be chosen from the Boston symphony orchestra, and the success made by both Mr Max Zach and Mr Gustav Strube last year justifies their retention, Mr Zach to conduct the first four weeks, Mr Strube the rest of the season. The sale of tickets will open at Music hall tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock.

SUNDAY POST

In Society.

Now for the Pop concerts and the Military Tournament—two strong features to interest us all alike! Boston without this Music Hall diversion would be oddly dull indeed. The Pops have long since been regarded as a regular institution and are eagerly looked forward to as the nearest approach to what New York gives. Some things grow stale by long usage—not so the Pops. The popular success of these concerts was considered at first a matter of doubt, and in the minds, too, of persons who desired them to succeed. All doubts were dispelled, however, thanks to the wise management of Mr. Charles Ellis and his genial "right bower," Fred Comee.

The Pops in this town have certain distinguishing characteristics and differ from beer gardens in other cities and in other countries. It is noticeable to the visitor from other parts that the men remove their hats, yet they quaff their beer and smoke their Havanas and cigarettes in the face of milady who dares not take anything stronger than the crimson claret punch.

Then, too, the people who look upon the "Pops" as something in the nature of a social affair are given an opportunity for peeping over the high wall of their own particular set and of catching a glimpse of the ones who figure chiefly in the society columns. It is the ambition of many to get a table near the elect and mingle if possible with the so-called smart set, and gaze superciliously over the rail to less favored (?) but in reality more comfortable acquaintances. They enjoy being stared at and in seeing their names in print. It is hoped they enjoy the music.

On Monday, May 8, the concerts open under the leadership of Max Zach. The last four of the eight weeks Mr. Gustav Strube will conduct. There will be incidental features, such as "Harvard Night," etc., and the season promises success. Seats go on sale tomorrow at Music Hall box office.

Boston Journal Apr 30

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

Monday evening, May 8, opens the 14th season of the Music Hall promenade concerts, with the 702d performance.

It is remarkable how little these concerts have changed in their general arrangement, and perhaps herein lies the secret of their success. The same audiences are here, comprising both quality and quantity, and like the concerts themselves, never growing old in the prevailing atmosphere of perpetual youth. The same orchestra of 50 musicians from the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays the same Largo of Handel and the like. A description of these concerts used many years ago is sufficiently pertinent to quote again:

"The 'Pops,' like the Symphonies, are absorbing in a way, Boston loves them. Thed are democratic. Here is the clerk, business man, professional man, student, the various gradations of society, men and women alike. Everybody goes, smokes and drinks a little, and feels agreeably relaxed by observing his neighbors as well as hearing the tasteful music. To the right and left in the balconies are the conservative spectators who have come partly to hear the music and partly to see 'Bohemia.'"

Mr. Max Zach will conduct for the first four weeks, Mr. Gustav Strube the remainder of the season. As far as selections to be performed, patrons will surely welcome the favorites of the past, and the usual effort will be made to find attractive novelties. In a word, everything will be as it has [illegible] with only such innovations as are necessary to keep pace with the times.

The sale of tickets will open at Music Hall tomorrow (Monday) morning, May 1 at 9 o'clock.

THE TIMES

The opening of the 14th season of Promenade concerts in Music hall this week will be the musical happening of moment. The orchestra will be composed of 50 musicians from the Symphony ranks, Mr. Max Zach will conduct for the first four weeks and Mr. Gustav Strube for the season. Mr. Comee will look out for the managerial end of the enterprise and the same general plan which has prevailed for the last 13 years will be sustained.

Boston Journal
SUNDAY, MAY 7, 1899.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The promenade concerts at Music Hall, with the many attractive features which have given them their great popularity in seasons past, will begin tomorrow evening, and for the next two months fine music of the lighter sort will be played each evening from 8 until 11 by a superb orchestra drawn from the Boston Symphony players. Mr. Max Zach will be the conductor. An excellent buffet will be provided and smoking will be permitted at the tables. The following is the program for tomorrow night:

Polonaies, from "Eugent Oneguin".....
Tschaikowsky
(First time.)
Waltz, "Gross-Wien".....Strauss
Overture, "Orpheus aux Enfers"...Offenbach
Violin obbligato, Mr. Karl Ondricek.
Oriental March.....Zach
Ballet music from "Coppelia".....Delibes
Dance of the Automatons.
Valse.
Czardas.
Spring Song.....Mendelssohn
Sevilliana.....Massenet
Valse Caprice, "Honeymoon".....Stix
For string orchestra.
(First time.)
Overture, "Mignon".....Ambroise Thomas
Two Slavonic dances.....Dvorak
Polka, "Tic-tac".....Strobl
Waltz, "Grubenlichter".....Zeller
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever".....Sousa

[48]

BOSTON HERALD — FRIDAY, MAY 5,

SUMMERY RIGS TO BE SEEN AT THE "POPS."

Matrons and Maids to Show off Some of the Lovely Gowns and Hats They Have Ordered.

NOW that the "Pop" concerts are near at hand there is a little flutter of excitement all along the fashionable line. The women and young girls will have every opportunity to wear the summer frocks they have been selecting of late, and smart gowns and effective headgear will add to the brilliancy of the Music Hall ensembles. For really at the various private views of late I have seen fascinating things, many of which have been sent home especially for wear at an occasion of this sort.

Such a lovely ecru batiste will be sure to grace the first occasion, and very fit and smart will the fashionable young matron look in this seemingly simple creation. As I remember the bodice there were inch tucks with little spacings, alternating with bands of batiste insertion on which was appliqued a butter-colored renaissance lace design. This combination was dainty and elegant in effect. The skirt madam had given a coquettish swing by means of a billowy flounce about the foot, over which hung a tunic finished with those tiny lingerie hand-run tucks. At the last fitting the owner had a number of stunning hats sent up to try on with her gown in order that an artistic finish might be given the toilet, and the one she selected was an openwork braid in straw color, with masses of tea roses and knots of black velvet ribbon.

Then I saw such a beautiful red liberty taffeta with tiny white clover leaf design which an observing young girl at the recent horse show had ordered out of respect to the onlookers, for, as she declared, "We cannot gain anything by appearing like a lot of Quakers—all in gray, and I for one will have something to offset the monotony."

But a red frock will prove no end of a blessing at Music Hall, where there is every reason to think that some of the gray horse show ones will be in evidence.

An odd feature of the above mentioned red gown was that the skirt was built, as to foot flounce, of the silk alternating with a bias band of pure white muslin, the extreme edge of the silk being decorated with white embroidered muslin points. The tunic which fell over the flounce was also edged with the embroidered points. The bodice was a tight back, pouched front, and had a sailor collar of silk and muslin edged with the embroidered points which ended in a jabot of muslin down the front of the bodice. My beauty crowns herself with a typical summer girl's hat. It is of white chip, draped in three long white plumes across the front. Two clusters of rosebuds, one tucked under and one over the brim, chou fashion, produce a roguish flare on the left side.

Foulards, too, will have their innings and a beautiful white one with sprays of yellow in small design was shown to me at a fashionable Boylston street house some days ago. The skirt was a plain sheath with a knee length bias flounce fagoted to it with white silk. The bodice was of the foulard, over which was fitted an ecru renaissance lace bolero with cutaway coat tail at the back. The stock was of white panne velvet, and there was a narrow girdle of the same. One of the new big round sunburnt straw turbans, with renaissance lace rosettes and paradise osprey will be worn with this rig.

Independent skirts and fancy tops will be worn, too, for during my tour of the shops, I saw various orders taken from some of the best known people in town. One which particularly appealed to me was in lettuce green taffeta. It was simply fashioned on a skirt model, to be sure, but the material composed of taffeta alternating with real Valenciennes insertion, was exquisite. The insertion, by the way, was hemstitched to the silk, lending that dainty Parisian touch so essential on all the ultra-smart bodices this season. This bodice will be worn by one of the best dressed women in town, whose tall svelt lines are the admiration of all in her coterie. G. M. P.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

MUSIC HALL PROMENADES.

The promenade concerts at Music Hall will begin tomorrow evening and for the next two months will be given nightly except Sundays. The orchestra will number upwards of fifty men drawn from the Boston Symphony players, and light music of the best class will predominate in the programmes. Mr. Zach will be the conductor, who has selected the following numbers for the opening programme:

Polonaise, from "Eugene Oneguin," Tschaikowski (first time); waltz, "Gross-wien," Strauss; overture, "Orpheus aux Enfers," Offenbach; violin obligato, Mr Karl Ondricek; oriental march, Zach; ballet music from "Coppelia," Delibes, (a) Dance of the Automatons, (b) Valse, (c) Czardas; (a) Spring Song, Mendelssohn; (b) Sevillana, Massenet; valse caprice, "Honeymoon," Stix, for string orchestra (first time). The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number. Overture, [illegible] Ambroise Thomas; two Slavonic dances, Dvorak; polka, "Tic-tac," [illegible] waltz, "Grubenlichter," Zeller; [illegible] "Stars and Stripes Forever," [illegible]

Boston Sunday Globe.
SUNDAY, MAY 7, 1899.

Summer Promenade Concerts

The Promenade concerts at Music hall, with the many attractive features which have given them their great popularity in seasons past, will begin tomorrow evening, and for the next two months fine music of the lighter sort will be played each evening from 8 until 11, by a superb orchestra drawn from the Boston Symphony players. Mr Zach will be the conductor. An excellent buffet will be provided, and smoking will be permitted at the tables. The following is the program for tomorrow night:

Polonaise, from Eugene Oneguin..Tschaikowski
(First time.)
Waltz, Gross-Wien.....Strauss
Overture, Orpheus aux Enfers.....Offenbach
Violin obligato, Mr Karl Ondricek.
Oriental march.....Zach
Ballet music from Coppelia.....Delibes
Spring song.....Mendelssohn
Sevillana.....Massenet
Valse caprice, Honeymoon.....Stix
For string orchestra (first time.)
Overture, Mignon.....Ambroise Thomas
Two Slavonic dances.....Dvorak
Polka, Tic-tac.....Strobl
Waltz, Grubenlichter.....Zeller
March, Stars and Stripes Forever.....Sousa

SUNDAY HERALD.
PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CV., NO. 127.
SUNDAY, MAY 7, 1899.

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC.

Programme for First of the Promenade Concerts.

Season Opens Tomorrow Night — Second Concert of the People's Singing Classes, Advanced Division, to Be Given This Evening — Sousa's Band Here.

THE promenade concerts at Music Hall will begin tomorrow evening, and for the next two months will be given nightly, except on Sunday. Good music, refreshments and all the attractive features of past seasons will be provided at low prices, and the immense patronage which these popular entertainments have enjoyed for many years will undoubtedly be again extended. The orchestra will number upward of 50 men, drawn from the Boston Symphony players, and light music of the best class will predominate in the programmes. Mr. Max Zach will be the conductor. The following is the bill for tomorrow evening:

Polonaise, from "Eugene Oneguin".....Tschaikowski
(First time.)
Waltz, "Gross-Wien".....Strauss
Overture, "Orpheus aux Enfers".....Offenbach
Oriental march.....Zach
Ballet music from "Coppelia".....Delibes
Spring Song.....Mendelssohn
Sevillana.....Massenet
Valse caprice, "Honeymoon".....Stix
(First time.)
Overture, "Mignon".....Ambroise Thomas
Two Slavonic dances.....Dvorak
Polka, "Tic-tac".....Strobl
Waltz, "Grubenlichter".....Zeller
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever".....Sousa

Music Hall will be filled tomorrow night with a large and brilliant company for the inauguration of the "Pop" concert season, and it will seem very pleasant for the patrons, who have enjoyed their evenings there so much in former years, to find themselves seated around the cosy tables again listening to the fine music, which is always sure to be provided for them by Mr. Zach's men. Among those who have already secured tables for themselves and who will bring parties are Mr. George Lee, Jr., Mr. Laurence Tucker, Mr. Charles Hayden, Mr. Joshua B. Holden, Mr. C. P. Phelps, Mr. George H. Billings, Mr. Walter Dugan, Mr. David Noyes, Mr. Richard Heard, Mr. Walter Deland Came and Mr. R. H. Carleton. Miss Hecht of Commonwealth avenue has also engaged a table, and will bring a party.

Boston Transcript
SATURDAY, MAY 13, 1899

The first week of the regular summer season of Promenade Concerts ends with the performance at Music Hall this evening. Mr. Zach in the make-up of the programmes has maintained a high standard of excellence which has always characterized these concerts. The programme for this evening is:

March, "Bride Elect".....Sousa
Overture, "Pique Dame".....Suppé
Waltz, "Grubenlichter".....Zeller
Selection from "The Gondoliers".....Sullivan
Overture, "Prince Pro Tem".....Thompson
Two Movements from Suite "Peer Gynt"...
.....Grieg
American Patrol.....Meechan
Overture, "Tannhäuser".....Wagner
Intermezzo, "Forget Me Not".....McBeth
Selection from "The Belle of New York"...
.....Kerker
Love's Dream After the Ball.....Czibulka
Georgia Camp Meeting.....Mills

BOSTON HERALD.
PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CV., NO. 136.
TUESDAY, MAY 16, 1899.

THE "POPS."

A large audience signalized the opening of the second week of the promenade concerts in Music Hall last evening. A notably attractive and well-arranged programme had been prepared for the occasion by Mr. Max Zach, and that its performance left nothing to be desired will be taken for granted. Encores have become a feature of these concerts, and the conductor responds to them with a ready generosity that does nothing to diminish the great favor in which he is held. This evening the selections are particularly strong in their contrasting variety and their quality of popularity. This season's "Pops" are already an assured success.

Boston Daily Globe.
TUESDAY, MAY 9, 1899.

OPENING OF THE "POPS."

Promenade Concert Season in Music Hall.

Fourteenth Year of Enjoyable Summer Musical Entertainments.

Brilliant Audience, Attractive Program and Max Zach Orchestra Leader.

With all of the familiar features and a few new touches here and there the Music hall promenade concerts opened last evening for the 14th season. It was the same old "pop" atmosphere, the sort of halfway condescension to the bohemianism of the summer season in which Boston annually indulges. For two months in the year it is permissible to smoke in Music hall, partake of light refreshments and adopt an informality of manner and conduct while listening to the orchestral music, altogether impossible other than during this short season. The public has accepted these privileges in the past with much gusto until the "pops" have become one of the summer institutions, and last evening, the opening concert, indicated an exceptionally successful season. Every seat in the large hall was taken, and as usual there were many late comers who were obliged to stand.

This season the management has done more in the way of interior decoration than before. The lobby had its summer dress of green, and the hall itself was resplendent in streamers of pink and green running from the center of the ceiling to the second balcony rail. Festoons of evergreen are draped around the balconies and in front of the stage. In place of the familiar stage of Music hall the management has surrounded the orchestra with quite a theatrical setting, which relieves the barrenness of the stage. It is an interior with flies and wings, the large arched openings in the rear disclosing a landscape flat. A large flag is spread along the rear wall above the second balcony. The management has considered the smoke question, and the system of ventilation in use last evening was very effective in disposing of the clouds which in former years have been rather annoying to those in the second balcony.

Those who have patronized the "pops" in the past, and have enjoyed the peculiar character of entertainment and accessories which it offers will feel just as much at home this season as ever. While there has always been a demand for reserved places at the tables it has been essentially a place where one felt like dropping in when the whim suited them without going to the trouble of engaging places. This has made it impossible for the management to provide sufficient unreserved space on the floor of the hall. This year the tables in the rear balcony are not reserved, but in place of the chairs along the sides of the first balcony this year a row of reserved tables has been introduced. The only seats without tables now are in the second balcony.

The orchestra is made up of musicians with whose talent Boston is very familiar, and the players and the conductor, Max Zach, received a very enthusiastic reception when they came upon the stage last evening. The floor was a brilliant mass of coloring, for here is where the real enthusiasm of the "pops" congregates. In the reserved space were many of the familiar faces that one finds at the opening concerts, before the hot weather changes the character of the audiences and takes many out of the city.

It was distinctively a dressy audience, for the women were resplendent in gowns of contrasting soft and strident colors that fashion has commanded shall be worn this season. Stunning gowns were so promiscuous that only the few plainly dressed elderly women were such as to attract attention.

Last evening's program was as follows:

Polonaise from Eugenie Oneguin..Tschaikowski
Waltz, Gros-Wien.....Strauss
Overture, Orpheus aux Enfers.....Offenbach
Violin obligato, Mr Karl Ondricek.
Oriental march.....Zach
Ballet music from Coppelia.....Delibes
Spring song.....Mendelssohn
Sevillana.....Massenet
Valse caprice, Honeymoon.....Stix
Overture, Mignon.....Ambroise Thomas
Two Slavonic dances.....Dvorak
Polka, Tic-tac.....Strobl
Waltz, Grubenlichter.....Zeller
March, Stars and Stripes Forever.....Sousa

The orchestra played in a manner which elicited the most favorable commendations, each selection being given with a precision and verve characteristic of this admirable body of men, who through long association with each other invariably interpret a composer's work effectively and artistically. The usual encores were demanded, the lighter selections evoking special enthusiasm. Two new selections were presented by Mr Zach. The opening number, the polonaise from "Eugene Oneguin," by Tschaikowsky, is an attractive movement, although hardly characteristic enough of the composer to impress itself very strongly upon the memories of the auditors. The other novelty, however, the valse caprice, "Honeymoon," by Stix, is a delightful addition to that collection of "the audience will please preserve silence" selections. Written for strings it is a simple, dreamy movement that suits the promenade atmosphere admirably. Mr Zach will undoubtedly have to play it frequently during the season, as it was very enthusiastically appreciated last evening. The program for this evening is as follows:

March, Under the Double Eagle.....Wagner
Overture, Light Cavalry.....Suppe
Waltz, Snowballs.....Ziehrer
Pearls from the operas of Meyerbeer.
March from El Capitan.....Sousa
Waltz, Emperor.....Strauss
Bosnian song and kolo.....Komzak
Finale from act 1, Lohengrin.....Wagner
Two Spanish dances.....Moszkowski
Largo.....Handel
Violin solo, Mr K. Ondricek.
Waltz, Jolly Fellows.....Vollstedt
Teufelsmarsch.....Suppe

[49]

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The Music Hall promenade concerts will begin their fourteenth season on Monday evening, May 8, with the 702d performance. Notwithstanding the general impression each year that these concerts begin earlier than usual, the opening night has been the same for the past six years. One strong evidence of the popularity of these concerts is the early inquiries which are made as to the time of beginning, the sale of tickets and other details.

As usual, an orchestra of fifty musicians from the ranks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will render the light music which always obtains with the same finish shown in the earlier Symphony season. All the details which have sustained the reputation of these concerts for so many years will be repeated. The promenade concerts appeal not only to the regular Symphony patrons, but also to a much more extended following who do not care for the classical music given during the regular season, but prefer the lighter and so-called "popular music."

There is also a certain air of genteel sociability, quite impossible in any other kind of musical entertainment. That one can eat, drink and smoke when one likes is a privilege enjoyed by all, and the greatest compliment paid to the power of music is the absolute silence maintained.

Now for the Pop concerts and the Military Tournament—two spring features to interest all alike! Boston without this Music Hall diversion would be deadly dull indeed. The Pops have long since been regarded as a regular institution and are eagerly looked forward to as the nearest approach to what New York gives. Some things grow stale by long usage—not so the Pops. The popular success of these conderts was considered at first a matter of doubt, and in the minds, too, of persons who desired them to succeed. All doubts were dispelled, however, thanks to the wise management of Mr. Charles Ellis and his genial "right bower," Fred Comee.

The Pops in this town have certain distinguishing characteristics and differ from beer gardens in other cities and in other countries. It is noticeable to the visitor from other parts that the men remove their hats, yet they quaff their beer and smoke their Havanas and cigarettes in the face of milady who dares not take anything stronger than the crimson claret punch.

Then, too, the people who look upon the "Pops" as something in the nature of a social affair are given an opportunity for peeping over the high wall of their own particular set and of catching a glimpse of the ones who figure chiefly in the society columns. It is the ambition of many to get a table near the elect and mingle if possible with the so-called smart set, and gaze superciliously over the rail to less favored (?) but in reality more comfortable acquaintances. They enjoy being stared at and in seeing their names in print. It is hoped they enjoy the music.

On Monday, May 8, the concerts open under the leadership of Max Zach. The last four of the eight weeks Mr. Gustav Strube will conduct. There will be incidental features, such as "Harvard Night," etc., and the season promises success. Seats go on sale tomorrow at Music Hall box office.

* * * * * * * * *

Roger Wolcott, Jr., the son of Governor Wolcott, will make his debut as a lieutenant in the First Regiment of [illegible] the military tourna-

---

THE TIMES

ESTABLISHED 1864.

The musical aspect has settled down to the promenade concerts and pupils' recitals. It would indeed be "the melancholy" days of the musical year did we not have the "pops" to brighten up the dreary hum-drum of the exhibitions being given to show what the students have accomplished during the season.

The "pops" are proving just as delightful as they ever did. The patrons haven't yet become quite amalgamated to their Bohemian atmosphere, but with the warm weather, which is sure to come before long, their restraint will wilt a bit, and they will enter into their full enjoyment. The new innovations are improvements over last year, and the increased table space which the balcony offers is not a bit too much for the patrons, many of whom have been turned away in past seasons for want of accommodation. Mr. Comee is again proving the right man in the right place as manager and Max Zach is making up programmes which everyone enjoys.

The programme tomorrow night will be:

March, "For the Country" ..... Millocker
Waltz, "Les Patineurs" ..... Waldteufel
Overture, "Donna Diana" ..... Reznicek
Selection, "The Serenade" ..... Herbert
Fantasie, "Il Trovatore" ..... Verdi
Entr'acte, "La Colombe" ..... Gounod
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows" ..... Vollstedt
Ride of the Hussars ..... Spindler
Overture, "Poet and Peasant" ..... Suppe
'Cello Obligato, Mr. Keller.
Retraite Croate ..... G. Marie
Loin du Bal ..... Gillet
Austria March ..... Zach

[illegible] TUESDAY, [illegible]

POP CONCERTS.

Opening of the Fourteenth Season of These Encouragements to Innocent Hilarity—Mr. Max Zach Conductor.

The 14th season of the Promenade Concerts, Mr. Max Zach conductor, began last evening at Music Hall. The program was as follows:

Polonaise, from "Eugene Oneguin" .... Tschaikowsky
(First time.)
Waltz, "Gross—Wien" ..... Strauss
Overture, "Orpheus aux Enfers" .. Offenbach
Oriental March. ..... Zach
Ballet Music from "Coppelia" ..... Delibes
Dance of the Automatons.
Valse.
Czardas.
Spring Song ..... Mendelssohn
Sevillana ..... Massenet
Valse Caprice, "Honeymoon" ..... Stix
For String Orchestra.
(First time.)
Overture, "Mignon" ..... Thomas
Two Slavonic Dances ..... Dvorak
Polka, "Tic-tac" ..... Strobl
Waltz, "Grubenlichter" ..... Zeller
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever" .... Sousa

In spite of the threatening weather and attractions at the theatres, Music Hall was crowded last night with the lovers of tunes and those in quest of an usement at a reasonable price. Floor and galleries were filled; there was frequent applause; certain pieces were encored. The new waltz caprice for strings was redemanded imperiously; it is a graceful trifle that gave Mr. Ondricek, the concert master, an opportunity to display his broad and sympathetic tone, which had already been appreciated in the obbligato in the overture by Offenbach. Mr. Zach was warmly welcomed when he made his appearance, and he was often obliged to bow his acknowledgmentse.

The audience was for the most part extremely sedate. The atmosphere of the Symphony concerts still surcharged the hall, and some of the listeners no doubt missed analytical program-books. Even draughts of beer did not cause the conversation to mount to fever heat. Courage! The season began only last night. With warmer weather and with confidence gained by familiarity—jollity will come. A year ago patriotism was a powerful lever to enthusiasm, but the only reminder last night of the excitement of May, 1898, was the Sousa march.

From year to year it is the fashion to comment on the educational influence of these entertainments. Some sanguine persons have thought that the Pops will eventually be the means of breaking down all social barriers; that there will be a pleasing informality in dress and an abandonment of the necessity of formal introduction.

There were no signs of this ideal democracy last evening. Those within the pen and those without were equally courteous and dignified, in the well-known, historic Boston fashion. They all enjoyed the excellent music, each in his or her own way, but the waltzes did not lead to promiscuous invitations to dance. Some of the men were in full evening dress: some compromised on tuxedo and black cravat: the greater number, liberal in judgment, clad in every-day clothes, neither envied nor derided the more formal. There was at least an expression of toleration throughout the hall. This, at least, is a step—as the earnest woman in Cambridge remarked at a lecture, when she heard that the cannibals of Australia roasted their victims.

* * *

The program this evening will be as follows:

March, "Under the Double Eagle" .... Wagner
Overture, "Light Cavalry" ..... Suppé
Waltz, "Snowballs" ..... Ziehrer
Pearls from the Operas of ..... Meyerbeer
March from "El Capitan" ..... Sousa
Waltz, "Emperor" ..... Strauss
Bosnian Song and Kolo (National Dance) Komzak
(First time.)
Finale from Act I., "Lohengrin" ..... Wagner
Two Spanish Dances ..... Moszkowski
Largo ..... Handel
Violin Solo, Mr. K. Ondricek.
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows" ..... Vollstedt
Teufelsmarsch ..... Suppé

Philip Hale.

The Beacon
May 14

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.

The fourteenth season of the delightful Music Hall Promenade Concerts, familiarly known as the "Pops," has begun and gives even more than usual promise of excellence. Mr. Max Zach is the conductor and it is very evident that he knows how to please his audience. Music in the lighter vein will be the rule, but it will be music, not trash. Mr. Zach is the ideal conductor for musical performances of this kind and his programs are always made up in such a way as to attract people who, whether trained or untrained in musical technique, are fond of listening to really good music. The program for this Saturday, night will be March, Bride Elect, Sousa; Overture, Pique Dame, Suppé; Waltz, Grubenlichter, Zeller; Selection from The Gondoliers, Sullivan; Overture, Prince Pro Tem, Thompson; Two Movements from Suite, Peer Gynt, Grieg; American Patrol, Meecham; Overture, Tannhäuser, Wagner; Intermezzo, Forget me not, McBeth; Selection from the Belle of New York, Kerker; Love's Dream After the Ball, Czibulka; Georgia Camp-Meeting, Mills

---

OF NEW ENGLAND.

A SIGN OF SPRING.

"POP" CONCERTS.

Society Thronged Music Hall at the Opening Last Night.

Pop! Pop! Pop!

The tobacco-hazy air of Music Hall was punctured with pops last evening, and a gay throng of people gathered to do honor to the first of the season's series of promenade concerts. Everyone was in excellent humor, and society's best graced the occasion with their presence.

The delightful informality of these concerts, where men may smoke to their hearts' content, with their wives or sweethearts smiling graciously on them, or may even indulge in beverages dear to the masculine heart, is their most attractive feature. A fellow may wear a choice expanse of white linen and all the fixin's of "his gold-plated harness," as David Harum would say, or the togs which he put on in the morning to go to business, and the ladies may appear in chic toilettes or the unconventional silk waist. Moreover, the fair ones may have the blissful satisfaction of airing their neglected theatre bonnets.

Some innovations have been made this year in the arrangement of the tables. Those in the balcony, directly over the historic clock, which last year were reserved, were thrown open last night at admission prices to first comers, and as an offset nineteen new tables were placed in the balcony on the Hamilton street side. Moreover, additional tables are included this season in the reserved space on the floor, which is the really popular section of the auditorium at "Pop" concerts. There were 100 tables on the floor last evening. All seats at the tables were sold several days in advance, and even the gallery seats for onlookers were entirely filled. The big auditorium was draped in streamers of pink and green bunting, and the balconies were festooned with ropes of laurel. The stage had a background of landscape scenery, which enlivened its usual soberness. The corridors were decorated with stately spruce trees.

The orchestra, under the leadership of Max Zach, rendered a programme of twelve numbers, those from Tschaikowski and Stix being given here for the first time. The violin obligato by Karl Ondricek, in the Offenbach overture, elicited enthusiastic applause.

The familiar figure of "Mrs. Jack" was, of course, missed from those in attendance. A few of the promenaders noticed were: Philip Sears and Mrs. Sears, George C. Lee, Jr., and Mrs. Lee, Mr. H. L. Higginson and party, Dr. Galloupe, Mr. Charles Hayden and party, Miss Hecht and party, Alderman Presho, ex-Senator Holden, Mrs. Holden and Miss Holden, Mr. and Mrs. Drake, F. G. Litchfield and party, Mrs. Fred Comee and party, James A. Houston, Mrs. Houston and Mr. Earnest Houston, Mr. and Mrs. William V. Apthorp, Charles Bacon and party, Captain Foster and party, Mark Andrews and party.

Established 1813.

The Official Paper of the State

The Official Paper of the City.

TUESDAY MORNING, MAY 9, 1899.

MUSICAL MATTERS.

Successful Opening of the "Pop" Concert Season.

If Tennyson had lived in Boston he would have written:—

In the Spring the tired musician
Wants his music brewed with hops.
In the Spring a young man's fancy
Lightly turns to thoughts of "Pops."

There is nothing certain about a Boston Spring except that it brings the ever-welcome Music Hall Promenade Concerts in its train.

But, enjoyable as these occasions are, it is decidedly difficult to sing a new song about them; there is the same excellent orchestra of more than 50 Symphony men, there is the same excellent conductor, Mr. Max Zach, there is the same large crowd filling the hall to the doors, the same buzz of happy conversation, the same hush at the classical numbers, the same enthusiasm; we rub our glasses and wonder whether a year has actually passed by since we assisted at this scene.

Possibly the programme last night had changed a trifle in the direction of lightness, a failing that leans to Virtue's side on such an occasion, and there was no attempt made to give Liszt or Wagner, the heaviest works being no more weighty than Dvorak's "Slavonic Dances" or Thomas's Overture to "Mignon."

The conductor was represented by an Oriental march which was as bizarre and quaint as the genuine Eastern article, and found immediate favor with the audience. Mr. Zach has shown considerable grace in its orchestration, and its themes afford good contrasts and effect, but it was rather too loud and emphatic to be really Oriental, Mr. Zach (like Beethoven) having fallen into the error of imagining that the unspeakable Turk was generally fortissimo.

Encores were thick as leaves on Vallombrosa, and the large and fashionable audience was evidently in the best of moods, redemanding everything from Offenbach's cancan to Mendelssohn's spring tonic.

The hall was very tastefully decorated, and the stage itself presented a drawing-room scene which was not only pleasing to the eye but had the great advantage of throwing the sound well into the auditorium, making the orchestra sound fuller than ever before.

As usual there was one number during which the audience was "respectfully requested to keep silence." This was a waltz by Stix, which was given by string orchestra very daintily.

After the orchestra had crossed the Stix they gave more boisterous music to a very brilliant ending of a most agreeable programme.

Altogether it was a most successful beginning of the informal season, and Mr. F. R. Comee, who had charge of the arrangements, is to be congratulated upon the delightful results.

Louis C. Elson.

Boston Journal.

SUNDAY, MAY 14, 1899.

MUSIC HALL PROMENADES.

Music Hall presents each evening nowadays a scene of beauty and brilliancy greater than in former seasons of the promenade concerts. The character of these entertainments is well suited to the music-lovers of Boston and vicinity, and their popularity is in a great measure due to the fact that the programs rendered are well chosen by Mr. Zach. The wide range of composers drawn upon pleases the large audiences. Viewed from any point, the present season promises to be most successful. It is restful and inspiring to attend one of these promenade concerts, when both the pleasures of the inner and outer man are satisfied. The program for Monday evening is:

March, "For the Country" ..... Millöcker
Waltz, "Les Patineurs" ..... Waldteufel
Overture, "Donna Diana" ..... Reznicek
Selection from "The Serenade" ..... Herbert
Fantasie, "Il Trovatore" ..... Verdi
Entr'acte, "La Colombe" ..... Gounod
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows" ..... Vollstedt
Ride of the Hussars ..... Spindler
Overture, "Poet and Peasant" ..... Suppé
'Cello Obligato, Mr. Keller.
Retraite Croate ..... G. Marie
Loin du Bal ..... Gillet
Austria March ..... Zach

BOSTON POST,

The Representative Democratic Paper

OF NEW ENGLAND.

SUNDAY MORNING, MAY 14, 1899.

(Copyright, 1899, Post Publishing Company.)

THE POP CONCERTS.

The renowned "Pop" concert season is now in full swing at Music Hall. The series of concerts being given this season will further establish Conductor Max Zach's excellent judgment of the popular taste of Boston music lovers. The audiences this season are composed of our most fashionable sets, and the dazzling brilliancy presented each night is an inspiring sight. Artistic Boston can well feel proud of its promenade concerts. The programme to be rendered tomorrow night is as follows:

March, "For the Country" ..... Millocker
Waltz, "Les Patineurs" ..... Waldteufel
Overture, "Donna Diana" ..... Reznicek
Selection from "The Serenade" ... Herbert
Fantasie, "Il Trovatore" ..... Verdi
Entr'acte, "La Colombe" ..... Gounod
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows" ..... Vollstedt
Ride of the Hussars ..... Spindler
Overture, "Poet and Peasant" ..... Suppe
'Cello Obligato, Mr. Keller.
Retraite Croate ..... G. Marie
Loin Du Bal ..... Gillet
Austrian March ..... Zach

"True patriots all"—Barrington.

HOW the people assembled at the "pop" concerts on Wednesday evening did cheer when General Wheeler, on the arm of Mayor Quincy, entered spacious Music Hall. "Dixie" and other martial tunes were played, and it was indeed "military night." The warm weather this week has brought large numbers of people to these concerts, always so popular a feature of every Boston summer. The present week marks the last during which the well liked Mr. Max Zach will preside over the orchestra. To sip cool beverages, listen to fine music artistically rendered by a famous orchestra, and see fashionables doing the same thing, makes a combination of pleasures that only the "pop" concerts afford and habitues relish. The concerts will continue all next week, every evening, at Music Hall, from eight until ten.

[50]

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The Music Hall promenade concerts will begin their fourteenth season on Monday evening, May 8, with the 702d performance. Notwithstanding the general impression each year that these concerts begin earlier than usual, the opening night has been the same for the past six years. One strong evidence of the popularity of these concerts is the early inquiries which are made as to the time of beginning, the sale of tickets and other details.

As usual, an orchestra of fifty musicians from the ranks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will render the light music which always obtains with the same finish shown in the earlier Symphony season. All the details which have sustained the reputation of these concerts for so many years will be repeated. The promenade concerts appeal not only to the regular Symphony patrons, but also to a much more extended following who do not care for the classical music given during the regular season, but prefer the lighter and so-called "popular music."

There is also a certain air of genteel sociability, quite impossible in any other kind of musical entertainment. That one can eat, drink and talk when one likes is a privilege enjoyed by all, and the greatest compliment paid to the power of music is the absolute silence maintained

---

Now for the Pop concerts and the Military Tournament—two spring features to interest all alike! Boston without this Music Hall diversion would be deadly dull indeed. The Pops have long since been regarded as a regular institution and are eagerly looked forward to as the nearest approach to what New York gives. Some things grow stale by long usage—not so the Pops. The popular success of these concerts was considered at first a matter of doubt, and in the minds, too, of persons who desired them to succeed. All doubts were dispelled, however, thanks to the wise management of Mr. Charles Ellis and his genial "right bower," Fred Comee.

The Pops in this town have certain distinguishing characteristics and differ from beer gardens in other cities and in other countries. It is noticeable to the visitor from other parts that the men remove their hats, yet they quaff their beer and smoke their Havanas and cigarettes in the face of milady who dares not take anything stronger than the crimson claret punch.

Then, too, the people who look upon the "Pops" as something in the nature of a social affair are given an opportunity for peeping over the high wall of their own particular set and of catching a glimpse of the ones who figure chiefly in the society columns. It is the ambition of many to get a table near the elect and mingle if possible with the so-called smart set, and gaze superciliously over the rail to less favored (?) but in reality more comfortable acquaintances. They enjoy being stared at and in seeing their names in print. It is hoped they enjoy the music.

On Monday, May 8, the concerts open under the leadership of Max Zach. The last four of the eight weeks Mr. Gustav Strube will conduct. There will be incidental features, such as "Harvard Night," etc., and the season promises success. Seats go on sale tomorrow at Music Hall box office.

* * * * * * * *

Roger Wolcott, Jr., the son of Governor Wolcott, will make his debut as a lieutenant in the First Regiment of the military tourna-

---

THE TIMES

ESTABLISHED 1864.

The musical aspect has settled down to the promenade concerts and pupils' recitals. It would indeed be "the melancholy" days of the musical year did we not have the "pops" to brighten up the dreary hum-drum of the exhibitions being given to show what the students have accomplished during the season.

The "pops" are proving just as delightful as they ever did. The patrons haven't yet become quite amalgamated to their Bohemian atmosphere, but with the warm weather, which is sure to come before long, their restraint will wilt a bit, and they will enter into their full enjoyment. The new innovations are improvements over last year, and the increased table space which the balcony offers is not a bit too much for the patrons, many of whom have been turned away in past seasons for want of accommodation. Mr. Comee is again proving the right man in the right place as manager and Max Zach is making up programmes which everyone enjoys.

The programme tomorrow night will be:

March, "For the Country"	Millocker
Waltz, "Les Patineurs"	Waldteufel
Overture, "Donna Diana"	Reznicek
Selection, "The Serenade"	Herbert
Fantasie, "Il Trovatore"	Verdi
Entr'acte, "La Colombe"	Gounod
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows"	Vollstedt
Ride of the Hussars	Spindler
Overture, "Poet and Peasant"	Suppe
'Cello Obligato, Mr. Keller.
Retraite Croate	G. Marie
Loin du Bal	Gillet
Austria March	Zach

Boston Journal.

TUESDAY, MAY [illegible].

POP CONCERTS.

Opening of the Fourteenth Season of These Encouragements to Innocent Hilarity—Mr. Max Zach Conductor.

The 14th season of the Promenade Concerts, Mr. Max Zach conductor, began last evening at Music Hall. The program was as follows:

Polonaise, from "Eugene Oneguin"	Tschaikowsky
(First time.)
Waltz, "Gross—Wien"	Strauss
Overture, "Orpheus aux Enfers"	Offenbach
Oriental March	Zach
Ballet Music from "Coppelia"	Delibes
Dance of the Automatons.
Valse.
Czardas.
Spring Song	Mendelssohn
Sevillana	Massenet
Valse Caprice, "Honeymoon"	Stix
For String Orchestra.
(First time.)
Overture, "Mignon"	Thomas
Two Slavonic Dances	Dvorak
Polka, "Tic-tac"	Strobl
Waltz, "Grubenlichter"	Zeller
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever"	Sousa

In spite of the threatening weather and attractions at the theatres, Music Hall was crowded last night with the lovers of tunes and those in quest of an usement at a reasonable price. Floor and galleries were filled; there was frequent applause; certain pieces were encored. The new waltz caprice for strings was redemanded imperiously; it is a graceful trifle that gave Mr. Ondricek, the concert master, an opportunity to display his broad and sympathetic tone, which had already been appreciated in the obbligato in the overture by Offenbach. Mr. Zach was warmly welcomed when he made his appearance, and he was often obliged to bow his acknowledgmentse.

The audience was for the most part extremely sedate. The atmosphere of the Symphony concerts still surcharged the hall, and some of the listeners no doubt missed analytical program-books. Even draughts of beer did not cause the conversation to mount to fever heat. Courage! The season began only last night. With warmer weather and with confidence gained by familiarity—jollity will come. A year ago patriotism was a powerful lever to enthusiasm, but the only reminder last night of the excitement of May, 1898, was the Sousa march.

From year to year it is the fashion to comment on the educational influence of these entertainments. Some sanguine persons have thought that the Pops will eventually be the means of breaking down all social barriers; that there will be a pleasing informality dress and an abandonment of the necessity of formal introduction.

There were no signs of this ideal democracy last evening. Those within the pen and those without were equally courteous and dignified, in the well-known, historic Boston fashion. They all enjoyed the excellent music, each in his or her own way, but the waltzes did not lead to promiscuous invitations to dance. Some of the men were in full evening dress; some compromised on tuxedo and black cravat; the greater number, liberal in judgment, clad in every-day clothes, neither envied nor derided the more formal. There was at least an expression of toleration throughout the hall. This, at least, is a step—as the earnest woman in Cambridge remarked at a lecture, when she heard that the cannibals of Australia roasted their victims.

* * *

The program this evening will be as follows:

March, "Under the Double Eagle"	Wagner
Overture, "Light Cavalry"	Suppé
Waltz, "Snowballs"	Ziehrer
Pearls from the Operas of	Meyerbeer
March from "El Capitan"	Sousa
Waltz, "Emperor"	Strauss
Bosnian Song and Kolo (National Dance)	Komzak
(First time.)
Finale from Act I., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Two Spanish Dances	Moszkowski
Largo	Handel
Violin Solo, Mr. K. Ondricek.
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows"	Vollstedt
Teufelsmarsch	Suppé

Philip Hale.

The Season
May 1–

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.

The fourteenth season of the delightful Music Hall Promenade Concerts, familiarly known as the "Pops," has begun and gives even more than usual promise of excellence. Mr. Max Zach is the conductor and it is very evident that he knows how to please his audience. Music in the lighter vein will be the rule, but it will be music, not trash. Mr. Zach is the ideal conductor for musical performances of this kind and his programs are always made up in such a way as to attract people who, whether trained or untrained in musical technique, are fond of listening to really good music. The program for this, Saturday, night will be March, Bride Elect, Sousa; Overture, Pique Dame, Suppé; Waltz, Grubenlichter, Zeller; Selection from The Gondoliers, Sullivan; Overture, Prince Pro Tem, Thompson; Two Movements from Suite, Peer Gynt, Grieg; American Patrol, Meecham; Overture, Tannhäuser, Wagner; Intermezzo, Forget me not, McBeth; Selection from the Belle of New York, Kerker; Love's Dream After the Ball, Czibulka; Georgia Camp-Meeting, Mills

---

The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

A SIGN OF SPRING.

"POP" CONCERTS.

Society Thronged Music Hall at the Opening Last Night.

Pop! Pop! Pop!

The tobacco-hazy air of Music Hall was punctured with pops last evening, and a gay throng of people gathered to do honor to the first of the season's series of promenade concerts. Everyone was in excellent humor, and society's best graced the occasion with their presence.

The delightful informality of these concerts, where men may smoke to their hearts' content, with their wives or sweethearts smiling graciously on them, or may even indulge in beverages dear to the masculine heart, is their most attractive feature. A fellow may wear a choice expanse of white linen and all the fixin's of "his gold-plated harness," as David Harum would say, or the togs which he put on in the morning to go to business, and the ladies may appear in chic toilettes or the unconventional silk waist. Moreover, the fair ones may have the blissful satisfaction of airing their neglected theatre bonnets.

Some innovations have been made this year in the arrangement of the tables. Those in the balcony, directly over the historic clock, which last year were reserved, were thrown open last night at admission prices to first comers, and as an offset nineteen new tables were placed in the balcony on the Hamilton street side. Moreover, additional tables are included this season in the reserved space on the floor, which is the really popular section of the auditorium at "Pop" concents. There were 100 tables on the floor last evening. All seats at the tables were sold several days in advance, and even the gallery seats for onlookers were entirely filled. The big auditorium was draped in streamers of pink and green bunting, and the balconies were festooned with ropes of laurel. The stage had a background of landscape scenery, which enlivened its usual soberness. The corridors were decorated with stately spruce trees.

The orchestra, under the leadership of Max Zach, rendered a programme of twelve numbers, those from Tschaikowski and Stix being given here for the first time. The violin obligato by Karl Ondricek, in the Offenbach overture, elicited enthusiastic applause.

The familiar figure of "Mrs. Jack" was, of course, missed from those in atten[illegible]ance. A few of the promenaders noticed were: Philip Sears and Mrs. Sear George C. Lee, Jr., and Mrs. Lee, Mr. H. L. Higginson and party, Dr. Galloupe, Mr. Charles Hayden and party, Miss Hecht and party, Alderman Presho, ex-Senator Holden, Mrs. Holden and Miss Holden, Mr. and Mrs. Drake, F. G. Litchfield and party, Mrs. Fred Comee and party, James A. Houston, Mrs. Houston and Mr. Earnest Houston, Mr. and Mrs. William V. Apthorp, Charles Bacon and party, Captain Foster and party, Mark Andrews and party.

Boston Journal.

SUNDAY, MAY 14, 1899.

MUSIC HALL PROMENADES.

Music Hall presents each evening nowadays a scene of beauty and brilliancy greater than in former seasons of the promenade concerts. The character of these entertainments is well suited to the music-lovers of Boston and vicinity, and their popularity is in a great measure due to the fact that the programs rendered are well chosen by Mr. Zach. The wide range of composers drawn upon pleases the large audiences. Viewed from any point, the present season promises to be most successful. It is restful and inspiring to attend one of these promenade concerts, when both the pleasures of the inner and outer man are satisfied. The program for Monday evening is:

March, "For the Country"	Millöcker
Waltz, "Les Patineurs"	Waldteufel
Overture, "Donna Diana"	Reznicek
Selection from "The Serenade"	Herbert
Fantasie, "Il Trovatore"	Verdi
Entr'acte, "La Colombe"	Gounod
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows"	Vollstedt
Ride of the Hussars	Spindler
Overture, "Poet and Peasant"	Suppé
'Cello Obligato, Mr. Keller.
Retraite Croate	G. Marie
Loin du Bal	Gillet
Austria March	Zach

"True patriots all"—Barrington.

HOW the people assembled at the "pop" concerts on Wednesday evening did cheer when General Wheeler, on the arm of Mayor Quincy, entered spacious Music Hall. "Dixie" and other martial tunes were played, and it was indeed "military night." The warm weather this week has brought large numbers of people to these concerts, always so popular a feature of every Boston summer. The present week marks the last during which the well liked Mr. Max Zach will preside over the orchestra. To sip cool beverages, listen to fine music artistically rendered by a famous orchestra, and see fashionables doing the same thing, makes a combination of pleasures that only the "pop" concerts afford and habitues relish. The concerts will continue all next week, every evening, at Music Hall, from eight until ten.

[50]

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER.

Established 1813.

The Official Paper of the State

The Official Paper of the City.

TUESDAY MORNING, MAY 9, 1899.

MUSICAL MATTERS.

Successful Opening of the "Pop" Concert Season.

If Tennyson had lived in Boston he would have written:—

In the Spring the tired musician
Wants his music brewed with hops.
In the Spring a young man's fancy
Lightly turns to thoughts of "Pops."

There is nothing certain about a Boston Spring except that it brings the ever-welcome Music Hall Promenade Concerts in its train.

But, enjoyable as these occasions are, it is decidedly difficult to sing a new song about them; there is the same excellent orchestra of more than 50 Symphony men, there is the same excellent conductor, Mr. Max Zach, there is the same large crowd filling the hall to the doors, the same buzz of happy conversation, the same hush at the classical numbers, the same enthusiasm; we rub our glasses and wonder whether a year has actually passed by since we assisted at this scene.

Possibly the programme last night had changed a trifle in the direction of lightness, a failing that leans to Virtue's side on such an occasion, and there was no attempt made to give Liszt or Wagner, the heaviest works being no more weighty than Dvorak's "Slavonic Dances" or Thomas's Overture to "Mignon."

The conductor was represented by an Oriental march which was as bizarre and quaint as the genuine Eastern article, and found immediate favor with the audience. Mr. Zach has shown considerable grace in its orchestration, and its themes afford good contrasts and effect, but it was rather too loud and emphatic to be really Oriental, Mr. Zach (like Beethoven) having fallen into the error of imagining that the unspeakable Turk was generally fortissimo.

Encores were thick as leaves on Vallombrosa, and the large and fashionable audience was evidently in the best of moods, redemanding everything from Offenbach's cancan to Mendelssohn's spring tonic.

The hall was very tastefully decorated, and the stage itself presented a drawing-room scene which was not only pleasing to the eye but had the great advantage of throwing the sound well into the auditorium, making the orchestra sound fuller than ever before.

As usual there was one number during which the audience was "respectfully requested to keep silence." This was a waltz by Stix, which was given by string orchestra very daintily.

After the orchestra had crossed the Stix they gave more boisterous music to a very brilliant ending of a most agreeable programme.

Altogether it was a most successful beginning of the informal season, and Mr. F. R. Comee, who had charge of the arrangements, is to be congratulated upon the delightful results.

Louis C. Elson.

BOSTON POST,

The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

SUNDAY MORNING, MAY 14, 1899.
(Copyright, 1899, Post Publishing Company.)

THE POP CONCERTS.

The renowned "Pop" concert season is now in full swing at Music Hall. The series of concerts being given this season will further establish Conductor Max Zach's excellent judgment of the popular taste of Boston music lovers. The audiences this season are composed of our most fashionable sets, and the dazzling brilliancy presented each night is an inspiring sight. Artistic Boston can well feel proud of its promenade concerts. The programme to be rendered tomorrow night is as follows:

March, "For the Country"	Millocker
Waltz, "Les Patineurs"	Waldteufel
Overture, "Donna Diana"	Reznicek
Selection from "The Serenade"	Herbert
Fantasie, "Il Trovatore"	Verdi
Entr'acte, "La Colombe"	Gounod
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows"	Vollstedt
Ride of the Hussars	Spindler
Overture, "Poet and Peasant"	Suppe
'Cello Obligato, Mr. Keller.
Retraite Croate	G. Marie
Loin Du Bal	Gillet
Austrian March	Zach

FIRST "POP CONCERT" OF THE SEASON.

Boston Society Heartily Welcomes the Return of Light Music and Encores the Selections of Symphony Players.

FIRST NIGHT AT THE PROMENADE CONCERT.

Last evening the 14th season of the Promenade Concerts opened at Music Hall. The arrangements were essentially the same as have hitherto prevailed. The decorations were simple and tasteful, and were amply effective in relieving the usually severe aspect of the auditorium. The audience was very large, every table on the floor and in the first balcony was fully occupied, and few of the seats elsewhere were vacant.

The scene shortly after the beginning of the performance was brilliant and animated, and the sociability that has always been so pleasing a feature of these entertainments was apparent in every direction.

The orchestra, of Symphony players, was 50 in number, and Mr. Max Zach, who was cordially greeted on his first appearance, conducted. The programme, light and inspiriting in character, was judiciously varied, and, it is scarcely necessary to add, was played surpassingly well.

The waltzes met with notable favor, especially one for string orchestra, which was delightfully melodious and abundant in pretty and piquant charm. The encore it received was inevitable. But encores were numerous, and in response to enthusiastic demands for them, Mr. Zach was, as usual, exceedingly obliging.

Among the numbers specially favored in this regard were Strauss' "Gross-Wien" waltz, and Offenbach's overture to "Orpheus," of both of which portions were repeated.

If there was a fault in the programme it was in the direction of the over-large instalment of music o- a delicate nature, which, though attractive and interesting in itself, is scarcely suited to an entertainment in which talking during the performances is an unquestioned privilege, and which renders the less emphatic portions of this order of music almost inaudible.

As in the past, the initiation of these concerts was hailed as a pleasing relief to the long season of serious music that preceded them. There was a large representation of those whose presence was familiar at the Symphony concerts, and the lighter music presented to them was none the less enjoyed because it left no profound questions of schools or styles to be discussed, and permitted them to go away without feeling that they had been more instructed than edified. They were out of school, and tunes were in order.

A jollier audience it would not be easy to imagine. It smoked, ate, drank, chatted, listened, applauded and made itself discreetly merry generally. The season opened satisfyingly and under the most favorable conditions, and the concerts, beyond a doubt, will meet with as hearty favor and experience as gratifying a prosperity as has steadily and deservedly attended them from their beginning.

The programmes will be changed at every performance, that for this evening being:

March, "Under the Double Eagle".....Wagner
Overture "Light Cavalry".....Suppe
Waltz, "Snowballs".....Ziehrer
Pieces from the operas of.....Meyerbeer
March from "El Capitan".....Sousa
Waltz, "Emperor".....Strauss
Bosnian song and kolo (national dance)..Komzak
Finale from act 1, "Lohengrin".....Wagner
Two Spanish dances.....Moskowski
Largo.....Handel
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows".....Vollstedt
Teufelsmarsch.....Suppe

The particular form of entertainment offered by the "pop" concerts at Music Hall is most highly appreciated during these warm evenings. The cooling refreshments, with the fine musical features, are highly enjoyed by "pop" concert devotees year after year, and not to know the "atmosphere" of these concerts is to charge yourself with being unknown in Boston. The concerts are keeping right on, every evening, in Music Hall, with music by the Symphony Orchestra.

The Beacon
May 19-"99

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.

The Music Hall Promenade Concerts are a perfect boon to music lovers. The absolute comfort of a good compositon, well played, combined with light refreshment to the body, has been better appreciated abroad than in this country, but we are beginning to find it out. It is unfortunate that these popular concerts cannot continue all the summer, but while they do last they will be most heartily enjoyed by large audiences. Next Monday will be soloists' night; the program: Radetzky March, Strauss; Waltz, Violets, Waldteufel; Overture, Phédre, Massenet; Flute Solo, Air Varie, Tremolo, Demessermann; Overture, Strawberry Leaves, Miss Tippett; Violin Solo, Mr. K. Ondricek; Invitation to Dance, Weber; Ride of the Walkyries, Wagner; March, from Strawberry Leaves, Miss Tippett; Waltz, Gross Wien, Strauss; Polka, Love-letter, Ziehrer; Oriental March, (first time), Zach.

Boston Journal.

SUNDAY, MAY 21, 1899.

THE "PROMENADES."

The promenade concerts are indeed popular this season, judging from the enthusiasm of the large audiences that are in nightly attendance at Music Hall. Conductor Zach fully understands the tastes of our music lovers, as is clearly evidenced by the bright and spirited programs he is presenting. The program, in full, for tomorrow evening is:

Radetzky March.....Strauss
Waltz, "Violets".....Waldteufel
Overture, "Phèdre".....Massenet
Flute solo, "Air Varie, Tremolo".....
Demessermann
M. A. Maquarre.
Overture, "Strawberry Leaves".....Tippett
Violin solo-(a) Andante.....De Beriot
(b) Spanish Dance.....Sarasate
Mr. K. Ondricek.
Invitation to Dance.....Weber
Ride of the Walkyries.....Wagner
March from "Strawberry Leaves".....Tippett
Waltz, "Gross Wien".....Strauss
Polka, "Love Letter".....Ziehrer
(First time.)
Oriental March.....Zach

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, JUNE 10, 1899

Monday's Promenade Concert

Conductor Gustav Strube of the Music Hall Promenade Concerts is winning new laurels this season by his admirable handling of the orchestra and excellent taste in the selection of programmes. Monday night the programme will be devoted to selections from Wagner. The numbers to be played this evening are:

March, "Under the Double Eagle".....Wagner
Overture, "Dame Blanche".....Boieldieu
Kaiser Waltz.....Strauss
Selections from "The Serenade".....Herbert
Overture, "Eolechtis".....Weber
Norwegian [illegible]
Seren[illegible]
Air[illegible]
[illegible]
March[illegible]

[51]

THE BOSTON HERALD — TUESDAY, MAY 9, 1899.

FIRST "POP CONCERT" OF THE SEASON.

Boston Society Heartily Welcomes the Return of Light Music and Encores the Selections of Symphony Players.

FIRST NIGHT AT THE PROMENADE CONCERT.

Last evening the 14th season of the Promenade Concerts opened at Music Hall. The arrangements were essentially the same as have hitherto prevailed. The decorations were simple and tasteful, and were amply effective in relieving the usually severe aspect of the auditorium. The audience was very large, every table on the floor and in the first balcony was fully occupied, and few of the seats elsewhere were vacant.

The scene shortly after the beginning of the performance was brilliant and animated, and the sociability that has always been so pleasing a feature of these entertainments was apparent in every direction.

The orchestra, of Symphony players, was 50 in number, and Mr. Max Zach, who was cordially greeted on his first appearance, conducted. The programme, light and inspiriting in character, was judiciously varied, and, it is scarcely necessary to add, was played surpassingly well.

The waltzes met with notable favor, especially one for string orchestra, which was delightfully melodious and abundant in pretty and piquant charm. The encore it received was inevitable. But encores were numerous, and in response to enthusiastic demands for them, Mr. Zach was, as usual, exceedingly obliging.

Among the numbers specially favored in this regard were Strauss' "Gross-Wien" waltz, and Offenbach's overture to "Orpheus," of both of which portions were repeated.

If there was a fault in the programme it was in the direction of the over-large instalment of music of a delicate nature, which, though attractive and interesting in itself, is scarcely suited to an entertainment in which talking during the performances is an unquestioned privilege, and which renders the less emphatic portions of this order of music almost inaudible.

As in the past, the initiation of these concerts was hailed as a pleasing relief to the long season of serious music that preceded them. There was a large representation of those whose presence was familiar at the Symphony concerts, and the lighter music presented to them was none the less enjoyed because it left no profound questions of schools or styles to be discussed, and permitted them to go away without feeling that they had been more instructed than edified. They were out of school, and tunes were in order.

A jollier audience it would not be easy to imagine. It smoked, ate, drank, chatted, listened, applauded and made itself discreetly merry generally. The season opened satisfyingly and under the most favorable conditions, and the concerts, beyond a doubt, will meet with as hearty favor and experience as gratifying a prosperity as has steadily and deserverdly attended them from their beginning.

The programmes will be changed at every performance, that for this evening being:

March, "Under the Double Eagle"	Wagner
Overture "Light Cavalry"	Suppe
Waltz, "Snowballs"	Ziehrer
Pearls from the operas of	Meyerbeer
March from "El Capitan"	Sousa
Waltz, "Emperor"	Strauss
Bosnian song and kolo (national dance)	Komzak
Finale from act 1, "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Two Spanish dances	Moskowski
Largo	Handel
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows"	Vollstedt
Teufelsmarsch	Suppe

The particular form of entertainment offered by the "pop" concerts at Music Hall is most highly appreciated during these warm evenings. The cooling refreshments, with the fine musical features, are highly enjoyed by "pop" concert devotees year after year, and not to know the "atmosphere" of these concerts is to charge yourself with being unknown in Boston. The concerts are keeping right on, every evening, in Music Hall, with music by the Symphony Orchestra.

The Beacon
May 19 "99

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.

The Music Hall Promenade Concerts are a perfect boon to music lovers. The absolute comfort of a good compositon, well played, combined with light refreshment to the body, has been better appreciated abroad than in this country, but we are beginning to find it out. It is unfortunate that these popular concerts cannot continue all the summer, but while they do last they will be most heartily enjoyed by large audiences. Next Monday will be soloists' night; the program: Radetzky March, Strauss; Waltz, Violets, Waldteufel; Overture, Phédre, Massenet; Flute Solo, Air Varie, Tremolo, Demessermann; Overture, Strawberry Leaves, Miss Tippett; Violin Solo, Mr. K. Ondricek; Invitation to Dance, Weber; Ride of the Walkyries, Wagner; March, from Strawberry Leaves, Miss Tippett; Waltz, Gross Wien, Strauss; Polka, Love-letter, Ziehrer; Oriental March, (first time), Zach.

Boston Journal.

SUNDAY, MAY 21, 1899.

THE "PROMENADES."

The promenade concerts are indeed popular this season, judging from the enthusiasm of the large audiences that are in nightly attendance at Music Hall. Conductor Zach fully understands the tastes of our music lovers, as is clearly evidenced by the bright and spirited programs he is presenting. The program, in full, for tomorrow evening is:

Radetzky March	Strauss
Waltz, "Violets"	Waldteufel
Overture, "Phèdre"	Massenet
Flute solo, "Air Varie, Tremolo"	Demessermann
M. A. Maquarre.
Overture, "Strawberry Leaves"	Tippett
Violin solo (a) Andante	De Beriot
(b) Spanish Dance	Sarasate
Mr. K. Ondricek.
Invitation to Dance	Weber
Ride of the Walkyries	Wagner
March from "Strawberry Leaves"	Tippett
Waltz, "Gross Wien"	Strauss
Polka, "Love Letter"	Ziehrer
(First time.)
Oriental March	Zach

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, JUNE 10, 1899

Monday's Promenade Concert

Conductor Gustav Strube of the Music Hall Promenade Concerts is winning new laurels this season by his admirable handling of the orchestra and excellent taste in the selection of programmes. Monday night the programme will be devoted to selections from Wagner. The numbers to be played this evening are:

March, "Under the Double Eagle"	Wagner
Overture, "Dame Blanche"	Boieldieu
Kaiser Waltz	Strauss
Selections from "The Serenade"	Herbert
Overture, "Freischütz"	Weber
Norwegian Dance	Grieg
Serenade for String Orchestra	Pierné
American Fantasy	Herbert
Overture, "Banditenstreiche"	Suppé
Gavotte, "Stephanie"	Czibulka
At a Georgia Camp-Meeting	Mills
March from "The Bride Elect"	Sousa

[5]

Music Hall: Promenade Concerts

The fourteenth season of the "Pop" concerts began in the Music Hall last evening, with Mr. Max Zach as conductor and Mr. Karl Ondricek as leading first violin. The programme was:

Polonaise from "Eugenie Onegin" ..Tschaikowsky
Waltz, "Gross-Wien" ..... Strauss
Overture to "Orpheé aux Enfers" ..... Offenbach
(Violin obbligato by Mr. Ondricek.)
Oriental March ..... Zach
Ballet Music from "Coppelia" ..... Delibes
Spring Song (transcribed) ..... Mendelssohn
Sevillana ..... Massenet
Valse-Caprice, "Honeymoon" ..... Stix
(First time.)
Overture to "Mignon" ..... Ambroise Thomas
Two Slavonic Dances ..... Dvorak
Polka, "Tic-tac" ..... Strobl
Waltz, "Grubenlichter" ..... Zeller
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever" ..... Sousa

The hall was, as usual, prettily decorated with greens and bunting, and there was a considerable extension of the customary table-room. There was a very large audience, which greeted Mr. Zach warmly as he stepped up to the conductor's desk.

Mr. Zach conducted, and the orchestra played, admirably throughout; as we have often said before, there are probably no other "Popular" concerts in the world at which such an orchestra is to be heard playing such a programme.

It was interesting as ever to note the impression the music made upon the audience, to note what they particularly liked and what they received with indifference. As usual, when there is no Wagner on the programme, the "sugarplums" were most loudly and persistently applauded. As Hans Sachs says:

Wer Preise erkennt, und Preise stellt,
der will am End' auch dass man ihm gefällt.

(He who awards prizes and sets up prizes wants, after all, to be pleased) and the "sweet" things are dearest to the general heart. Mr. Ondricek's broad, warm, stylish playing of the violin solo in the Offenbach overture struck fire at once; the audience evidently wanted to hear it over again, but had to rest content with a repetition of the final stretto of the overture. The muted-string number of the evening also drove them wild with delight—Mr. Ondricek had an excellently played solo here, too. We like this Valse-Caprice of Stix's—"Honeymoon"—better than most of its predecessors in past seasons; it has a decidedly modern air and seems less like mere routine work of clever manufacturers. Upon the whole, it seems to us that the general public—which is not quite the same as the symphony concert public—is getting imbued with something of the modern spirit; it craves modern pepper with its musical dishes nowadays, and the "tuny tunes" of yore do not touch it as they used to. Mr. Zach's own march, which does not smack in the least of ten years ago, pleased it mightily—as it did us, too. We recall what a dead failure Auber's overture to "Fra Diavolo" was with the audience last year; and now we seem to be "assisting at," as the French say, the decline and fall of Johann Strauss. We remember, some ten years ago, how the "Pop" audience would break forth into rapturous hand-clapping with the first few measures of a familiar Strauss waltz, and then forget to applaud—as if disappointed—when the thing was over. If its fondness for Strauss waltzes was an illusion then, this illusion has been well lost now; last evening the audience hardly noticed when the Strauss waltz began, and waived it aside with the merest politely perfunctory applause when it ended. We are by no means sure that this gradual change of heart on the part of the public is a particularly good sign. We personally have never been able to agree with Johannes Brahms and Mr. H. T. Finck on the single point on which those two luminaries do agree, namely, on the extraordinary beauty of Strauss's waltzes; their beauty and charm have always been rather Greek to us. But where so many great musicians—from Berlioz to Brahms—have found them exquisite, we are quite willing to believe that the fault must be in ourselves. And, if our public has lost its liking for Strauss waltzes, we are by no means sure that it has transferred its liking to anything better.

The programme for this evening is:

March, "Under the Double Eagle" ..... Wagner
Overture, "Light Cavalry" ..... Suppé
Waltz, "Snowballs" ..... Ziehrer
Pearls from the Operas of ..... Meyerbeer
March from "El Capitan" ..... Sousa
Waltz, "Emperor" ..... Strauss
Bosnian Song and Kolo ..... Komzak
(First time.)
Finale from Act I. of "Lohengrin" ..... Wagner
Two Spanish Dances ..... Moszkowski
Largo from "Berse" ..... Handel
(Violin solo by Mr. Ondricek.)
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows" ..... Vollstedt
Teufelsmarsch ..... Suppé

PICKING OUT WELL DRESSED WOMEN.

Fair Maids and Matrons at the "Pops" Who Wear Gowns and Hats Suitable to the Gay Occasion.

MUSIC HALL presented a distinctly cosmopolitan scene at the inauguration of the "Pop" concerts, Monday night, when every floor table was taken. About them were interested groups of fashionably gowned women and well set up men, many of whom have enjoyed their evenings there so much in former years. The society set were out in full force, and from now on parties of jolly young people will drive in to town at least twice a week for these affairs.

An attractive table party just under the stage, at the right, was made up of at least eight young women and one or two men. Among the noticeably effective frocks was one of that ever-fascinating embroidered mull in tones of pale chocolate. Near this quiet frock a vivacious young girl in cerise silk shirt waist, criss-crossed with cut crystal beads, made an admirable foil. Next to her sat a pretty light-haired girl in pale tan cloth and picture hat of cerise, draped with renaissance lace and touched with black velvet loops on the left front.

Another group of well dressed women just at the left of the hall, directly under the stage, caught my attention later in the evening. One of them wore a daring costume, yet I could not help but admit how much prettier it was and how much more in keeping with the surroundings than were the heavy tailor mades all about. Built of silk, in Oriental design in the tones of pink and green was the Frenchy little bodice, cut low and round in the neck, over guimpe and sleeves of sheerest black net, through which gleamed her throat and arms. Over the shoulders were pert bows and ends of pink and green velvet ribbon in true Parisian fashion. Her hat was of yellow straw with crown of yellow roses. One big dahlia-colored rose was placed at the left side to lend a bit of height, and folds of real lace draped the brim. At the back were black silk flowers.

Then I glanced from this end of the house to the balconies, which, by the way, are all given over to tables this year, except a limited space on the Winter street side, which is reserved for onlookers who have not as yet quite educated themselves up to the foreign idea of a music hall.

And, by the way, how fine it all is to see chatty little groups of picturesque women and men at these tables in the balconies which heretofore have presented one sea of faces.

Just over the clock at a balcony table was a decorative group of handsome women, and noticeably smart was the woman sitting at the right, in a biscuit-colored cloth skirt moulding her perfect figure to perfection. The bodice, a Holland creation, was of white panne velvet, tucked body and sleeves in clusters of three, the whole opening over a white satin waistcoat embroidered by hand in undulating tracery of dark blue chenille and silver cut work. Her hat was of yellow with touches of black.

A number of whist clubs are ending their season by an evening at these popular concerts, and a prominent Roxbury one, chaperoned by a well-known society woman in that region, occupied two tables in the centre of the hall on the opening night. The young girls were effectively gowned, and attracted no end of admiring attention, particularly the tall, slender brunette, who wore a frock of ecru batiste, with guimpe and pouched front of cerise silk showing lingerie tucks. The embroidered batiste pointed collar falling gracefully over the pink was stunning, giving the much desired broad effect, so necessary with the tight sleeves nowadays.

An odd hat worn with this gown was of black and white mixed straw, with masses of vivid pink blooms on the dark hair at the back, while over the top nodded big white and pink maline rosettes.

Next her sat a petite young woman in black, the low necked baby waist being worn over guimpe and sleeves of tucked white satin, small black tulle hat, with one big pink rose. Then came a young woman in gray cloth, with guimpe of pink, on which was appliqued white guipure points, and the skirt, decorated with bands of guipure insertion of varying lengths, completed a particularly becoming frock, set off with hat entirely covered with ragged chrysanthemums in all the shades of cerise.

At the next table across the aisle were other members of the same club. The young woman in the pure white taffeta bodice and big red hat, decorated with loops of crisp ribbon and clusters of cherries, made a fine bit of color, as the other girls were in darker gowns.

G. M. P.

Boston Journal.

THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1899.

Advent at Music Hall.

Gen. Wheeler's party did not return from Cambridge until after 8 o'clock. The carriages stopped at Parker's, where Mayor Quincy joined them. The trip was then resumed to the "Pop" concert in Music Hall. Every table had been taken except those specially reserved for the guests long before the latter arrived. It was a Wagnerian evening, and Manager Comee had an especially delightful program.

At just 8.25, with Mr. Comee leading the way, Gen. Wheeler, leaning upon the arm of the Mayor, entered the hall. All on the floor rose, and there was vociferous welcome in rounds of cheers from the balconies. Following Gen. Wheeler came Congressman John F. Fitzgerald and Mrs. Fitzgerald, Commander Ira B. Goodrich and Mrs. Goodrich, Capt. Stillings and the Misses Wheeler, with Mrs. Stillings, Department Commander John E. Gilman and Mrs. Gilman, Col. Hopkins, Mrs. Hopkins and Miss Helen Hopkins; Col. Stephen M. Crosby and Mrs. Crosby, Col. E. H. Woods and Mrs. Woods, Col. J. H. Benton and Mrs. Benton, Mr. John H. Cadigan, a friend of Mr. Fitzgerald.

The party were seated at tables directly in front of the stage behind a large cluster of national flags. As Gen. Wheeler advanced to his table Mr. Max Zach, Director, gave "Dixie," merging it immediately into the "Star Spangled Banner." The party remained till quarter past nine enjoying the overture, Tannhauser, and the potpourri of the "Red, White and Blue" and "Dixie" and "Yankee Doodle," for the encore upon which the orchestra gave us "Stars and Stripes Forever."

THE TIMES

ESTABLISHED 1864.

These are great nights at the Promenade concerts. Last night was Mr. Zach's last appearance as conductor and the enthusiasm which greeted everything he did and especially the playing of his own compositions, gave convincing proof of his popularity with the patrons. A right hearty welcome awaits Gustav Strube tomorrow night when he makes his first appearance as conductor. The programme he has arranged is as follows:

March, "U. S. Volunteers" ..... Strube
(First Time.)
Overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor" .... Nicolai
Waltz, "In's Centrum" ..... Strauss
War March from "Rienzi" ..... Wagner
(First Time)
Overture, "Oberon" ..... Weber
Procession of the Women, from "Lohengrin" ..... Wagner
Mazourka. ..... Chopin
(First Time.)
Selection, "Trovotore" ..... Verdi
Grossmutterchen ..... Langer
Solo Violin, Mr. Ondricek.
Overture, "Light Cavalry" ..... Suppe
Waltz, "Morgenblatter" ..... Strauss
March, "Up the Street" ..... Morse

Tuesday will be Technology night when the programme will be made up chiefly of popular selections and among them the College overture and selections from "Technology Minstrels."

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, MAY, 14, 1899.

THE PASSING SHOW.

THE CRITIC'S SATURDAY NIGHT.

Perhaps, as the general amusement season is drawing to its close, a separate rubric will not be needed for the chief evening entertainment of the next two months—the Promenade Concerts. And, by the way, the Transcript's suggestion is an excellent one, putting into print as it does what so many people have said among themselves. That is, that the present conditions should be frankly admitted and the name of the annual series changed to the Populars instead of the Promenades. London has had its concerts of similar nature where there was ample space left open for the patrons who wanted only to drop in and "flaner" for half an hour; but never since the early seasons of these favorite evenings have they who intended to take in a whole programme costly had any more room than they absolutely needed for their knees, elbows and "consommations." Be the name as it may, however, this year's season has begun splendidly. Big audiences, diversified programmes skilfully touching the general tastes, first-rate directing by the always popular Zach and first rate playing—of course—good table service, and thoughtful preparation on Mr. Comee's part for the probable wants of patrons—what more could be desired to establish a send-off of the best promise?

—Music Hall was crowded to its utmost capacity, Monday evening, when the fourteenth season of promenade concerts began most auspiciously. Elaborate decorations were displayed on all sides, festoons of pink and green bunting, and ropes of laurel transforming the bare interior of the old structure into a semblance of much beauty. Across one end, hung a huge American flag, while the stage was set in scenic effect, and minature forests of pine trees, effectively placed, added much to the general appearance. There was a perfect furore when Mr. Zach ascended the platform, and his orchestra played, for the opening number Tschaikowski's "polonaise," which has never before been given here. In the large audience, was noted Mrs. William F. Apthorp, wearing a black taffeta skirt, and black and white bodice with rose pink yoke, trimmed with jet, and a toque of white and black. Mr. and Mrs. Apthorp entertained friends at their table, and, next them, Mr. Philip Hale had a party of guests. Miss Hattie Hecht was one of the hostesses on the opening night, and looked extremely stylish and pretty in a black gown with white yoke, the effect being carried out across the upper part of the sleeves. Her hat was white trimmed with a huge bow of white taffeta ribbon and a bouquet of violets. Near the Hecht table, was Mrs. Fred R. Comee with several guests. As usual, Mrs. Comee presented a picturesque and charming appearance, wearing a dark skirt, and pale blue silk bodice. Her hat of burat straw was laden with flowers. Senator Joshua B. Holden had a party that evening, which included his sister-in-law, Mrs. Hiss, and the Misses Holden. Mrs. Hiss wore a superb gown of black silk net, entirely covered with jet sequins. The yoke was of white satin, trimmed about the foot with several large jetted fleurs-de lis, while her toque was of black and white, and sparkled with jet. Miss Mabel Holden wore a dove gray skirt, and white taffeta bodice, with a large black, plume-laden picture hat. Among the prettiest girls present, were Miss Marion Richardson and Miss Edith Austin, chaperoned by the former's mother, and escorted by two Harvard boys. Mrs. Richardson was in black, while Miss Richardson was in pale gray with a large violet hat. Miss Austin wore cafe au-lait crepe, with a clinging skirt, and white yoke. Her hat was entirely black. Others noted about the hall, were Mr George Lee, Jr., Mr. Clarence B. Benedict, Mr. John C. Abbott, Mrs. Boardman, Mr. Laurence Tucker, Mr. and Mrs. George Herrie Billings and party, Dr. John C. Phelps, Dr. Galloupe, Mr. Godfrey Morse, Mr. Walter Dugan, Dr. and Mrs. Chase, Miss Kate L. Pillsbury, Mr. David Noyes, Mrs. William H. Alline and party, Mr. F. S. Risteen with a stag party, Mr. T. B. Lothian, Mr. Walter Deland Came with several guests, Mr. U. S. Kerr, Mr. Samuel Shenard, Mr. Charles Hayden, Mr. Richard Harrington, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Fay, Mr. R. H. Carleton, Mr. Charles Alexander, Mr. Charles Hayden with guests, Mr. James Perkins, Mr. Harry Daggett, and many hers too numerous to mention.

SUNDAY HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. OV., NO. 162.

SUNDAY, JUNE 11, 1899.

THE MUSIC HALL POPS.

Tomorrow evening the "Pop" concerts at Music Hall will enter upon their sixth week. The attendance is uniformly large, and as the season has but three more weeks to run, the advance sale promises that each concert will be given to audiences limited only by the seating capacity of the hall. Conductor Gustav Strube in his selection of programmes as well as conducting, is gaining many new and enthusiastic admirers. The programmes for this week are very attractive, and will afford any one in attendance an enjoyable evening. Harvard night has been appointed for Monday, June 19. Tomorrow evening will be "Wagner night," with the following programme:

March, "Nibelungen" ..... Sonntag
Waltz, "Thousand and One Nights" ..... Strauss
Traume ..... Wagner
Overture, "Rienzi" ..... Wagner
Introduction, Act III., "Tannhauser" ..... Wagner
"Evening Star" ..... Wagner
Sailors' chorus from "The Flying Dutchman" ..... Wagner
Prelude to "Meistersinger" ..... Wagner
Procession of women from "Lohengrin" ..... Wagner
"Loin du Bal" ..... Gillet
Polka, "Puppenfee" ..... Bial
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever" ..... Sousa

Nearly 100 members of the Boylston Schulverein, a Roxbury musical organization, with Mr. Strube as conductor, paid him the special compliment of attending the "Pop" concert last Wednesday evening. The party occupied [illegible]

[52]

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, MAY 9, 1899

Music Hall: Promenade Concerts

The fourteenth season of the "Pop" concerts began in the Music Hall last evening, with Mr. Max Zach as conductor and Mr. Karl Ondricek as leading first violin. The programme was:

Polonaise from "Yevgenie Onégin".....Tchaikovsky
Waltz, "Gross-Wien".....Strauss
Overture to "Orphée aux Enfers".....Offenbach
(Violin obbligato by Mr. Ondricek.)
Oriental March.....Zach
Ballet Music from "Coppélia".....Delibes
Spring Song (transcribed).....Mendelssohn
Reverie.....Massenet
Valse-Caprice, "Honeymoon".....Stix
(First time.)
Overture to "Mignon".....Ambroise Thomas
Two Slavonic Dances.....Dvorak
Polka, "Tic-tac".....Strobl
Polka, "Grubenlichter".....Zeller
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever!".....Sousa

The hall was, as usual, prettily decorated with greens and bunting, and there was a considerable extension of the customary table-room. There was a very large audience, which greeted Mr. Zach warmly as he stepped up to the conductor's desk.

Mr. Zach conducted, and the orchestra played, admirably throughout; as we have often said before, there are probably no other "Popular" concerts in the world at which such an orchestra is to be heard playing such a programme.

It was interesting as ever to note the impression the music made upon the audience, to note what they particularly liked and what they received with indifference. As usual, when there is no Wagner on the programme, the "sugarplums" were most loudly and persistently applauded. As Hans Sachs says:

Wer Preise erkennt, und Preise stellt,
der will am End' auch dass man ihm gefällt.

(He who awards prizes and sets up prises wants, after all, to be pleased) and the "sweet" things are dearest to the general heart. Mr. Ondricek's broad, warm, stylish playing of the violin solo in the Offenbach overture struck fire at once; the audience evidently wanted to hear it over again, but had to rest content with a repetition of the final stretto of the overture. The muted-string number of the evening also drove them wild with delight—Mr. Ondricek had an excellently played solo here, too. We like this Valse-Caprice of Stix's—"Honeymoon"—better than most of its predecessors in past seasons; it has a decidedly modern air and seems less like mere routine work of clever manufacturers. Upon the whole, it seems to us that the general public—which is not quite the same as the symphony concert public—is getting imbued with something of the modern spirit; it craves modern pepper with its musical dishes nowadays, and the "tuny tunes" of yore do not touch it as they used to. Mr. Zach's own march, which does not smack in the least of ten years ago, pleased it mightily—as it did us, too. We recall what a dead failure Auber's overture to "Fra Diavolo" was with the audience last year; and now we seem to be "assisting at," as the French say, the decline and fall of Johann Strauss. We remember, some ten years ago, how the "Pop" audience would break forth into rapturous hand-clapping with the first few measures of a familiar Strauss waltz, and then forget to applaud—as if disappointed—when the thing was over. If its fondness for Strauss waltzes was an illusion then, this illusion has been well lost now; last evening the audience hardly noticed when the Strauss waltz began, and waived it aside with the merest politely perfunctory applause when it ended. We are by no means sure that this gradual change of heart on the part of the public is a particularly good sign. We personally have never been able to agree with Johannes Brahms and Mr. H. T. Finck on the single point on which those two luminaries do agree, namely, on the extraordinary beauty of Strauss's waltzes; their beauty and charm have always been rather Greek to us. But where so many great musicians—from Berlioz to Brahms—have found them exquisite, we are quite willing to believe that the fault must be in ourselves. And, if our public has lost its liking for Strauss waltzes, we are by no means sure that it has transferred its liking to anything better.

The programme for this evening is:

March, "Under the Double Eagle".....Wagner
Overture, "Light Cavalry".....Suppé
Waltz, "Snowballs".....Ziehrer
Pearls from the Operas of.....Meyerbeer
March from "El Capitan".....Sousa
Waltz, "Emperor".....Strauss
Bosnian Song and Kolo.....Komzak
(First time.)
Finale from Act I. of "Lohengrin".....Wagner
Two Spanish Dances.....Moszkowski
Largo from "Serse".....Handel
(Violin solo by Mr. Ondricek.)
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows".....Vollstedt
Teufelsmarsch.....Suppé

Boston Herald — Wednesday, May 10.

PICKING OUT WELL DRESSED WOMEN.

Fair Maids and Matrons at the "Pops" Who Wear Gowns and Hats Suitable to the Gay Occasion.

MUSIC HALL presented a distinctly cosmopolitan scene at the inauguration of the "Pop" concerts, Monday night, when every floor table was taken. About them were interested groups of fashionably gowned women and well set up men, many of whom have enjoyed their evenings there so much in former years. The society set were out in full force, and from now on parties of jolly young people will drive in to town at least twice a week for these affairs.

An attractive table party just under the stage, at the right, was made up of at least eight young women and one or two men. Among the noticeably effective frocks was one of that ever-fascinating embroidered mull in tones of pale chocolate. Near this quiet frock a vivacious young girl in cerise silk shirt waist, criss-crossed with cut crystal beads, made an admirable foil. Next to her sat a pretty light-haired girl in pale tan cloth and picture hat of cerise, draped with renaissance lace and touched with black velvet loops on the left front.

Another group of well dressed women just at the left of the hall, directly under the stage, caught my attention later in the evening. One of them wore a daring costume, yet I could not help but admit how much prettier it was and how much more in keeping with the surroundings than were the heavy tailor made's all about. Built of silk, in Oriental design in the tones of pink and green was the Frenchy little bodice, cut low and round in the neck, over guimpe and sleeves of sheerest black net, through which gleamed her throat and arms. Over the shoulders were pert bows and ends of pink and green velvet ribbon in true Parisian fashion. Her hat was of yellow straw with crown of yellow roses. One big dahlia-colored rose was placed at the left side to lend a bit of height, and folds of real lace draped the brim. At the back were black silk flowers.

Then I glanced from this end of the house to the balconies, which, by the way, are all given over to tables this year, except a limited space on the Winter street side, which is reserved for onlookers who have not as yet quite educated themselves up to the foreign idea of a music hall.

And, by the way, how fine it all is to see chatty little groups of picturesque women and men at these tables in the balconies which heretofore have presented one sea of faces.

Just over the clock at a balcony table was a decorative group of handsome women, and noticeably smart was the woman sitting at the right, in a biscuit-colored cloth skirt moulding her perfect figure to perfection. The bodice, a Holland creation, was of white panne velvet, tucked body and sleeves in clusters of three, the whole opening over a white satin waiscoat embroidered by hand in undulating tracery of dark blue chenille and silver cut work. Her hat was of yellow with touches of black.

A number of whist clubs are ending their season by an evening at these popular concerts, and a prominent Roxbury one, chaperoned by a well-known society woman in that region, occupied two tables in the centre of the hall on the opening night. The young girls were effectively gowned, and attracted no end of admiring attention, particularly the tall, slender brunette, who wore a frock of ecru batiste, with guimpe and pouched front of cerise silk showing lingerie tucks. The embroidered batiste pointed collar falling gracefully over the pink was stunning, giving the much desired broad effect, so necessary with the tight sleeves nowadays.

An odd hat worn with this gown was of black and white mixed straw, with masses of vivid pink blooms on the dark hair at the back, while over the top nodded big white and pink maline rosettes.

Next her sat a petite young woman in black, the low necked baby waist being worn over guimpe and sleeves of tucked white satin, small black tulle hat, with one big pink rose. Then came a young woman in gray cloth, with guimpe of pink, on which was appliqued white guipure points, and the skirt, decorated with bands of guipure insertion of varying lengths, completed a particularly becoming frock, set off with hat entirely covered with ragged chrysanthemums in all the shades of cerise.

At the next table across the aisle were other members of the same club. The young woman in the pure white taffeta bodice and big red hat, decorated with loops of crisp ribbon and clusters of cherries, made a fine bit of color, as the other girls were in darker gowns.

G. M. P.

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, MAY, 14, 1899.

THE PASSING SHOW.

THE CRITIC'S SATURDAY NIGHT.

Perhaps, as the general amusement season is drawing to its close, a separate rubric will not be needed for the chief evening entertainment of the next two months—the Promenade Concerts. And, by the way, the Transcript's suggestion is an excellent one, putting into print as it does what so many people have said among themselves. That is, that the present conditions should be frankly admitted and the name of the annual series changed to the Populars instead of the Promenades. London has had its concerts of similar nature where there was ample space left open for the patrons who wanted only to drop in and "flaner" for half an hour; but never since the early seasons of these favorite evenings have they who intended to take in a whole programme cosily had any more room than they absolutely needed for their knees, elbows and "consommations." Be the name as it may, however, this year's season has begun splendidly. Big audiences, diversified programmes skilfully touching the general tastes, first-rate directing by the always popular Zach and first rate playing—of course—good table service, and thoughtful preparation on Mr. Comee's part for the probable wants of patrons—what more could be desired to establish a send-off of the best promise?

—Music Hall was crowded to its utmost capacity, Monday evening, when the fourteenth season of promenade concerts began most auspiciously. Elaborate decorations were displayed on all sides, festoons of pink and green bunting, and ropes of laurel transforming the bare interior of the old structure into a semblance of much beauty. Across one end, hung a huge American flag, while the stage was set in scenic effect, and miniature forests of pine trees, effectively placed, added much to the general appearance. There was a perfect furore when Mr. Zach ascended the platform, and his orchestra played, for the opening number Tschaikowski's "polonaise," which has never before been given here. In the large audience, was noted Mrs. William F. Apthorp, wearing a black taffeta skirt, and black and white bodice with rose pink yoke, trimmed with jet, and a toque of white and black. Mr. and Mrs. Apthorp entertained friends at their table, and, next them, Mr. Philip Hale had a party of guests. Miss Hattie Hecht was one of the hostesses on the opening night, and looked extremely stylish and pretty in a black gown with white yoke, the effect being carried out across the upper part of the sleeves. Her hat was white trimmed with a huge bow of white taffeta ribbon and a bouquet of violets. Near the Hecht table, was Mrs. Fred R. Comee with several guests. As usual, Mrs. Comee presented a picturesque and charming appearance, wearing a dark skirt, and pale blue silk bodice. Her hat of burnt straw was laden with flowers. Senator Joshua B. Holden had a party that evening, which included his sister-in-law, Mrs. Hiss, and the Misses Holden. Mrs. Hiss wore a superb gown of black silk net, entirely covered with jet sequins. The yoke was of white satin, trimmed about the foot with several large jetted fleurs-de lis, while her toque was of black and white, and sparkled with jet. Miss Mabel Holden wore a dove gray skirt, and white taffeta bodice, with a large black, plume-laden picture hat. Among the prettiest girls present, were Miss Marion Richardson and Miss Edith Austin, chaperoned by the former's mother, and escorted by two Harvard boys. Mrs. Richardson was in black, while Miss Richardson was in pale gray with a large violet hat. Miss Austin wore cafe au-lait crepe, with a clinging skirt, and white yoke. Her hat was entirely black. Others noted about the hall, were Mr George Lee, Jr., Mr. Clarence B. Benedict, Mr. John C. Abbott, Mrs. Boardman, Mr. Laurence Tucker, Mr. and Mrs. George Herric Billings and party, Dr. John C. Phelps, Dr. Galloupe, Mr. Godfrey Morse, Mr. Walter Dugan, Dr. and Mrs. Chase, Miss Kate L. Pillsbury, Mr. David Noyes, Mrs. William H. Alline and party, Mr. F. S. Risteen with a stag party, Mr. T. B. Lothian, Mr. Walter Deland Came with several guests, Mr. U. S. Kerr, Mr. Samuel Shepard, Mr. Charles Hayden, Mr. Richard Harrington, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Fay, Mr. R. H. Carleton, Mr. Charles Alexander, Mr. Charles Hayden with guests, Mr. James Perkins, Mr. Harry Daggett, and many hers too numerous to mention.

Boston Journal.

THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1899.

Advent at Music Hall.

Gen. Wheeler's party did not return from Cambridge until after 8 o'clock. The carriages stopped at Parker's, where Mayor Quincy joined them. The trip was then resumed to the "Pop" concert in Music Hall. Every table had been taken except those specially reserved for the guests long before the latter arrived. It was a Wagnerian evening, and Manager Comee had an especially delightful program.

At just 8.25, with Mr. Comee leading the way, Gen. Wheeler, leaning upon the arm of the Mayor, entered the hall. All on the floor rose, and there was vociferous welcome in rounds of cheers from the balconies. Following Gen. Wheeler came Congressman John F. Fitzgerald and Mrs. Fitzgerald, Commander Ira B. Goodrich and Mrs. Goodrich, Capt. Stillings and the Misses Wheeler, with Mrs. Stillings, Department Commander John E. Gilman and Mrs. Gilman, Col. Hopkins, Mrs. Hopkins and Miss Helen Hopkins; Col. Stephen N. Crosby and Mrs. Crosby, Col. E. H. Woods and Mrs. Woods, Col. J. H. Benton and Mrs. Benton, Mr. John H. Cadigan, a friend of Mr. Fitzgerald.

The party were seated at tables directly in front of the stage behind a large cluster of national flags. As Gen. Wheeler advanced to his table Mr. Max Zach, Director, gave "Dixie," merging it immediately into the "Star Spangled Banner." The party remained till quarter past nine enjoying the overture, Tannhauser, and the potpourri of the "Red, White and Blue" and "Dixie" and "Yankee Doodle," for the encore upon which the orchestra gave the "Stars and Stripes Forever."

THE TIMES

ESTABLISHED 1864.

These are great nights at the Promenade concerts. Last night was Mr. Zach's last appearance as conductor and the enthusiasm which greeted everything he did and especially the playing of his own compositions, gave convincing proof of his popularity with the patrons. A right hearty welcome awaits Gustav Strube tomorrow night when he makes his first appearance as conductor. The programme he has arranged is as follows:

March, "U. S. Volunteers".....Strube
(First Time.)
Overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor".....Nicolai
Waltz, "In's Centrum".....Strauss
War March from "Rienzi".....Wagner
(First Time)
Overture, "Oberon".....Weber
Procession of the Women, from "Lohengrin".....Wagner
Mazourka.....Chopin
(First Time.)
Selection, "Trovotore".....Verdi
Grossmutterchen.....Langer
Solo Violin, Mr. Ondricek.
Overture, "Light Cavalry".....Suppe
Waltz, "Morganblatter".....Strauss
March, "Up the Street".....Morse

Tuesday will be Technology night when the programme will be made up chiefly of popular selections and among them the College overture and selections from "Technology Minstrels."

SUNDAY HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CV., NO. 162.

SUNDAY, JUNE 11, 1899.

THE MUSIC HALL POPS.

Tomorrow evening the "Pop" concerts at Music Hall will enter upon their sixth week. The attendance is uniformly large, and as the season has but three more weeks to run, the advance sale promises that each concert will be given to audiences limited only by the seating capacity of the hall. Conductor Gustav Strube in his selection of programmes, as well as conducting, is gaining many new and enthusiastic admirers. The programmes for this week are very attractive, and will afford any one in attendance an enjoyable evening. Harvard night has been appointed for Monday, June 19. Tomorrow evening will be "Wagner night," with the following programme:

March, "Nibelungen".....Sonntag
Waltz, "Thousand and One Nights".....Strauss
Traume.....Wagner
Overture, "Rienzi".....Wagner
Introduction, Act III., "Tannhauser".....Wagner
"Evening Star".....Wagner
Sailors' chorus from "The Flying Dutchman".....Wegner
Prelude to "Meistersinger".....Wagner
Procession of women from "Lohengrin".....Wagner
"Loin du Bal".....Gillet
Polka, "Puppenfee".....Bayer
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever".....Sousa

Nearly 100 members of the Boylston Schulverein, a Roxbury musical organization, with Mr. Strube as conductor, paid him the special compliment of attending the "Pop" concert last Wednesday evening. The party occupied some 25 tables at the front of the hall, and during the evening presented Conductor Strube with an enormous bouquet. Mr. A. C. Kendall had a party of 12 that

[52]

DAY HERALD.
EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CV., NO. 134.
MAY 14, 1899.

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC.

First Week of "Pop" Concerts Marked by Enthusiasm.

Patronage Indicates a Prosperous Season—Sousa and His Band Will Be Heard This Evening—Last Chamber Concert at Harvard—Musical Notes and News.

THE first week of the 14th season of the promenade concerts in Music Hall closed last evening, with an audience that completely filled the auditorium. The attendance has been large and enthusiastic through the week, and the excellent programmes arranged by Mr. Max Zach have been, of course, admirably played, and he has displayed his usual amiability in responding to the numerous encores. These concerts have become a fixed institution, and the patronage extended to them last week indicates that the present season is to be fully as prosperous as its predecessors have been. The selections for tomorrow evening are:

March, "For the Country".....Millocker
Waltz, "Les Patineurs".....Waldteufel
Overture, "Donna Diana".....Reznicek
Selection from "The Serenade".....Herbert
Fantasie, "Il Trovatore".....Verdi
Entr'acte, "La Colombe".....Gounod
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows".....Vollstedt
Ride of the Hussars.....Spindler
Overture, "Poet and Peasant".....Suppe
Retraite Croate.....G. Marie
Lion du Bal.....Gillet
Austria march.....Zach

THE spring season, which in reality was no season at all, but we are hoping for it every year, as we are generally so eager to copy everything that is English, ended last week, and now starts in the interregnum between the so-called spring season and that of the watering places which will last until after the Fourth of July. From indications, however, along the fashionable line the smart resorts will be heard from at an earlier date than usual this year so many are going there four weeks ahead of their customary time, which will bring some mild gayeties interspersed with the all-prevailing golf. In fact, that game is responsible for the exodus and for the absence on the streets in the shops and at the theatres of many familiar faces. All society has gone agolfing. Never has there been such ardor seen for any sport. More than last year is everyone golf crazy. Even the fashionable fad of coaching has fallen into disfavor, the wheel is no more considered from a fashionable point of view, and yachting does not start in until midsummer, so that no one hears anything now but records of games from morning until night. The Sunday departures from town were never so marked as this year. From the smart set down (or up?) everybody who can possibly arrange to do so goes out into the country regularly every Friday to remain until Monday, usually either giving or joining a house party. For the amusement of those in town until Friday, and for those not fortunate to get off for a weekly outing, the "Pops," which began on Monday so auspiciously, not to say brilliantly, have been a delightful rendezvous. That society appreciates Mr. Comee's efforts for their pleasure has been abundantly and practically testified to, and every night smart parties, large and small, have been in evidence at the various tables. There have been no vacant places during the week, either on the floor or in the balconies. The three performances of the Hasty Pudding theatricals naturally drew the most distinctly fashionable audiences of the week, and the Tech minstrels crowded the Hollis on two afternoons.

It was really a beautiful sight, viewed from the balcony, to look down on the enormous company at the first Pop concert, Monday night, filling every available space on the floor. The women's bright tinted gowns, with their flower hats, made delicious flecks of light all about, against the decorative background of pink and green, which colors were stretched in broad strips across the ceiling, as well as entirely around the hall, producing, with the evergreen, the best decorative effect which has ever been accomplished there. It was a grand opening of the series, and Mr. Comee received congratulations on all sides. The innovation this year of placing tables in one of the side balconies is proving a most feasible and attractive one, and they have been filled on each night.

A few in the crowd Monday night about the tables were Mr. and Mrs. George C. Lee, Jr., who had with them, among others, Mr. and Mrs. Philip Sears. It was a most decorative table, for Mrs. Sears and Mrs. Lee were beautifully gowned. Mr. H. L. Higginson had a party, including his son, Mr. Alexander Higginson, with his fiancee, Miss Tudor, and Mr. and Mrs. G. Herbert Windeler had some young people with them. Mr. and Mrs. George L. Osgood brought in a party from Brookline, Dr. Galloupe had a number of friends at his table, Mr. and Mrs. David Loring, Jr., were with Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Estabrook, and at the centre table in the balcony were Dr. and Mrs. F. L. Emerson, Mr. and Mrs. William Lindsey and Mr. Edward Allen, making a Dorchester party. Mr. and Mrs. Henry S. Rowe were there, and Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Hecht and Miss Hecht, Mr. Daniel Lane and Mrs. Lane, Dr. and Mrs. J. Foster Bush, Mrs. F. R. Comee, looking very handsome, who had several young people with her; Mr. and Mrs. Apthorp, the Hon. Joshua B. Holden and Mrs. Holden, with a party of young people; Mr. Charles Hayden, Mr. Irving Locke, with his fiancee, Miss Putnam, and a large party; Mrs. David Noyes and party, the Hon. Horace G. Allen, Dr. and Mrs. John H. Payne and Miss Blanche Payne, Mr. and Mrs. N. L. Martin, Mr. Walter Deland Came, Mr. Curtis Scriven, and many others.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.
SUNDAY MORNING, MAY 28, 1899.
(Copyright, 1899, Post Publishing Company.)

MUSIC HALL PROMENADES.

The fact that the promenade concerts at Music Hall are under the management of Messrs. C. A. Ellis and F. R. Comee is accountable for their great artistic and financial success. Each succeeding season finds the "Pops" more popular than ever. The fifty master artists selected from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the directorship of Mr. Max Zach, are rendering pleasing and attractive programmes. The concerts to be given this week are all special ones, as follows: Monday, 29th, bicycle night; Tuesday, 30th, patriotic night; Wednesday, 31st, Wagner night, and Saturday, June 3d, Conductor Zach's farewell appearance.

It is the usual custom to divide the season's concerts between two eminent conductors, so after this week Conductor Strube will be in charge. Some months ago Music Hall was rented for Thursday night, June 1, to another organization, and on that account there will be no concert given on that date. Many wheelmen of Greater Boston will be in attendance tomorrow night, when the following special programme will be given:

Bride-Elect March.....Sousa
Intermezzo, "Naila".....Delibes
Carmen Selection.....Bizet
Your Request.
Coronation March.....Meyerbeer
Lustige Bruder (Jolly Fellows) Waltz.....Vollstedt
Entree Triomphale des Boyards.....Halvorsen
Nocturne.....Marshall
Last Movement of Suite, "Peer Gynt".....Grieg
Il Trovatore Selection.....Verdi
Gruben ichter Waltz.....Zeller
Hunter's Yarn Polka.....Komzak
The Stars and Stripes Forever.....Sousa

* * * * * * * *

For evening diversion, the Pop concerts fill the bill, and Music Hall has been filled with representative gatherings. Manager Comee may well congratulate himself on the quality of his patrons, as well as quantity.

* * * * * * * *

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CV., NO. 152.
THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1899.

GEN. WHEELER GONE.

[CONTINUED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

Boston, where the mayor was met at Parker's, and with him they proceeded to Music Hall for a taste of Boston Symphony music at a "pop" concert. In the mayor's party were some 20 guests. Manager Comey led the way to their seats, at the very front of the hall, on the floor.

As Mayor Quincy entered at the Tremont street side, with Gen. Wheeler on his arm, the orchestra struck up "Dixie," and every man, woman and child in the house rose and greeted the hero of two wars with deafening cheers. Then the tones of the southern war song melted into those of "The Star Spangled Banner" as the guests found their seats, which were in front of a group of five big flags stacked behind the front rail. Gen. Wheeler acknowledged the ovation by modestly bowing to the right and to the left, to the floor and the balconies, where every seat was occupied for the occasion.

The party which accepted the hospitality of the mayor included Gen. Wheeler, the Misses Wheeler, Commander Ira B. Goodrich and wife, Mr. E. B. Stillings and wife, Col. Hopkins and wife and Miss Hopkins, Col. Stephen N. Crosby and wife, Col. J. H. Benton and wife, Department Commander John E. Gilman and wife, Col. E. H. Woods and wife, Congressman Fitzgerald and wife and Mr. John H. Cadigan.

After listening to the music and imbibing lemonade for a while, every one adjourned to Keith's Theatre at 9:20 o'clock. There they were met by Mr. B. F. Keith, who received them in the "red room," and then escorted them to boxes on the south side of the hall. Gen. Wheeler again took his seat to the accompaniment of "Dixie" and loud applause, and was surprised by seeing his own image thrown on the screen by the biograph. It was a picture of the general reviewing the troops at Montauk, and was especially sent on from New York for the occasion.

After the performance, the general was driven to the train, where he was given godspeed by his friends, and retired for a short rest before the train pulled out at midnight. The Misses Wheeler will enjoy a tally-ho drive to Lexington tomorrow, and will probably remain in Boston the rest of the week, as guests of Mr. E. B. Stillings.

Boston Sunday Globe.
SUNDAY, MAY 28, 1899.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

One of the most popular early summer musical attractions of Boston for the past 14 years has been the promenade concerts given at Music hall. This year in particular the "pops" are in high favor as Messrs Ellis and Comee certainly understand the tastes and requirements of the music-lovers of musical Boston, whether it be in the line of grand opera or popular concerts. This will be the last week of Mr Max Zach's conductorship, as it is the usual custom to divide the season's concerts between two conductors. Monday, June 5, conductor Strube will succeed Mr Zach. Owing to the engagement many months ago of Music hall for Thursday evening, June 1, by another organization, there will be no promenade concert given on that date.

One feature of these concerts is the special nights on which strong programs are arranged. This week has four such special nights as follows: Monday, May 29, bicycle night; Tuesday, patriotic night; Wednesday, Wagner night, and Saturday, June 3, conductor Zach's farewell appearance. Tomorrow night promises to bring out large numbers of wheelmen of Greater Boston, when the following excellent program will be rendered:

Bride-elect march.....Sousa
Intermezzo, Naila.....Delibes
Carmen selection.....Bizet
Your Request.
Coronation march.....Meyerbeer
Lustige Bruder waltz.....Vollstedt
Entree Triomphale des Boyards.....Halvorsen
Nocturne and last movement of Peer Gynt.....Marshall, Grieg
Il Trovatore selection.....Verdi
Grubenlichten waltz.....Keller
Hunter's Yarn polka.....Komzak
The Stars and Stripes Forever.....Sousa

——Dr Frank Livermore has returned from a trip to Australia and the Sandwich islands.

——The promenade concerts have brought crowded houses every evening the past week, and seem to be even more popular than any preceding season. The programs are most interesting in their variety and the music exceptionally good. It seems to be quite the fashion for ten or a dozen young people with a chaperon to form a party occupying two or three tables, where once they would have formed the same party for the theater. A few among the many at the tables the past week have been Mr John T. Wheelwright, Mrs Fenno, Miss Marian Fenno, Miss Edith Stackpole, Mr Haughton, Miss Allison Haughton, Mr Robert F. Clark with a party of friends, Mr and Mrs Henry L. Higginson, Mr Alexander Higginson, Miss Tudor and Mr Herbert Leeds. Mr and Mrs Gericke with friends were at Mr Comee's table Thursday evening, Mrs Gericke charmingly dressed in black skirt, with bodice of white satin, trimmed with black chantilly lace insertions. Her hat was black with ostrich tips and violets. The Misses Brooks of Commonwealth av were with a large party. They were both in costumes of pale gray, one with much white at the bodice and black hat, with white pompon, the other the bodice relieved with blue velvet and stock of blue with gray hat trimmed with white rosettes and osprey feathers. Miss Belle Hunt was in violet and black striped silk costume, with white hat and gray wings; Mr Alexander Young, Miss Young, Mrs John C. Gray, in ecru cloth, the bodice trimmed with white embroidery and ecru silk fringe, and toque of violets with green leaves and white tulle pompon; Miss Eleanor Gray in blue chene silk with revers of white lace and white hat, with lace and foliage: Mr and Mrs Thomas Russell with friends, Mrs Russell in a French costume of gray, the skirt and bodice trimmed with white embroidery and fringe, with chiffon at the bodice, relieved with black velvet, her hat of gray with white lace and broad loops of silk of two shades of violet, and Mr and Mrs Harry Pratt McKean of Philadelphia.

Boston Journal.

SUNDAY, JUNE 4, 1899.

MUSIC HALL PROMENADES.

The large and enthusiastic audience at Music Hall last evening clearly demonstrated Mr. Zach's popularity as conductor of the "Pop" Concerts. It was Mr. Zach's farewell performance, as Mr. Gustav Strube will succeed him tomorrow night for the balance of the season. The management say this season's series of concerts will be the most successful yet given, from every viewpoint. The great audiences which assemble nightly are composed of Boston's musical and fashionable circles, which, together with the spirited music and the refreshments, make Music Hall these nights a strong attraction. A special program will be given Tuesday evening, as that will be "Technology Night." The program for tomorrow night is as follows:

March "U. S. Volunteers".....Strube
(First Time.)
Overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor"..Nicolai
Waltz, "In's Centrum".....Strauss
War March from "Rienzi".....Wagner
(First Time.)
Overture, "Oberon".....Weber
Procession of the Women, from "Lohengrin".....Wagner
Mazourka.....Chopin
(First Time.)
Selection, "Trovatore".....Verdi
Grossmuetterchen.....Langer
Solo violin, Mr. Ondricek.
Overture, "Light Cavalry".....Suppé
Waltz, "Morgenblaetter".....Strauss
March, "Up the Street".....Morse

[53]

SUNDAY HERALD.
PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CV., NO. 148.
SUNDAY, MAY 28, 1899.

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC.

Artists at the "Pop" Concerts Prove Drawing Cards.

Each Night This Week Is Devoted to Specialties—Conductor Zach's Farewell Appearance to Be Made Next Saturday — Musical Notes and News of Interest.

The great musical attraction of Boston at this time of the year is always the "Pop" concerts given at Music Hall. This season is proving that Mr. Zach and his 50 artists are indeed strong drawing cards, judging from the large audiences nightly in attendance. This week's concerts will be strong, as each entertainment will mark a special night. Tomorrow will be Bicycle night; Tuesday, the Patriotic night; Wednesday, Wagner night, and Saturday, Conductor Zach's farewell appearance. Following the usual custom of dividing the series of concerts between two eminent conductors, Mr. Zach will give way to Conductor Strube after this week. Owing to Music Hall having been engaged months ago for Thursday night, June 1, there will be no concert given on that evening. The wheelmen of Greater Boston are coming out in goodly numbers tomorrow night, judging from the advance sale. The following spirited programme is to be played:

Bride Elect March.....Sousa
Intermezzo, "Naila".....Delibes
"Carmen" selection.....Bizet
Your request.
Coronation march.....Meyerbeer
Lustige Bruder (Jolly Fellows) Waltz.....Vollstedt
Entree Triomphale des Boyards.....Halvorsen
Nocturne.....Marshall
Last movement of suite, "Peer Gynt".....Greig
"Il Trovatore" selection.....Verdi
Grubenlichter Waltz.....Zeller
Hunter's Yarn Polka.....Komzak
"The Stars and Stripes Forever".....Sousa

The most brilliant Pop concert of the week as far as smart attendance went was Friday night. Dr. and Mrs. William Appleton brought a party of six, including Mr. and Mrs. John T. Linzee. Mrs. Appleton was in gray, the corsage opening over black jetted lace, and wore a black toque. Mrs. Linzee was also in pearl color, the bodice done with much white lace and blue stock. Her hat was yellow and black, very smart. Dr. and Mrs. T. W. Rotch had a large party including Dr. George Hayden and Dr. Bowman. Mrs. Rotch was in black lace and her black hat had white plumes. Mayor Quincy was there with Mr. Charles E. Stratton, park commissioner, and a number of other prominent men at the table. Mr. Stephen Bennett had a party and Mr. and Mrs. George Jackson brought one which occupied a table in the centre of the hall. Mrs. Jackson's sapphire blue silk with white lace was very decorative as was her black picture hat. Mr. Arthur G. Everett was there with a party, also Mr. Richard Hale, Mr. Walter Soren and Mr. Amos Cotting. Mr. and Mrs. Leverett Tuckerman had a large table party in the side balcony including Mr. and Mrs. Charles Tuckerman; Mr. Amos Lawrence was there, and Mr. George E. Warren from Newton Centre brought a party. Mr. Robert Batcheller had friends including Dr. Charles Hare and Miss Thompson; Mr. Henry F. Strout was there with friends and Mr. Curtis Scriven had a party of four. A number of members of the Architectural Club occupied several tables.

Thursday at the Pop concert, where the attendance was larger if possible than on the previous evenings, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Adamowski were there with a party. The Hon. J. B. Holden and Mrs. Holden, Mr. and Mrs. Gericke with a table full of friends, including Frau Flamm, Mr. D. Berkeley Updike and party, Mr. Lester H. Monks and party, Mr. William R. Hallett, Mrs. Henry T. Spooner, her son, Dr. Harry Spooner, and party, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Kenney and Miss Kenney, who had a table party; Dr. C. W. Galloup, Mr. Josiah Gooding, Mr. and Mrs. George Whitcomb, Miss Julia Richards, with friends; Mr. Harry Bates, Mrs. Charles M. Clapp and Miss Clapp, Dr. Beatty, Miss Alice Cummings and Mr. John D. Hale.

At the Pop concert at Music Hall Monday night, which marked the beginning of the third week, every place was filled. There were at the tables the Hon. Robert F. Clark and party, Mr. and Mrs. J. Arthur Beebe, with some young people; Mr. Pierson Beebe, Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Battelle and Miss Battelle, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Ames, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Badger and party, Mr. Eugene Hager, Mr. T. B. Gannett, Jr., Mr. Edmund Grinnell, and many more.

BOSTON GLOBE—THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1

ROUSING RECEPTION TO GEN WHEELER IN MUSIC HALL LAST EVENING.

BOSTON POST,

The Representative Democratic Paper OF NEW ENGLAND.

SUNDAY MORNING, JUNE 4, 1899.

(Copyright, 1899, Post Publishing Company.)

MUSIC HALL POPS.

If enthusiasm and sincere admiration count for much, there was a jolly time in Boston Music Hall last night. The occasion was Max Zach's farewell appearance as conductor of the "Pop" concerts. The leaders of the musical and fashionable sets of Boston were all out to give Mr. Zach a warm and hearty vote of thanks and their good will for the excellent work he has done this season. Commencing tomorrow night and for the rest of the season Conductor Gustav Strube will conduct the concerts. "Technology night" will be next Tuesday evening, when a special programme will be rendered. This promises to be the banner season of the "Pop" concerts from every view-point. The following excellent programme will be given tomorrow night:

March, "United States Volunteers" (first time), Strube; overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai; waltz, "In's Centrum," Strauss; war march from "Rienzi" (first time), Wagner; overture, "Oberon," Weber; procession of the women from "Lohengrin," Wagner; mazourka (first time), Chopin; selection, "Trovatore," Verdi; Grossmutterchen (solo violin, Ondricek), Langer; overture, "Light Cavalry," Suppe; waltz, "Morgenblatter," Strauss; march, "Up the Street," Morse.

The Pop concerts are meeting with the most flattering patronage and are quite as enjoyable as ever. Mr. Max Zach relinquished the baton last evening and tomorrow Mr. Gustav Strube will conduct, opening with one of his own compositions, a stirring march called "U. S. Volunteers," played for the first time. A programme of unusual excellence is promised, including the "Merry Wives" overture; a "War March" by Wagner; "Oberon" overture; selections from "Trovatore"; violin solo by Mr. Ondricek; Suppe's "Light Cavalry" and Morse's "Up the Street." Tuesday will be Tech night, and the programme is gotten up in artistic style. The music for this night is in lighter vein than usual. Friday evening the audience was large and enthusiastic. Miss Clara Mueller had a party of young people. The Hon. A. [illegible], Mr. Walter Dugan, Dr [illegible] Mr. Walter Adams and a [illegible] party from the Newtons were present Friday.

[54]

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, JUNE 6, 1899.

Music Hall Promenades.

The promenade concert at Music hall last evening was made notable by the appearance of Gustav Strube as conductor for the first time this season. That his successful leadership of the closing concerts last season was not forgotten was shown by the cordial welcome given him and the manifest appreciation of the program which he presented.

The program was well balanced in the matter of classical and "light" selections and seemed to suit all tastes. All the numbers were well rendered, but a specially pleasing touch was given the Wagnerian ones, the war march from "Rienzi" and the procession of the women from "Lohengrin," and the harmony and force of the original were well brought out. A pleasing opening was Strube's new march, "U S Volunteers." A well-chosen selection from "Trovatore" showed by the encore demanded that the music of the old opera has lost none of its power to charm. A well-deserved encore was also given the violin solo "Grossmutterchen," by Mr Ondricek, who gave it with mingled liveliness and pathos.

For the lighter selections there were a couple of charming Strauss waltzes, "In Centrum" and "Morgenblatter," and Suppe's overture "Light Cavalry," all received with special approval. A good close for the program was the popular march "Up the Street," given to a lively measure.

Tonight will be "Technology" night, and a program especially appropriate to the occasion has been arranged. It is as follows:

March, El Capitan	Sousa
Artist's Life, waltz	Strauss
Suite, Peer Gynt	Grieg
Selection, The Fortune Teller	Herbert
Invitation to Dance	Weber
Narcissus	Nevin
Selection, The Belle of New York	Kerker
Two Slavonic Dances	Dvorak
Technology minstrels, selection.
Espana	Waldteufel
College overture	Moses
Husarenritt	Spindler

Besides being attractive musically, the program has a clever and timely acrostic that he who runs may read.

Boston Journal.

TUESDAY, JUNE 6, 1899.

"Pop" Concert.

A large audience was present at the "Pop" concert in Music Hall last night to greet Gustav Strube for his first night as a conductor this season. The program, which was well-selected, contained for a first number one of Mr. Strube's own compositions, a march called "U. S. Volunteers," a lively, stirring march, with suggestions of Sousa, which will always please but will rarely be whistled.

Mr. Strube's presence, while it is not imposing, is dignified and very business-like. He looks for no friends in the audience, and reads his score closely. He has a lot of verve, and brings his trains through on schedule time, while allowing to those who have a right to it plenty of leeway for expression. His insistence on attack is as good as extra ventilation. Besides his new march, there was an arrangement of one of the Chopin mazourkas which was played for the first time.

Mr. Strube will conduct the remainder of the season's concerts.

Mr. Strube's assumption of the conductor's baton at the Music Hall concerts made no change in the admirable discretion used in preparing programmes nor in the quality of their execution. It is certainly unusually fortunate that there are in the orchestra two such competent leaders and men too who are favorites with their winter associates whom they have to direct during this summer season. Both are easy and yet firm in command and each has a wide acquaintance with suitable music and a pleasant fondness for entertaining novelties.

Courier June 10

THE HARVARD BULLETIN.

Music Hall } Promenade Concerts

HARVARD NIGHT, Monday, June 19.

GRADUATES' NIGHT, Monday, June 26.

Graduates will please notify class secretaries if they wish to reserve seats at 50 cents each.

F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager. C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

[illegible]

PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. CV., NO. 156.

SUNDAY, JUNE 4, 1899.

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC.

Mr. Zach's Farewell as Music Hall "Pop" Conductor.

Programme for Tomorrow Night's Concert—"Bobby Shafto" Soon to Be Presented at the Hollis Street Theatre—Decline of Musical Prodigies—Notes.

Max Zach's farewell appearance last evening as conductor of the Music Hall Promenade concerts was witnessed by an immense audience, composed principally of the musical and fashionable circles of Boston. Mr. Zach this season has been peculiarly happy in his programmes, and his many admirers did not lack enthusiasm in their expressions of approval for his work at the last concert given under his direction. Beginning tomorrow night, Conductor Gustav Strube will assume the baton, and continue in charge the balance of the season. Tuesday evening will be "Technology night," when a special programme will be given. The popularity of the "Pops" was never so great as it has been thus far this season. The programme for tomorrow night is:

March, "U. S. Volunteers" (First time.)	Strube
Overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor"	Nicolai
Waltz, "In's Centrum"	Strauss
War march from "Rienzi" (First time.)	Wagner
Overture, "Oberon"	Weber
Procession of the Women, from "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Mazourka (First time.)	Chopin
Selection, "Trovatore"	Verdi
Grossmutterchen. Solo violin, Mr. Ondricek.	Langer
Overture, "Light Cavalry"	Suppe
Waltz, "Morgenblatter"	Strauss
March, "Up the Street"	Morse

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

Established 1813.

The Official Paper of the State

The Official Paper of the City.

TUESDAY MORNING, JUNE 6, 1899.

MUSICAL MATTERS

The "Pop" Concerts—Gustav Strube, Conductor.

It is said to be bad policy to swap horses while crossing a stream; yet the promenade concerts have always found it to be good policy to change conductors in mid-season. Therefore, last night found Mr. Zach retired from the director's stand and Mr. G. Strube leading the tonal forces.

"The King is dead, long live the King;" having attended to the obsequies of the former conductor sufficiently to say that he was very successful, let us turn toward the rising sun and say of Mr. Strube that he bids fair to be at least equally so.

Mr. Strube has won his spurs as composer in the symphonic ranks, and may be hailed as the best composer-conductor who appears in the "pop" series; we may therefore hope to hear more of his work, and higher specimens of it, than the "U. S. Volunteer's March," which began the concert last night.

The programme presented two Wagner numbers, the first of which was a selection from the circus music of "Rienzi"—the "War March," which gave the brasses every chance to blow out all the power of their lungs. The second was the nobler "Wedding March," from "Lohengrin," which deservedly won an encore. For ourselves we can say that the overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor" seemed as charming as anything that the jovial concert offered, and Nicolai has not yet been obliterated even by Verdi in this Shakesperian subject.

But is there any need of ambitious analysis of the "pops?" One might as well "peep and botanize upon his mother's grave" (a la Wordsworth) as try to dissect the subtle charm of these occasions. They are the quintessence of genuine Bohemianism and the delightful safety valve of a [illegible] ical Boston.

ROUSING RECEPTION TO GEN WHEELER IN MUSIC HALL LAST EVENING.

SUNDAY HERALD

PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. CV., NO. 155.

SUNDAY, JUNE 4, 1899.

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC.

Mr. Zach's Farewell as Music Hall "Pop" Conductor.

Programme for Tomorrow Night's Concert—"Bobby Shafto" Soon to Be Presented at the Hollis Street Theatre—Decline of Musical Prodigies—Notes.

Max Zach's farewell appearance last evening as conductor of the Music Hall Promenade concerts was witnessed by an immense audience, composed principally of the musical and fashionable circles of Boston. Mr. Zach this season has been peculiarly happy in his programmes, and his many admirers did not lack enthusiasm in their expressions of approval for his work at the last concert given under his direction. Beginning tomorrow night, Conductor Gustav Strube will assume the baton, and continue in charge the balance of the season. Tuesday evening will be "Technology night," when a special programme will be given. The popularity of the "Pops" was never so great as it has been thus far this season. The programme for tomorrow night is:

March, "U. S. Volunteers".....Strube
(First time.)
Overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor"..Nicolai
Waltz, "In's Centrum".....Strauss
War march from "Riensi".....Wagner
(First time.)
Overture, "Oberon".....Weber
Procession of the Women, from "Lohengrin".....Wagner
Mazourka.....Chopin
(First time.)
Selection, "Trovatore".....Verdi
Grossmutterchen.....Langer
Solo violin, Mr. Ondricek.
Overture, "Light Cavalry".....Suppe
Waltz, "Morgenblatter".....Strauss
March, "Up the Street".....Morse

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

SUNDAY MORNING, JUNE 4, 1899.
(Copyright, 1899, Post Publishing Company.)

MUSIC HALL POPS.

If enthusiasm and sincere admiration count for much, there was a jolly time in Boston Music Hall last night. The occasion was Max Zach's farewell appearance as conductor of the "Pop" concerts. The leaders of the musical and fashionable sets of Boston were all out to give Mr. Zach a warm and hearty vote of thanks and their good will for the excellent work he has done this season. Commencing tomorrow night and for the rest of the season Conductor Gustav Strube will conduct the concerts. "Technology night" will be next Tuesday evening, when a special programme will be rendered. This promises to be the banner season of the "Pop" concerts from every view-point. The following excellent programme will be given tomorrow night:

March, "United States Volunteers" (first time), Strube; overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai; waltz, "In's Centrum," Strauss; war march from "Rienzi" (first time), Wagner; overture, "Oberon," Weber; procession of the women, from "Lohengrin," Wagner; mazourka (first time), Chopin; selection, "Trovatore," Verdi; Grossmutterchen (solo violin, Ondricek), Langer; overture, "Light Cavalry," Suppe; waltz, "Morgenblatter," Strauss; march, "Up the Street," Morse.

* * * * * * * * *

The Pop concerts are meeting with the most flattering patronage and are quite as enjoyable as ever. Mr. Max Zach relinquished the baton last evening and tomorrow Mr. Gustav Strube will conduct, opening with one of his own compositions, a stirring march called "U. S. Volunteers," played for the first time. A programme of unusual excellence is promised, including the "Merry Wives" overture; a "War March" by Wagner; "Oberon" overture; selections from "Trovatore"; violin solo by Mr. Ondricek; Suppe's "Light Cavalry" and Morse's "Up the Street." Tuesday will be Tech night, and the programme is gotten up in acrostic style. The music for this night is in lighter vein than usual. Friday evening the audience was large and enthusiastic. Miss Clara Munger had a party of young people. The Hon. A. E. Pillsbury, Mr. Walter Dugan, Dr Gallowey, Mr. Walter Adams and a large party from the Newtons were present Friday.

* * * * * * * * *

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, JUNE 6, 1899.

Music Hall Promenades.

The promenade concert at Music hall last evening was made notable by the appearance of Gustav Strube as conductor for the first time this season. That his successful leadership of the closing concerts last season was not forgotten was shown by the cordial welcome given him and the manifest appreciation of the program which he presented.

The program was well balanced in the matter of classical and "light" selections and seemed to suit all tastes. All the numbers were well rendered, but a specially pleasing touch was given the Wagnerian ones, the war march from "Rienzi" and the procession of the women from "Lohengrin," and the harmony and force of the original were well brought out. A pleasing opening was Strube's new march, "U S Volunteers." A well-chosen selection from "Trovatore" showed by the encore demanded that the music of the old opera has lost none of its power to charm. A well-deserved encore was also given the violin solo "Grossmutterchen," by Mr Ondricek, who gave it with mingled liveliness and pathos.

For the lighter selections there were a couple of charming Strauss waltzes, "In Centrum" and "Morgenblatter," and Suppe's overture "Light Cavalry," all received with special approval. A good close for the program was the popular march "Up the Street," given to a lively measure.

Tonight will be "Technology" night, and a program especially appropriate to the occasion has been arranged. It is as follows:

March, El Capitan.....Sousa
Artist's Life, waltz.....Strauss
Suite, Peer Gynt.....Grieg
Selection, The Fortune Teller.....Herbert
Invitation to Dance.....Weber
Narcissus.....Nevin
Selection, The Belle of New York.....Kerker
Two Slavonic Dances.....Dvorak
Technology minstrels, selection.
Espana.....Waldteufel
College overture.....Moses
Husarenritt.....Spindler

Besides being attractive musically, the program has a clever and timely acrostic that he who runs may read.

Boston Journal.

TUESDAY, JUNE 6, 1899.

"Pop" Concert.

A large audience was present at the "Pop" concert in Music Hall last night to greet Gustav Strube for his first night as a conductor this season. The program, which was well-selected, contained for a first number one of Mr. Strube's own compositions, a march called "U. S. Volunteers," a lively, stirring march, with suggestions of Sousa, which will always please but will rarely be whistled.

Mr. Strube's presence, while it is not imposing, is dignified and very business-like. He looks for no friends in the audience, and reads his score closely. He has a lot of verve, and brings his trains through on schedule time, while allowing to those who have a right to it plenty of leeway for expression. His insistence on attack is as good as extra ventilation. Besides his new march, there was an arrangement of one of the Chopin mazourkas which was played for the first time.

Mr. Strube will conduct the remainder of the season's concerts.

Mr. Strube's assumption of the conductor's baton at the Music Hall concerts made no change in the admirable discretion used in preparing programmes nor in the quality of their execution. It is certainly unusually fortunate that there are in the orchestra two such competent leaders and men too who are favorites with their winter associates whom they have to direct during this summer season. Both are easy and yet firm in command and each has a wide acquaintance with suitable music and a pleasant fondness for entertaining novelties.

Louis C. Elson.

THE HARVARD BULLETIN.

Music Hall } Promenade Concerts

HARVARD NIGHT, Monday, June 19.
GRADUATES' NIGHT, Monday, June 26.

Gradnates will please notify class secretaries if they wish to reserve seats at 50 cents each.

F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager. C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

[54]

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER.
Established 1813.
The Official Paper of the State
The Official Paper of the City.

TUESDAY MORNING, JUNE 6, 1899.

MUSICAL MATTERS

The "Pop" Concerts—Gustav Strube, Conductor.

It is said to be bad policy to swap horses while crossing a stream; yet the promenade concerts have always found it to be good policy to change conductors in mid-season. Therefore, last night found Mr. Zach retired from the director's stand and Mr. G. Strube leading the tonal forces.

"The King is dead, long live the King;" having attended to the obsequies of the former conductor sufficiently to say that he was very successful, let us turn toward the rising sun and say of Mr. Strube that he bids fair to be at least equally so.

Mr. Strube has won his spurs as composer in the symphonic ranks, and may be hailed as the best composer-conductor who appears in the "pop" series; we may therefore hope to hear more of his work, and higher specimens of it, than the "U. S. Volunteer's March," which began the concert last night.

The programme presented two Wagner numbers, the first of which was a selection from the circus music of "Rienzi"—the "War March," which gave the brasses every chance to blow out all the power of their lungs. The second was the nobler "Wedding March," from "Lohengrin," which deservedly won an encore. For ourselves we can say that the overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor" seemed as charming as anything that the jovial concert offered, and Nicolai has not yet been obliterated even by Verdi in this Shakesperian subject.

But is there any need of ambitious analysis of the "pops?" One might as well "peep and botanise upon his mother's grave" (a la Wordsworth) as try to dissect the subtle charm of these occasions. They are the quintessence of genuine Bohemianism and the delightful safety valve of a once Puritanical Boston.

Louis C. Elson.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, JUNE 4, 1899.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The leading musical and social sets of Boston were out in large numbers at Music hall last night. Mr Max Zach, the popular conductor of the "pop" concerts, was the attraction which drew many enthusiastic admirers to his farewell performance, which was in every way a grand success. Tomorrow night Mr Gustav Strube will be the conductor, and will continue as such for the balance of the season, which has yet four weeks to run. A special program has been arranged for Tuesday evening, which will be "Technology night." Undoubtedly this will be the most successful season that the promenade concerts have had, both as regards the excellent programs rendered and the large and brilliant audiences that have attended. The following program will be given tomorrow night:

March, U S Volunteers.....Strube
(First time.)
Overture, Merry Wives of Windsor.....Nicolai
Waltz, In's Centrum.....Strauss
War March from Rienzi.....Wagner
(First time.)
Overture, Oberon.....Weber
Procession of the Women, from Lohengrin, Wagner
Masourka.....Chopin
(First time.)
Selection, Trovatore.....Verdi
Grossmutterchen.....Langer
Solo, violin, Mr Ondricek.
Overture, Light Cavalry.....Suppe
Waltz, Morgenblatter.....Strauss
March, Up the Street.....Morse

—There has been a series of brilliant audiences the past week at the promenade concerts, and on Tuesday evening, when patriotic selections were played, and Wednesday evening, when Gen Wheeler and the Misses Wheeler and other distinguished guests were present, the utmost enthusiasm prevailed. When the familiar strains of "America" were heard Tuesday evening, the whole vast audience on the floor and balconies rose simultaneously, with cheer upon cheer. It was an experience that sent the blood thrilling through one's veins, and will be long remembered by all there. Gen Wheeler was greeted with rapturous applause on Wednesday evening, and the same spirit prevailed, both when the "Star Spangled Banner" and "Dixie" were played. A few noted in the audiences were Mr Henry Parkman, Mr A. E. Pillsbury, Mr Frank Beebe, Miss Beebe, Mrs Tudor, the Misses Tudor with a party of friends, Mrs Tudor in a black and white polka spotted india silk, with white at the corsage, and black hat with white roses; one of the young women in the party wore a pink and white taffeta bodice and hat with black ostrich tips; the other a violet satin bodice with violet hat; Mr and Mrs Oliver W. Mink, Mrs Mink in black satin and bonnet with pink roses; Mr and Mrs Samuel Little, the latter in a gray costume and bonnet with cerise trimmings and ostrich tips; Mr Amos A. Lawrence, Miss Edith Lawrence, Miss Marion Peabody and friends, Miss Lawrence wearing on Tuesday a costume of Persian silk, with capes of muslin at the bodice and broad blue silk belt; her hat was yellow straw with pompon of pale pink flowers; on Wednesday evening her costume was ecru combined with pale blue silk and lace, and hat with white tulle pompon and wreath of pink flowers; Miss Peabody wore blue and white taffeta silk with white at the corsage and black stock; her hat was yellow straw, with tulle and black wings; Mr and Mrs Shuman, Mr Homer Norris, Mrs F. W. Kittredge, Miss Cornelia Kittredge, Mr Charles Ridgway and Mr John Graham.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. OV., NO. 157.

TUESDAY, JUNE 6, 1899.

NEW CONDUCTOR AT THE "POPS."

Conductor Strube opened his portion of the Pop concerts very auspiciously with a composition of his own, given for the first time. It was a stirring march, dedicated to the "United States Volunteers," and had the true martial flavor and swing. Mr. Strube received a hearty welcome, and his march a liberal measure of applause. There was a good-sized audience, in spite of the warm evening, the floor being completely filled.

The second number on the programme, which was pleasantly varied and representative of grand opera, as well as popular airs, was the overture to the "Merry Wives of Windsor," and the orchestra, under Conductor Strube's skilful leadership, acquitted itself well. A Strauss waltz proceeded the "War March" from Wagner's "Rienzi," another piece new to these concerts.

So satisfactory was the rendering of "The Procession of the Women," from "Lohengrin," that an encore was demanded, as was the case with Langer's "Grossmutterchen," with Mr. Ondricek as soloist. He brought out all the soft beauty and melody of the composition, and the large and merry company on the floor was hushed to complete silence as the tones of the violin floated above them. Among the other numbers was a mazourka by Chopin, given for the first time in these concerts, and the programme closed with a performance of the ever popular march, "Up the Street." Mr. Strube may well be satisfied with the success of his first night as rewarded by the evident appreciation of his work.

Tonight is "Tech" night, with a programme that will appeal especially to

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

MUSIC HALL.

Evidently a more potent opposition than the weather, no matter how humid, is necessary to detract from the attendance at the Pop concerts, for last evening a great crowd thronged the spacious old hall and applauded most heartily the excellent work of the fine orchestra.

No better concert has been done by this gathering of skilled musicians than was presented last night under its new leader, Gustav Strube. A programme of wide range was offered, running the whole list from Wagner's "Lohengrin" to Morse's popular march, "Up the Street."

Conductor Strube is a skilful leader, and had, last evening, splendid command of his players. This was especially noticeable in his rendering of the war march from "Rienzi" and Nicolai's popular overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor."

Heading the programme was the march "U. S. Volunteers," a composition by Conductor Strube. So immediately did it become popular with his audience that they emphatically demanded its repetition. In fact there was scarcely a number in the whole programme that could not have been repeated to the gratification of the listeners. After the second intermission Mr. Ondricek executed "Grossmutterchen," a violin solo, in a scholarly manner that added pleasure to the evening's entertainment.

Boston Journal.

SUNDAY, JUNE 11, 1899.

MUSIC HALL "POPS."

The "Pop" concerts at Music Hall will tomorrow night begin the sixth week. The advance sale of seats for this and following weeks clearly indicate the appreciation of our musical people for an entertainment of this attractive character. Mr. Gustav Strube thoroughly understands the requirements of our concert-goers. Harvard night has been appointed for June 19. Tomorrow evening will be Wagner night, with the following program:

March, "Nibelungen".....Sonntag
Waltz, "Thousand and One Nights"..Strauss
Traeume.....Wagner
(First time.)
Trumpet solo, Mr. Kloepfel.
Overture, "Rienzi".....Wagner
Introduction, Act III., "Tannhaeuser." Wagner
(First time.)
Evening Star.....Wagner
Solo Trombone, Mr. Hampe.
Sailors' Chorus from "The Flying Dutchman".....Wagner
Prelude to "Meistersinger".....Wagner
Procession of Women, from "Lohengrin".....Wagner
Loin du Bal.....Gillet
Polka, "Puppenfee".....Bayer
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever"....Sousa

BOSTON

Had it not been for the timely interference of Hymen, the past week, save with the usual June exodus to country, seashore and Europe, there would be little of interest in the social world besides the continued popularity of the Promenade Concerts at Music Hall, where on Monday evening the leadership was transferred to Mr. Strube, a popular member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, after a successful and large month's attendance under Mr. Max Zach's baton. The announcement of the ever-popular opera of "Erminie," given at the Tremont Theatre on Monday evening with practically an all-star cast, called out a large and fashionable audience, despite the fact of the weather's being a bit warm for such diversisement.

The popular concerts at Music Hall have called out exceptionally brilliant houses the past week, when on Friday evening the hall was filled with a large number of well-known people, among whom were Mr. and Mrs. J. Frank Howland, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur W. Pope and a party of friends at a table. Miss Cabot occupied another. Mr. and Mrs. Lee entertained friends. Mr. and Mrs. David W. Noyes had Mrs. Thomas S. Nowell at their table. Near by sat Dr. and Mrs. John G. Blake (the latter "M. E. B." of the Transcript), with their daughter Miss Male Blake and a party of young men, including their sons. Dr. Foser Bush, with his daughter and Miss Bush, occupied a table. Mr. and Mrs. Henry L. Flarbrother had friends at a centre table.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, JUNE 11, 1899.

MUSIC HALL PROMENADES.

Mr Gustave Strube, the conductor of the "pop" concerts at Music hall, has many enthusiastic admirers among Boston's concert goers. His first week's work clearly shows that his selection of programs as well as his conducting fully meets the requirements of the large and spirited audiences which nightly greet him. The concerts arranged for this week will be especially attractive, and there is no place in Boston where a more enjoyable evening can be spent than at Music hall. This season's series of concerts has yet three weeks to run, and judging from the large advance sale of seats the attendance will equal that of the past five weeks, which has been uniformly large. Tomorrow night's program is as follows:

March, Nibelungen.....Sonntag
Waltz, Thousand and One Nights.....Strauss
Traume.....Wagner
Trumpet solo, Mr Kloepfel.
Overture, Rienzi.....Wagner
Introduction, act III, Tannhauser.....Wagner
Evening Star.....Wagner
Solo trombone, Mr Hampe.
Sailors' chorus from The Flying Dutchman.....Wagner
Prelude to Meistersinger.....Wagner
Procession of women, from Lohengrin..Wagner
Loin du Bal.....Gillet
Polka, Puppenfee.....Bayer
March, Stars and Stripes Forever.....Sousa

—The promenade concerts have drawn full houses at Music hall during tre week, conductor Strube wielding the baton for the first time on Monday evening. The first piece on the program was a march composed by the conductor, which scored an immediate success. A few noticed at the tables have been Mr Hollander and Mr Benton, with a large party of friends, Mr and Mrs F. W. Kittredge, with Mrs Longyear, Miss Longyear, Miss Kittredge and Mr Homer Norris, Mrs Kittredge in dark blue silk set off with white at the boddice, and hat with pink roses; Miss Kittredge in blue taffeta bodice and hat with white trimmings; Mrs Longyear in black lace combined with white, and Miss Longyear in pale gray cashmere, the bodice made with white yoke and gray silk cape with silver trimmings; her hat was white, with white ostrich plumes; Mr S. H. Witherell, Mr and Mrs Albert Forbes Conant, Miss MacNichol and friends, Mrs Conant in black, the bodice opening over white, and hat trimmed with white chiffon and wings; Miss MacNichol in dark blue, with yellow straw hat with black tips; Mr A. E. Pillsbury, Mrs Fay, Miss Fay, Miss Fenno and Miss Anne Blake, with young gentlemen, Miss Fenno in a dark blue costume and hat with violets; Miss Fay in black and white silk lace Eton jacket, and Miss Blake in black muslin with hat of white chiffon and black wings; Mr and Mrs Oliver W. Mink and Mr Lithgow Devens.

—At the Thursday evening promenade concert, when all the tables were occupied, were noted Mr and Mrs Andrew Robeson, with several friends, occupying two tables in the balcony, Mrs Robeson in gray and violet muslin, the bodice with white lace and narrow black velvet ribbons, and stock and girdle of blue silk, her toque was trimmed with violets; Mr and Mrs Bernard C. Weld and Mr and Mrs Charles H. Fiske Jr, Mrs Weld in black India with white polka spot, the front of the bodice of white chiffon, and hat of black combined with white; Mrs Fiske in blue and white spotted India, with black straw hat, with pink trimmings; Mr Amos A. Lawrence and Miss Edith Lawrence, in light blue crepe with white trimmings, yellow straw hat with pompon of flowers. Tomorrow night there will be a Wagner program.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

SUNDAY MORNING, JUNE 11, 1899.

MUSIC HALL "POPS."

There is no place in Boston these nights where a much more enjoyable evening can be spent than at the "Pop" concerts, Music Hall. Tomorrow night will commence the sixth week of this popular form of entertainment, and the balance of the season promises to be marked by large audiences, judging from the large advance sale of seats. Mr. Gustav Strube is an ideal conductor, and his arrangement of programmes meets with the hearty approval of the large audiences which are nightly in attendance. His selections for this week will be attractive. Harvard night has been appointed for Monday, June 19.

Tomorrow evening will be Wagner night, with the following programme:

March, "Nibelungen," Sonntag; waltz, "Thousand and One Nights," Strauss; traume, Wagner (first time); trumpet solo, Mr. Kloepfel; overture, "Rienzi," Wagner; introduction, Act III., "Tannhauser," Wagner (first time); "Evening Star," Wagner; solo trombone, Mr. Hampe; sailors' chorus from "The Flying Dutchman," Wagner; prelude to "Meistersinger," Wagner; procession of women, from "Lohengrin," Wagner; "Loin du Bal," Gillet; polka, "Puppenfee," Bayer; march, "Stars and Stripes Forever," Sousa.

SUNDAY HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. OV., NO. 169.

SUNDAY, JUNE 18, 1899.

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC.

Promenade Concerts Having a Successful Season.

Tomorrow Evening's Programme—It Will Be "Harvard Night"—New Operas Abroad—Reminiscences of Johann Strauss—Calve Captures Paris—Notes.

HIS season's series of promenade concerts at Music Hall has but two more weeks to run. Notwithstanding the extreme heat experienced this summer, the attendance thus far promises to make this the most successful season that the "Pops" has had. The programmes arranged by Conductor Strube for the concluding performances are very attractive. Tomorrow evening will be "Harvard Night," when the following programme is to be given:

March, "University".....Bruguiere
Overture, "Si j'etais Roi".....Adam
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows".....Vollstedt
Selection, "Runaway Girl".....Ch. von Baar
American Fantasy.....Herbert
Overture to "Belles of Bellesley," Pi Eta production 1899.
Selections from "Hasty Pudding" productions.
Serenade.....Henry, '87
March, "The Cruiser Harvard".....Strube
Selection, "Belle of New York".....Kerker
Fair Harvard.
March, "Up the Street".....Morse, '96

At the Pop concert on Monday night, which opened the week well, with every seat taken, were Col. and Mrs. Henry E. Russell, who had with them Dr. and Mrs. W. D. Swan of Cambridge. Mrs. Russell looked cool and handsome in pearl gray, with much white lace, and a large black hat. Col. and Mrs. Russell, by the way, are sailing shortly with friends for Europe, where they mean to travel extensively. Others there were Judge Henry Dewey, Mr. Amos Lawrence, with Miss Edith Lawrence, the latter charming to look upon in a light-tinted diaphanous gown, with white lace hat; Francis M. Stanwood, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Nowell, Mrs. Jeremiah Williams, who chaperoned a party of young people, and was in black, with deep white lace guimpe and black and white toque; Dr. Wesselhoeft, Mr. Stephen Townsend and Mr. George E. Warren, who had a party of 12, including Mr. and Mrs. Harry Ayer, Mrs. Ayer in black lace, with pale yellow bodice, and black hat with touches of white.

For tomorrow, which is Harvard night at the Pops, scarcely a seat is unsold. A lot of young people with Harvard proclivities are coming in from the various country places and up from the shore to do honor to the boys. It will be a large night in many ways, for Manager Comee is a Harvard man himself, and means to leave nothing undone to make it a success.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, JUNE 20, 1899

STUDENTS OWNED MUSIC HALL

Harvard Night at the "Pops" Last Evening Was a Brilliant Success and the College Men Got All They Asked for Both sights and sounds in Music Hall last evening attested the fact that this particular "pop concert" was arranged for the especial benefit of the Harvard students. The hall was elaborately decorated in crimson and other colors, and above the stage was a large sign bearing the word "Harvard." At the four corners of the hall were four other signs bearing respectively the legends, "Ninety-nine," "Naughty-naught," Naughty-one" and "Naughty-two," while small crimson banners with the letter H were scattered about everywhere. In the vicinity of their own signs the respective classes were gathered, most of the students being accompanied by ladies, who rivalled their male escorts in the zest with which they enjoyed the evening's festivities. An excellent programme had been arranged by Conductor Strube, containing several selections particularly appropriate to the occasion, and in addition to the regular numbers several extra ones were given at the vigorous requests of the students. "We want 'Whistling Rufus,'" came in stentorian tones from one large group of students, and soon the entire assemblage was making the same demand. The selection was given, and after that several others which were called for in the same way. The Glee Club responded to a call for its services, and sang several selections. It was estimated that nearly three thousand people were in the hall.

HARVARD NIGHT AT THE "POPS."

A Crimson Glow of Enthusiasm Which Was Manifested in Vigorous College Style—Glee Club Responded to Many Encores.

The last week but one of the Music Hall "Pop" concerts began last evening. It was "Harvard" night, and the college boys gathered in great force, the audience being one of the very largest and most demonstrative that the season of these entertainments has attracted. It is scarcely necessary to add that the collegians made the occasion exceedingly lively, and that "high jinks" prevailed to a considerable extent. The selections that appealed especially to them were favored with greetings in which lungs and hands came to the fore with equal enthusiasm. Conductor Strube had arranged an admirable programme, and encores were many and irresistible.

Before the concert the entrances were filled by anxious students and their girl friends, and when the gates were opened there was a great rush in the anxiety to secure choice seats. All seats not reserved were quickly taken by the early comers. The women were not the least fortunate in the scramble, for they were helped by their escorts.

The hall was beautifully decorated with crimson bunting. The ceiling was draped with great streamers of nile green and pink. Two large American flags were draped at the rear of the hall. Over the stage a sign, bearing the letters, in crimson, "Harvard," was suspended. On all sides of the first balcony around the hall were signs, in crimson, bearing the words, "Ninety-nine," "Naughty-naught," "Naughty-one" and "Naughty-two." Little crimson banners bearing upon their fields the letter "H" were also scattered about the hall at every advantageous place. The sweet girl graduates were out in force, and all the ladies were dressed in fetching gowns. Everybody was happy and the glasses clinked merrily.

The men of the four classes cheered lustily, and each class invited the challenges of the members of other classes by giving their own class yells in rapid succession and with a will. "We Want "Whistling Rufus," was shouted in unison, all of a sudden, by a hundred throats, and soon the echoes were resounding from every quarter of the great hall. Other people wanted the same selection, and it was given by the orchestra. Then they cried "More," and they were granted more and more, to their hearts' content.

The "grads" of long ago and the "freshies" were there, and shouted for their favorite selections, just as frequently and as loudly as their congested lungs would permit. Each member was applauded with unusual vigor, and when the orchestra left the stage, after the first part, the boys cried for the Glee Club. The members of the Glee Club were seated close under the stage, around the first tables, and they were soon upon their feet surrounding their leader and singing with a will. As soon as they finished a number they were called upon for another, and each time they responded happily. The affair was pronounced a big success.

Boston Daily Globe.

THURSDAY, JUNE 22, 1899.

"Naval Night" at the Pop Concert.

The presence of Rear Admiral Picking, Mrs Picking and a party of women guests, together with a score or more of the younger officers of the visiting warships and from the navy yard, added considerable to the enthusiasm at the "Pop" concert at Music hall last night. It was "naval night," and a specially arranged musical program was provided—many of the stirring numbers were encored again and again.

The distinguished guests arrived soon after 8.30. "The Star Spangled Banner" by the band greeted their entrance, the entire audience standing. Rear Admiral Picking and his party occupied a central table, and were surrounded by friends. The junior officers had the position of honor at a specially arranged table near the Hamilton pl side, a standard of American flags appropriately decorating its head.

The naval men, in their natty service uniform, were the cynosure of all eyes, as many of them had assisted in the destruction of Cervera's fleet.

BOSTON POST,

The Representative Democratic Paper OF NEW ENGLAND.

SUNDAY MORNING, JUNE 18, 1899.
(Copyright, 1899, Post Publishing Company.)

MUSIC HALL POPS.

Excellent music, gayety, mirth and that sort of thing is crowding Music Hall nightly with the musical and fashionable sets of Boston. Commencing tomorrow evening the "Pop" concerts have but two more weeks to run, when will end the most successful season yet experienced by the management. Without question this is Boston's most popular and attractive form of summer entertainment, as is evidenced each season by the large and brilliant audiences which are in nightly attendance. As tomorrow evening will be "Harvard night," the following special programme has been arranged: March, "University," Bruguiere; overture, "Si j'etais Roi," Adam; waltz, "Jolly Fellows," Vollstedt; selection, "Runaway Girl," Ch. von Baar; American fantasy, Herbert; overture to Belles of Bellesley," Pi Eta production, 1899; selection from "Hasty Pudding" production; serenade (first time), Henry, '87; march, "The Cruiser Harvard," Strube; selection, "Belle of New York," Kerker; "Fair Harvard"; march, "Up the Street," Morse, '96.

Boston Journal.

SUNDAY, JUNE 18, 1899.

THE PROMENADES.

There are only two more weeks of "Pop" concerts at Music Hall. The heat has had no apparent effect upon the spirits or size of the audiences that have been nightly in attendance. Indeed, there is no form of summer entertainment in Boston more restful, enjoyable or refreshing than the Promenade Concerts. Mr. Gustav Strubo has arranged for the concluding performances of this season programs which will be especially attractive. Tomorrow night will be "Harvard Night," with the following program:

March, "University".....Bruguiere
Overture, "Si j'etais Roi".....Adam
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows".....Vollstedt
Selection, "Runaway Girl".....Ch. von Baar
American Fantasy.....Herbert
Overture to "Belles of Bellesley," Pi Eta Production, 1899.
Selection from "Hasty Pudding" Productions.
Serenade .....Henry, '87
(First Time.)
March, "The Cruiser Harvard".....Strube
Selection, "Belle of New York".....Kerker
Fair Harvard.
March, "Up the Street".....Morse, '96

Mr. Felix Winternitz, the distinguished violinist and excellent teacher, has joined the Faculty of the New England Conservatory.

Boston Journal.

TUESDAY, JUNE 20, 1899.

HARVARD NIGHT.

The Annual Pop Concert Draws the Usual Crowd of Crimson Enthusiasts.

There is one night at the Pop concerts that is known for its intense enthusiasm, that night is known as Harvard night. Last night was Harvard night for the season of 1899, but it was some days ago that the last seats for the concert were sold, and when the first number on the program was begun every chair in the hall had an occupant. Many well known graduates of the university were scattered about among the under-classmen and lacked little of equaling their enthusiasm. The numerous demands for encores were generally complied with, and whenever there was contest in the demands it was amicably settled by the orchestra playing double encores. The program, a distinctly popular one, included, besides numerous popular selections, several numbers of a Harvard character.

[56]

NAVAL NIGHT AT THE PROMENADE CONCERT.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CV., NO. 173.

THURSDAY, JUNE 22, 1899.

NAVY NIGHT IN MUSIC HALL.

People at the "Pop" Concert Greet the Visitors with Applause from All Sides.

There was a great time at the "Pop" concert in Music Hall last evening, in honor of the navy. As the red, white and blue incandescent sign over the entrance denoted, "Naval Night" was unmistakable.

About 20 officers, representing the four vessels of the squadron, were present in uniform, and many more officers were in civilian dress. They sat at tables reserved for them in the front of the enclosure, and were accompanied by ladies.

The most prominent guests of Assistant Manager Comee were Rear Admiral and Mrs. Picking of the navy yard. The admiral received an enthusiastic reception from the crowd as he entered, escorting Mrs. Picking, and followed by the officers of the squadron in uniform.

The Symphony orchestra, under Conductor Gustav Strube, struck up "The Star Spangled Banner" as the party entered, and 1000 men and women came to their feet instantly, it seemed, and cheered and clapped their hands and waved hats and handkerchiefs.

The scene within the enclosure, which has become celebrated for military and naval and civilian social assemblages, was unusual to look upon. It was full of color, and the company at the tables represented plainly the best people of Boston.

The balconies were also strikingly full of color. They appeared to be filled with men and women who had come to some great reception.

The orchestra gave itself up to the pleasure of the navy people, which was, beyond question, to the delight of the public. For instance, when a request came from the officers' tables for "Dixie," and Conductor Strube at once swung into it, "the house went wild." The navy could have anything it liked, the manager would see to it, and the public approved loudly.

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, JUNE 20, 1899.

HARVARD NIGHT AT POP CONCERT.

More Than 3000 Supporters of the Crimson Contribute to the Success of This Annual Event.

"We want Whistling Rufus." This was the first of many requests of the jolly Harvard students last night at the Pop concerts. The request was voiced in unison by about a dozen typical Harvard boys seated in the first balcony. Immediately a bunch of the wearers of the crimson seated in the body of the hall announced that they also wanted "Whistling Rufus." Then the Glee club crowd clamored for this popular tune, and it was inevitable—"Whistling Rufus" was forthcoming amid cheers and applause.

Harvard night at the Pop concerts has become one of the most enjoyable informal events of the college year. Last night every seat in Music hall was taken. There were gay freshmen sitting under the printed legend "Naughty-two," and festive sophomores who were branded as "Naughty-ones." Then came the host of upper classmen and recent graduates, with the Glee club, led by Chester O. Swain, sitting near the stage to help enliven the intermissions with snatches of song.

The lively manager, Mr Comee, himself a Harvard man, said that the attendance last evening was over 200 more than ever before known at a Harvard night. This meant that more than 3000 supporters of the crimson had assembled to contribute to the success of the event.

The musical program was well chosen and gave eminent satisfaction, but the persistent choruses of "We Want Hands Across the Sea, See?" and other calls could not be resisted. The boys generally "got all that was a-coming to them." Always the cordial "Thank you" was yelled back after the piece was played.

The tables showed the democracy of the occasion. Straw hats were piled six high, empty bottles were arranged in picturesque clusters. The cigar and cigarette, with here and there a pipe, furnished a hazy blue incense for the entire hall.

Everybody was talking about what the ball team had done and what it hoped to do yet. Speculations over the prospects of a victory for the crew over Yale, with other gossips over Harvard athletics, made the time pass rapidly.

The program included "University," "Jolly Fellows," "Runaway Girl," the "Belles of Bellesley," from the Pi Eta production of this year; a "serenade by Henry 87, and closed with "Fair Harvard," with every one singing and joining in the general demonstration.

There are no more jolly college students in America than those who attend Harvard, and last night their mirth and good nature made "Harvard night" the success that it was, and as everybody who ever went to one will say, deserves to be.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, JUNE 18, 1899.

MUSIC HALL PROMENADES.

It has been truly remarked that Boston in the summer without its "pop" concerts would not be Boston. The attendance at Music hall this season has been largely owing to the fact that the programs have been attractive and the 50 artists rendering them, under the direction of such excellent conductors as Zach and Strube have fulfilled all the requirements of the most critical and exacting audiences. Commencing tomorrow night there remains only two more weeks of this season's series of concerts, for which conductor Gustav Strube has arranged specially strong programs. Tomorrow evening will be "Harvard night," when the following selections will be given:

March, University ..... Bruguiere
Overture, Si j'etais Roi ..... Adam
Waltz, Jolly Fellows ..... Vollstedt
Selection, Runaway Girl ..... Ch von Baar
American Fantasy ..... Herbert
Overture to Belles of Bellesley, Pi Eta Production, 1899
Selection from Hasty Pudding Production
Serenade ..... Henry, '87
(First time)
March, The Cruiser Harvard ..... Strube
Selection, Belle of New York ..... Kerker
Fair Harvard
March, Up the Street ..... Morse, '96

—Strangers from other cities visiting Boston the past week en route to summer homes in the country or by the sea have thoroughly appreciated the promenade concerts, which are unique in their way, and quite unlike entertainments found in other cities. The social, free and easy atmosphere of the place, combined with the high class of music, make it an ideal way of passing an evening. The concerts are to be unusually interesting the coming week, beginning tomorrow, with Harvard night, when special music will be played, and "Fair Harvard," so dear to every graduate's heart, will, as always, be received with varied emotions. There is sure to be a crowded house and great enthusiasm, and Mr Comee, a Harvard graduate himself, naturally enters into all the fun and frolic and has arranged special attractions for the evening.

BOSTON POST,

The Representative Democratic Paper OF NEW ENGLAND.

HARVARD NIGHT.

Collegians From Cambridge Make Merry at the Pop.

It was "Harvard Night" at the "Pops" last evening, and with the red programmes, the red wine lists, the red flags, with their white H's, and most unmistakably of all, the great red "Harvard" over the stage, there could be no question but that it was an altogether college occasion.

The "University March" and the overture "Si j'etais roi" passed without interruption, but immediately after the latter came the call in unison, "We want 'Whistling Rufus.'" "Whistling Rufus" was acceded by M. Gustav Strube, and next the Harvard waltz, "Jolly Fellows," was played.

During the first intermission there came from all parts of the house a demand for "The Glee Club!" "the Glee Club!" and finally that organization took its stand in the front of the hall, and under the leadership of Mr. Chester O. Swaim, sang three selections.

The overture to the "Belles of Bellesley," the Pi Eta production of this year, was given finely, as was a selection from the Hasty Pudding productions, and a "serenade" by Henry, '87.

The Glee Club sang again during the second intermission, and when next to the last number, "Fair Harvard" was given, the scene was indescribable. The Harvard boys from all parts of the house made a run to get near the stage, and the chorus of the "Harvard National Hymn" went up in an all surpassing volume that caused even the great sounding board over the stage to rattle.

[57]

BOSTON HERALD.
PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CV., NO. 178.
TUESDAY, JUNE 27, 1899.

NO FROST IN THIS.

Glorious Send-off Given to the Harvard Nine.

Hundreds of Cantabrigians Cheer for the Players at the Albany Station.

The "Graduates' Night" at the Pop Concert Is a Great Event.

Crew and Ball Team Loyally Applauded and the Big Audience Grows Wildly Enthusiastic.

A Grand Finale of Flying Fans, Programmes and Menu Cards.

"GRADUATES' NIGHT."

The Nine and the Crew Cheered Again and Again by Young and Old.

That the recent slight to the Harvard base ball team was in no way due to the students at large, and that these very same students are squarely behind the team and ever ready to show their devotion by Cambridge lung power of the first order, was more than demonstrated at "graduates' night" of the Pop concerts last evening, when 1000 good men of the crimson got together and nearly took the roof off the old Music Hall with their cheers for the team.

It came during the first intermission, when every man in the room was doing his level best to increase the general din of cheering. Manager F. R. Comee was seen coming up the aisle with an expression on his face which indicated that something was about to happen. He rapped for order when he got up near the stage (and actually got it too, which was a nine days' wonder), and then he called for "Three long Harvards and three times three for the nine," and the way it was taken up and the roar of "Harvard" was hearty enough to make Capt. Haughton and his plucky men almost glad they were slighted on class day. It was a great tribute, the most conspicuous feature of a very lively evening.

To say that "graduates' night" was a howling success is to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. The howling began when the first number was given, which was a new march named "'96," by an old Harvard man named Morse. They howled for "'96" and they howled for Morse, and they kept right on howling until the last number was played and all were outdoors, and then they howled on the streets.

Music Hall looked like Harvard men had built it. A gigantic Harvard, spelled in letters six feet high, was displayed over the big sounding board above the platform, while the side galleries were given over to two great signs—"The Crew" being on the right and "The Nine" on the left, devotion to the latter thus being shown again.

Along the balconies were displayed two enormous signs, marked "Harvard in the Spanish War," the names of the 250 of those who went out to war being all given in letters which could be read the length of the hall. Two similar signs in the rear balcony gave the "List of Honored Dead in the Spanish War." Harvard flags were everywhere, and class numerals on a crimson background were above most of the floor tables, while the waiters wore crimson across their shirt fronts and on their coat lapels, and the very programmes and wine lists were in the same gory hue.

The class numerals dated from '55 up, and each one of the classes was cheered by the others, the uproar being terrific as soon as the first number was played. The various graduates rallied around their tables according to the numbers displayed above [illegible] and gray-headed veterans of [illegible]

The first bunch to start the ball rolling was '98, but they were promptly drowned out by a big crowd of '96 men, who had the best of the class cheering from then onward.

The second number was the overture to "Raymond." Those in the audience who were not making a racket themselves knew that something was played here, because they saw Conductor Strube wave his arms and the fiddlers fiddle. Once or twice snatches of the music could actually be heard.

The boys then whistled a Strauss waltz and sang "Prince Pro Tem," the orchestra obligingly accompanying. Then Mr. Comee came in, and, after they had cheered the nine, they had to do it all over again for the crew.

A waltz was down on the programme for No. 6, but this was cut out and "John Brown's Body" substituted, which fairly set the crowd going. No, they would have nothing else now but "Whistling Rufus," the whole house being unanimous in Rufus' favor. Rufus was given, and the '96 men grew black in the face while attempting to express their approval.

Then came a new diversion. The class flags were suspended from tall poles, and it occurred to one man to try to throw his hat up on top of a pole, whereup the whole floor resolved itself into an animated quoit tournament. Every time a man made a good cast and his hat stayed on top, the crowd shrieked and redoubled its efforts in the same direction.

"Fair Harvard" brought every man of them to his feet, and the old song was sung with dignity and really impressive effect. And then King Carnival held sway again, and dignity was hooted out as an intruder. The second intermission, however, was marked with an excellent impromtu concert by old glee club men.

"The Runaway Girl" was demanded when the band came back, and was given with a rattle and a swing, while 2000 heels beat time. A plea for "just one more Rufus" was also heeded, and that gentleman was as popular this time as he was at first. The crowd indulged in some more music on its own account, and sang "Louisiana Lou," and then the galleries grew interested and warmly applauded. The orchestra was becoming a side issue, but it managed to play the "Jolly Fellows" all right, and an '87 man was so pleased that he stuck his beer bottle on the end of the class flagstaff. He was cheered, too.

The greatest sight of the evening came toward the end, when one man sent a palm leaf fan sailing through the air. There were originally two fans to every table, but seven seconds after the first one went skyward all the rest had followed, and the front of the hall could hardly be seen from the rear. Programmes, wine cards and hats followed, and if it had not been near the end of the show there is no telling how long the chairs would have stayed down.

The '96 men were now clamoring for "A Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight," but Conductor Strube evidently thought they had already had it, and so the circus ended.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

GRADS' NIGHT.

Harvard Men Have a Lively Time at the Pop Concert.

Last night was Harvard night at the Pops. After a series of nights, running from Tech night to Harvard night, Manager Comee gave the Harvard grads a chance, and the night was a night which will be remembered in the annals of Pop concerts. Manager Comee is a Harvard grad himself, and the way in which he prepared for the night was an eye-opener to Harvard men in general.

On either side of the hall along the rails to the balconies were long strips of white cloth, on which in the inevitable crimson paint was the list of men who served in the Spanish war. There were the names of 250 Harvard men who did all they were asked to do in the Civil War. These names ranged from those of Roosevelt and Long to those of the sophomores and freshmen who enlisted.

The oldest class represented in any number was '74, the class that this year is celebrating its twenty-fifth anniversary. In this crowd there were at least a dozen men who are prominent about Boston and who in their day were prominent in Harvard. These men were enthusiastic in their cheering, not only for themselves, but for all the other classes. In turn the classes were cheered and cheered for '74.

The interval between the numbers and the intermissions were the greatest fun of all. Then there was cheering, singing by the old graduates who formerly were members of the glee club and all sorts of fun. Then the gray-headed men gave up their time and dignity to renew their college days. There was all sorts of noise. '74 led in honors, but '75 came a close second. Manager Comee is a member of the class of '75, and he was enthusiastic in cheering and leading a universal cheer for the nine, which was slighted at the class day ceremonies.

The programme was an excellent one. It had all the popular operas in it, and in addition the grads, by persistent calling, succeeded in getting some of their favorites added to the list. "Whistling Rufus" was the one they wanted most, and the way they got it was exciting. One by one the classes rose and, under the direction of their leaders, called: "We want 'Whistling Rufus.'" And they got it.

[58]

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

Boston, Thursday, May 10, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 1.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

THURSDAY, MAY 10.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Under the Double Eagle" . . . . . Wagner
2. WALTZ, "Meerleuchten" . . . . . Ziehrer
3. OVERTURE to "Piccolino" . . . . . Guirand
4. BALLET MUSIC, "Sylvia" . . . . . Delibes
   - a. Les Chasseresses.
   - b. Valse Lente.
   - c. Pizzicati.
   - d. Finale.

5. KERMESSE FLAMANDE, from "Milenka" (First Time) . . Jan Blockx
6. WALTZ, "Vienna Blood" . . . . . Strauss
7. ENTR'ACTE-GAVOTTE (First Time) . . . . . Gillet
8. OVERTURE, "Tannhäuser" . . . . . Wagner

9. WALTZ, "Harlequin's Wedding." New . . . . . Zach
10. SELECTION from "The Rounders" (First Time) . . . . Englander
11. POLKA, "Tyrolean" . . . . . Zeller
12. MARCH, "Man behind the Gun" (First Time) . . . . . Sousa

You Can

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

Rely On

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

Lewando's

W. L. CROSBY, General Manager.

French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Established 70 years. Largest in America.

Bundles called for and delivered. Telephones in all offices.

The two great successes now being played in London will be produced for the first time in America early in the autumn.

"ROSE OF PERSIA," Comic Opera. By Arthur Sullivan.

"THE MESSENGER BOY," Musical Comedy. By Caryll and Monckton.

Scores and Separate Numbers now ready.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th Street, - NEW YORK.

All ales have to take their hats off to Van Nostrand's P. B. Ale. It is the only ale we brew and it is just as good as the most competent and experienced men can make it.

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS.

CALL
1492
BACK BAY
FOR TICKETS TO THE
"POPS."

Norfolk Brewery, Boston.

Main Office and Brewery, Cor. Columbus Avenue, Cedar and Centre Sts., Roxbury.

Telephone, 56 Roxbury.

City Depot, 361 Atlantic Avenue

Telephone, 1152 Boston.

HABICH & COMPANY.

H. WM. HABICH. Brewers of EDWARD RUHL.

Ale, Porter, and Lager Beer.

Leading Refreshments at these most popular "Pops":

NORFOLK CABINET (Golden Color),
NORFOLK BISMARCK BRÄU (Dark).

THOMPSON & LEAVITT

WINES

SPIRITS

TEAS AND

CIGARS

185 and 187 State Street, Boston

DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S "Barrister" and "La Fernandina" CIGARS SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

MECHANICS' HALL "POP" PROGRAMME.

PUBLISHED EVERY EVENING DURING THE SUMMER SEASON.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS.

The advertising columns in the Programme are controlled SOLELY by F. R. COMEE, Mechanics' Hall, to whom all communications should be addressed.

Boston, Friday, May 11, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 2.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

FRIDAY, MAY 11.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Jolly Soldiers"	Sabathil
2.	OVERTURE, "Le Roi l'a dit"	Delibes
3.	WALTZ, "Artist's Life"	Strauss
4.	SELECTION from "The Fortune Teller"	Herbert
5.	WALTZ, "Lustige Bruder"	Vollstedt
6.	MARCH, "Szechenyi"	Fahrbach
7.	SELECTION, "Cavalleria Rusticana"	Mascagni
8.	POLONAISE	Tschaikowski
9.	OVERTURE, "Pique Dame"	Suppe
10.	RONDE D'AMOUR	Westerhout

The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.

11.	HUSARENRITT	Spindler
12.	MARCH, "Hoch Habsburg"	Kral

The United States Hotel,

Saratoga Springs, N.Y.

Under a continuous management for twenty-five years.

Without a peer in its appointments, service, and liberal management.

The largest structure of its kind in the world.

Built entirely of brick.

The Hotel and court cover over seven acres.

For further information, rates, etc., address

GAGE & PERRY,
Proprietors,
UNITED STATES HOTEL,
Saratoga Springs, N.Y.

The Beer that's BREWED in GLASS.

Served at the "POPS."

Colonial Beer.

SOUTHER BREWING COMPANY,
Roxbury, Mass.

Veuve Chaffard.

Pure Olive Oil

In Honest Bottles.

ON SALE AT THE "POPS."

Estabrook & Eaton's

WELL-KNOWN AND POPULAR BRANDS.

MARGUERITE, Conchas,	10c., 3 for 25c.
MARGUERITE, Perfectos,	10c. each
EL DELETOSA, Conchas,	10c., 3 for 25c.
MANUEL GARCIA, Stillettos,	15c., 2 for 25c.
BOCK & CO., Especiales de E. & E.,	20c., 5 for $1.00

You will be sure of a good smoke if you order any of the above standard brands.

DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S "Barrister" and "La Fernandina" CIGARS SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

GREAT WESTERN
CHAMPAGNE

A natural, genuine champagne, of the finest quality produced in America.

Sold by Wine Merchants, Grocers, and Druggists.

Boston, Saturday, May 12, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 3.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

SATURDAY, MAY 12.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Princess Ninetta" . . . . . Strauss
2. OVERTURE, "Mignon" . . . . . A. Thomas
3. WALTZ, "Les Patineurs" . . . . . Waldteufel
4. SELECTION, "Carmen" . . . . . Bizet
5. TWO SPANISH DANCES . . . . . Moszkowski
6. WALTZ, "Landeskinder" . . . . . Ed. Strauss
7. IN THE MILL . . . . . Gillet
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
8. OVERTURE, "Rienzi" . . . . . Wagner
9. SELECTION, "Belle of New York" . . . . . Kerker
10. MAZOURKA, "La Mousmé" . . . . . Ganné
11. WALTZ, "Grubenlichter" . . . . . Zeller
12. MARCH, "Stars and Stripes Forever" . . . . . Sousa

CHAS. B. PERKINS & CO.
36 KILBY ST

CHARLES B. PERKINS & CO.

Some of our CIGARS are always on sale here. Order them.

You will get full value for your money.

Also our Nubia Cigarettes, made of the finest quality of Turkish Tobacco.

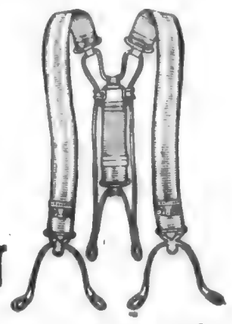
JUST WHAT YOU WANT

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS

Codman & Hall Co.
WINES AND CIGARS
Opposite South Station
Dewey Square

The President Suspender
For sale at the following stores:—
F. H. Chamberlain, 663 Washington St.
Continental Clothing House, Cor. Washington & Boylston Sts.
Josiah T. Dyer, 47 Boylston St.
J. F. & W. H. Falvey, 415 Broadway, So. Boston, Mass.
Gilchrist & Co., Winter and Washington Sts.
Glen Shirt and Collar Co., 121 Tremont St.
George F. Magrane, 77 Milk, cor. Federal St.
Mannis & Safford, 129 Court St.
Leopold Morse & Co., Washington St., cor. Brattle St.
The Nickerson Co., 345 Washington St.
Spring Lane Furnishing Store, 279 Washington St.
S. Vorenberg & Co., Washington and Hanover Sts.
R. H. White Co., Washington St.

The President Suspender



Up to the hour, more popular than ever. New and improved metal trimmings, guaranteed to wear to the satisfaction of the purchaser.

$1,500 IN CASH

to purchasers of President Suspenders. For particulars inquire of dealer.

The C. A. Edgarton Mfg. Co., Shirley, Mass,
Sole licensees for the manufacture of the President Suspender in the United States.

ASK THE WAITER FOR

AMERICA'S FINEST PRODUCT

VARTRAY

Ginger Ale
Sarsaparilla

VARTRAY WATER CO.
BUFFALO, N.Y.

DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S "Barrister" and "La Fernandina" CIGARS SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

Boston, Monday, May 14, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 4.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

MONDAY, MAY 14.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCHE ET CORTÉGE from "La Reine de Saba" . Gounod
2. OVERTURE, "Martha" . . . . . Flotow
3. WALTZ, "Wine, Women, and Song" . . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION from Operas by . . . . . Meyerbeer

5. WALTZ, "Harlequin's Journey" . . . . . Zach
6. ENTRÉE TRIOMPHALE DES BOYARDS . . . Halvorsen
7. SELECTION FROM THE BRIGANDS . . . Offenbach
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
8. PRELUDE TO ACT I., "Lohengrin" . . . . Wagner

9. OFFENBACHIANA . . . . . Conradi
10. WALTZ, "Snowballs" . . . . . Ziehrer
11. ENTR'ACTE, "Forget-me-not" . . . . . Macbeth
12. TEUFEL'S MARCH . . . . . Suppé

"M. S." Ginger Ale.

An epicurean beverage, made with Myles Standish Spring Water and compounded with scrupulous care from the highest grade materials.

To be had at the Promenade Concerts.

L. BOYER'S SONS,
Proprietors,
No. 27 Devonshire St., Boston.

CODMAN & HALL CO.,
Opp. South Terminal,
N. E. Agents.

EGYPTIAN DEITIES CIGARETTES

are the only cigarettes that are really acceptable and satisfying to cigar smokers, because they have "body," fullness and richness of flavor, without being strong. No. 1—35 cents; No. 3—25 cents.

Ask the waiter for them.

DRINK

FOR THE

Kidneys and Rheumatism

"Ballard-vale"

Lithia Spring Water.

The Strongest and Purest known.

Approved by the French Academy of Medicine.

FOR SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

OCKENHEIMER BERG, Near Bingen,
On the Rhine, GERMANY.

Philip Krim's Own Importation of Rhine Wines.

FOR THIRTY YEARS AT

163 SHAWMUT AVENUE.

OUR WINES SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS.

Sold at these Concerts.

The Roessle Brewery Premium Lager Beer,

Matured in the OLD WAY, and over four months old. Is the highest type of Honesty and Excellence, considering Quality, Age, Substance, Purity, and Aroma, and is Absolute Perfection.

Office, Brewery, and Bottling Department,
1250 Columbus Avenue, Boston

TELEPHONE, ROXBURY 180.

DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S "Barrister" and "La Fernandina" CIGARS SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." — MECHANICS' HALL.

Boston, Tuesday, May 15, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 5.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

TUESDAY, MAY 15.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "El Capitan" . . . . . Sousa
2. WALTZ, "O Schöner Mai" . . . . . Strauss
3. OVERTURE, "Orpheus aux Enfers" . . . . . Offenbach
   Violin obligato, Mr. Otto Roth.
4. SELECTION, "The Serenade" . . . . . Herbert
5. SELECTION, "Trovatore" . . . . . Verdi
6. LE DERNIER SOMMEIL DE LA VIERGE . . Massenet
7. WALTZ, "Nachtschwärmer" . . . . . Ziehrer
8. TWO SLAVIC DANCES . . . . . Dvorak

---

9. OVERTURE, "Fra Diavolo" . . . . . Auber
10. POLKA from "The Gypsy Baron" . . . . . Strauss
11. WALTZ, "Pomone" . . . . . Waldteufel
12. ORIENTAL MARCH . . . . . Zach

CALL
1492
BACK BAY
FOR TICKETS TO THE
"POPS."

Copley Square Hotel,
One block north of Mechanics' Hall.
RESTAURANT AND GENTLEMEN'S CAFÉ
Open until 12.30.
F. S. RISTEEN & CO.

WITHOUT A PEER
Londonderry Water
PURE SPARKLING DELICIOUS
THE FAVORITE WITH EPICURES
SERVED AT ALL LEADING CLUBS HOTELS AND CAFES
WITH DEALERS EVERYWHERE.

Rochester Brewing Company's Standard
IN BOTTLES.
ALBRECHT & KOELLNER,
Boston.

White Rock Water
Royal Liqueur Scotch
Codman & Hall Co.
IMPORTERS
WINES AND CIGARS
DEWEY SQUARE
Saarbach's Rhine Wines
Inglenook California Wines

DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S "Barrister" and "La Fernandina" CIGARS SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

Boston, Wednesday, May 16, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 6.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 16.

PROGRAMME.

1. HUNGARIAN MARCH . . . . . Berlioz
2. OVERTURE to "Merry Wives of Windsor" . . . . Nicolai
3. WALTZ, "Freut euch des Lebens" . . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION from "La Vivandière" . . . . . B. Godard
   (First Time)
5. BALLET MUSIC from "Queen of Sheba" . . . . Goldmark
   'Cello obligato, Mr. J. Keller.
6. IDYL, "Forget-me-not" . . . . . Oehme
   (First Time)

The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.

7. WALTZ, "Pres de Toi" . . . . . Waldteufel
8. MARCHE DES BATTEURS, from "Xaviere" . . . Dubois
   (First Time)
9. OVERTURE, "Light Cavalry" . . . . . Suppé
10. AM MEER . . . . . Schubert
    Trombone Solo, Mr. Carl Hampe.
11. POLKA, "Tic-Tac" . . . . . Strobl
12. MARCH from "The Trial Kiss" . . . . . Milloecker

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Programme

For the twenty-four Boston Concerts, with Historical and Descriptive Notes by William F. Apthorp, will be sent by mail each week to any address upon the payment of one dollar. Bound copies of the Programme for the entire season can be had at the same price by applying before the last concert. Address all communications to

F. R. COMEE, - Mechanics' Hall, Boston.

CALL

1492

BACK BAY

FOR TICKETS TO THE

"POPS."

The Wilson,

America's Purest

Mineral Spring Water,

Is used in making our celebrated

Belfast Ginger Ale and Sarsaparilla, Lemon Soda, Club Soda, Vichy, etc.

Hotels and Families supplied.

Try a sample order of these goods, and be convinced of their superiority, purity, and medicinal qualities.

Do not drink carbonated beverages made from polluted and so-called distilled waters.

All of our beverages bottled at the spring.

We ship only in glass, and all bottles and demijohns are sterilized before being filled.

Wilson Spring and Hotel Co.,
45 ARCH STREET.

Instruct your waiter
to bring a bottle of

Pfaff's "Monogram" Lager.

If you will do this, it will not be necessary for us to expatiate upon the good qualities of our production. You can judge for yourself....

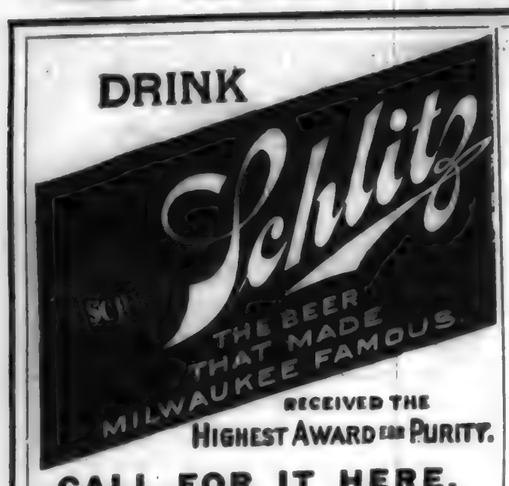
H. & J. PFAFF BREWING COMPANY,
Telephone 2608. 16 ARCH STREET, BOSTON.

DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S "Barrister" and "La Fernandina" CIGARS SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

DRINK



CALL FOR IT HERE.
FOR ORDERS SEND TO
JOS. CAHM,
125 PURCHASE STREET.
Telephone, 954 Boston.

Boston, Thursday, May 17, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 7.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

THURSDAY, MAY 17.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Austria" . . . . . Zach
2. WALTZ, "Arabian Nights" . . . . . Strauss
3. OVERTURE, "Le Roi d'Ys" . . . . . Lalo
4. SELECTION from "La Fille de Madame Angot" . . . Lecocq

5. HABANERA . . . . . Chabrier
(First Time)
The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.

6. PROLOGUE to "Pagliacci" . . . . . Leoncavallo
7. WALTZ, "Vienna Beauties" . . . . . Ziehrer
8. POLONAISE . . . . . Liadow
(First Time)

9. INVITATION A LA VALSE . . . . . Weber-Berlioz
10. SERENATA . . . . . Moszkowski
11. POLKA, "Love Letter" . . . . . Ziehrer
12. MILITARY MARCH . . . . . Zach

Tech. Night, Tuesday, June 5.

COAT ROOM
—AT—
Left of Main Entrance.

Garments, Umbrellas, and Bicycles
Checked Free.

Hygeia
Lithia
Water,

Sparkling
and Still.

By its use you will avoid the germs of disease which natural MINERAL WATERS are liable to contain.

Sold at these concerts
AND BY
S. S. PIERCE CO.

TANNHAEUSER
EXPORT
BEER.
Philadelphia Ale on Draught sold at these concerts.
SOL. BACHARACH,
New England Agent,
508-510 Atlantic Avenue, Boston.
Telephone 3805.

New Music Hall,
Massachusetts and Huntington Avenues.
Twentieth Season, 1900-1901.
The Boston Symphony Orchestra,
Mr. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.
OPENING CONCERT,
Saturday Evening, October 20, 1900.

PURE BEER
Harvard
BREW. CO'S $1000.00
PURE BEER
Sold at these Concerts
IN BOTTLES ONLY
20¢ PER BOTTLE.

The only Beer on Draught served at these concerts is BARTHOLOMAY'S ROCHESTER LAGER.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

Boston, Friday, May 18, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 8.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

FRIDAY, MAY 18.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH from "Puppenfee" . . . . . Bayer
2. OVERTURE, "Raymond" . . . . . A. Thomas
3. WALTZ, "Violets" . . . . . Waldteufel
4. SELECTION, "The Singing Girl" . . . . . Herbert
   (First Time)
5. TWO ENTR'ACTES from "Carmen" . . . . . Bizet
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
6. WALTZ, "Mimosa," from "The Geisha" . . . . Sidney Jones
7. INTRODUCTION TO ACT III., "Lohengrin" . . . . Wagner
8. OVERTURE, "Zampa" . . . . . Hérold
9. NOCTURNE AND WEDDING MARCH from "Midsummer-night's Dream" Music . . . . . Mendelssohn
10. MAZOURKA, "Mignonette" . . . . . Zach
11. WALTZ, "Meerleuchten" . . . . . Ziehrer
12. MARCH from "Obersteiger" . . . . . Zeller

Tech Night, Tuesday, June 5.

NEW ENGLISH SONGS FOR GENTLEMEN'S VOICES.

"TO GARLANDS," by Amy E. Horrocks.
"A TRAGIC TALE," by D. D. Slater.
"PILGRIMS OF THE NIGHT," by Samuel Liddle.
"A BARQUE AT MIDNIGHT," by Frank Lambert.
"THE BEAUTIFUL CITY OF SLIGO," by C. V. Stanford.
"TEACH ME THE CHARM," by Noel Johnson.
"IT IS YOUR VOICE," by A. Mascheroni.
"SHE SET MY HEART A-BEATING," by J. Spawforth.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th Street, - NEW YORK.

"OH BE JOLLY!"

All ales have to take their hats off to Van Nostrand's P. B. Ale. It is the only ale we brew and it is just as good as the most competent and experienced men can make it.

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS.

CALL
1492
BACK BAY
FOR TICKETS TO THE
"POPS."

You Can

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

Rely On

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

Lewando's

W. L. CROSBY,
General Manager.

French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Established 70 years.
Largest in America.

Bundles called for and delivered. Telephones in all offices.

Norfolk Brewery, Boston.

Main Office and Brewery, Cor. Columbus Avenue, Cedar and Centre Sts., Roxbury.

Telephone, 56 Roxbury.

City Depot, 361 Atlantic Avenue

Telephone, 1152 Boston.

LAGER BEER
HABICH & COMPANY.

H. WM. HABICH. Brewers of EDWARD RUHL.

Ale, Porter, and Lager Beer.

Leading Refreshments at these most popular "Pops":

NORFOLK CABINET (Golden Color),
NORFOLK BISMARCK BRÄU (Dark).

THOMPSON & LEAVITT

WINES

SPIRITS

TEAS AND

CIGARS

185 and 187 State Street, Boston

The only Beer on Draught served at these concerts is BARTHOLOMAY'S ROCHESTER LAGER.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

MECHANICS' HALL "POP" PROGRAMME.

PUBLISHED EVERY EVENING DURING THE SUMMER SEASON.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS.

The advertising columns in the Programme are controlled SOLELY by F. R. COMEE, Mechanics' Hall, to whom all communications should be addressed.

Boston, Saturday, May 19, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 9.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

SATURDAY, MAY 19.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Vienna Dude" . . . . . Wagner
2. WALTZ, "Blue Danube" . . . . . Strauss
3. OVERTURE, "Banditen Streiche" . . . . . Suppé
4. SELECTION, "Faust" . . . . . Gounod
5. OVERTURE, "William Tell" . . . . . Rossini
   'Cello Obligato, Mr. J. Keller.
6. PIZZICATI . . . . . Eilenberg
7. INTERMEZZO, "Naila" . . . . . Delibes
8. SELECTION, "Wizard of the Nile" . . . . . Herbert
9. WALTZ, "Lustige Brüder" . . . . . Vollstedt
10. ARABIAN WEDDING . . . . . Tavan
    (First Time)
11. NARCISSUS . . . . . Nevin
12. MARCH, "Runaway Girl" . . . . . Monckton

Tech Night, Tuesday, June 5.

The United States Hotel,

Saratoga Springs, N.Y.

Under a continuous management for twenty-five years.

Without a peer in its appointments, service, and liberal management.

The largest structure of its kind in the world.

Built entirely of brick.

The Hotel and court cover over seven acres.

For further information, rates, etc., address

GAGE & PERRY,
Proprietors,
UNITED STATES HOTEL,
Saratoga Springs, N.Y.

Veuve Chaffard.

Pure Olive Oil

In Honest Bottles.

The Beer that's BREWED in GLASS.

Served at the "POPS."

Colonial Beer.

SOUTHER BREWING COMPANY,
Roxbury, Mass.

ON SALE AT THE "POPS."

Estabrook & Eaton's

WELL-KNOWN AND POPULAR BRANDS.

MARGUERITE, Conchas,	10c., 3 for 25c.
MARGUERITE, Perfectos,	10c. each
EL DELETOSA, Conchas,	10c., 3 for 25c.
MANUEL GARCIA, Stillettos,	15c., 2 for 25c.
BOCK & CO., Especiales de E. & E.,	20c., 5 for $1.00

You will be sure of a good smoke if you order any of the above standard brands.

The only Beer on Draught served at these concerts is BARTHOLOMAY'S ROCHESTER LAGER.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

Boston, Monday, May 21, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 10.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

MONDAY, MAY 21.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH from "The Serenade" . . . . . Herbert
2. OVERTURE to "Phèdre" . . . . . Massenet
3. WALTZ, "Faschings Kinder" . . . . . Ziehrer
4. SELECTION from "The Fortune Teller" . . . . . Herbert
5. DANSE FANTASTIQUE . . . . . Maquarre
   (First Time)
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
6. OVERTURE to "Barber of Seville" . . . . . Rossini
7. ENTR'ACTE, "Philemon and Baucis" . . . . . Gounod
8. FINALE, "Lohengrin," First Act . . . . . Wagner
9. WALTZ, "Denksprüche" . . . . . Ed. Strauss
10. HYMN to "St. Cecilia" . . . . . Gounod
    Violin Obligato, Mr. Otto Roth.
11. POLKA, "Hunter's Yarn" . . . . . Komzak
12. MARCH, "Bride Elect" . . . . . Sousa

Tech Night, Tuesday, June 5.

GREAT WESTERN
CHAMPAGNE

A natural, genuine champagne, of the finest quality produced in America.

Sold by Wine Merchants, Grocers, and Druggists.

CHARLES B. PERKINS & CO.

Some of our CIGARS are always on sale here. Order them.

You will get full value for your money.

Also our Nubia Cigarettes, made of the finest quality of Turkish Tobacco.

Grand Vin
Chateau Lafite, 1895.

SOLD HERE.

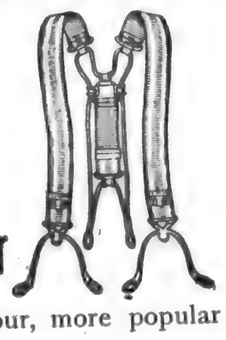
D. LEIDEN'S
SPARKLING
MOSELLE,

The only Sparkling Wine Sold at these Concerts.

The President Suspender
For sale at the following stores: —
F. H. Chamberlain, 663 Washington St.
Continental Clothing House, Cor. Washington & Boylston Sts.
Josiah T. Dyer, 47 Boylston St.
J. F. & W. H. Falvey, 415 Broadway, So. Boston, Mass.
Gilchrist & Co., Winter and Washington Sts.
Glen Shirt and Collar Co., 121 Tremont St.
George F. Magrane, 77 Milk, cor. Federal St.
Mannis & Safford, 129 Court St.
Leopold Morse & Co., Washington St., cor. Brattle St.
The Nickerson Co., 345 Washington St.
Spring Lane Furnishing Store, 279 Washington St.
S. Vorenberg & Co., Washington and Hanover Sts.
R. H. White Co., Washington St.

The C. A. Edgarton Mfg. Co., Shirley, Mass.,
Sole licensees for the manufacture of the President Suspender in the United States.

The President Suspender



Up to the hour, more popular than ever. New and improved metal trimmings, guaranteed to wear to the satisfaction of the purchaser.

$1,500 IN CASH

to purchasers of President Suspenders. For particulars inquire of dealer.

ASK THE WAITER FOR

AMERICA'S FINEST PRODUCT

VARTRAY

Ginger Ale
Sarsaparilla

VARTRAY WATER CO.
BUFFALO, N.Y.

The only Beer on Draught served at these concerts is BARTHOLOMAY'S ROCHESTER LAGER.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

Boston, Tuesday, May 22, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 11.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

TUESDAY, MAY 22.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Szechenyi"	Fahrbach
2.	OVERTURE to "Stradella"	Flotow
3.	WALTZ, "Dream of Love"	Fahrbach
4.	SELECTION, "Aida"	Verdi
5.	OVERTURE, "Flying Dutchman"	Wagner
6.	WALTZ, "Du und Du," from "The Bat"	Strauss
7.	ENTR'ACTE, "La Colombe"	Gounod
8.	a. ANGELUS, b. FETE BOHEME, from "Scenes Pittoresques"	Massenet
9.	SELECTION from "The Gondoliers"	Sullivan
10.	OVERTURE, "Les Dragons de Villars"	Maillart
11.	RONDE D'AMOUR	Westerhout
12.	BOCCACCIO MARCH	Suppé

Tech Night, Tuesday, June 5.

TRY
M. S.
(Myles Standish)

THE ONLY DOMESTIC GINGER ALE THAT WILL COMPETE WITH THE IMPORTED.

For sale at these concerts and elsewhere.

CODMAN & HALL CO.,
Wines and Cigars,
DEWEY SQUARE.

EGYPTIAN DEITIES
CIGARETTES
are the only cigarettes that are really acceptable and satisfying to cigar smokers, because they have "body," fullness and richness of flavor, without being strong. No. 1—35 cents; No. 3—25 cents.
Ask the waiter for them.

DRINK
FOR THE
Kidneys and Rheumatism
"Ballard-vale"
Lithia Spring Water.
The Strongest and Purest known.
Approved by the French Academy of Medicine.
FOR SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

OCKENHEIMER BERG, Near Bingen,
On the Rhine, GERMANY.
Philip Krim's Own Importation of Rhine Wines.
FOR THIRTY YEARS AT
163 SHAWMUT AVENUE.
OUR WINES SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS.

Sold at these Concerts.
The Roessle Brewery Premium Lager Beer,
Matured in the OLD WAY, and over four months old. Is the highest type of Honesty and Excellence, considering Quality, Age, Substance, Purity, and Aroma, and is Absolute Perfection.
Office, Brewery, and Bottling Department,
1250 Columbus Avenue, Boston
TELEPHONE, ROXBURY 180.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

Boston, Wednesday, May 23, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 12.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 23.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "For the Country" . . . . . Milloecker
2. WALTZ, "Waves of the Danube" . . . . . Joanovici
3. OVERTURE, "Semiramide" . . . . . Rossini
4. SELECTION from "Robin Hood" . . . . . De Koven
5. BALLET MUSIC from "Coppelia" . . . . . Delibes
   - a. Dance of the Automatons.
   - b. Waltz.
   - c. Czardas.
6. SCENE RELIGIEUSE . . . . . Massenet
   'Cello Solo, Mr. J. Keller.
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
7. WALTZ, "Vienna Bonbons" . . . . . Strauss
8. OVERTURE to "Piccolino" . . . . . Guiraud
9. OVERTURE to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg" . . Wagner
10. GAVOTTE . . . . . Gebhard
    (First Time)
11. KOSAKENRITT . . . . . Milloecker
12. MARCH, "Merry War" . . . . . Strauss

PATRIOTIC NIGHT, WEDNESDAY, MAY 30.

TECH NIGHT, TUESDAY, JUNE 5.

CALL

1492

BACK BAY

FOR TICKETS TO THE

"POPS."

Copley Square Hotel,

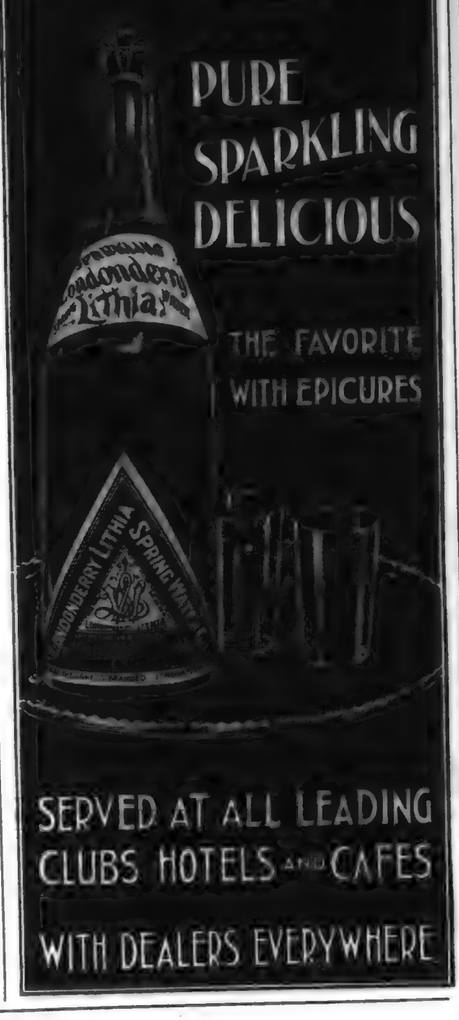
One block north of Mechanics' Hall.

RESTAURANT AND GENTLEMEN'S CAFÉ
Open until 12.30.

F. S. RISTEEN & CO.

WITHOUT A PEER

Londonderry Water



SERVED AT ALL LEADING CLUBS HOTELS AND CAFES

WITH DEALERS EVERYWHERE

Rochester Brewing Company's Standard

IN BOTTLES.

ALBRECHT & KOELLNER,

Boston.

To be had at all clubs

Hotel Touraine
Parker's
Young's
Adams House
Somerset Hotel
Brunswick
Victoria
The Hayward
The Raleigh
Westminster
Hotel Essex
Hotel Bellevue
And many others

This Scotch comes direct to us from the distillers, and we can sell it less than brands bought through New York agents. It is excellent value.

CODMAN & HALL COMPANY

Importers

DEWEY SQUARE, BOSTON

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

Boston, Thursday, May 24, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 13.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

ARTISTS in AMERICA

This coming season available for concerts.

LILLIAN BLAUVELT,

SCHUMANN-HEINK
(Special arrangement with Mr. Grau),

CLARA BUTT,

FFRANGCON-DAVIES,

FRITZ KREISLER
(The great Austrian Violinist),

HUGO BECKER
(The renowned 'Cellist),

MAUD POWELL
(The American Violinist),

THE HENSCHELS.

For further information address

THE
HENRY WOLFSOHN
MUSICAL BUREAU,
131 East 17th St., New York.

THURSDAY, MAY 24.

PROGRAMME.

1. TANNHAUSER MARCH . . . . . Wagner
2. OVERTURE to "Le Roi l'a dit" . . . . . Delibes
3. WALTZ, "Vienna Blood" . . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION from "The Fortune Teller" . . . . Herbert

5. KERMESSE FLAMANDE, from "Milenka" . . . Blockx
6. POLISH DANCE . . . . . Scharwenka
7. PRELUDE to "Le Deluge" . . . . . Saint-Saëns
   Violin obligato, Mr. Otto Roth.
8. WALTZ, "Kaiser" . . . . . Strauss

9. a. SPRING SONG . . . . . Mendelssohn
   b. SEVILLANA, from "Don Cesar de Bazan" . . Massenet
10. OVERTURE, "Domino Noir" . . . . . Auber
11. WALTZ, "Barcarolle" . . . . . Waldteufel
12. MARCH, "Princess Ninetta" . . . . . Strauss

PATRIOTIC NIGHT, WEDNESDAY, MAY 30.

TECH NIGHT, TUESDAY, JUNE 5.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Programme

For the twenty-four Boston Concerts, with Historical and Descriptive Notes by William F. Apthorp, will be sent by mail each week to any address upon the payment of one dollar. Bound copies of the Programme for the entire season can be had at the same price by applying before the last concert. Address all communications to

F. R. COMEE, - Mechanics' Hall, Boston.

The Wilson,

America's Purest

Mineral Spring Water,

Is used in making our celebrated

Belfast Ginger Ale and Sarsaparilla, Lemon Soda, Club Soda, Vichy, etc.

Hotels and Families supplied.

Try a sample order of these goods, and be convinced of their superiority, purity, and medicinal qualities.

Do not drink carbonated beverages made from polluted and so-called distilled waters.

All of our beverages bottled at the spring.

We ship only in glass, and all bottles and demijohns are sterilized before being filled.

Wilson Spring and Hotel Co.
45 ARCH STREET.

Instruct your waiter
to bring a bottle of

Pfaff's "Monogram" Lager.

If you will do this, it will not be necessary for us to expatiate upon the good qualities of our production. You can judge for yourself....

H. & J. PFAFF BREWING COMPANY,
Telephone 2608. 16 ARCH STREET, BOSTON.

DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S "Barrister" and "La Fernandina" CIGARS SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

BIRD

DRINK

CALL FOR IT HERE.
FOR ORDERS SEND TO
JOS. GAHM,
125 PURCHASE STREET.
Telephone, 954 Boston.

TANNHAEUSER EXPORT BEER.
Philadelphia Ale on Draught sold at these concerts.
SOL. BACHARACH,
New England Agent,
508-510 Atlantic Avenue, Boston.
Telephone 3805.

Boston, Friday, May 25, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 14.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

FRIDAY, MAY 25.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Merry Soldiers" . . . . . Sabathil
2. OVERTURE, "Martha" . . . . . Flotow
3. WALTZ, "Tales from the Vienna Woods" . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION, "Erminie" . . . . . Jakobowsky
5. TWO MOVEMENTS from Suite, "Peer Gynt" . . . Grieg
6. HORN QUARTETTE { a. "This is the day of the Lord" . Kreutzer; b. "When evening's twilight" . Hatton
   Mr. Albert Hackebarth. Mr. Heinrich Lorbeer.
   Mr. Franz Hein. Mr. Carl Schumann.
7. MELODY IN F . . . . . Rubinstein
8. OVERTURE, "Poet and Peasant" . . . . . Suppé
   'Cello Obligato, Mr. J. Keller.
9. SELECTION, "Cavalleria Rusticana" . . . . . Mascagni
10. PRELUDE TO ACT III., "Lohengrin" . . . . . Wagner
11. POLKA, "Tic-Tac" . . . . . Strobl
12. MARCH, "Under the Double Eagle" . . . . . Wagner

PATRIOTIC NIGHT, WEDNESDAY, MAY 30.
FRIDAY, JUNE 1, SOLOIST NIGHT.
TECH NIGHT, TUESDAY, JUNE 5.

COAT ROOM
—AT—
Left of Main Entrance.

Garments, Umbrellas, and Bicycles Checked Free.

Hygeia Lithia Water,
Sparkling and Still.

By its use you will avoid the germs of disease which natural MINERAL WATERS are liable to contain.

Sold at these concerts
AND BY
S. S. PIERCE CO.

AMERICAN TOUR
OF
Ossip Gabrilowitsch,
The Eminent Russian Pianist,
Beginning in November, 1900.
Address
H. G. SNOW, 141 Fifth Ave., New York City.
Eastern Representative,
L. H. MUDGETT, New Music Hall, Huntington Ave., Boston.
EVERETT PIANO USED.

PURE BEER
Harvard
BREW. CO'S $1000.00
PURE BEER
Sold at these Concerts
IN BOTTLES ONLY
20¢ PER BOTTLE

The only Beer on Draught served at these concerts is BARTHOLOMAY'S ROCHESTER LAGER.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

Boston, Saturday, May 26, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 15.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

SATURDAY, MAY 26.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Bride Elect" . . . . . Sousa
2. OVERTURE to "Zampa" . . . . . Hérold
3. WALTZ, "Artist's Life" . . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION from "The Fortune Teller" . . . . Herbert
5. OVERTURE, "Sphinx" . . . . . Thompson
6. WALTZ, "Harlequin's Wedding" . . . . . Zach
7. MARCHE DES BATTEURS, from "Xavière" . . . Dubois
8. OVERTURE to "Tannhäuser" . . . . . Wagner
9. SELECTION from "The Rounders" . . . . . Englander
10. WALTZ, "Pomone" . . . . . Waldteufel
11. IN THE MILL . . . . . Gillet
12. MARCH, "Whistling Rufus" . . . . . Mills

PATRIOTIC NIGHT, WEDNESDAY, MAY 30.

SOLOIST NIGHT, FRIDAY, JUNE 1.

WAGNER NIGHT, MONDAY, JUNE 4.

TECH NIGHT, TUESDAY, JUNE 5.

You Can

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

Rely On

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

Lewando's

W. L. CROSBY,
General Manager.

French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Established 70 years.
Largest in America.

Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

NEW ENGLISH SONGS FOR LADIES' VOICES.

"BUTTERCUPS AND DAISIES," by F. H. Cowen.
"MAY DAY," by R. H. Walthew.
"FORTUNIO," by A. L.
"DREAM OF A WALTZ," by I. Caryll.
"LITTLE BOY LOVE," by M. V. White.
"THE TRUE LOVE TIME," by A. L.
"EMBERS," by H. Rowe Shelley.
"STORY-TIME," by G. Lane.
"WHEN BUTTERFLIES RETURN," by Landon Ronald.

Price, 60 cents each.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th Street, - NEW YORK.

All ales have to take their hats off to Van Nostrand's P. B. Ale. It is the only ale we brew and it is just as good as the most competent and experienced men can make it.

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS.

CALL
1492
BACK BAY
FOR TICKETS TO THE
"POPS."

Norfolk Brewery, Boston.

Main Office and Brewery, Cor. Columbus Avenue, Cedar and Centre Sts., Roxbury.

Telephone, 56 Roxbury.

City Depot, 361 Atlantic Avenue

Telephone, 1152 Boston.

HABICH & COMPANY.

H. WM. HABICH. Brewers of EDWARD RUHL.

Ale, Porter, and Lager Beer.

Leading Refreshments at these most popular "Pops":

NORFOLK CABINET (Golden Color),
NORFOLK BISMARCK BRÄU (Dark).

THOMPSON & LEAVITT

WINES

SPIRITS

TEAS AND

CIGARS

185 and 187 State Street, Boston

The only Beer on Draught served at these concerts is BARTHOLOMAY'S ROCHESTER LAGER.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

MECHANICS' HALL "POP" PROGRAMME.

PUBLISHED EVERY EVENING DURING THE SUMMER SEASON.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS.

The advertising columns in the Programme are controlled SOLELY by F. R COMEE, Mechanics' Hall, to whom all communications should be addressed.

The United States Hotel,

Saratoga Springs, N.Y.

Under a continuous management for twenty-five years.

Without a peer in its appointments, service, and liberal management.

The largest structure of its kind in the world.

Built entirely of brick.

The Hotel and court cover over seven acres.

For further information, rates, etc., address

GAGE & PERRY,
Proprietors,
UNITED STATES HOTEL,
Saratoga Springs, N.Y.

Boston, Monday, May 28, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 16.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

MONDAY, MAY 28.

PROGRAMME.

1. PERSIAN MARCH . . . . . Strauss
2. OVERTURE to "Mignon" . . . . . Thomas
3. WALTZ, "Die Schonbrunner" . . . . . Lanner
4. SELECTION from "Fatinitza" . . . . . Suppé
5. a. SCHERZO-VALSE, b. MALAGUENA } from "Boabdil" . . . Moszkowski
6. PASTORALE . . . . . Helen Hopekirk
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
7. WALTZ, "Neu-Wien" . . . . . Strauss
8. RIDE OF THE VALKYRIES . . . . . Wagner
9. SELECTION from "The Fencing-master" . . . . Delibes
10. a. VALSE, b. PIZZICATI } from "Sylvia" . . . . . Spindler
11. HUSARENRITT . . . . . Chadwick
12. TABASCO MARCH . . . . . Chadwick

PATRIOTIC NIGHT, WEDNESDAY, MAY 30.

SOLOIST NIGHT, FRIDAY, JUNE 1.

WAGNER NIGHT, MONDAY, JUNE 4.

TECH NIGHT, TUESDAY, JUNE 5.

The Beer that's BREWED in GLASS.
Served at the "POPS."

Colonial Beer.

SOUTHER BREWING COMPANY,
Roxbury, Mass.

Veuve Chaffard.

Pure Olive Oil

In Honest Bottles.

ON SALE AT THE "POPS."

Estabrook & Eaton's

WELL-KNOWN AND POPULAR BRANDS.

MARGUERITE, Conchas,	10c., 3 for 25c.
MARGUERITE, Perfectos,	10c. each
EL DELETOSA, Conchas,	10c., 3 for 25c.
MANUEL GARCIA, Stillettos,	15c., 2 for 25c.
BOCK & CO., Especiales de E. & E.,	20c., 5 for $1.00

You will be sure of a good smoke if you order any of the above standard brands.

The only Beer on Draught served at these concerts is BARTHOLOMAY'S ROCHESTER LAGER.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

Boston, Tuesday, May 29, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 17.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

TUESDAY, MAY 29.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Puppenfee"	Bayer
2.	WALTZ, "Sentiers Fleuris"	Waldteufel
3.	OVERTURE to "Die Fledermaus"	Strauss
4.	SELECTION from "Carmen"	Bizet
5.	OVERTURE to "Oberon"	Weber
6.	INTERMEZZO to "Maharaja"	Atherton
	The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
7.	PRELUDE to "Lohengrin"	Wagner
8.	a. CASTILLANA b. ANDALOUSE c. ARAGONAISE from "Le Cid"	Massenet
9	WALTZ, "Lustige Bruder"	Vollstedt
10.	MENUET for String Orchestra	Bolzoni
11.	FUNERAL MARCH of a Marionette	Gounod
12.	MARCH, "Fra Bombarda"	Czibulka

PATRIOTIC NIGHT, WEDNESDAY, MAY 30.

SOLOIST NIGHT, FRIDAY, JUNE 1.

WAGNER NIGHT, MONDAY, JUNE 4.

TECH NIGHT, TUESDAY, JUNE 5.

GREAT WESTERN
CHAMPAGNE

A natural, genuine champagne, of the finest quality produced in America.

Sold by Wine Merchants, Grocers, and Druggists.

CHARLES B. PERKINS & CO.

Some of our CIGARS are always on sale here. Order them.

You will get full value for your money.

Also our Nubia Cigarettes, made of the finest quality of Turkish Tobacco.

JUST WHAT YOU WANT

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS

Codman & Hall Co.

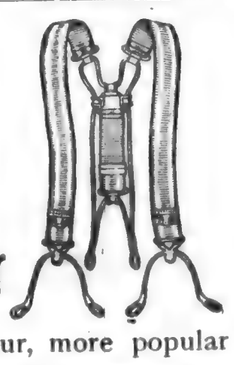
WINES AND CIGARS

Opposite South Station

Dewey Square

The President Suspender
For sale at the following stores: —
F. H. Chamberlain,
663 Washington St.
Continental Clothing House,
Cor. Washington & Boylston Sts.
Josiah T. Dyer,
47 Boylston St.
J. F. & W. H. Falvey,
415 Broadway, So. Boston, Mass.
Gilchrist & Co.,
Winter and Washington Sts.
Glen Shirt and Collar Co.,
121 Tremont St.
George F. Magrane,
77 Milk, cor. Federal St.
Mannis & Safford,
129 Court St.
Leopold Morse & Co.,
Washington St., cor. Brattle St.
The Nickerson Co.,
345 Washington St.
Spring Lane Furnishing Store,
279 Washington St.
S. Vorenberg & Co.,
Washington and Hanover Sts.
R. H. White Co.,
Washington St.
Shepard, Norwell & Co.,
Winter Street.

The President Suspender



Up to the hour, more popular than ever. New and improved metal trimmings, guaranteed to wear to the satisfaction of the purchaser.

$1,500 IN CASH

to purchasers of President Suspenders. For particulars inquire of dealer.

The C. A. Edgarton Mfg. Co., Shirley, Mass.,
Sole licensees for the manufacture of the President Suspender in the United States.

ASK THE WAITER FOR

AMERICA'S FINEST PRODUCT

VARTRAY

Ginger Ale
Sarsaparilla

VARTRAY WATER CO.
BUFFALO, N.Y.

The only Beer on Draught served at these concerts is BARTHOLOMAY'S ROCHESTER LAGER.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL

Boston, Wednesday, May 30, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 18.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 30.
PATRIOTIC NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH from "The Serenade"	Herbert
2.	WALTZ, "Pres de Toi"	Waldteufel
3.	JUBEL OVERTURE	Weber
4.	SELECTION from "Robin Hood"	De Koven
5.	a. AMERICAN FANTASY	Herbert
	b. BOER NATIONAL HYMN.
6.	BLISSFUL DREAM	Meyer-Helmund
	The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
7.	WALTZ, "Grubenlichter"	Zeller
8.	OVERTURE to "William Tell"	Rossini
9.	OVERTURE to "Tabasco"	Chadwick
10.	AMERICAN PATROL	Meecham
11.	IN THE MILL	Gillet
12.	MARCH, "Stars and Stripes Forever"	Sousa

SOLOIST NIGHT, FRIDAY, JUNE 1.
WAGNER NIGHT, MONDAY, JUNE 4.
TECH NIGHT, TUESDAY, JUNE 5.

TRY
M. S.
(Myles Standish)

THE ONLY DOMESTIC GINGER ALE THAT WILL COMPETE WITH THE IMPORTED.

For sale at these concerts and elsewhere.

CODMAN & HALL CO.,
Wines and Cigars,
WEY SQUARE.

EGYPTIAN DEITIES
CIGARETTES
are the only cigarettes that are really acceptable and satisfying to cigar smokers, because they have "body," fullness and richness of flavor, without being strong. No. 1—35 cents; No. 3—25 cents.
Ask the waiter for them.

DRINK
FOR THE
Kidneys and Rheumatism
"Ballard-vale"
Lithia Spring Water.
The Strongest and Purest known.
Approved by the French Academy of Medicine.
FOR SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

OCKENHEIMER BERG, Near Bingen,
On the Rhine, GERMANY.
Philip Krim's Own Importation of Rhine Wines.
FOR THIRTY YEARS AT
163 SHAWMUT AVENUE.
OUR WINES SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS.

Sold at these Concerts.
The Roessle Brewery Premium Lager Beer,
Matured in the OLD WAY, and over four months old. Is the highest type of Honesty and Excellence, considering Quality, Age, Substance, Purity, and Aroma, and is Absolute Perfection.
Office, Brewery, and Bottling Department,
1250 Columbus Avenue, Boston
TELEPHONE, ROXBURY 180.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

Boston, T lsday, May 31, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 19.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

THURSDAY, MAY 31.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Feurig Blut" . . . . . Vollstedt
2. OVERTURE, "Merry Wives of Windsor" . . . . . Nicolai
3. WALTZ, "Cagliostro" . . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION from "The Singing Girl" . . . . . Herbert

5. ENTREE TRIOMPHALE DES BOYARDS . . . Halvorsen
6. REVERIE, "Lost in Dreams" . . . . . Zach
   (First Time)
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
7. WALTZ, "La Gitana" . . . . . Bucalossi
8. { a. MENUET, b. ADAGIETTO, c. CARILLON } from Suite I., "L'Arlesienne" . . . Bizet

9. OVERTURE, "La Jolie Parfumeuse" . . . . . Offenbach
10. GAVOTTE for String Orchestra . . . . . Bach
11. WALTZ, "Morgenblätter" . . . . . Strauss
12. MARCH, "Wien bleibt Wien" . . . . . Schrammel

SOLOIST NIGHT, FRIDAY, JUNE 1.

WAGNER NIGHT, MONDAY, JUNE 4.

TECH NIGHT, TUESDAY, JUNE 5.

Have you seen our Danish Room?

The Hayward

16-26 Hayward Place.

Table d'Hote, 75 cents.

Singing by the Neapolitan Quintet

FROM 6 TO 12 P.M.

SMITH & KERRISSEY, Proprietors.

Copley Square Hotel,

One block north of Mechanics' Hall.

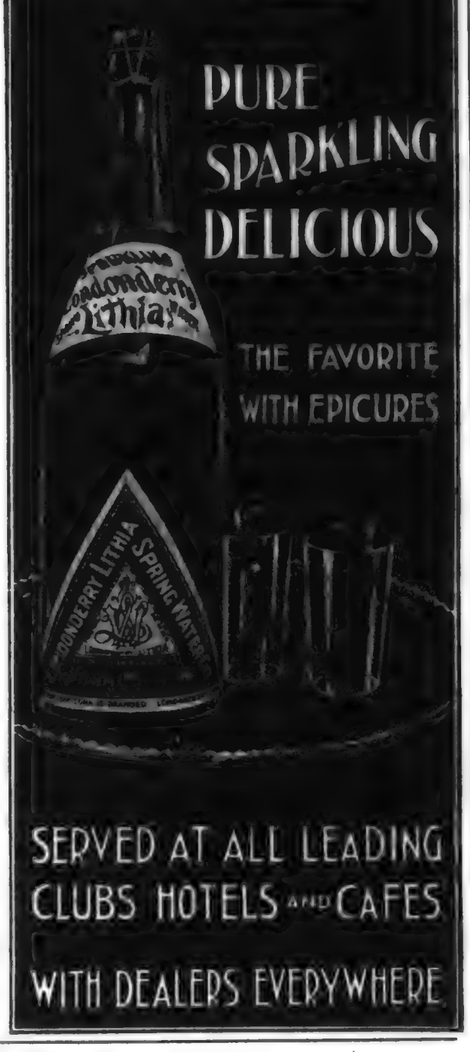
RESTAURANT AND GENTLEMEN'S CAFÉ

Open until 12.30.

F. S. RISTEEN & CO.

WITHOUT A PEER

Londonderry Water



Rochester Brewing Company's Standard

IN BOTTLES.

ALBRECHT & KOELLNER,

Boston.

To be had at all clubs

Hotel Touraine
Parker's
Young's
Adams House
Somerset Hotel
Brunswick
Victoria
The Hayward
The Raleigh
Westminster
Hotel Essex
Hotel Bellevue
And many others

This Scotch comes direct to us from the distillers, and we can sell it less than brands bought through New York agents. It is excellent value.

CODMAN & HALL COMPANY

Importers

DEWEY SQUARE, BOSTON

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

BIRD

Boston, Friday, June 1, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 20.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

FRIDAY, JUNE 1.
SOLOIST NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Austria" . . . . . Zach
2. WALTZ, "Les Patincurs" . . . . . Waldteufel
3. OVERTURE, "Tannhauser" . . . . . Wagner
4. VIOLIN SOLO. Two Spanish Dances . . . . . Sarasate
   Mr. Otto Roth
5. BALLET MUSIC from "Faust" . . . . . Gounod
6. SERENADE . . . . . Moszkowski
7. 'CELLO SOLO, "Kol Nidrei" . . . . . Bruch
   Mr. Joseph Keller
8. WALTZ, "Vienna Blood" . . . . . Strauss
9. FLUTE SOLO { a. Nocturne / b. Valse } . . . . . Chopin
   Mr. André Maquarre
10. SELECTION from "The Rounders" . . . . . Englander
11. MAZURKA, "La Czarina" . . . . . Ganne
12. MARCH, "Werner" . . . . . Ziehrer

Steinway Pianos used.

WAGNER NIGHT, MONDAY, JUNE 4.

TECH NIGHT, TUESDAY, JUNE 5.

CALL 1492

BACK BAY FOR TICKETS TO THE "POPS."

ARTISTS in AMERICA

This coming season available for concerts.

LILLIAN BLAUVELT,

SCHUMANN-HEINK
(Special arrangement with Mr. Grau),

CLARA BUTT,

FFRANGCON DAVIES,

FRITZ KREISLER
(The great Austrian Violinist),

HUGO BECKER
(The renowned 'Cellist),

MAUD POWELL
(The American Violinist),

THE HENSCHELS.

For further information address

THE
HENRY WOLFSOHN
MUSICAL BUREAU,
131 East 17th St., New York.

The Wilson,

America's Purest

Mineral Spring Water,

Is used in making our celebrated

Belfast Ginger Ale and Sarsaparilla, Lemon Soda, Club Soda, Vichy, etc.

Hotels and Families supplied.

Try a sample order of these goods, and be convinced of their superiority, purity, and medicinal qualities.

Do not drink carbonated beverages made from polluted and so-called distilled waters.

All of our beverages bottled at the spring.

We ship only in glass, and all bottles and demijohns are sterilized before being filled.

Wilson Spring and Hotel Co.
45 ARCH STREET.

Instruct your waiter
to bring a bottle of

Pfaff's "Monogram" Lager.

If you will do this, it will not be necessary for us to expatiate upon the good qualities of our production. You can judge for yourself....

H. & J. PFAFF BREWING COMPANY,
Telephone 2608. 16 ARCH STREET, BOSTON.

DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S "Barrister" and "La Fernandina" CIGARS SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

BIRD

Boston, Saturday, June 2, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.
Vol. I. No. 21.
Published by C. A. ELLIS.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

SATURDAY, JUNE 2.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH from "The Serenade" . . . . . Herbert
2. OVERTURE to "Raymond" . . . . . Thomas
3. SELECTION from "The Belle of New York" . . . . Kerker
4. WALTZ, "Snowballs" . . . . . Ziehrer

5. { a. SPRING SONG . . . . . Mendelssohn
   { b. LOVE'S DREAM AFTER THE BALL . . . Czibulka
6. SELECTION from "Wizard of the Nile" . . . . . Herbert
7. WALTZ, "Harlequin's Journey" . . . . . Zach
8. OVERTURE, "Martha" . . . . . Flotow

9. WALTZ, "Violets" . . . . . Waldteufel
10. OVERTURE, "Pique Dame" . . . . . Suppé
11. NARCISSUS . . . . . Nevin
12. MARCH, "Up the Street" . . . . . Morse

Steinway Pianos used.

WAGNER NIGHT, MONDAY, JUNE 4.
TECH NIGHT, TUESDAY, JUNE 5.

DRINK Schlitz THE BEER THAT MADE MILWAUKEE FAMOUS.
RECEIVED THE HIGHEST AWARD FOR PURITY.
CALL FOR IT HERE.
FOR ORDERS SEND TO
JOS. CAHM,
125 PURCHASE STREET.
Telephone, 954 Boston.

THE B&E B.CO
TANNHAEUSER EXPORT BEER.
Philadelphia Ale on Draught sold at these concerts.
SOL. BACHARACH,
New England Agent,
508-510 Atlantic Avenue, Boston.
Telephone 3805.

CALL 1492
BACK BAY FOR TICKETS TO THE "POPS."

Hygeia Lithia Water,
Sparkling and Still.
By its use you will avoid the germs of disease which natural MINERAL WATERS are liable to contain.
Sold at these concerts
AND BY
S. S. PIERCE CO.

AMERICAN TOUR
OF
Ossip Gabrilowitsch,
The Eminent Russian Pianist,
Beginning in November, 1900.
Address
H. G. SNOW, 141 Fifth Ave., New York City.
Eastern Representative,
L. H. MUDGETT, New Music Hall, Huntington Ave., Boston.
EVERETT PIANO USED.

PURE BEER
Harvard BREW. CO'S $1000.00
PURE BEER
Sold at these Concerts
IN BOTTLES ONLY
20¢ PER BOTTLE.

The only Beer on Draught served at these concerts is BARTHOLOMAY'S ROCHESTER LAGER.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

Boston, Monday, June 4, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 22.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

MONDAY, JUNE 4.

WAGNER NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1. ORIENTAL MARCH . . . . . Zach
2. CHORUS OF SAILORS from "Flying Dutchman" . . Wagner
3. WALTZ, "Vienna Bonbons" . . . . . Strauss
4. PRELUDES to "Lohengrin," Acts I. and III. . . . Wagner

5. FIRE-CHARM . . . . . Wagner
6. HABANERA . . . . . Chabrier
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
7. WALTZ, "1001 Nights" . . . . . Strauss
8. OVERTURE to "Tannhäuser" . . . . . Wagner

9. SONG, "Evening Star," from "Tannhäuser" . . . . Wagner
   Trombone Solo, Mr. C. Hampe
10. OVERTURE to "Rienzi" . . . . . Wagner
11. WALTZ, "L'Amour et Printemps" . . . . . Waldteufel
12. MARCH, "Puppenfee" . . . . . Bayer

Steinway Pianos used.

TECH NIGHT, TUESDAY, JUNE 5.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Bemberg's "New Waltz Song." Dedicated to and sung by Madame Melba. Price, 75 cents.

Tosti's charming song, "Amour, Amour." With French and English words. Price, 60 cents.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th Street, - NEW YORK.

BEST BEER BREWED

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS.

COAT ROOM
AT
LEFT OF MAIN ENTRANCE.

Garments, Umbrellas, and Bicycles Checked Free.

You Can

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

Rely On

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

Lewando's

W. L. CROSBY,
General Manager.

French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Established 70 years.
Largest in America.

Bundles called for and delivered. Telephones in all offices.

Norfolk Brewery, Boston.

Main Office and Brewery, Cor. Columbus Avenue, Cedar and Centre Sts., Roxbury.
Telephone, 56 Roxbury.

City Depot, 361 Atlantic Avenue
Telephone, 1152 Boston.

LAGER BEER
HABICH & COMPANY.

H. WM. HABICH. Brewers of EDWARD RUHL.

Ale, Porter, and Lager Beer.

Leading Refreshments at these most popular "Pops":

NORFOLK CABINET (Golden Color),
NORFOLK BISMARCK BRÄU (Dark).

THOMPSON & LEAVITT

WINES
SPIRITS
TEAS AND
CIGARS

185 and 187 State Street, Boston

The only Beer on Draught served at these concerts is BARTHOLOMAY'S ROCHESTER LAGER.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

MECHANICS' HALL "POP" PROGRAMME.

PUBLISHED EVERY EVENING DURING THE SUMMER SEASON.

Boston, Tuesday, June 5, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 23.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS.

The advertising columns in the Programme are controlled SOLELY by F. R. COMEE, Mechanics' Hall, to whom all communications should be addressed.

TUESDAY, JUNE 5.

TECHNOLOGY NIGHT.

Last appearance of Mr. Max Zach.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Merry Soldiers"	Salvatini
2.	ARABIAN NIGHTS, Waltz	Strauss
3.	SELECTION, "Rounders"
4.	SOLO FOR VIOLIN, Largo	Handel
	Mr. [illegible]
5. a.	INTERMEZZO from "Cavalleria [illegible]"	Mascagni
5. b.	MILITARY MARCH	Zach
6.	NACHTSCHWARMER, Waltz	Lehrer
7.	SELECTIONS from "The Medicine Man"	Jerkinson
	a. OVERTURE.
	b. GHOST BALLET MUSIC
8.	TELL OVERTURE	Rossini
	'Cello Obligato, Mr. [illegible]
9.	TROVATORE, Selection	Verdi
10.	ENTR'ACTE, "Naila"	Delibes
11.	CAMP-MEETING IN GEORGIA	Mills
12.	HOCH HABSBURG MARCH	[illegible]

Steinway Pianos used.

TUESDAY, JUNE 12, MILITARY NIGHT.

Boston Fusileer Veteran Association and Salem Cadet Band.

The
United States
Hotel,

Saratoga Springs, N.Y.

Under a continuous management for twenty-five years.

Without a peer in its appointments, service, and liberal management.

The largest structure of its kind in the world.

Built entirely of brick.

The Hotel and court cover over seven acres.

For further information, rates, etc., address

GAGE & PERRY,
Proprietors,
UNITED STATES HOTEL,
Saratoga Springs, N.Y.

The Beer that's BREWED in GLASS.

Served at the "POPS."

Colonial Beer.

SOUTHER BREWING COMPANY,
Roxbury, Mass.

Veuve Chaffard.

Pure Olive Oil

In Honest Bottles.

ON SALE AT THE "POPS."

Estabrook & Eaton's

WELL KNOWN AND POPULAR BRANDS.

MARGUERITE, Conchas,	10c., 3 for 25c.
MARGUERITE, Perfectos,	10c. each
EL DELETOSA, Conchas,	10c., 3 for 25c.
MANUEL GARCIA, Stillettos,	15c., 2 for 25c.
BOCK & CO., Especiales de E. & E.,	20c., 5 for $1.00

You will be sure of a good smoke if you order any of the above standard brands.

The only Beer on Draught served at these concerts is BARTHOLOMAY'S ROCHESTER LAGER.

[83]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

Boston, Wednesday, June 6, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 24.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 6.

First appearance of Conductor GUSTAV STRUBE.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "King Karl"	Unrath
2.	OVERTURE, "Freischütz" (First Time)	Weber
3.	WALTZ, "Bürgersinn" (First Time)	Strauss
4.	SELECTION, "Wizard of the Nile"	Herbert
5.	OVERTURE, "Tannhäuser"	Wagner
6.	LEGATO (First Time)	Strube
	The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
7.	MELODY	Rubinstein
8.	HUNGARIAN RHAPSODY No. 2	Liszt
9.	MARCH OF THE PRETORIAN GUARD	Noll
10.	"PELLE-MELLE." Potpourri of German Songs (First Time)	Conradi
11.	WALTZ, "Les Patineurs"	Waldteufel
12.	MARCH, "Wien bleibt Wien"	Schrammel

Steinway Pianos used.

TUESDAY, JUNE 12, MILITARY NIGHT.

Boston Fusileer Veteran Association and Salem Cadet Band.

GREAT WESTERN
CHAMPAGNE

A natural, genuine champagne, of the finest quality produced in America.

Sold by Wine Merchants, Grocers, and Druggists.

CHAS. B. PERKINS & CO.
36 KILBY ST.

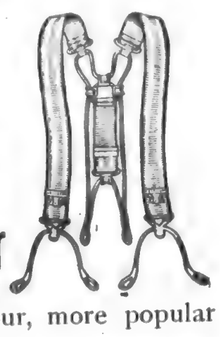
CHARLES B. PERKINS & CO.
Choice selection of our
CIGARS
Always on sale here. Also our
NUBIA CIGARETTES.
Made of the finest quality of Turkish Tobacco.

Grand Vin
Chateau Lafite, 1895.
SOLD HERE.

D. LEIDEN'S
SPARKLING
MOSELLE.

The President Suspender
For sale at the following stores: —
F. H. Chamberlain,
663 Washington St.
Continental Clothing House,
Cor. Washington & Boylston Sts.
Josiah T. Dyer,
17 Boylston St.
J. F. & W. H. Falvey,
415 Broadway, So. Boston, Mass.
Gilchrist & Co.,
Winter and Washington Sts.
Glen Shirt and Collar Co.,
21 Tremont St.
George F. Magrane,
17 Milk, cor. Federal St.
Mannis & Safford,
129 Court St.
Leopold Morse & Co.,
Washington St., cor. Brattle St.
The Nickerson Co.,
345 Washington St.
Spring Lane Furnishing Store,
279 Washington St.
S. Vorenberg & Co.,
Washington and Hanover Sts.
R. H. White Co.,
Washington St.
Shepard, Norwell & Co.,
Winter Street.

The President Suspender



Up to the hour, more popular than ever. New and improved metal trimmings, guaranteed to wear to the satisfaction of the purchaser.

$1,500 IN CASH

to purchasers of President Suspenders. For particulars inquire of dealer.

The C. A. Edgarton Mfg. Co., Shirley, Mass.,
Sole licensees for the manufacture of the President Suspender in the United States.

ASK THE WAITER FOR

AMERICA'S FINEST PRODUCT

VARTRAY

Ginger Ale
Sarsaparilla

VARTRAY WATER CO.
BUFFALO, N.Y.

The only Beer on Draught served at these concerts is BARTHOLOMAY'S ROCHESTER LAGER.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

Boston, Thursday, June 7, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 25.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

THURSDAY, JUNE 7.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Gruss in die Ferne" (First Time) — Döring
2. OVERTURE, "Martha" — Flotow
3. WALTZ, "Sounds from the Vienna Woods" — Strauss
4. SELECTION, "The Rounders" — Englander
5. OVERTURE, "Zampa" — Hérold
6. SERENADE for Strings (First Time) — Milan F. Bennett
7. SELECTION from "Carmen" — Bizet
8. CZARDAS — Grossmann
9. OVERTURE, "Fra Diavolo" — Auber
10. TURKISH PATROL (First Time) — Michaelis
11. HUSARENRITT — Spindler
12. MARCH, "Stars and Stripes Forever" — Sousa

Steinway Pianos used.

TUESDAY, JUNE 12, MILITARY NIGHT.

Boston Fusileer Veteran Association and Salem Cadet Band.

TRY
M. S.
(Myles Standish)

THE ONLY DOMESTIC GINGER ALE THAT WILL COMPETE WITH THE IMPORTED.

For sale at these concerts and elsewhere.

CODMAN & HALL CO.,
Wines and Cigars,
DEWEY SQUARE.

EGYPTIAN DEITIES CIGARETTES

are the only cigarettes that are really acceptable and satisfying to cigar smokers, because they have "body," fullness and richness of flavor, without being strong. No. 1—35 cents: No. 3—25 cents.
Ask the waiter for them.

DRINK
FOR THE
Kidneys and Rheumatism
"Ballard-vale"
Lithia Spring Water.

The Strongest and Purest known.

Approved by the French Academy of Medicine.

FOR SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

OCKENHEIMER BERG, Near Bingen,
On the Rhine, GERMANY.

Philip Krim's Own Importation of Rhine Wines.

FOR THIRTY YEARS AT

163 SHAWMUT AVENUE.

OUR WINES SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS.

Sold at these Concerts.

The Roessle Brewery Premium Lager Beer,

Matured in the OLD WAY, and over four months old. Is the highest type of Honesty and Excellence, considering Quality, Age, Substance, Purity, and Aroma, and is Absolute Perfection.

Office, Brewery, and Bottling Department,
1250 Columbus Avenue, Boston

TELEPHONE, ROXBURY 180.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

BIRD

A TYPICAL BOHEMIAN RESORT.

"Danish Inn" which forms a rt of "The Hayward," proves a pular place with music as a eat feature.

st where to dine and at the same derive the greatest possible pleasure the hour or more given over to the er is a problem which confronts Bos-ans, who in time become tired of even best opportunities which this city ers, and to whom something novel ss is most welcome. One solution of s problem is found in the new "Dan-Inn" just opened as a part of The ward, at 16 to 26 Hayward Place.

All the world like a glimpse of "Bohe-ia," as it popularly is supposed to exist, nd so few are the opportunities in this ity to find this phase of life, that the pening of this important addition to The Hayward has filled a much desired need of a conveniently situated, well conducted Bohemian resort.

From the street, the passer-by sees in the front of the inn a quaint suggestion of some foreign city. Upon entering, one's curiosity is at once aroused, and admiration of the charming scene is felt at once. It is a reproduction of the an-cient "Riebenhus" in Riebe, Denmark, which dates back to the sixteenth cent-ury.

In the evening, when the Neapolitan Orchestra is in full swing, with its music, the charm of the place is most felt. The native songs and airs are much used by this band of players, among whom are some with remarkably good voices, and that their vocal efforts also give great pleasure to those that are dining, is shown by the attention paid when they sing, and the applause and demonstration which follows.

For a regular table d'hote dinner served at the Hayward, no more delight-ful or Bohemian place can be imagined. Anything delicious, in or out of season, also may be had a la carte, for the larder of this place embraces all that could be desired.

Often one cannot secure seats, so large the attendance, unless care in telephon-or arranging otherwise in advance for table to be reserved, has been taken.—Boston Transcript.

Boston, Friday, June 8, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 26.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

FRIDAY, JUNE 8.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "U. S. Volunteers"	Strube
2.	OVERTURE, "Si j'étais Roi"	Adam
3.	WALTZ, "Bei uns z' Haus"	Strauss
4.	SELECTION, "Serenade"	Herbert
5.	OVERTURE, "Mignon"	A. Thomas
6.	THREE DANCES from "Henry VIII." (First Time)	German
7.	"EN SOURDINE," for Strings	Tellam
	The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
8.	WEDDING MARCH	Mendelssohn
9.	OVERTURE, "Poet and Peasant"	Suppé
10.	PIZZICATO from "Sylvia"	Delibes
11.	WALTZ, "The Wave"	Metra
12.	MARCH, "Under the Double Eagle"	Wagner

Steinway Pianos used.

TUESDAY, JUNE 12, MILITARY NIGHT.

Boston Fusileer Veteran Association and Salem Cadet Band.

The band, under Director Jean Missud, will play the following selections:—

1.	MARCH, "The Boston Fusileers"	Montalban
2.	SELECTION from "A Runaway Girl"	Monckton
3.	CHILIAN DANCE, "Mañana"	Missud
4.	AMERICAN PATROL	Meacham

Copley Square Hotel,

One block north of Mechanics' Hall.

RESTAURANT AND GENTLEMEN'S CAFÉ
Open until 12.30.

F. S. RISTEEN & CO.

WITHOUT A PEER
Londonderry Water
PURE SPARKLING DELICIOUS
THE FAVORITE WITH EPICURES
SERVED AT ALL LEADING CLUBS HOTELS AND CAFES
WITH DEALERS EVERYWHERE.

Rochester Brewing Company's Standard
IN BOTTLES.

ALBRECHT & KOELLNER,
Boston.

White Rock Water

Royal Liqueur Scotch

Codman & Hall Co.
IMPORTERS
WINES AND CIGARS
DEWEY SQUARE

Saarbach's Rhine Wines

Inglenook California Wines

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

BIRD

Boston, Saturday, June 9, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 27.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

SATURDAY, JUNE 9.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Teufel"	Suppé
2.	OVERTURE, "Merry Wives of Windsor"	Nicolai
3.	WALTZ, "Jolly Fellows"	Vollstedt
4.	SELECTION from "Fortune Teller"	Herbert
5.	OVERTURE, "Rienzi"	Wagner
6.	INTERMEZZO, "Naila"	Delibes
7.	A SIESTA	Hill
	The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
8.	TWO SLAVIC DANCES	Dvorak
9.	MARCH, "Black Bess" (First Time)	Strube
10.	SELECTION, "Belle of New York"	Kerker
11.	WALTZ, "Grubenlichter"	Zeller
12.	MARCH, "Up the Street"	Morse

Steinway Pianos used.

TUESDAY, JUNE 12, MILITARY NIGHT.

Boston Fusileer Veteran Association and Salem Cadet Band.

The band, under Director Jean Missud, will play the following selections: —

1.	MARCH, "The Boston Fusileers"	Montalban
2.	SELECTION from "A Runaway Girl"	Monckton
3.	CHILIAN DANCE, "Mañana"	Missud
4.	AMERICAN PATROL	Meacham

HARVARD NIGHT, Monday, June 18.

ARTISTS in AMERICA

This coming season available for concerts.

LILLIAN BLAUVELT,

SCHUMANN-HEINK
(Special arrangement with Mr. Grau),

CLARA BUTT,

FFRANGCON-DAVIES,

FRITZ KREISLER
(The great Austrian Violinist),

HUGO BECKER
(The renowned 'Cellist),

MAUD POWELL
(The American Violinist),

THE HENSCHELS.

For further information address

THE
HENRY WOLFSOHN
MUSICAL BUREAU,
131 East 17th St., New York.

CALL 1492

BACK BAY "POPS."

FOR TICKETS TO THE

The Wilson,

America's Purest

Mineral Spring Water,

Is used in making our celebrated

Belfast Ginger Ale and Sarsaparilla, Lemon Soda, Club Soda, Vichy, etc.

Hotels and Families supplied.

Try a sample order of these goods, and be convinced of their superiority, purity, and medicinal qualities.

Do not drink carbonated beverages made from polluted and so-called distilled waters.

All of our beverages bottled at the spring.

We ship only in glass, and all bottles and demijohns are sterilized before being filled.

Wilson Spring and Hotel Co.
45 ARCH STREET.

Instruct your waiter
to bring a bottle of

Pfaff's "Monogram" Lager.

If you will do this, it will not be necessary for us to expatiate upon the good qualities of our production. You can judge for yourself....

H. & J. PFAFF BREWING COMPANY,

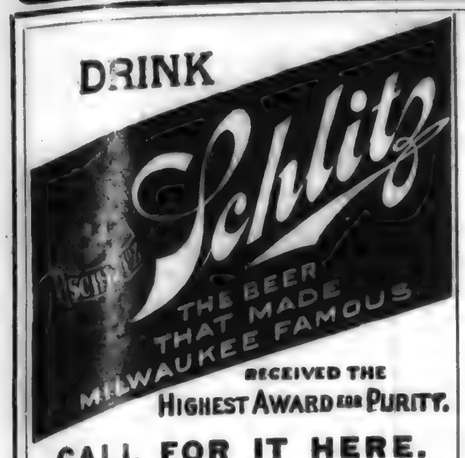
Telephone 2608. 16 ARCH STREET, BOSTON.

DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S "Barrister" and "La Fernandina" CIGARS SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

DRINK



RECEIVED THE HIGHEST AWARD FOR PURITY.

CALL FOR IT HERE.
FOR ORDERS SEND TO
JOS. GAHM,
125 PURCHASE STREET.
Telephone, 954 Boston.

Boston, Monday, June 11, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 28.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

MONDAY, JUNE 11.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Hoch Habsburg" . . . . . Kral
2. OVERTURE, "Stradella" . . . . . Flotow
3. WALTZ, "Artist's Life" . . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION from "Trovatore" . . . . . Verdi
5. OVERTURE, "Phèdre" . . . . . Massenet
6. TWO HUNGARIAN DANCES (Nos. 3 and 1) . . . Brahms
(First Time)
7. PROCESSION OF THE WOMEN, "Lohengrin" . . . Wagner
8. MARCH from "Queen of Sheba" . . . . . Gounod
9. LIGHT CAVALRY . . . . . Suppé
10. BLUE VIOLET MAZOURKA . . . . . Eilenberg
(First Time)
11. POLKA, "Sängerlust" . . . . . Strauss
12. MARCH, "Tabasco" . . . . . Chadwick

Steinway Pianos used.

TUESDAY, JUNE 12, MILITARY NIGHT.

Boston Fusileer Veteran Association and Salem Cadet Band.

The band, under Director Jean Missud, will play the following selections: —

1. MARCH, "The Boston Fusileers" . . . . . Montalban
2. SELECTION from "A Runaway Girl" . . . . . Monckton
3. CHILIAN DANCE, "Mañana" . . . . . Missud
4. AMERICAN PATROL . . . . . Meacham

HARVARD NIGHT, Monday, June 18.

WAGNER NIGHT, TUESDAY, JUNE 19.

REQUEST NIGHT, TUESDAY, JUNE 26.

C. W. THOMPSON & COMPANY,
MUSIC PUBLISHERS, 13 WEST STREET, - BOSTON.

SONGS BY HALLETT GILBERTÉ.

"Youth"	$0.30	"Thought of You"	$0.50
"Singing of You"	.50	"Mother's Cradle Song." Alto	.40
"Love Star." Two keys, each	.40
"Spanish Serenade." Soprano or Tenor	.50
Dance, "La Gaieté," for Piano	.50

Dedicated to Miss Maud Odell.

Piano arrangements of all the favorites of the "Pops" on sale.

Hygeia Lithia Water,

Sparkling and Still.

By its use you will avoid the germs of disease which natural MINERAL WATERS are liable to contain.

Sold at these concerts

AND BY

S. S. PIERCE CO.

TANNHAEUSER EXPORT BEER.

Philadelphia Ale on Draught sold at these concerts.

SOL. BACHARACH,
New England Agent,
508-510 Atlantic Avenue, Boston.
Telephone 3805.

AMERICAN TOUR
OF
Ossip Gabrilowitsch,
The Eminent Russian Pianist,
Beginning in November, 1900.

Address
H. G. SNOW, 141 Fifth Ave., New York City.

Eastern Representative,
L. H. MUDGETT, New Music Hall, Huntington Ave., Boston.

EVERETT PIANO USED.

PURE BEER
Harvard
BREW. CO'S $1000.00
PURE BEER
Sold at these Concerts
IN BOTTLES ONLY
20¢ PER BOTTLE.

The only Beer on Draught served at these concerts is BARTHOLOMAY'S ROCHESTER LAGER.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

BIRD

Boston, Tuesday, June 12, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 29.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

TUESDAY, JUNE 12,

MILITARY NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH from "The Serenade" . . . . . Herbert
2. OVERTURE, "Jean de Paris" . . . . . Boieldieu
   (First Time)
3. WALTZ, "Wein, Weib, und Gesang" . . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION from "Aida" . . . . . Verdi
5. OVERTURE to "William Tell" . . . . . Rossini
6. TWO SPANISH DANCES . . . . . Moszkowski
7. PRELUDE, "Lohengrin" . . . . . Wagner
8. MARCH from "Damnation of Faust" . . . . . Berlioz
9. OVERTURE, "Les Dragons des Villars" . . . . . Maillard
10. SPRING SONG . . . . . Mendelssohn
11. SELECTION from "Robin Hood" . . . . . De Koven
12. MARCH, "Runaway Girl" . . . . . Monckton

Boston Fusileer Veteran Association and Salem Cadet Band.

The band, under Director Jean Missud, will play the following selections:—

1. MARCH, "The Boston Fusileers" . . . . . Montalban
2. SELECTION from "A Runaway Girl" . . . . . Monckton
3. CHILIAN DANCE, "Mañana" . . . . . Missud
4. AMERICAN PATROL . . . . . Meacham

Steinway Pianos used.

HARVARD NIGHT, MONDAY, JUNE 18.

WAGNER NIGHT, TUESDAY, JUNE 19.

BEST BEER BREWED

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS.

COAT ROOM

AT

LEFT OF MAIN ENTRANCE.

Garments, Umbrellas, and Bicycles Checked Free.

You Can

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

Rely On

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

Lewando's

W. L. CROSBY,
General Manager.

French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Established 70 years.
Largest in America.

Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

Norfolk Brewery, Boston.

Main Office and Brewery, Cor. Columbus Avenue, Cedar and Centre Sts., Roxbury.

Telephone, 56 Roxbury.

City Depot, 361 Atlantic Avenue

Telephone, 1152 Boston.

LAGER BEER
HABICH & COMPANY.

H. WM. HABICH. Brewers of EDWARD RUHL.

Ale, Porter, and Lager Beer.

Leading Refreshments at these most popular "Pops":

NORFOLK CABINET (Golden Color),
NORFOLK BISMARCK BRÄU (Dark).

THOMPSON & LEAVITT

WINES

SPIRITS

TEAS AND

CIGARS

185 and 187 State Street, Boston

The only Beer on Draught served at these concerts is BARTHOLOMAY'S ROCHESTER LAGER.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

MECHANICS' HALL "POP" PROGRAMME.

PUBLISHED EVERY EVENING DURING THE SUMMER SEASON.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS.

The advertising columns in the Programme are controlled SOLELY by F. R. Comee, Mechanics' Hall, to whom all communications should be addressed.

Boston, Wednesday, June 13, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 30.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 13.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Feurig Blut" . . . . . Vollstedt
2. OVERTURE, "Preciosa" . . . . . Weber
3. WALTZ, "Thousand and One Nights" (First Time) . . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION, "Fencing Master" . . . . . De Koven

5. OVERTURE, "Semiramide" . . . . . Rossini
6. TWO MOVEMENTS from "Bal Costumé" . . . . . Rubinstein
7. ANDANTE for String Orchestra . . . . . Tschaikowski

The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.

8. INTRODUCTION, ACT III., "Lohengrin" . . . . . Wagner

9. OVERTURE, "Frau Meisterin" . . . . . Suppé
10. THE MILL IN THE FOREST . . . . . Eilenberg
11. ESTUDIANTINA . . . . . Waldteufel
12. MARCH, "Bride Elect" . . . . . Sousa

Steinway Pianos used.

HARVARD NIGHT, MONDAY, JUNE 18.

WAGNER NIGHT, TUESDAY, JUNE 19.

GRADUATES NIGHT, MONDAY, JUNE 25.

REQUEST NIGHT, TUESDAY, JUNE 26.

The United States Hotel,

Saratoga Springs, N.Y.

Under a continuous management for twenty-five years.

Without a peer in its appointments, service, and liberal management.

The largest structure of its kind in the world.

Built entirely of brick.

The Hotel and court cover over seven acres.

For further information, rates, etc., address

GAGE & PERRY,
Proprietors,
UNITED STATES HOTEL,
Saratoga Springs, N.Y.

The Beer that's BREWED in GLASS,

Served at the "POPS."

Colonial Beer.

SOUTHER BREWING COMPANY,
Roxbury, Mass.

Veuve Chaffard.

Pure Olive Oil

In Honest Bottles.

ON SALE AT THE "POPS."

Estabrook & Eaton's

WELL-KNOWN AND POPULAR BRANDS.

MARGUERITE, Conchas,	10c., 3 for 25c.
MARGUERITE, Perfectos,	10c. each
EL DELETOSA, Conchas,	10c., 3 for 25c.
MANUEL GARCIA, Stillettos,	15c., 2 for 25c.
BOCK & CO., Especiales de E. & E.,	20c., 5 for $1.00

You will be sure of a good smoke if you order any of the above standard brands.

The only Beer on Draught served at these concerts is BARTHOLOMAY'S ROCHESTER LAGER.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

Boston, Thursday, June 14, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 31.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

THURSDAY, JUNE 14.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "The Auditorium" . . . . . Bennett
2. OVERTURE, "La Gazza Ladra" . . . . . Rossini
3. WALTZ, "Lagunen" . . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION, "Faust" . . . . . Gounod

5. OVERTURE, "Flying Dutchman" . . . . . Wagner
6. TWO MOVEMENTS from Suite, "Peer Gynt" . . . . Grieg
7. PASTORALE . . . . . Helen Hopekirk
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
8. AN EVENING WITH BILSE . . . . . Conradi

9. OVERTURE, "Orpheus aux Enfers" . . . . . Offenbach
10. WALTZ, "Vienna Beauties" . . . . . Ziehrer
11. POLKA, "Hunter's Yarn" . . . . . Komzak
12. MARCH, "Merry War" . . . . . Strauss

Steinway Pianos used.

HARVARD NIGHT, MONDAY, JUNE 18.

WAGNER NIGHT, TUESDAY, JUNE 19.

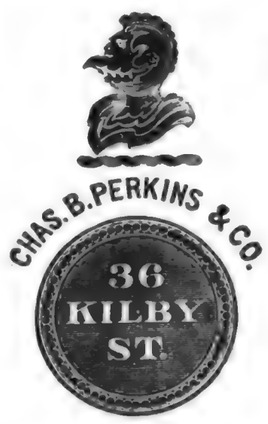
GRADUATES' NIGHT, MONDAY, JUNE 25.

REQUEST NIGHT, TUESDAY, JUNE 26.

GREAT WESTERN
CHAMPAGNE

A natural, genuine champagne, of the finest quality produced in America.

Sold by Wine Merchants, Grocers, and Druggists.



CHARLES B. PERKINS & CO.

Choice selection of our

CIGARS

Always on sale here. Also our

NUBIA CIGARETTES.

Made of the finest quality of Turkish Tobacco.

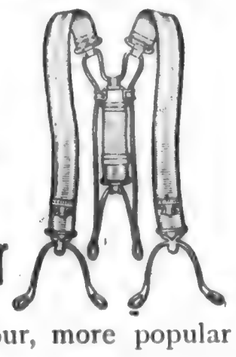
Grand Vin
Chateau Lafite, 1895.

SOLD HERE.

D. LEIDEN'S
Sparkling Hock
AND
Sparkling Moselle.

The President Suspender
For sale at the following stores:—
F. H. Chamberlain,
663 Washington St.
Continental Clothing House,
Cor. Washington & Boylston Sts.
Josiah T. Dyer,
47 Boylston St.
J. F. & W. H. Falvey,
415 Broadway, So. Boston, Mass.
Gilchrist & Co.,
Winter and Washington Sts.
Glen Shirt and Collar Co.,
121 Tremont St.
George F. Magrane,
77 Milk, cor. Federal St.
Mannis & Safford,
129 Court St.
Leopold Morse & Co.,
Washington St., cor. Brattle St.
The Nickerson Co.,
345 Washington St.
Spring Lane Furnishing Store,
279 Washington St.
S. Vorenberg & Co.,
Washington and Hanover Sts.
R. H. White Co.,
Washington St.
Shepard, Norwell & Co.,
Winter Street.

The President Suspender



Up to the hour, more popular than ever. New and improved metal trimmings, guaranteed to wear to the satisfaction of the purchaser.

$1,500 IN CASH

to purchasers of President Suspenders. For particulars inquire of dealer.

The C. A. Edgarton Mfg. Co., Shirley, Mass.,
Sole licensees for the manufacture of the President Suspender in the United States.

We are serving
A delicious quality of
Ginger Ale
AND Sarsaparilla

VARTRAY

Have YOU tried it?

VARTRAY WATER CO.
BUFFALO, N.Y.

ASK THE WAITER

The only Beer on Draught served at these concerts is BARTHOLOMAY'S ROCHESTER LAGER.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

Boston, Friday, June 15, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 32.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

FRIDAY, JUNE 15.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Puppenfee" . . . . . Bayer
2. OVERTURE, "Dame Blanche" . . . . . Boieldieu
3. KAISER WALTZ . . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION, "Cavalleria Rusticana" . . . . . Mascagni

5. OVERTURE, "Ruy Blas" . . . . . Mendelssohn
6. LAMENTO . . . . . Slocum
   (First time)
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
7. TWO HUNGARIAN DANCES (5 and 6) . . . . . Brahms
8. FINALE from "Ariele" . . . . . E. Bach

9. CONGRESS OF MELODIES . . . . . Conradi
10. WALTZ, "L'Amour et Printemps" . . . . . Waldteufel
11. POLKA, "Tic-Tac" . . . . . Strobel
12. MARCH, "Cruiser Harvard" . . . . . Strube

Steinway Pianos used.

HARVARD NIGHT, MONDAY, JUNE 18.
WAGNER NIGHT, TUESDAY, JUNE 19.
GRADUATES' NIGHT, MONDAY, JUNE 25.
REQUEST NIGHT, TUESDAY, JUNE 26.

TRY
M. S.
(Myles Standish)

THE ONLY DOMESTIC GINGER ALE THAT WILL COMPETE WITH THE IMPORTED.

For sale at these concerts and elsewhere.

CODMAN & HALL CO.,
Wines and Cigars,
DEWEY SQUARE.

EGYPTIAN DEITIES CIGARETTES

are the only cigarettes that are really acceptable and satisfying to cigar smokers, because they have "body," fullness and richness of flavor, without being strong. No. 1—35 cents; No. 3—25 cents.
Ask the waiter for them.

DRINK
FOR THE
Kidneys and Rheumatism
"Ballard-vale"
Lithia Spring Water.

The Strongest and Purest known.

Approved by the French Academy of Medicine.

FOR SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

OCKENHEIMER BERG, Near Bingen,
On the Rhine, GERMANY.

Philip Krim's Own Importation of Rhine Wines.

FOR THIRTY YEARS AT

163 SHAWMUT AVENUE.

OUR WINES SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS.

Sold at these Concerts.

The Roessle Brewery Premium Lager Beer,

Matured in the OLD WAY, and over four months old. Is the highest type of Honesty and Excellence, considering Quality, Age, Substance, Purity, and Aroma, and is Absolute Perfection.

Office, Brewery, and Bottling Department,
1250 Columbus Avenue, Boston

TELEPHONE, ROXBURY 180.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

BIRD

Boston, Saturday, June 16, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 33.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

A TYPICAL BOHEMIAN RESORT.

The "Danish Inn" which forms a part of "The Hayward," proves a popular place with music as a great feature.

Just where to dine and at the same time derive the greatest possible pleasure from the hour or more given over to the dinner is a problem which confronts Bostonians who in time become tired of even the best opportunities which this city affords, and to whom something novel always is most welcome. One solution of this problem is found in the new "Danish Inn" just opened as a part of The Hayward, at 16 to 26 Hayward Place.

All the world like a glimpse of "Bohemia," as it popularly is supposed to exist, and so few are the opportunities in this city to find this phase of life, that the opening of this important addition to The Hayward has filled a much desired need of a conveniently situated, well conducted Bohemian resort.

From the street, the passer-by sees in the front of the inn a quaint suggestion of some foreign city. Upon entering, one's curiosity is at once aroused, and admiration of the charming scene is felt at once. It is a reproduction of the ancient "Riebenhus" in Riebe, Denmark, which dates back to the sixteenth century.

In the evening, when the Neapolitan Orchestra is in full swing, with its music, the charm of the place is most felt. The native songs and airs are much used by this band of players, among whom are some with remarkably good voices, and that their vocal efforts also give great pleasure to those that are dining, is shown by the attention paid when they sing, and the applause and demonstration which follows.

For a regular table d'hote dinner served at the Hayward, no more delightful or Bohemian place can be imagined. Anything delicious, in or out of season, also may be had a la carte, for the larder of this place embraces all that could be desired.

Often one cannot secure seats, so large is the attendance, unless care in telephoning or arranging otherwise in advance for a table to be reserved, has been taken.—Boston Transcript.

SATURDAY, JUNE 16.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "U. S. Volunteers" . . . . . Strube
2. OVERTURE, "Raymond" . . . . . Thomas
3. WALTZ, "O Schöner Mai" . . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION, "Wizard of the Nile" . . . . . Herbert

5. OVERTURE, "Martha" . . . . . Flotow
6. BALLET MUSIC, "Queen of Sheba" . . . . . Goldmark
   'Cello Obligato, Mr. J. Keller
7. GAVOTTE for Strings . . . . . Gillet
8. AMERICAN FANTASY . . . . . Herbert

9. OVERTURE, "Pique Dame" . . . . . Suppé
10. ENTR'ACTE, "Naila" . . . . . Delibes
11. POLKA, "Love Letter" . . . . . Ziehrer
12. MARCH, "Stars and Stripes Forever" . . . . . Sousa

Steinway Pianos used.

HARVARD NIGHT, MONDAY, JUNE 18.

WAGNER NIGHT, TUESDAY, JUNE 19.

GRADUATES' NIGHT, MONDAY, JUNE 25.

REQUEST NIGHT, TUESDAY, JUNE 26.

Copley Square Hotel,

One block north of Mechanics' Hall.

RESTAURANT AND GENTLEMEN'S CAFÉ
Open until 12.30.

F. S. RISTEEN & CO.

WITHOUT A PEER

Londonderry Water

SERVED AT ALL LEADING CLUBS HOTELS AND CAFES

WITH DEALERS EVERYWHERE.

Rochester Brewing Company's Standard

IN BOTTLES.

ALBRECHT & KOELLNER,

Boston.

To be had at all clubs

Hotel Touraine
Parker's
Young's
Adams House
Somerset Hotel
Brunswick
Victoria
The Hayward
The Raleigh
Westminster
Hotel Essex
Hotel Bellevue
And many others

This Scotch comes direct to us from the distillers, and we can sell it less than brands bought through New York agents. It is excellent value.

CODMAN & HALL COMPANY
Importers
DEWEY SQUARE, BOSTON

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

TISTS in ERICA

This coming season available for concerts.

AN BLAUVELT,

'MANN-HEINK
al arrangement with Mr. Grau),

RA BUTT,

ANGCON-DAVIES,

TZ KREISLER
(The great Austrian Violinist),

GO BECKER
(The renowned 'Cellist),

AUD POWELL
(The American Violinist),

HE HENSCHELS.

For further information ad-

THE
HENRY WOLFSOHN
MUSICAL BUREAU,
17th St., New York.

Boston, Monday, June 18, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 34.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

MONDAY, JUNE 18.

HARVARD NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1.	HARVARD CAMP	H. H. Fox
2.	OVERTURE, "Jolly Students"	Suppé
3.	WALTZ, "Grubenlichter"	Zeller
4.	SELECTION, "The Singing Girl"	Herbert
5.	HARVARD'S DAY	C. L. Smith
6.	OVERTURE, "Zampa"	Hérold
7.	SELECTION, "Belle of New York"	Kerker
8.	(a. MARCH from '00 Pudding Play, "Wytche Hazelle"	Tappin
	(b. MARCH from '00 Pi Eta Play, "The Campaigners"	Gulick
9.	MARCH, "Black Bess"	Strube
10.	SELECTION, "Sphinx"	Thompson
11.	FAIR HARVARD	Morse
12.	MARCH, "Up the Street"

Steinway Pianos used.

WAGNER NIGHT, TUESDAY, JUNE 19.

GRADUATES' NIGHT, MONDAY, JUNE 25.

REQUEST NIGHT, TUESDAY, JUNE 26.

Mr. H. G. TUCKER announces a Series of Five Concerts to be given in the People's Temple, Columbus Avenue and Berkeley Street, MONDAY EVENINGS during the season of 1900-1901:—

October 29. "THE BEATITUDES" (First time in Boston) . . . Cesar Franck
By the WORCESTER COUNTY MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.
Mr. G. W. CHADWICK, Conductor.

November 26. A SYMPHONY CONCERT. Program to be announced.
Mr. EMIL PAUR, Conductor.

December 17. A NEW WORK. (First time in Boston.) . . . Horatio W. Parker
Mr. H. W. PARKER, Conductor.
"HYMN OF PRAISE" . . . Mendelssohn
Mr. H. G. TUCKER, Conductor.

February 4. CANTATA, "O, LIGHT EVERLASTING" . . . Bach
Mr. H. G. TUCKER, Conductor.
"LILY NYMPH" (First time in Boston) . . . G. W. Chadwick
Mr. G. W. CHADWICK, Conductor.

March 11. A CHORAL WORK. To be announced.

For further details as to subscription tickets, etc., apply to C. W. Thompson, 13 West Street.

The Wilson,

America's Purest

Mineral Spring Water,

Is used in making our celebrated

Belfast Ginger Ale and Sarsaparilla, Lemon Soda, Club Soda, Vichy, etc.

Hotels and Families supplied.

Try a sample order of these goods, and be convinced of their superiority, purity, and medicinal qualities.

Do not drink carbonated beverages made from polluted and so-called distilled waters.

All of our beverages bottled at the spring.

We ship only in glass, and all bottles and demijohns are sterilized before being filled.

Wilson Spring and Hotel Co.
45 ARCH STREET.

Instruct your waiter
to bring a bottle of

Pfaff's "Monogram" Lager.

If you will do this, it will not be necessary for us to expatiate upon the good qualities of our production. You can judge for yourself....

H. & J. PFAFF BREWING COMPANY,
Telephone 2608. 16 ARCH STREET, BOSTON.

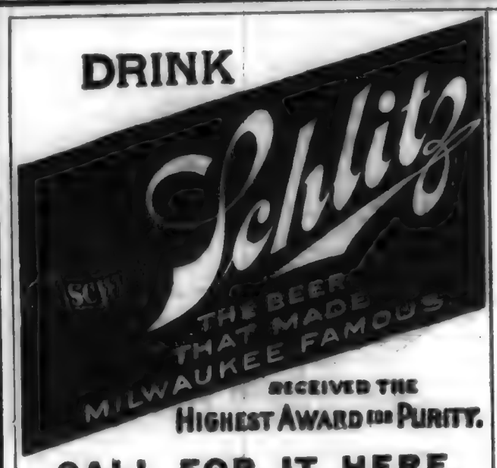
DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S "Barrister" and "La Fernandina" CIGARS SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

BIRD

DRINK



RECEIVED THE HIGHEST AWARD FOR PURITY.

CALL FOR IT HERE.
FOR ORDERS SEND TO
JOS. CAHM,
125 PURCHASE STREET.
Telephone, 954 Boston.

TANNHAEUSER EXPORT BEER.
Philadelphia Ale on Draught sold at these concerts.
SOL. BACHARACH,
New England Agent,
508-510 Atlantic Avenue, Boston.
Telephone 3805.

Boston, Tuesday, June 19, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 35.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

TUESDAY, JUNE 19.

WAGNER NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Tannhäuser"	Wagner
2.	WALTZ, "Sounds from the Vienna Woods"	Strauss
3.	PRELUDE, "Die Meistersinger"	Wagner
4.	RIDE OF THE VALKYRIES	Wagner
5.	OVERTURE, "Rienzi"	Wagner
6.	THREE DANCES from "Henry VIII."	German
7.	LEGATO	Strube
	The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
8.	PRELUDES to Act I. and Act III., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
9.	THE EVENING STAR	Wagner
	Trombone Solo, Mr. Carl Hampe
10.	SAILORS' CHORUS from "The Flying Dutchman"	Wagner
11.	POLKA, "Tyrolean"	Zeller
12.	MARCH, "Niebelungen"	Sonntag

Steinway Pianos used.

GRADUATES' NIGHT, MONDAY, JUNE 25.

REQUEST NIGHT, TUESDAY, JUNE 26.

C. W. THOMPSON & COMPANY,
MUSIC PUBLISHERS, 13 WEST STREET, - BOSTON.

Ask to see the following hits of the "Pops," arranged for Piano: —

HARVARD CAMP MARCH	H. H. Fox
HARVARD VOLUNTEERS MARCH	G. W. Lunt
BAGATELLE	Frank E. Jonson
LOST IN DREAMS. Reverie	Max Zach
CRUISER HARVARD MARCH	Gustav Strube

Piano arrangements of all the favorites of the "Pops" on sale.

Hygeia Lithia Water,
Sparkling and Still.

By its use you will avoid the germs of disease which natural MINERAL WATERS are liable to contain.

Sold at these concerts
AND BY
S. S. PIERCE CO.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

Mr. Rudolph Aronson takes pleasure in announcing a series of concerts by

EDUARD STRAUSS
Imperial Court Musical Director,
AND HIS Famous Orchestra from Vienna
AT
New Music Hall
IN NOVEMBER NEXT.

PURE BEER
Harvard
BREW. CO'S $1000.00
PURE BEER
Sold at these Concerts
IN BOTTLES ONLY
20¢ PER BOTTLE.

The only Beer on Draught served at these concerts is BARTHOLOMAY'S ROCHESTER LAGER.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

Boston, Wednesday, June 20, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 36.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 20.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "The Century" . . . . . Hunter
2. OVERTURE, "Elizabeth" . . . . . Rossini
3. WALTZ, "Wo die Citronen blühen" . . . . . Strauss
   (First Time)
4. SELECTION, "Mikado" . . . . . Sullivan

5. OVERTURE, "Oberon" . . . . . Weber
6. PRELUDE to "Le Deluge" . . . . . Saint-Saens
   Violin Solo, Mr. Otto Roth.
7. { a. LA PREMIERE DANSEUSE
   { b. ENSEMBLE MAZOURKA . . . . . Hosmer
   (First Time)
8. SELECTION, "Carmen" . . . . . Bizet

9. OVERTURE, "Pique Dame" . . . . . Suppé
10. NARCISSUS . . . . . Nevin
11. WALTZ, "Die Schönbrunnen" . . . . . Lanner
12. WHISTLING RUFUS . . . . . Mills

Steinway Pianos used.

GRADUATES' NIGHT, MONDAY, JUNE 25.

REQUEST NIGHT, TUESDAY, JUNE 26.

NEW ENGLISH SONGS FOR GENTLEMEN'S VOICES.

"TO GARLANDS," by Amy E. Horrocks.
"A TRAGIC TALE," by D. D. Slater.
"PILGRIMS OF THE NIGHT," by Samuel Liddle.
"A BARQUE AT MIDNIGHT," by Frank Lambert.
"THE BEAUTIFUL CITY OF SLIGO," by C. V. Stanford.
"TEACH ME THE CHARM," by Noel Johnson.
"IT IS YOUR VOICE," by A. Mascheroni.
"SHE SET MY HEART A-BEATING," by J. Spawforth.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th Street, - NEW YORK.

You Can

your last season's out-
ved or cleansed and shed so it will look like
by our French process.
liscard soiled clothing
it can be overhauled worn as second best?
Yo an

Rely On

methods of cleansing, need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.
We dye or cleanse and finish PROPERLY all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

Lewando's

W. L. CROSBY,
General Manager.

French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers,
Fine Launderers.

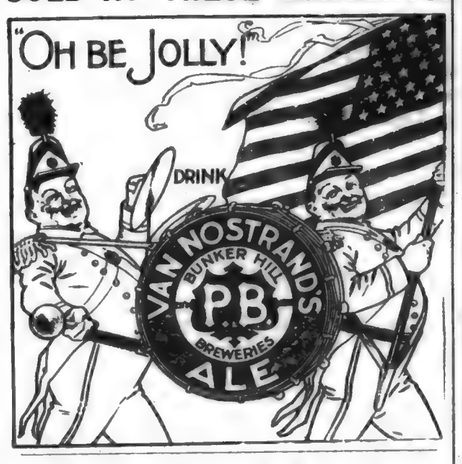
PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Established 70 years.
Largest in America.

Bundles called for and delivered.
Telephones in all offices.

BEST BEER BREWED

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS.



COAT ROOM
AT
LEFT OF MAIN ENTRANCE.

Garments, Umbrellas, and Bicycles Checked Free.

Norfolk Brewery, Boston.

NORFOLK CABINET

LAGER BEER

Office and Brewery, Columbus Ave. Cedar and Tremont Sts., Roxbury.

City Depot, 361 Atlantic Avenue

Telephone, 1152 Boston.

HABICH & COMPANY.

HABICH. Brewers of EDWARD RUHL.

Ale, Porter, and Lager Beer.

Leading Refreshments at these most popular "Pops":
NORFOLK CABINET (Golden Color),
NORFOLK BISMARCK BRÄU (Dark).

THOMPSON & LEAVITT

WINES
SPIRITS
TEAS AND
CIGARS

185 and 187 State Street, Boston

The only Beer on Draught served at these concerts is BARTHOLOMAY'S ROCHESTER LAGER.

[96]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

BIRD

MECHANICS' HALL "POP" PROGRAMME.

PUBLISHED EVERY EVENING DURING THE SUMMER SEASON.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS.

The advertising columns in the Programme are controlled SOLELY by F. R. COMEE, Mechanics' Hall, to whom all communications should be addressed.

Boston, Thursday, June 21, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 37.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

THURSDAY, JUNE 21.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "To the Front"	Spence
2.	OVERTURE, "Felsenmuhle"	Reissiger
3.	WALTZ, "Champagne Dreams"	Vollstedt
4.	SELECTION, "Madame Angot"	Lecocq
5.	OVERTURE, "Euryanthe"	Weber
6.	a. WALTZ / b. MALAGUENA } from "Boabdil"	Moszkowski
7.	EN SOURDINE	Tellam
8.	HUNGARIAN RHAPSODY, No. 1	Liszt
9.	OVERTURE, "Beautiful Galatée"	Suppé
10.	MAZOURKA, "Czarina"	Ganne
11.	POLKA, "Puppenfee"	Bayer
12.	MARCH, "Bride-Elect"	Sousa

Steinway Pianos used.

GRADUATES' NIGHT, MONDAY, JUNE 25.

REQUEST NIGHT, TUESDAY, JUNE 26.

The United States Hotel,

Saratoga Springs, N.Y.

Under a continuous management for twenty-five years.

Without a peer in its appointments, service, and liberal management.

The largest structure of its kind in the world.

Built entirely of brick.

The Hotel and court cover over seven acres.

For further information, rates, etc., address

GAGE & PERRY,
Proprietors,
UNITED STATES HOTEL,
Saratoga Springs, N.Y.

The Beer that's BREWED in GLASS.

Served at the "POPS."

Colonial Beer.

SOUTHER BREWING COMPANY,
Roxbury, Mass.

Veuve Chaffard.

Pure Olive Oil

In Honest Bottles.

ON SALE AT THE "POPS."

Estabrook & Eaton's

WELL-KNOWN AND POPULAR BRANDS.

MARGUERITE, Conchas,	10c., 3 for 25c.
MARGUERITE, Perfectos,	10c. each
EL DELETOSA, Conchas,	10c., 3 for 25c.
MANUEL GARCIA, Stillettos,	15c., 2 for 25c.
BOCK & CO., Especiales de E. & E.,	20c., 5 for $1.00

You will be sure of a good smoke if you order any of the above standard brands.

The only Beer on Draught served at these concerts is BARTHOLOMAY'S ROCHESTER LAGER.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

BIRD

Boston, Friday, June 22, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.

Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 38.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

FRIDAY, JUNE 22.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "King Karl" . . . . . Unrath
2. OVERTURE, "Masaniello" . . . . . Auber
3. WALTZ, "Freut euch des Lebens" . . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION, "Brigands" . . . . . Offenbach
5. INTRODUCTION to Act III. and Dance of Apprentices from "Die Meistersinger" . . . . . Wagner
6. AUBADE PRINTANIERE . . . . . Lacome
7. TRAUMEREI . . . . . Schumann
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
8. TWO DANCES from "Feramors" . . . . . Rubinstein
9. { a. BAGATELLE . . . . . Johnson
   { b. MARCH, "Black Bess" . . . . . Strube
10. GAVOTTE, "Stephanie" . . . . . Czibulka
11. POLKA MAZOURKA, "Unparteische Kritik" . . . . Strauss
12. MARCH, "Liberty Bell" . . . . . Sousa

Steinway Pianos used.

GRADUATES' NIGHT, MONDAY, JUNE 25.

REQUEST NIGHT, TUESDAY, JUNE 26.

AT WESTERN

CHAMPAGNE

A natural, genuine champagne, of the finest quality produced in America.

Sold by Wine Merchants, Grocers, and Druggists.

CHARLES B. PERKINS & CO.

Choice selection of our

CIGARS

Always on sale here. Also our

NUBIA CIGARETTES.

Made of the finest quality of Turkish Tobacco.

JUST WHAT YOU WANT

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS

Codman & Hall Co.

WINES AND CIGARS

Opposite South Station

Dewey Square

The President Suspender

For sale at the following stores: —

F. H. Chamberlain,
663 Washington St.
Continental Clothing House,
Cor. Washington & Boylston Sts.
Josiah E. Dyer,
47 [illegible]ston St.
J. F. [illegible] W. H. Falvey,
415 [illegible]adway, So. Boston, Mass.
Gille[illegible] & Co.,
W[illegible] and Washington Sts.
Glen[illegible]rt and Collar Co.,
121 [illegible]sont St.
Geo[illegible]. Magrane,
[illegible] cor. Federal St.
Ma[illegible]afford,
[illegible] St.
L[illegible]iorse & Co.,
[illegible]on St., cor. Brattle St.
The [illegible]son Co.,
[illegible]ington St.
[illegible]e Furnishing Store,
[illegible]ington St.
S. Vo[illegible]erg & Co.,
W[illegible]ton and Hanover Sts.
R. [illegible]hite Co.,
[illegible]rton St.
[illegible]orwell & Co.,
[illegible] Street.

The President Suspender

Up to the hour, more popular than ever. New and improved metal trimmings, guaranteed to wear to the satisfaction of the purchaser.

$1,500 IN CASH

to purchasers of President Suspenders. For particulars inquire of dealer.

The C. A. Edgarton Mfg. Co., Shirley, Mass.,

Sole licensees for the manufacture of the President Suspender in the United States.

We are serving

A delicious quality of

Ginger Ale

AND

Sarsaparilla

VARTRAY

Have YOU tried it?

ASK THE WAITER

VARTRAY WATER CO.
BUFFALO, N.Y.

The only Beer on Draught served at these concerts is BARTHOLOMAY'S ROCHESTER LAGER.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

BIRD

Boston, Saturday, June 23, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 39.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

SATURDAY, JUNE 23.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "The Man behind the Gun"	Corliss
2.	OVERTURE, "Si j'étais Roi"	Adam
3.	WALTZ, "In's Centrum"	Strauss
4.	SELECTION, "La Grande Duchesse"	Offenbach
5.	OVERTURE, "Tabasco"	Chadwick
6.	ENTREE TRIOMPHALE DES BAYARDS	Halvorsen
7.	TWO MOVEMENTS from "Peer Gynt"	Grieg
8.	DANSE BACCHANALE	Saint-Saens
9.	AMERICAN PATROL	Meacham
10.	LOIN DU BAL	Gillet
11.	WALTZ, "Snowballs"	Ziehrer
12.	MARCH, "Cruiser Harvard"	Strube

Steinway Pianos used.

GRADUATES' NIGHT, MONDAY, JUNE 25.

REQUEST NIGHT, TUESDAY, JUNE 26.

TRY
M. S.
(Myles Standish)

THE ONLY DOMESTIC GINGER ALE THAT WILL COMPETE WITH THE IMPORTED.

For sale at these concerts and elsewhere.

CODMAN & HALL CO.,
Wines and Cigars,
DEWEY SQUARE.

EGYPTIAN DEITIES
CIGARETTES
are the only cigarettes that are really acceptable and satisfying to cigar smokers, because they have "body," fullness and richness of flavor, without being strong. No. 1—35 cents; No. 3—25 cents.
Ask the waiter for them.

DRINK
FOR THE
Kidneys and Rheumatism
"Ballard-vale"
Lithia Spring Water.
The Strongest and Purest known.
Approved by the French Academy of Medicine.
FOR SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

OCKENHEIMER BERG, Near Bingen,
On the Rhine, GERMANY.
Philip Krim's Own Importation of Rhine Wines.
FOR THIRTY YEARS AT
163 SHAWMUT AVENUE.
OUR WINES SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS.

Sold at these Concerts.
The Roessle Brewery Premium Lager Beer,
Matured in the OLD WAY, and over four months old. Is the highest type of Honesty and Excellence, considering Quality, Age, Substance, Purity, and Aroma, and is Absolute Perfection.
Office, Brewery, and Bottling Department,
1250 Columbus Avenue, Boston
TELEPHONE, ROXBURY 180.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

...R RESORT.

Boston, Monday, June 25, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.

...S. C. A. ELLIS.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. ... E. R. COTTA, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

MONDAY, JUNE 25.

GRADUATES' NIGHT.

REQUEST NIGHT TUESDAY, JUNE 26.

White Rock
Water

Royal Liqueur
Scotch

WITHOUT A PEER
Londonderry
Water
PURE
SPARKLING
DELICIOUS
THE FAVORITE
WITH EPICURES SERVED AT ALL LEADING CLUBS HOTELS AND CAFES
WITH DEALERS EVERYWHERE

...ler Brewing Company's Standard
IN BOTTLES.

...RICHT & KOELLNER,
Boston.

Codman & Hall Co.
IMPORTERS
WINES AND CIGARS
DEWEY SQUARE

Saarbach's
Rhine Wines

Inglenook
California Wines

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

Boston, Tuesday, June 26, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 41.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

ARTISTS in AMERICA

This coming season available for concerts.

LILLIAN BLAUVELT,

SCHUMANN-HEINK
(Special arrangement with Mr. Grau),

CLARA BUTT,

FFRANGCON-DAVIES,

FRITZ KREISLER
(The great Austrian Violinist),

HUGO BECKER
(The renowned 'Cellist),

MAUD POWELL
(The American Violinist),

THE HENSCHELS.

For further information address

THE
HENRY WOLFSOHN
MUSICAL BUREAU,
131 East 17th St., New York.

TUESDAY, JUNE 26.

REQUEST NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Le Père de la Victoire"	Ganne
2.	OVERTURE, "Stradella"	Flotow
3	WALTZ, "Blue Danube"	Strauss
4.	SELECTION, "Aida"	Verdi
5.	OVERTURE, "William Tell"	Rossini
6.	SPRING SONG	Mendelssohn
7.	PROCESSION OF THE WOMEN, from "Lohengrin"	Wagner
8.	HUNGARIAN RHAPSODY, No. 2	Liszt
9.	OVERTURE, "Fra Diavalo"	Auber
10.	WALTZ, "Grubenlichter"	Zeller
11.	PIZZICATO from "Sylvia"	Delibes
12.	MARCH, "El Capitan"	Sousa

Steinway Pianos used.

Mr. H. G. TUCKER announces a Series of Five Concerts to be given in the People's Temple, Columbus Avenue and Berkeley Street, MONDAY EVENINGS during the season of 1900-1901:—

October 29. "THE BEATITUDES." (First time in Boston.) . Cesar Franck
By the WORCESTER COUNTY MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.
Mr. G. W. CHADWICK, Conductor.

November 26. A SYMPHONY CONCERT. Program to be announced.
Mr. EMIL PAUR, Conductor.

December 17. A NEW WORK. (First time in Boston.) . Horatio W. Parker
Mr. H. W. PARKER, Conductor.
"HYMN OF PRAISE" . . . . Mendelssohn
Mr. H. G. TUCKER, Conductor.

February 4. CANTATA, "O LIGHT EVERLASTING" . . . Bach
Mr. H. G. TUCKER, Conductor.
"LILY NYMPH." (First time in Boston.) . G. W. Chadwick
Mr. G. W. CHADWICK, Conductor.

March 11. A CHORAL WORK. To be announced.

For further details as to subscription tickets, etc., apply to C. W. Thompson, 13 West Street.

The Wilson,

America's Purest

Mineral Spring Water,

Is used in making our celebrated

Belfast Ginger Ale and Sarsaparilla, Lemon Soda, Club Soda, Vichy, etc.

Hotels and Families supplied.

Try a sample order of these goods, and be convinced of their superiority, purity, and medicinal qualities.

Do not drink carbonated beverages made from polluted and so-called distilled waters.

All of our beverages bottled at the spring.

We ship only in glass, and all bottles and demijohns are sterilized before being filled.

Wilson Spring and Hotel Co.
45 ARCH STREET.

Instruct your waiter
to bring a bottle of

Pfaff's "Monogram" Lager.

If you will do this, it will not be necessary for us to expatiate upon the good qualities of our production. You can judge for yourself....

H. & J. PFAFF BREWING COMPANY,
Telephone 2608. 16 ARCH STREET, BOSTON.

DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S "Barrister" and "La Fernandina" CIGARS SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

BIRD

Boston, Wednesday, June 27, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 42.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 27.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "The Continentals" . . . . . Brooke
2. OVERTURE, "Merry Wives of Windsor" . . . . . Nicolai
3. WALTZ, "Morgenblätter" . . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION, "Fortune Teller" . . . . . Herbert
5. OVERTURE, "Mignon" . . . . . Thomas
6. CZARDAS . . . . . Hartmann
7. LARGO (First Time) . . . . . Händel
   Violin Solo, Mr. Otto Roth
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
8. INVITATION TO DANCE . . . . . Weber
9. LES DRAGONS DE VILLARS . . . . . Maillard
10. TURKISH PATROL . . . . . Michaelis
11. WALTZ, "Espana" . . . . . Waldteufel
12. MARCH, "Under the Double Eagle" . . . . . Wagner

Steinway Pianos used.

DRINK
Schlitz
THE BEER THAT MADE MILWAUKEE FAMOUS.
RECEIVED THE HIGHEST AWARD FOR PURITY.
CALL FOR IT HERE.
FOR ORDERS SEND TO
JOS. CAHM,
125 PURCHASE STREET.
Telephone, 954 Boston.

TRADE MARK
THE B & E B. Co.
TANNHAEUSER EXPORT BEER.
Philadelphia Ale on Draught sold at these concerts.
SOL. BACHARACH,
New England Agent,
508-510 Atlantic Avenue, Boston.
Telephone 3805.

C. W. THOMPSON & COMPANY,
MUSIC PUBLISHERS, 13 WEST STREET, - BOSTON.

Ask to see the following hits of the "Pops," arranged for Piano: —
HARVARD CAMP MARCH . . . . . H. H. Fox
HARVARD VOLUNTEERS MARCH . . . . . G. W. Lunt
BAGATELLE . . . . . Frank E. Jonson
LOST IN DREAMS. Reverie . . . . . Max Zach
CRUISER HARVARD MARCH . . . . . Gustav Strube

Piano arrangements of all the favorites of the "Pops" on sale.

Hygeia Lithia Water,
Sparkling and Still.
By its use you will avoid the germs of disease which natural MINERAL WATERS are liable to contain.
Sold at these concerts
AND BY
S. S. PIERCE CO.

AMERICAN TOUR
OF
Ossip Gabrilowitsch,
The Eminent Russian Pianist,
Beginning in November, 1900.
Address
H. W. SNOW, 141 Fifth Ave., New York City.
Eastern Representative,
L. H. RUDGETT, New Music Hall, Huntington Ave., Boston
EVERETT PIANO USED.

PURE BEER
Harvard
BREW. CO'S $1000.00
PURE BEER
Sold at these Concerts
IN BOTTLES ONLY
20¢ PER BOTTLE.

The only Beer on Draught served at these concerts is BARTHOLOMAY'S ROCHESTER LAGER.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

Boston, Thursday, June 28, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 43.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

THURSDAY, JUNE 28.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Massachusetts Volunteers"	Metcalf
2.	OVERTURE, "Freischütz"	Weber
3.	KAISER WALTZ	Strauss
4.	SELECTION from "Faust"	Gounod
5.	OVERTURE, "Zampa"	Hérold
6.	a. ANGELUS, b. FETE BOHEME, from "Scènes Pittoresques"	Massenet
7.	LAMENTO	Slocum
8.	FINALE OF ACT I., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
9.	POTPOURRI, "Musical Illusion" (First Time)	Schreiner
10.	WALTZ, "Les Patineurs"	Waldteufel
11.	HUSARENRITT	Spindler
12.	MARCH, "Boccaccio"	Suppé

Steinway Pianos used.

The two great successes now being played in London will be produced for the first time in America early in the autumn.

"ROSE OF PERSIA," Comic Opera. By Arthur Sullivan.

"THE MESSENGER BOY," Musical Comedy. By Caryll and Monckton.

Scores and Separate Numbers now ready.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th Street, - NEW YORK.

You Can

Have your last season's outfit dyed or cleansed and refinished so it will look like new, by our French process. Why discard soiled clothing when it can be overhauled and worn as second best? You can

Rely On

Our methods of cleansing, and need not hesitate to trust us with articles of the most delicate textures.

We dye or cleanse and refinish PROPERLY all materials of household use and clothing of all kinds.

Lewando's

W. L. CROSBY, General Manager.

French Cleansers, Fancy Dyers, Fine Launderers.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
17 Temple Place, Boston.
479 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Established 70 years. Largest in America.

Bundles called for and delivered. Telephones in all offices.

Van Nostrand's Bunker Hill Lager isn't a tinted soda water. It is a good, old, reliable beer, brewed in the good, old-fashioned way.

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS.

The chief characteristic of the bull-dog is pertinacity. The unfaltering determination to make the finest ale the world ever saw results in Van Nostrand's P. B. Ale. Drink it.

COAT ROOM
AT
LEFT OF MAIN ENTRANCE.

Garments, Umbrellas, and Bicycles Checked Free.

Norfolk Brewery, Boston.

Main Office and Brewery, Cor. Columbus Avenue, Cedar and Centre Sts., Roxbury.

Telephone, 56 Roxbury.

City Depot, 361 Atlantic Avenue

Telephone, 1152 Boston.

HABICH & COMPANY.

H. WM. HABICH. Brewers of EDWARD RUHL.

Ale, Porter, and Lager Beer.

Leading Refreshments at these most popular "Pops":

NORFOLK CABINET (Golden Color),
NORFOLK BISMARCK BRÄU (Dark).

THOMPSON & LEAVITT

WINES

SPIRITS

TEAS AND

CIGARS

185 and 187 State Street, Boston

The only Beer on Draught served at these concerts is BARTHOLOMAY'S ROCHESTER LAGER.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

MECHANICS' HALL "POPS" PROGRAMME.
PUBLISHED EVERY EVENING DURING THE SUMMER SEASON.

Boston, Friday, June 29, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 44.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS.

The advertising columns in the Programme are controlled SOLELY by F. R. COMEE, Mechanics' Hall, to whom all communications should be addressed.

FRIDAY, JUNE 29.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Twentieth Century" . . . . . Dwyer
2. OVERTURE, "Phèdre" . . . . . Massenet
3. WALTZ, "Thousand and One Nights" . . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION, "Fatinitza" . . . . . Suppé
5. PRELUDE to "Lohengrin" . . . . . Wagner
6. THREE DANCES from "Henry VIII." . . . . . German
7. LE DERNIER SOMMEIL DE LA VIERGE . . . . . Massenet
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
8. HUNGARIAN MARCH . . . . . Berlioz
9. OVERTURE, "Poet and Peasant" . . . . . Suppé
   'Cello Solo, Mr. J. Keller
10. PELL-MELL . . . . . Conradi
11. POLKA, "Mama-Papa" . . . . . Bayer
12. TABASCO MARCH . . . . . Chadwick

Steinway Pianos used.

The United States Hotel,
Saratoga Springs, N.Y.

Under a continuous management for twenty-five years.

Without a peer in its appointments, service, and liberal management.

The largest structure of its kind in the world.

Built entirely of brick.

The Hotel and court cover over seven acres.

For further information, rates, etc., address

GAGE & PERRY,
Proprietors,
UNITED STATES HOTEL,
Saratoga Springs, N.Y.

Veuve Chaffard.

Pure Olive Oil

In Honest Bottles.

The Beer that's BREWED in GLASS.
Served at the "POPS."
Colonial Beer.
SOUTHER BREWING COMPANY,
Roxbury, Mass.

ON SALE AT THE "POPS."

Estabrook & Eaton's

WELL-KNOWN AND POPULAR BRANDS.

MARGUERITE, Conchas,	10c., 3 for 25c.
MARGUERITE, Perfectos,	10c. each
EL DELICTOSA, Conchas,	10c., 3 for 25c.
MANUEL GARCIA, Stillettos,	15c., 2 for 25c.
BOCK & CO., Especiales de E. & E.,	20c., 5 for $1.00

You will be sure of a good smoke if you order any of the above standard brands.

The only Beer on Draught served at these concerts is BARTHOLOMAY'S ROCHESTER LAGER.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE "POPS." MECHANICS' HALL.

BIRD

Boston, Saturday, June 30, 1900. Fifteenth Season. Summer, 1900.
Published by C. A. ELLIS. Vol. I. No. 45.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

SATURDAY, JUNE 30.

CLOSING NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Hoch Habsburg" . . . . . Kral
2. OVERTURE, "Raymond" . . . . . Thomas
3. WALTZ, "Bei uns z'Haus" . . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION from "The Serenade" . . . . . Herbert
5. OVERTURE, "Tannhäuser" . . . . . Wagner
6. TWO SLAVIC DANCES . . . . . Dvorak
7. EN SOURDINE, for Strings . . . . . Tellam
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
8. SELECTION from "Fencing Master" . . . . . De Koven
9. MARCH, "Black Bess" . . . . . Strube
10. OVERTURE, "Light Cavalry" . . . . . Suppé
11. WALTZ, "Jolly Fellows" . . . . . Vollstedt
12. MARCH, "Stars and Stripes" . . . . . Sousa

Steinway Pianos used.

GREAT WESTERN
CHAMPAGNE

A natural, genuine champagne, of the finest quality produced in America.

Sold by Wine Merchants, Grocers, and Druggists.

CHARLES B. PERKINS & CO.
Choice selection of our
CIGARS
Always on sale here. Also our
NUBIA CIGARETTES.
Made of the finest quality of Turkish Tobacco.

Grand Vin
Chateau Lafite, 1895.
SOLD HERE.

D. LEIDEN'S
Sparkling Hock
AND
Sparkling Moselle.

The President Suspender
For sale at the following stores: —
F. H. Chamberlain,
663 Washington St.
Continental Clothing House,
Cor. Washington & Boylston Sts.
Josiah T. Dyer,
47 Boylston St.
J. F. & W. H. Falvey,
415 Broadway, So. Boston, Mass.
Gilchrist & Co.,
Winter and Washington Sts.
Glen Shirt and Collar Co.,
121 Tremont St.
George F. Magrane,
77 Milk, cor. Federal St.
Mannis & Safford,
129 Court St.
Leopold Morse & Co.,
Washington St., cor. Brattle St.
The Nickerson Co.,
345 Washington St.
Spring Lane Furnishing Store,
279 Washington St.
S. Vorenberg & Co.,
Washington and Hanover Sts.
R. H. White Co.,
Washington St.
Shepard, Norwell & Co.,
Winter Street.

The President Suspender

Up to the hour, more popular than ever. New and improved metal trimmings, guaranteed to wear to the satisfaction of the purchaser.

$1,500 IN CASH

to purchasers of President Suspenders. For particulars inquire of dealer.

The C. A. Edgarton Mfg. Co., Shirley, Mass.,
Sole licensees for the manufacture of the President Suspender in the United States.

We are serving
A delicious quality of
Ginger Ale
AND Sarsaparilla
VARTRAY
Have YOU tried it?

VARTRAY WATER CO.
BUFFALO, N.Y.

ASK THE WAITER

The only Beer on Draught served at these concerts is BARTHOLOMAY'S ROCHESTER LAGER.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, APRIL 25, 1903

The Pops

One can hardly realize that the twenty-second symphony season ends during the coming week, and on the following Monday evening, May 4, the eighteenth season of the "Pops" is at hand, with the usual eight weeks during May and June. It seems quite unnecessary to go into the details of these popular entertainments, every feature of which will be practically the same as last year, save one very essential factor, the conductor. After five years of most satisfactory and gratifying service by Messrs. Max Zach and Gustav Strube as joint conductors, the management has decided to make a change. Mr. T. Adamowski, who, nine years ago in old Music Hall, conducted during the most successful season ever known in the seventeen years of the Pops, has been selected to again wield the baton over an orchestra of fifty players from the ranks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, surely a sufficient guarantee of the musical standing of the concerts.

In connection with this change in the leadership, it may be of interest to recall the conductors from the beginning, seventeen years ago. They were as follows: 1885 Ad Neuendorff, 1886 John C. Mullaly, 1887 Wilhelm Rietzel and Ad Neuendorff, 1888 Franz Kneisel and Ad Neuendorff, 1889 Ad Neuendorff, 1890 No concerts, 1891 T. Adamowski and E. Gruenberg, 1892 T. Adamowski, 1893 T. Adamowski, 1894 T. Adamowski, 1895 A. de Novellis, 1896 Max Zach, 1897 Max Zach and Leo Schultz; and for the past five years, 1898-1902, Messrs. Max Zach and Gustav Strube. All the conductors, with the exception of Neuendorff and Novellis, were members of the Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Adamowski has been busy for the past month with the preparation of some unusually attractive programmes, and his recognized artistic temperament is sure to make itself felt, both in their makeup and rendition.

There will be the usual light refreshments and all the other essential features will again be maintained. Reserved seats, both at the tables on the floor and in the first balcony, will be for sale Monday morning, April 27, at Symphony Hall.

THE POPS.

On Monday evening, May 4, the eighteenth season of the "Pops" is at hand, with the usual eight weeks during May and June. It seems unnecessary to go into the details of these popular entertainments, every feature of which will be practically the same as last year, save the conductor. After five years of satisfactory and gratifying service by Messrs. Max Zach and Gustav Strube as joint conductors, the management has decided to make a change. Mr. T. Adamowski, who nine years ago in old Music Hall conducted during the most successful season ever known in the seventeen years of the Pops, has been selected to lead an orchestra of fifty players from the ranks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In connection with this change in the leadership, it may be of interest to recall the conductors from the beginning, seventeen years ago. They were as follows: 1885, Ad Neuendorff; 1886, John C. Mullaly; 1887, Wilhelm Rietzel and Ad Neuendorff; 1888, Franz Kneisel and Ad Neuendorff; 1889, Ad Neuendorff; 1890, no concerts; 1891, T. Adamowski and E. Gruenberg; 1892, T. Adamowski; 1893, T. Adamowski; 1894, T. Adamowski; 1895, A. de Novellis; 1896, Max Zach; 1897, Max Zach and Leo Schultz, and for the past five years, 1898-1902, Messrs. Max Zach and Gustav Strube. All the conductors, with the exception of Neuendorff and Novellis, were members of the Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Adamowski has been busy for the past month with the preparation of some unusually attractive programs, and his recognized artistic temperament is sure to make itself felt, both in their makeup and rendition. There will be the usual light refreshments and all the other essential features will again be maintained. Reserved seats, both at the tables on the floor and in the first balcony, will be for sale Monday morning, April 27, at Symphony Hall.

THE "POP" CONCERTS.

Five years after the founding of the Boston symphony orchestra there came a suggestion of some popular concerts which should be a summer sequence to the symphony series. And so in 1885 there began in old Music hall what were known as the promenade concerts, until brevity and a tendency toward unique nomenclature resulted in the "Pops," by which latter title these concerts are more familiarly known. After varied lengths of duration these summer entertainments were finally brought to a season of eight weeks, during May and June, and have so remained for the past 10 years or more.

After five years of most satisfactory and gratifying service by Messrs Max Zach and Gustav Strube as joint conductors the management has decided to make a change. Mr T. Adamowski, who nine years ago in old Music hall conducted during the most successful season ever known in the 17 years of the "Pops," has been selected to again wield the baton over an orchestra of 50 players from the ranks of the Boston symphony orchestra, surely a sufficient guarantee of the musical standing of the concerts.

It may be of interest to know the arrangement of such an orchestra, which is as follows: 10 first violins, 8 second violins, 4 violas, 4 violoncelli, 4 double basses, 2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 clarinets, 2 bassoons, 4 horns, 2 trumpets, 3 trombones, 1 tuba, 1 tympani, 1 harp.

Mr Adamowski has been busy for the past month with the preparation of some unusually attractive programs and his recognized artistic temperament is sure to make itself felt, both in their makeup and rendition.

There will be the usual light refreshments, and all the other essential features will again be maintained. Reserved seats, both at the tables on the floor and in the first balcony, will be for sale tomorrow, Monday morning, at Symphony hall.

"Pops" Will Begin To morrow Nigh Under Conductor Adamowski.

THE "POP" CONCERTS.

The "Pop" concerts at Symphony hall will begin tomorrow evening, and for the next two months will be given nightly, except on Sunday. Good music, refreshments and all the attractive features of past seasons will be provided and the immense patronage which those popular entertainments have enjoyed for many years will undoubtedly be again extended. The orchestra will number upward of 50 men, drawn from Symphony players, and light music of the best class will predominate in the programs.

Mr T. Adamowski, will be the conductor and he has given much time to the selection of new music to be played here at these concerts for the first time. The following are the selections for tomorrow evening:

Overture, The Mastersingers of Nuremberg.....Wagner
Intermezzo, Contes d'Hoffmann.....Offenbach
(First time.)
Suite from ballet, La Belle au Bois Dormant.....Tschaikowski
(First time.)
Concert overture, In Bohemia.....H K Hadley
(First time.)
Fantasia on La Boheme.....Puccini
(First time.)
Suite, Henry VIII.....Saint-Saens
Hymn to St Cecilia.....Gounod
Violin solo, Mr Karl Ondricek.
Organ, Mr Snow.
Festival march.....R Strauss
(First time.)
Salut d'Amour.....Ed Elgar
(First time.)
Espana.....Chabrier
Overture, Fledermaus.....Joh Strauss
Coronation march.....Ed German

—Mr and Mrs J. M. Sears and party, Mr and Mrs Wilhelm Gericke, Mr and Mrs H. L. Higginson, Mr Arthur Richmond, Mr George Eustis, Dr George Monks, Mr F. S. Converse, Miss Estelle Kimball and party, Miss Susan Day Kimball, Mr and Mrs Josef Adamowski, Mr and Mrs Fairchild, Miss Ethel Gibson, Miss Tudor, Miss Boardman, Mr Clayton Johns, Mr Otto Roth, Mr W. P. Blake, Mr F. Bartlett and Mr T. Dennie Boardman are among those who have engaged tables for the opening of the "Pop" concerts at Symphony hall tomorrow night.

Journal

THE "POP" CONCERTS.

The Pop concerts at Symphony Hall will begin tomorrow evening and for the next two months will be given nightly, except on Sunday. Good music, refreshments and all the attractive features of past seasons will be provided, and the immense patronage which these popular entertainments have enjoyed for many years will undoubtedly be again extended. The orchestra will number upward of fifty men, drawn from Symphony players, and light music of the best class will predominate in the programs. Mr. T. Adamowski will be the conductor, and he has given much time to the selection of new music to be played here at these concerts for the first time. The following are the selections for tomorrow evening:

Overture, "The Mastersingers of Nuremburg".....Wagner
Intermezzo, "Contes d'Hoffmann"...Offenbach
(First time.)
Suite from ballet, "La Belle au Bois Dormant".....Tschaikowsky
(First time.)
Concert overture, "In Boheme".H. K. Hadley
(First time.)
Fantasia on "La Bohemia".....Puccini
(First time.)
Suite, "Henry VIII."....Saint-Saens
Hymn to St. Cecilia.....Gounod
Violin solo, Mr. Karl Ondricek.
Organ, Mr. Snow.
Festival march.....R. Strauss
(First time.)
"Salut d'Amour".....Ed. Elga
(First time.)
"Espana".....Chabrier
Overture, "Fledermaus".....Joh. Strauss
"Coronation March".....Ed. German

"POP" CONCERT SERIES OPENS TOMORROW NIGHT

Journal

Final Rehearsal of Boston Symphony Crowded With Smart Set.

Mr. Fred Comee is being congratulated upon all sides in securing so popular a leader for the "Pop Concerts" as Mr. "Tim" Adamowski, and the two months' series of these always well attended course of concerts which open tomorrow evening will fill Symphony Hill with one of the largest and most brilliant audiences of the season.

Already there are a large number of tables engaged, and among the fashionables who will be "in evidence" tomorrow night are Mr. and Mrs. J. Montgomery Sears, Major and Mrs. Henry L. Higginson, Dr. George Monks, Mr. Clayton Johns, Miss Ethel Gibson and friends, Mr. and Mrs. Wilhelm Gericke, Mr. and Mrs. James B. Forsythe, Miss Estelle Kimball and party, Miss Susan Day Kimball, Mr. and Mrs. Fred O. North, Mr. Fred S. Converse, Mr. Arthur Richmond, Mr. and Mrs. John C. Fiarchild, Miss Madelaine Boardman, Miss Tudor and others.

[106]

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, JUNE 26, 1900.

HARVARD MEN IN EVIDENCE.

It Was Graduates' Night at the Pop Concert, and the Occasion Was a Very Lively and Enjoyable One.

Harvard was in evidence all over Mechanic's hall last night, and the pop concert was enlivened by cheers for Harvard and class cries, and when there was any danger of a lull one of the students took the place of the leader of the band, and from there directed the others on the floor, and beat time for them while they shouted at the top of their lungs for Harvard.

It was graduates' night, and they had the front of the hall, and at intervals the other classes held positions marked for them with crimson banners, bearing the class year. The tables near the banners were surrounded by students, accompanied by their sweethearts, sisters and female friends. The health of the college, the classes and individuals were drunk over and over.

In the galleries a curious crowd watched the college boys, and found more pleasure in their antics than in the music. The students were reasonably quiet, and there was no sign of disturbance, nor were there any interruptions of the band. At times the music of the band was rounded out in volume by the students.

The first number on the program was a tribute to the college boys, and they received the opening notes of Lund's "Harvard Volunteers" with cheers and applauded vociferously when the band had finished the last notes.

There was little opportunity to do more than hum the music that followed until the next to the closing number on the program, but between the pieces while the band was resting Harvard was made known to the audience, and the class cries, sometimes in chorus, sometimes from individual classes, shook the rafters. It needed only a suggestion from one person to set the cries agoing, and they were given with a will.

When the band struck up the familiar air of "Fair Harvard" the boys took up the refrain and sang it through. The words rolled out with fine effect and every one was on his feet, the female portion doing their share to make the volume greater. When the band had played the last number the class banners were taken from their standards and folded away as souvenirs of the day.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, JUNE 26, 1900

A NIGHT OF HARVARD CHEERS

Graduates, from Old '53 Down to Omnipotent '99, Overran Mechanics' Building Last Evening and Turned the "Pop" Concert into a Reunion of Classes

At about eight o'clock last evening a serpentine line of Harvard graduates, waiting to secure the tickets which had been reserved for them at the box office, held the sidewalk and the steps to Mechanics Building. Within the orchestra was tuning up for the opening number of the concert programme for the annual graduates' night. The players tucked handkerchiefs over their collars, for they knew it was going to be a warm evening. The immense hall was packed from floor to second balcony. Harvard men in classes, Harvard men individually and Harvard men with their wives and sisters and cousins, to say nothing of a few aunts, occupied the reserved seats, while the well-dressed but unclassed of both sexes filled the balcony and gazed with keen relish and amusement on the animated scene below. Crimson, of course, was the hue of the evening. All about the balcony sides were crimson flags with the names of the crew and the nine printed on them in black. Standards upholding crimson banners announcing the various classes were distributed among the floor tables, and behind the musicians was a huge Harvard, in crimson and white.

It took the fellows some time to get together and grip hands and find out where one had kept himself for the past year and other things which one college man asks another. The first two numbers were actually heard at the rear of the hall, and then came the tumbling of the storm. '99 opened up with a cracking, clean-cut yell, to be followed by a group of '90 men, who were there for business, and proved it by removing their coats. Then came '95, '88, '97, and a dozen others, some with nine long Harvards, others with the class yell, with a tag for the crew, or the nine, or unfortunate stroke Higginson. When the class of '85 rose in its might and cheered Governor Roosevelt, the other classes took the hint and passed the magic name round. It was a splendid crowd for cheering. In the two intermissions—there should have been six—past members of the glee club held the aisles and sang "Here 's to Johnny Harvard," "Piper Heidsick," "Schneider's Band," and other lyrics, to the great delight of the men who could not sing, but who instantly recalled moonlit nights in the old quadrangle. When Conductor Strube started on "Fair Harvard" the graduates sprang to their feet, sang the first verse with a vim and found, most of them, that they had forgotten, temporarily at least, the words of the second verse. Then the men of '90, who had worked themselves up to a fine pitch of excitement, rose and marched in single file through the aisles, and, of course, '97 had to do the same thing, with a few additional "stunts." Two men mounted the platform and directed concerted cheering again for the crew and the nine, although it stuck in the throat of one of them to let in the nine. He could not forget that fifteen to five score.

In the first intermission, a sentimental young woman in the balcony reached over and cautiously drew up a flag. Her action was noted, and in a twinkling every banner and flag along the three sides was seized and treasured for the rest of the evening, at least. The class standards were not attacked until later. Mr. Strube was very gracious and played whatever the men demanded, including "Up the Street," "Whistling Rufus" and "Stars and Stripes Forever," but after all the music was merely incidental.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER.

Established 1813.

The Official Paper of the State

The Official Paper of the City.

TUESDAY MORNING, JUNE 26, 1900.

"HARVARD NIGHT."

Harvard graduates' night at the "Pops" broke all records of attendance for the several seasons of these concerts. Every seat on the floor and in the balcony of Mechanics Hall was occupied by a throng of over 4000 people.

Doubters of the value of Harvard cheering should have been present. From the different tables, where were displayed the crimson banners bearing class numerals from '53 to '00, rose a continual chorus heard in the olden times on river and diamond and gray November football fields.

Old class rivalries flashed out once more, but found expression in generous cheering, and for Harvard, the nine, the eleven, the track team and the crew, rivalries and sympathies were joined.

The entire floor was reserved to Harvard men, from '53, represented by Prof. J. M. Pierce, down to the glad group which underwent the ruin of cap and gown in Friday's rain.

A feature of the cheering was the enthusiasm for Theodore Roosevelt.

The galleries and the rafters of the hall were hung with banners inscribed with the names of Harvard's athletes of this year, but about 10 p.m. every banner accessible banished as though by magic, and became a part of the world's collection of souvenirs.

The orchestra rendered beautifully the programme offered, and did extra work as well. The Harvard men called clamorously for "Up the Street" and other music peculiarly theirs, and would not be denied.

Asst. Manager Comee received this characteristic telegram from Theodore Roosevelt:—

"I am awfully sorry, but it is absolutely impossible for me to come on. I wish I could."

It would be impossible to mention every name which invoked particular applause, but such football heroes as were present, including Cabot, Donald, Burden and Daly, were wildly cheered as they entered the hall.

Track and field men tasted glory as well, and members of the absent nine and crew were never for a moment forgotten.

Boston Journal.

TUESDAY, JUNE 26, 1900.

The "Pops" went off with a bang last night.

It was "Harvard night" at Mechanics' Hall, and everything wore a roseate tinge from the big signs over the main entrance to the sweetest bit of a girl in the most obscure corner of the building.

There was scarcely a seat to be had either on the floor, studded with innumerable tables and chairs, or in the balcony. The red of Harvard was everywhere; it flaunted from the balustrades, hung from the posts, bayonetted the hall in a hundred places at the peaks of solid staffs, and the eye of each new comer was caught by the word "Harvard" in fiery red far down the crimson vista over the orchestra and the stage.

Good to the Boys.

Mr. Gustav Strube conducted the concert last night, and he was very good to the young boys and the old boys of Fair Harvard. When they called "We want 'Whistling Rufus'" they got "Whistling Rufus." And when they asked for "Up the Street," they got that, too.

The hall was decorated with one particular object in view—to bring together at appointed places members of the various classes of recent years, the dates of graduation being printed in black on banners of brilliant red.

And the boys—some of them were old boys at that—made for these centre points as the compass needle seeks the north. Cheer upon cheer rang through the hall for this little bits and time and again the orchestra was lost in the tumult of the shouting.

Hundreds of Flags.

About the balcony were hung hundreds of flags which bore the names of the crew, the ball nine, the foot ball eleven, and the track team of 1900, and more than once the members of these organizations were cheered jointly and severally.

The music of "Fair Harvard" was the signal for a pretty scene. As the first low notes set the air to sounding the deep voices of the one-time students caught up the tune and the chorus swelled at the last to a mighty, blood-stirring cyclone of melody. They stood and waved their hats and cheered as undergraduates cheer on the foot ball field for Alma Mater.

So Many Pretty Girls.

Of pretty girls there were so many that they could not be numbered. It was a thoroughly Harvard assemblage from beginning to end, and the informal class reunions were by no means the least important events of the evening.

The music was of the best, and was selected with particular reference to the occasion.

[10?]

BOSTON HERALD.
PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CVII., NO. 177.
TUESDAY, JUNE 26, 1900.

BIG HARVARD GRADUATES' NIGHT.

Roosevelt's Name Cheered Again and Again and "Whistling Rufus" Had to Be Played to Please the Crowd.

Full 40 classes—and be sure that this is not read 40 full classes, for such was not the case, despite the plentitude of good fellowship and general jollity which marked the occasion—gathered at the Pops last evening to do justice to Harvard "Graduates' night." They did justice and more, and in doing so, the wonder is that the roof of the big Mechanics' Hall was not incidentally taken off. Such cheering, such a lot of cheering, and such hearty cheering rarely was heard before outside of a football field. Everybody had a good time—all seemed to enjoy the fun, whether actively in it or not.

Each class had been assigned places in the "bull pen," the sections being marked with flags bearing the class numerals. They ran from "'53" up, few being missed. As is customary on Harvard night at the Pops, the first two numbers of the programme were allowed to roll by in peace and then came the inevitable jolly row.

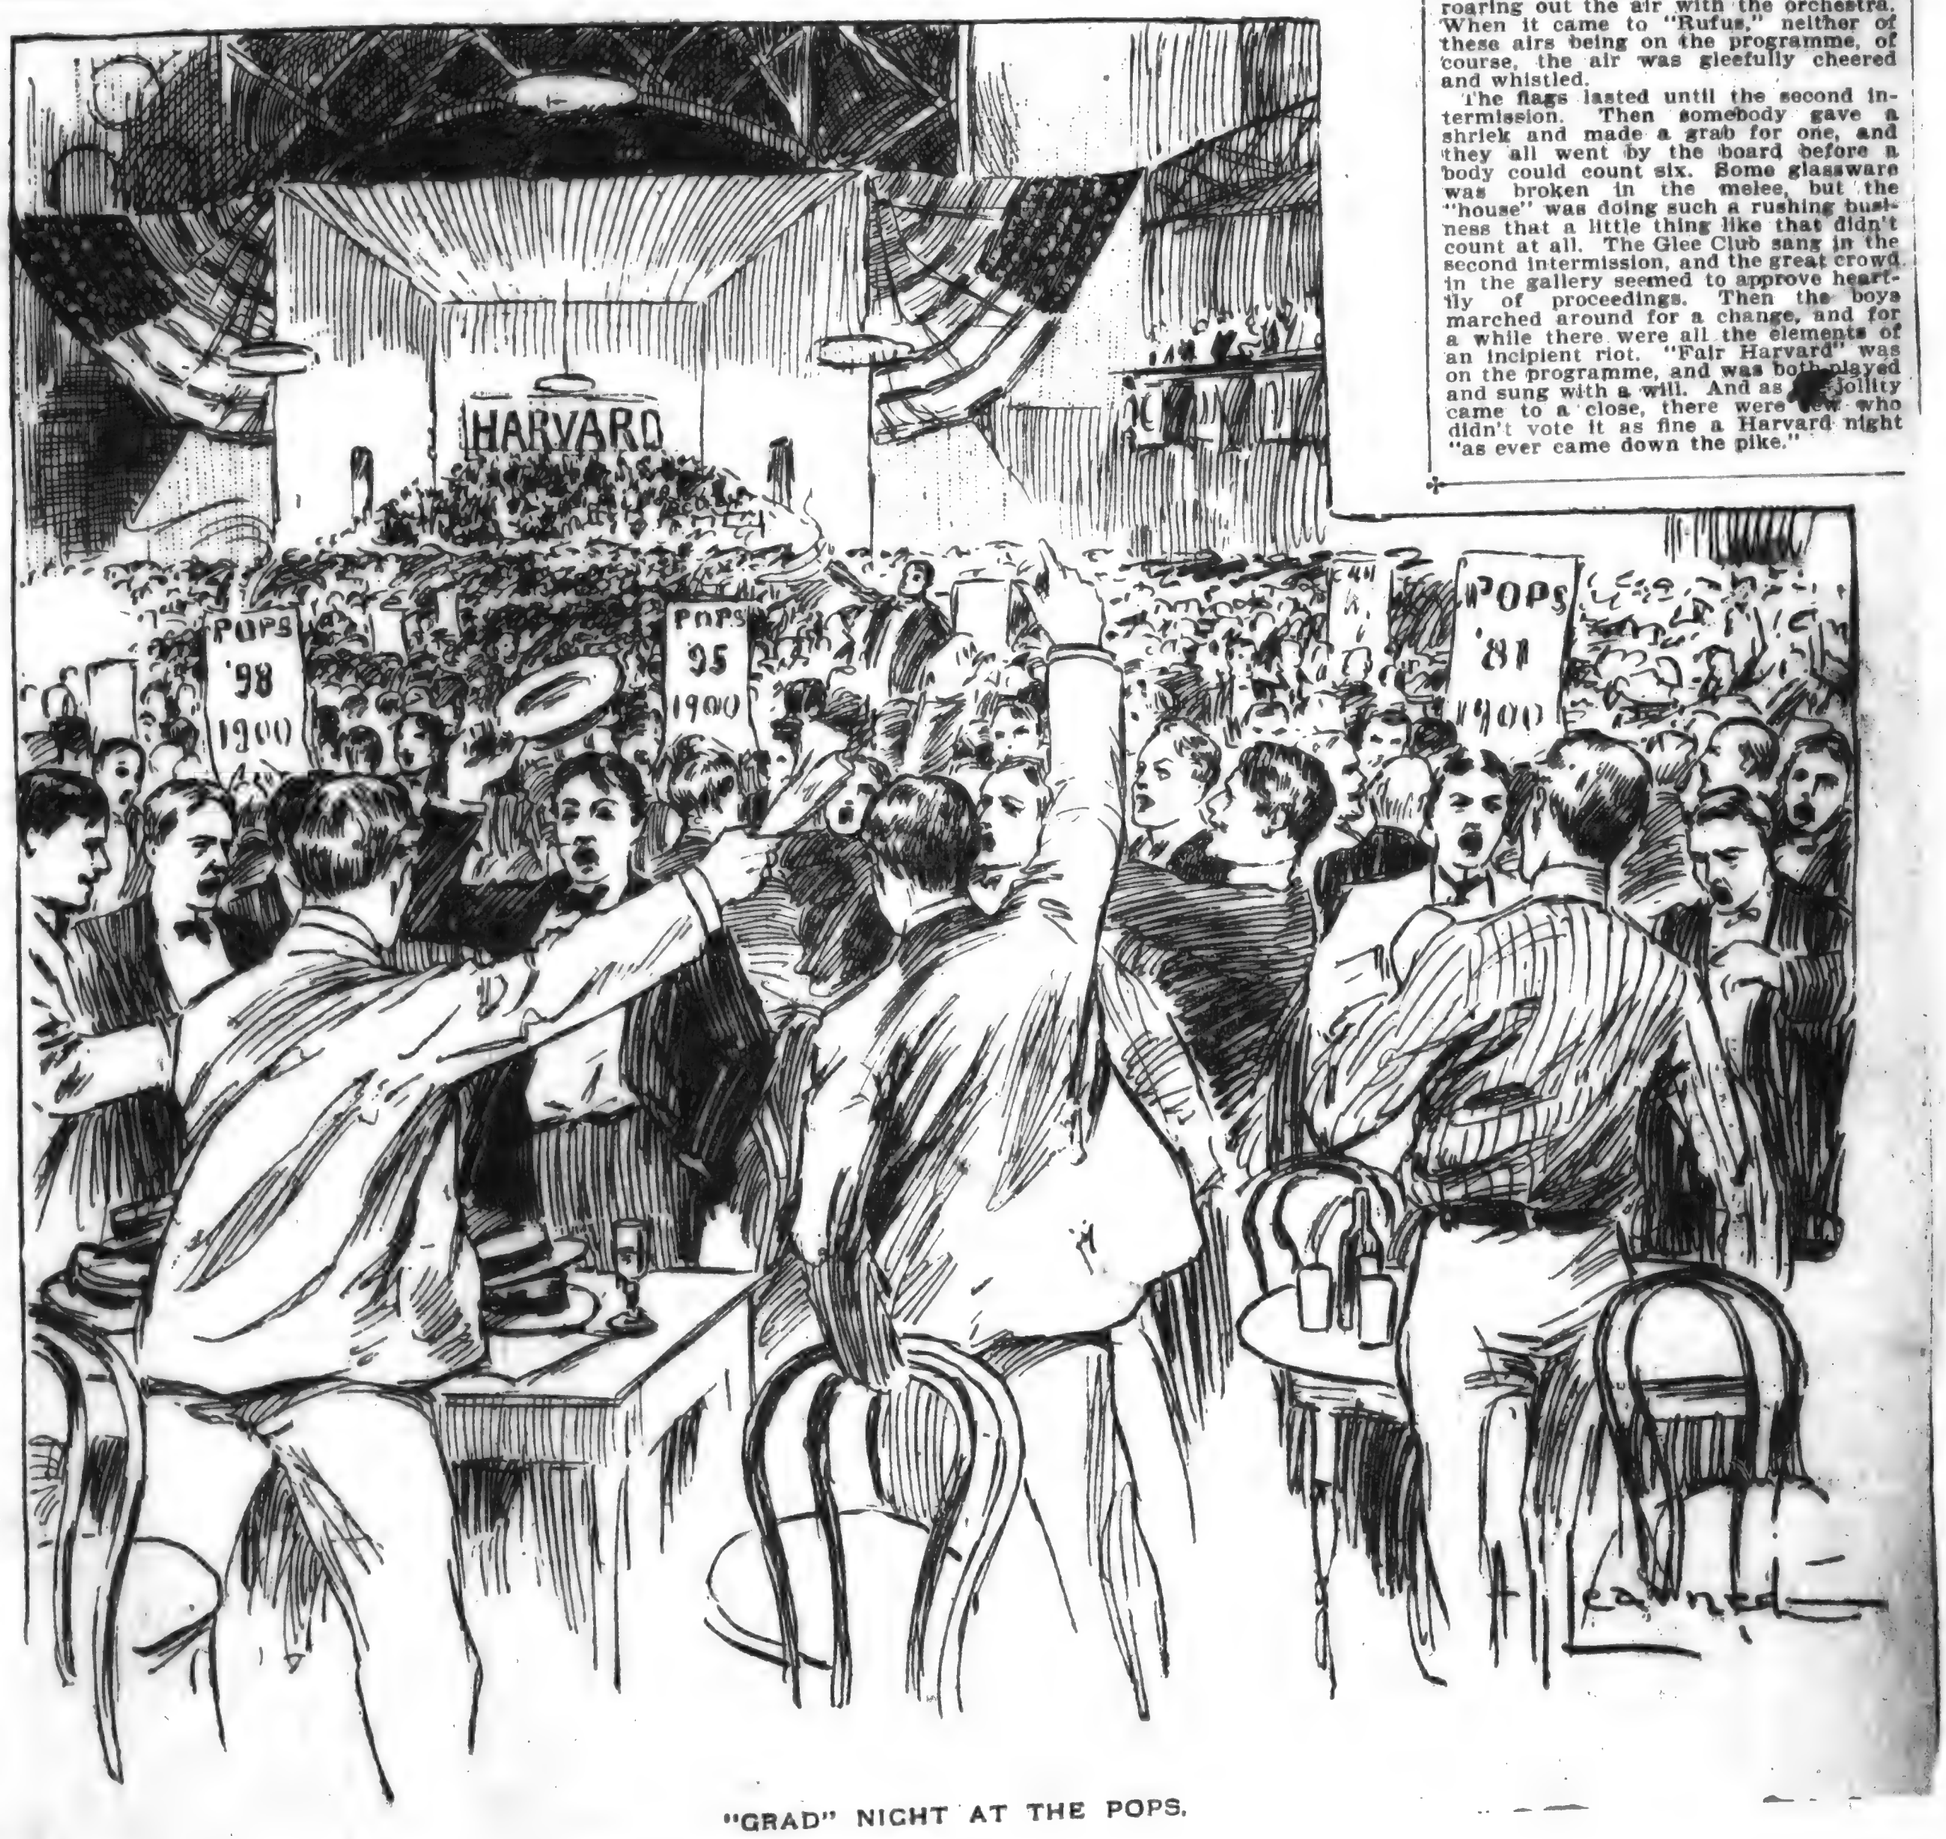
The class of '90 began it—in fact, '90 made itself most conspicuous of all straight through the evening. After the overture to "Martha" was played, '90 got up and yelled itself crimson in the face. Eighty-five and '95 vied with each other for second place, '90 came in strong again, and then it was a free-for-all. Perhaps the strongest and best cheering was done by '97 and '98. First a class would cheer itself, then it would cheer some other class.

But '90 was in the game to stay. Perhaps the fact that Secretary Lund had presented each member of the class with a fine beer stein, with "Harvard" and a big "90" on it, had something to do with the hilarity. The steins had plenty of work to do, anyway. And '90 speedily warmed up to the occasion. First it took its coats off—an example which members of other classes speedily followed—and then it began again to cheer and make a racket. When the first intermission came, it got a goodly bunch together and started to sing. The singing was a fine success, and was kept up. And '90 was facetious, too—it had piled up on one table a stack of hats almost as high as a flag staff.

One of the most conspicuous features of the evening was the cheering for Roosevelt. The class of '85 cheered him—he is one of them—and the other classes quickly took the cue. Soon there was an ovation for the rough rider. 'Ninety-nine made the rafters tremble for him, and '97, not content with this, yelled for "Teddy Roosevelt." It looked as though Harvard would be straight Republican this year.

It would not have been a Harvard night without "Up the Street" and "Whistling Rufus," of course, and as Conducter Gustav Strube had his usual fund of good humor with him, he gave them "Up the Street" as soon as the demand for it became unanimous, a thousand lusty-lunged old Harvard men roaring out the air with the orchestra. When it came to "Rufus," neither of these airs being on the programme, of course, the air was gleefully cheered and whistled.

The flags lasted until the second intermission. Then somebody gave a shriek and made a grab for one, and they all went by the board before a body could count six. Some glassware was broken in the melee, but the "house" was doing such a rushing business that a little thing like that didn't count at all. The Glee Club sang in the second intermission, and the great crowd in the gallery seemed to approve heartily of proceedings. Then the boys marched around for a change, and for a while there were all the elements of an incipient riot. "Fair Harvard" was on the programme, and was both played and sung with a will. And as the jollity came to a close, there were few who didn't vote it as fine a Harvard night "as ever came down the pike."



"GRAD" NIGHT AT THE POPS.

JUNE 19, 1900.

HARVARD NIGHT AT THE "POPS"

Crimson Glow in the Decorations and Illuminations.

It Was a Glorious Time, with Songs and Cheers That Aroused Enthusiasm—Glee Club a Prime Favorite—Hall Stripped of Its Harvard Flags at the Close.

One thousand Harvard students rolled over the Harvard bridge last night and took the great hall in Mechanics' building by storm. They sang and cheered and made Rome howl, as they always do, and such a Harvard night rarely was seen before at the "Pops." It was a great and glorious time.

They found a Harvard atmosphere, these Harvard men—everything was Harvard. As they neared Mechanics' hall they first began to realize it, for a bright crimson glow, from hundreds of electric lamps, suffused the air for blocks around. And inside it was still Harvardier. The stage had for its background a Harvard sign, each letter of which would have out-topped the biggest man on the football team. A long "1900," all in crimson, too, hung high above, with the hearty legend, "Good Luck," beneath. A hundred crimson flags made the balconies bright in a similar way, each bearing the words "Pops—H—1900" on its surface. Needless to add, these were in great demand before the evening was over. Colossal signs for each class—"1901," "1902" and "1903," all spelled out—adorned the galleries. There were crimson programmes and crimson "H's" on the shirt fronts of the waiters.

As usual, Manager C. A. Ellis and Assistant Manager F. R. Comee had laid themselves out to make it all a "go," and their success was beyond estimate.

There was a great jam of people on hand, the galleries being filled as not before this year. The floor—the famous "bull pen"—was bright with stunning gowns, many being in the crimson.

It took the boys a little while to get started. But then they made up for lost time. "Nineteen one" began the music after the first number on the programme. But after the third number, a ringing waltz, an encore was demanded, and "Glory to the Crimson" was what Conductor Gustav Strube gave them. The boys sang the air, and afterward came real Bedlam—splendid, reverberating cheering, that it was good to hear.

There was hubbub a-plenty during the first intermission, and then came probably the prettiest feature of the evening—the singing of C. S. Smith's "Harvard's Day," by the university glee club, accompanied by the orchestra. Mr. Charles N. Prouty sung the solo part and sung it well, his voice finely filling the big room. The programme included other Harvard airs, there being H. H. Fox's "Harvard Camp," the marches from the [illegible] Pudding play, "Wytche Hazelle," and the '00 Pi Eta play, "The Campaigners"; the ever present "Fair Harvard" and "Up the Street," to say nothing of generous encores.

The glee club reappeared after the second intermission and Conductor Strube took a back seat. Some good songs were sung, including one with megaphone solos, which caught the crowd squarely. In the mean time, it was strange how Mr. Comee's Harvard flags began disappearing. They were very popular. Just before the orchestra played "Fair Harvard" somebody made a grab for one of the flags on the lower balcony. It took about 20 seconds to clear the entire room of them. Some more uproar followed and the evening was over.

"Graduates' night," which always means fun, is booked for Monday, June 25, other special evenings being another "Wagner night," which is set for this evening, and "Request night," on Tuesday, June 26.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, JUNE 23, 1900

The Pop Concerts at Mechanics Hall the present season have gained rather than lost in popularity over past seasons, when the audiences tested the capacity of the old Music Hall. It is a matter of sincere regret with the patrons that the season is so short, the closing night being one week from tonight. Next Monday evening will be graduates' night, and the advance sale of seats indicate the largest audience on record. There has already been assigned [illegible] fourteen hundred seats to past graduates of Harvard, representing forty [illegible]. Tuesday, June 26, will be request night, when the programme will be devoted [illegible] compositions that have received the [illegible] during the present season. The [illegible] in full for this evening is:

[illegible] "Up to and the Gun" ..... Gerlin
[illegible] ..... Adam
[illegible] ..... Strauss
[illegible] ..... Offenbach
[illegible] ..... Lincke
[illegible] ..... Herbert
[illegible] ..... Sousa

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, JUNE 24, 1900.

THE "POP" CONCERTS.

The 15th season of "pop" concerts at Mechanics hall is fast drawing to an end, next Saturday being the closing night of a most successful season. Conductor Strube has been fortunate in the selection of his programs, and tomorrow night promises to be a memorable occasion in the history of these concerts. It will be "graduates'" night, and there will be present Harvard graduates from the different classes from 1850 to 1900. Nearly 1500 seats have already been engaged. Tuesday, June 26, will be "request" night, and the program will consist of the favorite selections of the patrons who have made applications to Mr Strube. The programs for all of the remaining concerts are of a popular order and well calculated to please. The program in full for tomorrow evening is:

Harvard Volunteers ..... Lund
Overture, Martha ..... Flotow
Waltz, Jolly Fellows ..... Vollstedt
Selection, Jack and the Beanstalk ..... Sloane
Jamaica two-step ..... Whipple, 88
Here They Come ..... Partridge
Overture, Prince Pro Tem ..... Thompson
Waltz, Estudiantina ..... Waldteufel
Selection, Serenade ..... Herbert
March, Cruiser Harvard ..... Strube
American Patrol ..... Meacham
Fair Harvard.
March, Runaway Girl ..... Ch. Von Baer

SATURDAY, JUNE 16, 1900

The Pop Concerts

The season of Pop concerts at Mechanics Hall is fast drawing to an end, as there remain only two weeks more of these most enjoyable entertainments. The surroundings are much more pleasant than ever before, which undoubtedly accounts for the large attendance each evening. Conductor Strube has shown rare skill in the selection of his programmes, and the orchestra under his direction plays with an enthusiasm which makes the performance most effective. Special nights are now in order, Monday being "Harvard" night, when the programme will be devoted principally to the compositions of college men. Tuesday, June 19, will be Wagner night, in response to many requests. The programme in full for this evening is:

March, "U. S. Volunteers" ..... Strube
Overture, "Raymond" ..... Thomas
Waltz, "O Schöner Mai" ..... Strauss
Selection, "Wizard of the Nile" ..... Herbert
Overture, "Martha" ..... Flotow
Ballet Music, "Queen of Sheba," ('Cello Obligato, Mr. J. Keller) ..... Goldmark
Gavotte for Strings ..... Gillet
American Fantasy ..... Herbert
Overture, "Pique Dame" ..... Suppé
Entr'acte, "Naila" ..... Delibes
Polka, "Love Letter" ..... Ziehrer
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever" ..... Sousa

Boston Courier.

ESTABLISHED 1795. JUNE 16, 1900.

MUSIC.

THE "POPS."

It would be quite unnecessary to put "Fly swiftly round, ye wheels of time" into a programme at Mechanics Hall. For the wheels are humming already only too fast, and in a very few weeks the last half-dozen concerts will be announced, and the members of the band will disperse for their summer engagements by lake and mountains or for their vacations of idleness, if they don't like to work all the year round. Probably in no previous year has the public attached itself so heartily to these concerts and found them so hard to give up. For, as has been said here before, all the conditions for enjoyment have been combined more proportionately and propitiously than ever before, and the little additional trouble of going up town has not bothered city patrons at all, while hosts of suburbans have found their access facilitated. Mr. Strube, who knows how to choose other people's music well no less than how to write fine and great things of his own, is arraning delightful programmes and getting them beautifully performed. So all that can be said is that word to the wise which Mrs. Jarley was wont to urge upon her publics. "Be in time—be in time!"

HOWARD MALCOM TICKNOR.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, JUNE 19, 1900

HARVARD MEN AT THE POPS

A Crimson Glory Was Over All at Mechanics' Hall Last Night—A Thousand Students Sang and Cheered.

A crimson glory was over all at the "Pops" last night, for it was Harvard night and a thousand students filled the great floor of Mechanics Hall. Crimson electric lights illumined the outside of the building, and crimson banners over the balconies, crimson "H" on the shirt fronts of the waiters, and crimson lettered legends on and about the stage made the scene one of the most brilliant that has ever marked a Harvard night at the "Pops." The management had planned to make this event a fitting opening for the long series of commencement festivities, and the realization was more successful than anybody had anticipated. The galleries were thronged with people. The floor was a dazzling blaze of color for very many of the young women carried Harvard's colors, and a large number wore crimson gowns.

One of the prettiest features of the evening was the singing of C. S. Smith's "Harvard Day," by the University Glee Club, accompanied by the orchestra. Charles N. Prouty sang the solo part, his voice finely filling the big place. The programme included other Harvard airs, there being H. H. Fox's "Harvard Camp," the marches from the 1900 Pudding play, "Wytche Hazelle," and the 1900 Pi Eta play, "The Campaigners"; the ever present "Fair Harvard" and "Up the Street," to say nothing of generous encores. The Glee Club reappeared after the second intermission and Conductor Strube laid down the baton. Some stirring songs were sung, including one with megaphone [illegible]. Meantime, it was strange how Mr. Comee's Harvard flags began disappearing. They were very popular. Just before the orchestra played "Fair Harvard" somebody snatched one on the lower balcony. It took about twenty seconds to clear the entire room of them.

"Graduates' Night," which always means fun, is booked for Monday, June 25, other special evenings being another "Wagner night," which is set for this evening, and "Request Night," on Tuesday, June 26.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, JUNE 17, 1900.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The attendance at the "Pop" concerts during the past week has more than fulfilled the expectations of the management, a fact which demonstrates the popularity of these summer evening entertainments, and it is to be regretted that the season is so near the end, as the closing night is only two weeks away. Mechanic's hall is an ideal place for these concerts, the ventilation [illegible] a great improvement over past seasons. The promenade between the entr'actes is also a very pleasant feature to the [illegible] who wish to [illegible] about. Conductor Strube has been very fortunate in the selection of his programs, which have been received with much enthusiasm each evening.

Special nights are now in order, and "Harvard night" has been appointed for tomorrow evening, when the program will be composed principally of compositions by Harvard men. In response to many requests Tuesday evening will be devoted to Wagner music. The program for tomorrow evening is:

Harvard Camp ..... H H Fox
Overture, Jolly Students ..... Suppe
Waltz, Grubenlichter ..... Zeller
Selection, The Singing Girl ..... Herbert
Harvard's Day ..... C L Smith
Overture, Zampa ..... Herold
Selection, Belle of New York ..... Kerker
March from 00 Pudding play, Wytche Haselle ..... Tapp
March from 00 Pi Eta play, The Campaigners ..... Gulick
March, Black Bess ..... Strube
Selection, Sphinx ..... Thompson
Fair Harvard.
March, Up the Street ..... Morse

Boston Courier.

ESTABLISHED 1795. JUNE 9, 1900.

MUSIC.

THE "POPS."

The management of the "Pops" is peculiarly favored in having at hand two conductors, both experienced, expert, progressive and favorites with the orchestra and audience. The usual mid-season change was made during the week. Mr. Zach retiring and Mr. Strube taking his place at the director's desk. No other change is to be noted, because the two leaders understand their duties, their powers and the disposition and tastes of the public in one and the same way. Slight differences are noticeable, perhaps, in the range of music from which the novelties of each week are drawn; but the general proportions of the symmetrical and delightful programmes remain unaltered, and every element which ought to be recognized in them has its place and its full compensation. Management and musical director both know how to appreciate the weight of any special occasion and opportunity and make such preparations as are sure to fill the special audience with delight. Technology evening was a new case in point, and the happiness and hilarity wakened by the appropriate music in the great company was heightened by the presence of many students and their new president, who was received with all the honors, and by the capital comradery shown by a host of Harvard men for the Tech fellows. It is a great season at the "Pops," this, and will make a record hard to equal.

HOWARD MALCOM TICKNOR.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, JUNE 10, 1900

THE "POP" CONCERTS.

The regular summer season of "Pop" concerts at Mechanic's hall will soon be over, as they are now entering upon the last half, the closing night being appointed for Saturday, June 30. The past week has been especially brilliant, and conductor Strube, who has a host of warm admirers among the different musical societies, has received great praise for the able and spirited manner in which he conducts the orchestra. His programs are well chosen, and admirably fitted to the nature of the concerts. The programs for the coming week are very attractive, especially on Tuesday, which will be "Military night," when the Boston fusileer veteran association and Salem cadet band will be present. The band, under the direction of Mr Jean Missud, will play the following selections: March, "The Boston Fusileers," Montalban; selections from "Runaway Girl," Monckton; Chilian dance, "Manana," Missud; "American Patrol," Meacham.

The program for tomorrow evening is as follows:

March, Hoch Habsburg ..... Kral
Overture, Stradella ..... Flotow
Waltz, Artist's Life ..... Strauss
Selection from Trovatore ..... Verdi
Overture, Phedre ..... Massenet
Two Hungarian dances (Nos 8 and 1) ..... Brahms
(First Time)
Procession of the women, Lohengrin ..... Wagner
March from Queen of Sheba ..... Gounod
Light cavalry ..... Suppe
Blue Violet mazourka ..... Ellenberg
(First Time)
Polka, Sangerlust ..... Strauss
March, Tobasco ..... Chadwick

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, JUNE 9, 1900

The present week has been most successful, as the audiences have been unusually large and appreciative. Conductor Strube, who assumed the direction of the orchestra on Wednesday evening, has a host of warm admirers, who predict for him a brilliant season. His programmes are well chosen and admirably adapted to the spirit of the concerts. Tuesday evening, June 12, will be Military Night, when the Boston Fusileer Veteran Association in full uniform, with the Salem Cadet Band, will be present. The band will play four numbers during the entr'acte at the end of the first part of the regular programme. The programme for Monday evening is:

March, "Hoch Habsburg" ..... Kral
Overture, "Stradella" ..... Flotow
Waltz, "Artist's Life" ..... Strauss
Selection from "Trovatore" ..... Verdi
Overture, "Phèdre" ..... Massenet
Two Hungarian Dances (Nos. 8 and 1) (first time) ..... Brahms
Procession of the women, "Lohengrin"—..... Wagner
March from "Queen of Sheba" ..... Gounod
Light Cavalry ..... Suppé
Blue Violet Mazourka (first time) ..... Ellenberg
Polka, "Sängerlust" ..... Strauss
March, "Tabasco" ..... Chadwick

Boston Courier.

ESTABLISHED 1795. JUNE 9, 1900.

MUSIC.

THE "POPS."

The management of the "Pops" is peculiarly favored in having at hand two conductors, both experienced, expert, progressive and favorites with the orchestra and audience. The usual mid-season change was made during the week. Mr. Zach retiring and Mr. Strube taking his place at the director's desk. No other change is to be noted, because the two leaders understand their duties, their powers and the disposition and tastes of the public in one and the same way. Slight differences are noticeable, perhaps, in the range of music from which the novelties of each week are drawn; but the general proportions of the symmetrical and delightful programmes remain unaltered, and every element which ought to be recognized in them has its place and its full compensation. Management and musical director both know how to appreciate the weight of any special occasion and opportunity and make such preparations as are sure to fill the special audience with delight. Technology evening was a new case in point, and the happiness and hilarity wakened by the appropriate music in the great company was heightened by the presence of many students and their new president, who was received with all the honors, and by the capital comradery shown by a host of Harvard men for the Tech fellows. It is a great season at the "Pops," this, and will make a record hard to equal.

HOWARD MALCOM TICKNOR.

[111]

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CVII., NO. 170.

TUESDAY, JUNE 19, 1900.

HARVARD NIGHT AT THE "POPS"

Crimson Glow in the Decorations and Illuminations.

It Was a Glorious Time, with Songs and Cheers That Aroused Enthusiasm—Glee Club a Prime Favorite—Hall Stripped of Its Harvard Flags at the Close.

One thousand Harvard students rolled over the Harvard bridge last night and took the great hall in Mechanics' building by storm. They sang and cheered and made Rome howl, as they always do, and such a Harvard night rarely was seen before at the "Pops." It was a great and glorious time.

They found a Harvard atmosphere, these Harvard men—everything was Harvard. As they neared Mechanics' Hall they first began to realize it, for a bright crimson glow, from hundreds of electric lamps, suffused the air for blocks around. And inside it was still Harvarder. The stage had for its background a Harvard sign, each letter of which would have out-topped the biggest man on the football team. A long "1900," all in crimson, too, hung high above, with the hearty legend, "Good Luck," beneath. A hundred crimson flags made the balconies bright in a similar way, each bearing the words "Pops—H—1900" on its surface. Needless to add, these were in great demand before the evening was over. Colossal signs for each class—"1901," "1902" and "1903," all spelled out—adorned the galleries. There were crimson programmes and crimson "H's" on the shirt fronts of the waiters.

As usual, Manager C. A. Ellis and Assistant Manager F. R. Comee had laid themselves out to make it all a "go," and their success was beyond estimate.

There was a great jam of people on hand, the galleries being filled as not before this year. The floor—the famous "bull pen"—was bright with stunning gowns, many being in the crimson.

It took the boys a little while to get started, but then they made up for lost time. "Nineteen one" began the music after the first number on the programme. But after the third number, a ringing waltz, an encore was demanded, and "Glory to the Crimson" was what Conductor Gustav Strube gave them. The boys sang the air, and afterward came real Bedlam—splendid, reverberating cheering, that it was good to hear.

There was hubbub a-plenty during the first intermission, and then came probably the prettiest feature of the evening—the singing of C. S. Smith's "Harvard's Day," by the university glee club, accompanied by the orchestra. Mr. Charles N. Prouty sung the solo part and sung it well, his voice finely filling the big room. The programme included other Harvard airs, there being H. H. Fox's "Harvard Camp," the marches from the 1900 Pudding play, "Wytche Hatelle," and the '00 Pi Eta play, "The Campaigners"; the ever present "Fair Harvard" and "Up the Street," to say nothing of generous encores.

The glee club reappeared after the second intermission and Conductor Strube took a back seat. Some good songs were sung, including one with megaphone solos, which caught the crowd squarely. In the mean time, it was strange how Mr. Comee's Harvard flags began disappearing. They were very popular. Just before the orchestra played "Fair Harvard" somebody made a grab for one of the flags on the lower balcony. It took about 20 seconds to clear the entire room of them. Some more uproar followed and the evening was over.

"Graduates' night," which always means fun, is booked for Monday, June 25, other special evenings being another "Wagner night," which is set for this evening, and "Request night," on Tuesday, June 26.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, JUNE 24, 1900.

THE "POP" CONCERTS.

The 15th season of "pop" concerts at Mechanics hall is fast drawing to an end, next Saturday being the closing night of a most successful season. Conductor Strube has been fortunate in the selection of his programs, and tomorrow night promises to be a memorable occasion in the history of these concerts. It will be "graduates'" night, and there will be present Harvard graduates from the different classes from 1850 to 1900. Nearly 1500 seats have already been engaged. Tuesday, June 26, will be "request" night, and the program will consist of the favorite selections of the patrons who have made applications to Mr Strube. The programs for all of the remaining concerts are of a popular order and well calculated to please. The program in full for tomorrow evening is:

Harvard Volunteers	Lund
Overture, Martha	Flotow
Waltz, Jolly Fellows	Vollstedt
Selection, Jack and the Beanstalk	Sloane
Jamaica two-step	Whipple, 88
Here They Come	Partridge
Overture, Prince Pro Tem	Thompson
Waltz, Estudiantina	Waldteufel
Selection, Serenade	Herbert
March, Cruiser Harvard	Strube
American Patrol	Meacham
Fair Harvard.
March, Runaway Girl	Ch. Von Baar

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, JUNE 16, 1900

The Pop Concerts

The season of Pop concerts at Mechanics Hall is fast drawing to an end, as there remain only two weeks more of these most enjoyable entertainments. The surroundings are much more pleasant than ever before, which undoubtedly accounts for the large attendance each evening. Conductor Strube has shown rare skill in the selection of his programmes, and the orchestra under his direction plays with an enthusiasm which makes the performance most effective. Special nights are now in order, Monday being "Harvard" night, when the programme will be devoted principally to the compositions of college men. Tuesday, June 19, will be Wagner night, in response to many requests. The programme in full for this evening is:

March, "U. S. Volunteers"	Strube
Overture, "Raymond"	Thomas
Waltz, "O Schöner Mai"	Strauss
Selection, "Wizard of the Nile"	Herbert
Overture, "Martha"	Flotow
Ballet Music, "Queen of Sheba" ('Cello Obligato, Mr. J. Keller)	Goldmark
Gavotte for Strings	Gillet
American Fantasy	Herbert
Overture, "Pique Dame"	Suppé
Entr'acte, "Naila"	Delibes
Polka, "Love Letter"	Ziehrer
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever"	Sousa

Boston Courier.

ESTABLISHED 1795. JUNE 16, 1900.

MUSIC.

THE "POPS."

It would be quite unnecessary to put "Fly swiftly round, ye wheels of time" into a programme at Mechanics Hall. For the wheels are humming already only too fast, and in a very few weeks the last half-dozen concerts will be announced, and the members of the band will disperse for their summer engagements by lake and mountains or for their vacations of idleness, if they don't like to work all the year round. Probably in no previous year has the public attached itself so heartily to these concerts and found them so hard to give up. For, as has been said here before, all the conditions for enjoyment have been combined more proportionately and propitiously than ever before, and the little additional trouble of going up town has not bothered city patrons at all, while hosts of suburbans have found their access facilitated. Mr. Strube, who knows how to choose other people's music well no less than how to write fine and great things of his own, is arraning delightful programmes and getting them beautifully performed. So all that can be said is that word to the wise which Mrs. Jarley was wont to urge upon her publics. "Be in time—be in time!"

HOWARD MALCOM TICKNOR.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, JUNE 9, 1900

The present week has been most successful, as the audiences have been unusually large and appreciative. Conductor Strube, who assumed the direction of the orchestra on Wednesday evening, has a host of warm admirers, who predict for him a brilliant season. His programmes are well chosen and admirably adapted to the spirit of the concerts. Tuesday evening, June 12, will be Military Night, when the Boston Fusileer Veteran Association in full uniform, with the Salem Cadet Band, will be present. The band will play four numbers during the entr'acte at the end of the first part of the regular programme. The programme for Monday evening is:

March, "Hoch Habsburg"	Kral
Overture, "Stradella"	Flotow
Waltz, "Artist's Life"	Strauss
Selection from "Trovatore"	Verdi
Overture, "Phèdre"	Massenet
Two Hungarian Dances (Nos. 3 and 1) (first time)	Brahms
Procession of the women, "Lohengrin"—	Wagner
March from "Queen of Sheba"	Gounod
Light Cavalry	Suppé
Blue Violet Mazourka (first time)	Ellenberg
Polka, "Sängerlust"	Strauss
March, "Tabasco"	Chadwick

Boston Courier.

ESTABLISHED 1795. JUNE 9, 1900.

MUSIC.

THE "POPS."

The management of the "Pops" is peculiarly favored in having at hand two conductors, both experienced, expert, progressive and favorites with the orchestra and audience. The usual mid-season change was made during the week. Mr. Zach retiring and Mr. Strube taking his place at the director's desk. No other change is to be noted, because the two leaders understand their duties, their powers and the disposition and tastes of the public in one and the same way. Slight differences are noticeable, perhaps, in the range of music from which the novelties of each week are drawn; but the general proportions of the symmetrical and delightful programmes remain unaltered, and every element which ought to be recognized in them has its place and its full compensation. Management and musical director both know how to appreciate the weight of any special occasion and opportunity and make such preparations as are sure to fill the special audience with delight. Technology evening was a new case in point, and the happiness and hilarity wakened by the appropriate music in the great company was heightened by the presence of many students and their new president, who was received with all the honors, and by the capital comradery shown by a host of Harvard men for the Tech fellows. It is a great season at the "Pops," this, and will make a record hard to equal.

HOWARD MALCOM TICKNOR.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, JUNE 19, 1900

HARVARD MEN AT THE POPS

A Crimson Glory Was Over All at Mechanics' Hall Last Night—A Thousand Students Sang and Cheered.

A crimson glory was over all at the "Pops" last night, for it was Harvard night and a thousand students filled the great floor of Mechanics Hall. Crimson electric lights illumined the outside of the building, and crimson banners over the balconies, crimson "H" on the shirt fronts of the waiters, and crimson lettered legends on and about the stage made the scene one of the most brilliant that has ever marked a Harvard night at the "Pops." The management had planned to make this event a fitting opening for the long series of commencement festivities, and the realization was more successful than anybody had anticipated. The galleries were thronged with people. The floor was a dazzling blaze of color for very many of the young women carried Harvard's colors, and a large number wore crimson gowns.

One of the prettiest features of the evening was the singing of C. S. Smith's "Harvard Day," by the University Glee Club, accompanied by the orchestra. Charles N. Prouty sang the solo part, his voice finely filling the big place. The programme included other Harvard airs, there being H. H. Fox's "Harvard Camp," the marches from the 1900 Pudding play, "Wytche Hazelle," and the 1900 Pi Eta play, "The Campaigners"; the ever present "Fair Harvard" and "Up the Street," to say nothing of generous encores. The Glee Club reappeared after the second intermission and Conductor Strube laid down the baton. Some stirring songs were sung, including one with megaphone [illegible]. Meantime, it was strange how Mr. Comee's Harvard flags began disappearing. They were very popular. Just before the orchestra played "Fair Harvard" somebody snatched one on the lower balcony. It took about twenty seconds to clear the entire room of them.

"Graduates' Night," which always means fun, is booked for Monday, June 25, other special evenings being another "Wagner Night," which is set for this evening, and "Request Night," on Tuesday, June 26.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, JUNE 23, 1900

The Pop Concerts at Mechanics Hall the present season have gained rather than lost in popularity over past seasons, when the audiences tested the capacity of the old Music Hall. It is a matter of sincere regret with the patrons that the season is so short, the closing night being one week from tonight. Next Monday evening will be graduates' night, and the advance sale of seats indicate the largest audience on record. There has already been assigned rising fourteen hundred seats to past graduates of Harvard, representing forty classes. Tuesday, June 26, will be request night, when the programme will be devoted to the compositions that have received the most favor during the present season. The programme in full for this evening is:

March, "The Man Behind the Gun"	Corliss
Overture, "Si J'étais Roi"	Adam
Waltz, "In's Centrum"	Strauss
Selection, "La Grande Duchesse"	Offenbach
Overture, "Tabasco"	Chadwick
Entree Triomphale des Bayards	Halvorsen
Two movements from "Peer Gynt"	Grieg
Danse Bacchanale	Saint-Saens
American Patrol	Meacham
[illegible]	Gillet
[illegible]	Ziehrer
[illegible]	Strube

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, JUNE 17, 1900.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The attendance at the "Pop" concerts during the past week has more than fulfilled the expectations of the management, a fact which demonstrates the popularity of these summer evening entertainments, and it is to be regretted that the season is so near the end, as the closing night is only two weeks away. Mechanic's hall is an ideal place for these concerts, the ventilation being a great improvement over past seasons. The promenade between the entr'actes is also a very pleasant feature to the patrons who wish to move about and meet friends. [illegible] Conductor Strube has been very fortunate in the selection of his programs, which have been received with much enthusiasm each evening.

Special nights are now in order, and "Harvard night" has been appointed for tomorrow evening, when the program will be composed principally of compositions by Harvard men. In response to many requests Tuesday evening will be devoted to Wagner music. The program for tomorrow evening is:

Harvard Camp	H H Fox
Overture, Jolly Students	Suppe
Waltz, Grubenlichter	Zeller
Selection, The Singing Girl	Herbert
Harvard's Day	C L Smith
Overture, Zampa	Herold
Selection, Belle of New York	Kerker
March from 00 Pudding play, Wytche Haselle	Tappin
March from 00 Pi Eta play, The Campaigners	Gulick
March, Black Bess	Strube
Selection, Sphinx	Thompson
Fair Harvard.
March, Up the Street	Morse

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, JUNE 10, 1900.

THE "POP" CONCERTS.

The regular summer season of "Pop" concerts at Mechanic's hall will soon be over, as they are now entering upon the last half, the closing night being appointed for Saturday, June 30. The past week has been especially brilliant, and conductor Strube, who has a host of warm admirers among the different musical societies, has received great praise for the able and spirited manner in which he conducts the orchestra. His programs are well chosen, and admirably fitted to the nature of the concerts. The programs for the coming week are very attractive, especially on Tuesday, which will be "Military night," when the Boston fusileer veteran association and Salem cadet band will be present. The band, under the direction of Mr Jean Missud, will play the following selections: March, "The Boston Fusileers," Montalban; selections from "Runaway Girl," Monckton; Chilian dance, "Manana," Missud; "American Patrol," Meacham.

The program for tomorrow evening is as follows:

March, Hoch Habsburg	Flotow
Overture, Stradella	Strauss
Waltz, Artist's Life	Verdi
Selection from Trovatore	Massenet
Overture, Phedre	Brahms
Two Hungarian dances (Nos 3 and 1) (First Time)	Wagner
Procession of the women, Lohengrin	Gounod
March from Queen of Sheba	Suppe
Light cavalry	Ellenberg
Blue Violet mazourka (First Time)	Strauss
Polka, Sangerlust	Chadwick
March, Tobasco

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. OVII., NO. 157.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 6, 1900.

TECH NIGHT AT THE POP.

Mechanics' Hall the Rendezvous for Many M. I. T. Men.

Last night was Tech night at the Pop concerts, and Mechanics' Hall was filled with Technology men and their friends, who assembled to enjoy the good things served by Manager Comee and Conductor Max Zach. It was the occasion of the last appearance of the latter as leader of the orchestra for this season, as Mr. Gustave Strube will begin his engagement tonight.

The hall was decorated with Technology's red and gray, and each of the four classes was remembered on 12-foot signs, which hung from the balconies. Behind the orchestra a large "M. I. T." banner attracted the attention of the eye.

The students occupied the attention of the onlookers, and several of the Greek letter fraternities, Delta Upsilon, Sigma Alpha Epsilon, Sigma Chi and Delta Kappa Epsilon, sat at tables by themselves and took a leading part in the cheering. A selection from "The Rounders" brought forth the first round of cheers, and the orchestra responded with the new song, "Technology." This started the ball rolling, and the cheers came thick and fast, with an occasional yell from some graduate class by a group of its members.

An unusual incident was the cheering of Technology by a group of Harvard men, with a return of the compliment by the M. I. T. men.

At 9 o'clock, word was passed that Dr. Henry S. Pritchett was coming, and immediately preparations were made to give him a royal reception. The large crowd of students lined up on either side of the middle aisle and as the president-elect stepped through the doorway he was greeted with a burst of cheering that shook the hall. As he passed down the lane between the rows of students, the cheering was continuous and left no doubt as to the sincerity of his welcome.

It is pleasant to add that since his introduction to Technology alumni and undergraduates, Dr. Pritchett's frank, cordial manner has made him sincere friends, and his action last night in participating in the enjoyment of Technology's sons and friends has made for him a warm place in the hearts of the undergraduates.

As the concert drew to a close the hall was quickly stripped of the decorations by a crowd of students anxious for souvenirs. Two of the large 12-foot signs were lifted from their hangings and lowered through the windows out on to the front steps. Here a spirited struggle between the students and two police officers resulted in the students going home with the bunting and the policemen carrying back two sorry looking frames into the building.

Boston Daily Globe.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 6, 1900.

DR PRITCHETT WELCOMED.

Reception Was Highly Successful, but "Tech Night" at the Pop Concert Was Truly a Rouser.

Commencement week at the Institute of Technology closed last night most successfully. During the early part of the evening a reception was tendered to the president elect, Dr Henry S. Pritchett at the technology club on Newbury st. The affair was entirely informal, and afforded to the 300 or more present a much-desired opportunity to meet Dr Pritchett personally. The exterior of the clubhouse was gayly decorated with japanese lanterns.

Dr Pritchett took his stand at the side of the large reception room, and received the guests as they were presented to him, being assisted in this by Edwin C. Miller, president of the alumni association, James P. Munroe, president of the Technology club and William Endicott, a member of the corporation.

The ushers, upon whom fell the work of presentation, were W. S. Johnson 99, Col Frank S. Locke 86, Prof Henry P. Talbot 85, Arthur Bradlee 88, George A. Cambell 91, Leonard Metcalf 92, Dr George V. Wendell 92, W. E. Piper 94, Dr W. Z. Ripley 90, Charles R. Moat 96, Walter Humphreys 97. C. E. A. Winslow 98 and Paul R. Brooks 90.

While this reception was in progress, another affair, where a far larger crowd was present and a far better opportunity was given for a display of enthusiasm, was in progress near by. This was the celebration of "Tech night" at the pop concert in Mechanic's building. Here the desire to be present had resulted in all the available tables being filled long before the time for beginning, and college spirit was never more in evidence.

The hall was decorated in Tech colors and emblems. Over the orchestra was a large M. I. T., and around the balcony were placed signs bearing the inscriptions, "Naughty-three," "Naughty-two," "Naughty-one," and "Goodby, naughty-naught."

From time to time the hall was rent with Technology cheers, and the boys loudly enforced their wishes by repeated calls for "The Runaway Girl," "The Amoor," "Up the Street," and other favorites. The new college song, "Technology," was played by the orchestra with immense success.

Many fraternity men were present in parties throughout the hall, and ably lent their aid to the cheering. Among the fraternity groups present were Delta Kappa Epsilon, Delta Upsilon, Sigma Chi, Sigma Alpha Epsilon and Phi Gamma Delta.

Shortly after 10 o'clock Dr Pritchett came up from the Technology club, accompanied by E. C. Miller, James P. Munroe and William Endicott. The president-elect was given a rousing reception, the entire body of students rising to their feet as he entered, and cheering him again and again. The pleased expression on Dr Pritchett's face showed that the effect of such student enthusiasm was not lost upon him.

At the conclusion of the concert a grand rush was made for the many Tech emblems around the building. Trophies of the night were sought for in earnest, and within five minutes hardly a Tech sign was left. Every one was either destroyed or carried off as a souvenir.

The night will be one long to be remembered by every Tech man present. The college spirit was never more evident.

Boston Courier.

ESTABLISHED 1795. JUNE 2, 1900.

MUSIC.

THE "POPS."

The managers of the "Pops" have just deposited the orchestra in a cavity—but this to everybody's great advantage. Which is to say that they have built for their playing birds a cage of light wood and brought them farther forward into the hall. In other words the orchestra is now in a nice little room of its own, the front side being removed so that it is really within its sounding-board, which is going several points better than the exaggerated clam-shells before which the ministers in some modern Gothic edifices have to stand and than the threatening extinguishers which used to menace colonial divines. Not a wave of sound seems to be wasted or lost, and the men can play with greater ease and confidence that they need make no special exertion in order to bring their particular obligato passages into clear relief. The programmes continue to be fine and fascinating, and all the other elements of delectation and convenience bear triumphantly whatever test is put upon them. It is a great season, which the New Music Hall, when its time comes, will have hard work to outshine.

HOWARD MALCOM TICKNOR.

Boston Transcript.

SATURDAY, JUNE 2, 1900

At the Pop Concert next Tuesday evening, "Tech" night, Conductor Max Zach will make his last appearance. On Wednesday evening, June 6, Mr. Gustav Strube will assume the duties of conducter, which position he will hold until the end of the season on Saturday, June 30. Monday evening, June 4, will be devoted to Wagner selections. On the evening of Conductor Strube's début, 250 members of the German musical societies of which Mr. Strube has been the director will attend in a body, as a special compliment to his popularity and success as a leader. On the same evening the Commercial Club of Boston will entertain one hundred visiting delegates from the commercial clubs of Chicago, Cincinnati and St. Louis. Tuesday evening, June 12, will be Military Night, when the Boston Fusilier Veterans' Association with the Salem Cadet Band, two hundred strong, in full uniform, will attend. The band will play a group of four attractive selections during the first entr' acte. The programme in full for Monday is as follows:

Oriental March.....Zach
Chorus of Sailors, from "Flying Dutchman".....Wagner
Waltz, "Vienna Bonbons".....Strauss
Preludes to "Lohengrin," acts I. and III..Wagner
Fire-Charm.....Wagner
Habanera.....Chabrier
Waltz, "1001 Nights".....Strauss
Overture to "Tannhäuser".....Wagner
Song, "Evening Star," from "Tannhäuser".....Wagner
Trombone solo, Mr. C. Hampe.
Overture to "Rienzi".....Wagner
Waltz, "L'Amour et Printemps".....Waldteufel
March, "Puppenfee".....Bayer

Boston Sunday Globe.

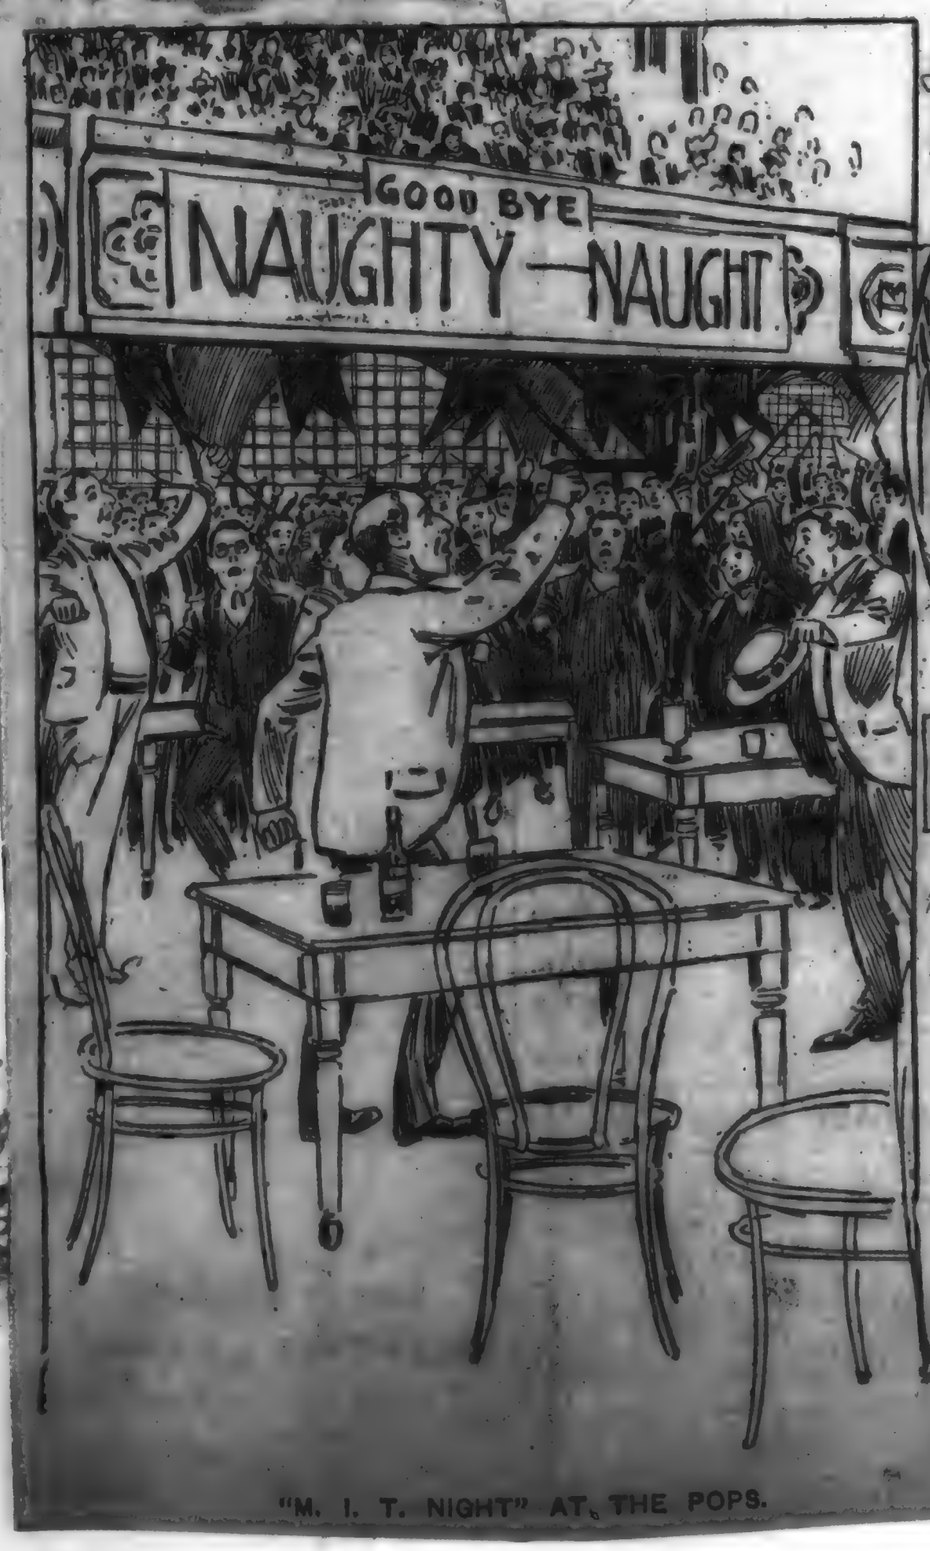
SUNDAY, JUNE 3, 1900.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The attractive summer evening "pops" are nearly half over, and next Tuesday evening, in addition to being "Tech night," will also be the last appearance of conductor Max Zach. Wednesday evening, June 6, Mr Gustav Strube will assume the duties of conductor, which position he will hold until the end of the season, Saturday, June 30. Tomorrow evening will be devoted to selections from Wagner. On the evening of conducter Strube's debut, 250 members of the German musical societies of which Mr Strube has been a director, will attend in a body, as a special compliment to his popularity and success as a leader. On the same evening the Commercial club of Boston will entertain 100 visiting delegates from the Commercial clubs of Chicago, St Louis and Cincinnati.

Tuesday evening, June 12, will be "Military night," when the Boston fusileer veterans association, with the Salem cadet band, 200 stong, in full uniform, will attend. The band will render a group of four attractive selections during the first ent'ract. The program in full for tomorrow evening is:

Oriental march.....Zach
Chorus of sailors from "Flying Dutchman,".....Wagner
Waltz, Vienna Bonbons.....Strauss
Preludes to Lohengrin, acts I and III..Wagner
Fire-Charm.....Wagner
Habanera.....Chabrier
Waltz, 1001 Nights.....Strauss
Overture to Tannhauser.....Wagner
Song, Evening Star, from Tannhauser...Wagner
Trombone solo, Mr C Hampe.
Overture to Rienzi.....Wagner
Waltz, L'Amour et Printempe.....Waldteufel
March, Puppenfee.....Bayer



"M. I. T. NIGHT" AT THE POPS.

Boston Journal.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 6, 1900.

At the "Pops."

Tech men owned the Pops last night and had everything their own way. The hall was decorated with Tech colors, while in the rear of the orchestra was a mammoth M. I. T. in red letters. In front of the balconies were four large signs, with the mottoes, "Good-by, Naughty - naught," "Naughty - one," "Naughty-two," and "Naughty-three." The first real fun of the evening came when the orchestra struck up the overture from "The Medicine Man;" 300 Tech men were immediately on their feet, cheering and yelling at the top of their lungs. The climax of the evening was the enthusiastic greeting of President Pritchett.

[112]

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CVII., NO. 167.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 6, 1900.

TECH NIGHT AT THE POP.

Mechanics' Hall the Rendezvous for Many M. I. T. Men.

Last night was Tech night at the Pop concerts, and Mechanics' Hall was filled with Technology men and their friends, who assembled to enjoy the good things served by Manager Comee and Conductor Max Zach. It was the occasion of the last appearance of the latter as leader of the orchestra for this season, as Mr. Gustave Strube will begin his engagement tonight.

The hall was decorated with Technology's red and gray, and each of the four classes was remembered on 12-foot signs, which hung from the balconies. Behind the orchestra a large "M. I. T." banner attracted the attention of the eye.

The students occupied the attention of the onlookers, and several of the Greek letter fraternities, Delta Upsilon, Sigma Alpha Epsilon, Sigma Chi and Delta Kappa Epsilon, sat at tables by themselves and took a leading part in the cheering. A selection from "The Rounders" brought forth the first round of cheers, and the orchestra responded with the new song, "Technology." This started the ball rolling, and the cheers came thick and fast, with an occasional yell from some graduate class by a group of its members.

An unusual incident was the cheering of Technology by a group of Harvard men, with a return of the compliment by the M. I. T. men.

At 9 o'clock, word was passed that Dr. Henry S. Pritchett was coming, and immediately preparations were made to give him a royal reception. The large crowd of students lined up on either side of the middle aisle and as the president-elect stepped through the doorway he was greeted with a burst of cheering that shook the hall. As he passed down the lane between the rows of students, the cheering was continuous and left no doubt as to the sincerity of his welcome.

It is pleasant to add that since his introduction to Technology alumni and undergraduates, Dr. Pritchett's frank, cordial manner has made him sincere friends, and his action last night in participating in the enjoyment of Technology's sons and friends has made for him a warm place in the hearts of the undergraduates.

As the concert drew to a close the hall was quickly stripped of the decorations by a crowd of students anxious for souvenirs. Two of the large 12-foot signs were lifted from their hangings and lowered through the windows out on to the front steps. Here a spirited struggle between the students and two police officers resulted in the students going home with the bunting and the policemen carrying back two sorry looking frames into the building.

Boston Daily Globe.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 6, 1900.

DR PRITCHETT WELCOMED.

Reception Was Highly Successful, but "Tech Night" at the Pop Concert Was Truly a Rouser.

Commencement week at the institute of Technology closed last night most succesfully. During the early part of the evening a reception was tendered to the president elect, Dr Henry S. Pritchett at the technology club on Newbury st. The affair was entirely informal, and afforded to the 300 or more present a much-desired opportunity to meet Dr Pritchett personally. The exterior of the clubhouse was gayly decorated with japanese lanterns.

Dr Pritchett took his stand at the side of the large reception room, and received the guests as they were presented to him, being assisted in this by Edwin C. Miller, president of the alumni association, James P. Munroe, president of the Technology club and William Endicott, a member of the corporation.

The ushers, upon whom fell the work of presentation, were W. S. Johnson 99, Col Frank S. Locke 86, Prof Henry P. Talbot 85, Arthur Bradlee 88, George A. Cambell 91, Leonard Metcalf 92, Dr George V. Wendell 92, W. E. Piper 94, Dr W. Z. Ripley 90, Charles R. Moat 96, Walter Humphreys 97, C. E. A. Winslow 98 and Paul R. Brooks 00.

While this reception was in progress, another affair, where a far larger crowd was present and a far better opportunity was given for a display of enthusiasm, was in progress near by. This was the celebration of "Tech night" at the pop concert in Mechanic's building. Here the desire to be present had resulted in all the available tables being filled long before the time for beginning, and college spirit was never more in evidence.

The hall was decorated in Tech colors and emblems. Over the orchestra was a large M. I. T., and around the balcony were placed signs bearing the inscriptions, "Naughty-three," "Naughty-two," "Naughty-one," and "Goodby, naughty-naught."

From time to time the hall was rent with Technology cheers, and the boys loudly enforced their wishes by repeated calls for "The Runaway Girl," "The Ameer," "Up the Street," and other favorites. The new college song, "Technology," was played by the orchestra with immense success.

Many fraternity men were present in parties throughout the hall, and ably lent their aid to the cheering. Among the fraternity groups present were Delta Kappa Epsilon, Delta Upsilon, Sigma Chi, Sigma Alpha Epsilon and Phi Gamma Delta.

Shortly after 10 o'clock Dr Pritchett came up from the Technology club, accompanied by E. C. Miller, James P. Munroe and William Endicott. The president-elect was given a rousing reception, the entire body of students rising to their feet as he entered, and cheering him again and again. The pleased expression on Dr Pritchett's face showed that the effect of such student enthusiasm was not lost upon him.

At the conclusion of the concert a grand rush was made for the many Tech emblems around the building. Trophies of the night were sought for in earnest, and within five minutes hardly a Tech sign was left. Every one was either destroyed or carried off as a souvenir.

The night will be one long to be remembered by every Tech man present. The college spirit was never more evident.

"M. I. T. NIGHT" AT THE POPS.

Boston Journal.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 6, 1900.

At the "Pops."

Tech men owned the Pops last night and had everything their own way. The hall was decorated with Tech colors, while in the rear of the orchestra was a mammoth M. I. T. in red letters. In front of the balconies were four large signs, with the mottoes, "Good-by, Naughty - naught," "Naughty - one," "Naughty-two," and "Naughty-three." The first real fun of the evening came when the orchestra struck up the overture from "The Medicine Man;" 300 Tech men were immediately on their feet, cheering and yelling at the top of their lungs. The climax of the evening was the enthusiastic greeting of President Pritchett.

Boston Courier.

ESTABLISHED 1795. JUNE 2, 1900.

MUSIC.

THE "POPS."

The managers of the "Pops" have just deposited the orchestra in a cavity—but this to everybody's great advantage. Which is to say that they have built for their playing birds a cage of light wood and brought them farther forward into the hall. In other words the orchestra is now in a nice little room of its own, the front side being removed so that it is really within its sounding-board, which is going several points better than the exaggerated clam-shells before which the ministers in some modern Gothic edifices have to stand and than the threatening extinguishers which used to menace colonial divines. Not a wave of sound seems to be wasted or lost, and the men can play with greater ease and confidence that they need make no special exertion in order to bring their particular obligato passages into clear relief. The programmes continue to be fine and fascinating, and all the other elements of delectation and convenience bear triumphantly whatever test is put upon them. It is a great season, which the New Music Hall, when its time comes, will have hard work to outshine.

HOWARD MALCOM TICKNOR.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, JUNE 2, 1900

At the Pop Concert next Tuesday evening, "Tech" night, Conductor Max Zach will make his last appearance. On Wednesday evening, June 6, Mr. Gustav Strube will assume the duties of conductor, which position he will hold until the end of the season on Saturday, June 30. Monday evening, June 4, will be devoted to Wagner selections. On the evening of Conductor Strube's debut, 250 members of the German musical societies of which Mr. Strube has been the director will attend in a body, as a special compliment to his popularity and success as a leader. On the same evening the Commercial Club of Boston will entertain one hundred visiting delegates from the commercial clubs of Chicago, Cincinnati and St. Louis. Tuesday evening, June 12, will be Military Night, when the Boston Fusilier Veterans' Association with the Salem Cadet Band, two hundred strong, in full uniform, will attend. The band will play a group of four attractive selections during the first entr' acte. The programme in full for Monday is as follows:

Oriental March.....Zach
Chorus of Sailors, from "Flying Dutchman".....Wagner
Waltz, "Vienna Bonbons".....Strauss
Preludes to "Lohengrin," acts i. and iii..Wagner
Fire-Charm.....Wagner
Habanera.....Chabrier
Waltz, "1001 Nights".....Strauss
Overture to "Tannhäuser".....Wagner
Song, "Evening Star," from "Tannhäuser".....Wagner
Trombone solo, Mr. C. Hampe.
Overture to "Rienzi".....Wagner
Waltz, "L'Amour et Printemps".....Waldteufel
March, "Puppenfee".....Bayer

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, JUNE 3, 1900.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The attractive summer evening "pops" are nearly half over, and next Tuesday evening, in addition to being "Tech night," will also be the last appearance of conductor Max Zach. Wednesday evening, June 6, Mr Gustav Strube will assume the duties of conductor, which position he will hold until the end of the season, Saturday, June 30. Tomorrow evening will be devoted to selections from Wagner. On the evening of conductor Strube's debut, 250 members of the German musical societies of which Mr Strube has been a director, will attend in a body, as a special compliment to his popularity and success as a leader. On the same evening the Commercial club of Boston will entertain 100 visiting delegates from the Commercial clubs of Chicago, St Louis and Cincinnati.

Tuesday evening, June 12, will be "Military night," when the Boston fusileer veterans association, with the Salem cadet band, 200 stong, in full uniform, will attend. The band will render a group of four attractive selections during the first ent'ract. The program in full for tomorrow evening is:

Oriental march.....Zach
Chorus of sailors from "Flying Dutchman,"
Wagner
Waltz, Vienna Bonbons.....Strauss
Preludes to Lohengrin, acts I and III..Wagner
Fire-Charm.....Wagner
Habanera.....Chabrier
Waltz, 1001 Nights.....Strauss
Overture to Tannhauser.....Wagner
Song, Evening Star, from Tannhauser...Wagner
Trombone solo, Mr C Hampe.
Overture to Rienzi.....Wagner
Waltz, L'Amour et Printemps.....Waldteufel
March, Puppenfee.....Bayer

[11a]

"POP" SEASON IS ON.

First Promenade Concert in Mechanics' Hall.

Auditorium Is Rather an Improvement Than Not.

Smoke Rises and the Walks for Strolling Are Broader.

The 15th season of the "Pop" concerts opened last evening in Mechanics' Hall, before a very large audience. The chilly state of the weather was scarcely propitious in regard to suggestiveness of a summer entertainment, but summer is three weeks away as yet, and the proverbial ethereal mildness of gentle spring has been backward this year in manifesting itself. But a more favorable state of affairs may be confidently expected at any moment, and then cooling beverages will be more in order, and will fulfil their soothing mission with more seasonable results than were attainable on this occasion.

The huge auditorium is in many respects a great improvement on that of the old Music Hall, especially in regard to the greater convenience it provides for the comfort of the patrons of these concerts. It is perhaps something too spacious for hearing the music to the best advantage, particularly in selections lightly scored, but a more vigorous style of playing will go far toward remedying this drawback. Everybody seemed to be pleased with the change of scene, the absence of the dinginess of the former quarters, the greater freedom of movements afforded by the larger space, the brilliant lighting and the better ventilation. The programme was:

March, "Under the Double Eagle".....Wagner
Waltz, "Meerleuchten".....Ziehrer
Overture to "Piccolino".....Guirand
Ballet music, "Sylvia".....Delibes
Kermesse flamande, from "Milenka".....
Jan Blockx
(First time.)
Waltz, "Vienna Blood".....Strauss
Entr'acte—Gavotte.....Gillet
(First time.)
Overture, "Tannhauser".....Wagner
Waltz, "Harlequin's Wedding," new.....Zach
Selection from "The Rounders".....Englander
(First time.)
Polka, "Tyrolean".....Zeller
March, "Man Behind the Gun".....Sousa
(First time.)

number of seats. The big gallery will be kept closed. All in all, Mr. C. A. Ellis and Mr. F. R. Comee deserve much credit for many improvements that have been made, and they were doubtless made to appreciate the fact last evening by many congratulations.

A feature which contributed much to the brilliancy of the opening night was the presence of many small parties. Among those who were present were Gen. and Mrs. Curtis Guild, Jr., Postmaster Hibbard, Col. and Mrs. Henry L. Higginson, Mr. and Mrs. Wilhelm Gericke, Mr. R. C. Dixey, Mr. Mark Andrews, Dr. and Mrs. William Brooks, Mr. Joshua Holden, Mr. Parker Haven, Mr. Grant Walker, Mrs. Louis Shaw and party, Mrs. Harry Pratt McKean, Mr. Charles Hayden and party, Mr. and Mrs. John Lavalle, Miss Isabel Stevens, Mrs. John Codman, Mrs. John Gray, Mrs. Fiske Warren, Mr. Johnson Morton, Miss Osgood, Miss Crowninshield, Miss Pray, Mr. L. C. Elson and many others, a large portion of whom had merry parties with them.

OPENING NIGHT OF THE "POPS" AT MECHANICS' HALL.

Mr. Max Zach conducted [illegible] on his first appearance he was given a hearty and prolonged welcome. The playing of the orchestra was, of course, of the very best; perhaps somewhat too delicate at times for the space to be filled, but that is an artistic virtue not beyond remedying to meet the emergency. The programme was abundant in charming light music admirably adapted to such concerts, and had a generous allowance of bright and pleasing novelties. There was enough and to spare of cordial applause, and the enthusiast in systematic encoring was fully in evidence. The opening performance was a complete success, and all that is needed to carry the "Pops" along their familiar line of prosperity is more seasonable weather. There will be an entire change of programme this evening.

VERY MUCH AS OF OLD.

"Pops" Are Just as Gay as in Music Hall, and the Air Is Better and Hall More Comfortable.

The "Pops" opened with all the bustle, animation, gayety and display of fine garments that have marked the 749 previous concerts of the series. The "Pop" concerts are characteristic; they have set ways, and such a small matter as a change of location from the classic, but decrepit, Music Hall to the vast auditorium in the Mechanics' building is unable to alter their ways.

Society smiled on the concert, as Boston society always does. Harvard boys came over the river in the same old swarms as ever; real music lovers took their relaxation from the heavier Symphony programmes with as much keen pleasure as they did last year; and all the world, from those who belong in the Back Bay to those who don't, but who yet have the price for the show, were there to see and to hear and to talk and to drink. The weather interfered with nobody except some poor mortals who happened to be in charge. It annoyed them because the lady who will die if the windows are not opened and her constant companion who will also die if the windows are opened made the lives of the attendants a particular burden until they were able to get out of the way.

As a matter of fact, the "fresh air cranks" have little to complain of this year. There are no heavy hangings overhead to catch the smoke and hold it down and otherwise interfere with the ventilation, while the lofty roof of the building gives abundant opportunity for the smoke-laden atmosphere to escape.

There is, of course, accommodation for a much larger number than at the old Music Hall. There are some 220 tables this year, an increase which doubles the capacity of last season. There is plenty of room between the tables, and, best of all, there is a promenade which is worthy of the name. The promenade extends entirely around the "bull pen," as the enclosure is called within which the chairs and tables of the elect (i. e., who pay the most) are placed. As the enclosure is very large, the promenade itself is correspondingly increased. This improvement seemed to be much appreciated by the throngs who were present last evening, the broad thoroughfare under the balcony being well filled during the intermissions.

There are no tables in the balcony this year, but it contains an enormous

[115]

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. CVII., NO. 149.

TUESDAY, MAY 29, 1900.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The Promenade concerts continue on their way at Mechanics' Hall every evening, and their large patronage fully attests their popularity. The new sounding board and bringing the orchestra farther forward into the hall have greatly added to the effect of the music. The audience last evening was especially enthusiastic over the excellent programme, as rendered by the orchestra, under the direction of Conductor Max Zach. Tomorrow (Wednesday) will be the first of the special evenings, "Patriotic night." The programme for this evening is:

March, "Puppenfee"	Waldteufel
Waltz, "Sentiers Fleuris"	Strauss
Overture to "Die Fledermaus"	Bizet
Selection from "Carmen"	Weber
Overture to "Oberon"	Atherton
Intermezzo	Wagner
Prelude to "Lohengrin"
(a) Castillana, (b) Andalouse, (c) Aragonaise, from "Le Cid"	Massenet
Waltz, "Kleine Bruder"	Vollstedt
Menuet for string orchestra	Bolzoni
"Funeral March of a Marionette"	Gounod
March, "Fra Bombarda"	Czibulka

Tomorrow evening added interest will be given to the concert because of the attendance of Mayor ... and envoys with the reception committee from the city government, who will be the guests of the management. It is expected that the national hymn of the Boers will be played by the orchestra.

SUNDAY, MAY 20, 1900.

SUMMER "POP" CONCERTS.

Not even the most inclement weather dims the success of Boston's perennial and most popular summer show, the "pops" at Mechanic's hall. Every one goes, and great satisfaction is expressed on all sides at the added room, effective ventilation and the spacious promenades entirely around the hall. Large parties have been in order, and it is quite the fad for whist clubs, amateur dramatic associations and the like to attend in a body. Nearly all of the prominent clubs have their special tables. Conductor Zach is making some most attractive programs, to which are added each night favorites of past seasons, which win instant and hearty recognition from the audience. The program for tomorrow evening is as follows:

March from The Serenade	Herbert
Overture to Phedre	Massenet
Waltz, Faschings Kinder	Ziehrer
Selection from The Fortune Teller	Herbert
Danse Fantastique	Maquarre
(First time.)
Overture to Barber of Seville	Rossini
Entr'acte, Philemon and Baucis	Gounod
Finale, Lohengrin, first act	Wagner
Waltz, Denksprüche	Ed. Strauss
Hymn to St Cecilia	Gounod
Violin obligato, Mr Otto Roth.
Polka, Hunter's Yarn	Komzak
March, Bride Elect	Sousa

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, MAY 26, 1900

The new quarters of the Pop concerts at Mechanics Hall seem to be as well filled nightly as was the old Music Hall in former seasons, and they give greater satisfaction. Society enjoys the savor of bohemianism and the rest of the world enjoys society, and both classes find pleasure in the best music given so perfectly by the orchestra under the direction of Mr. Max Zach. The special nights appointed so far are: Wednesday, May 30, Patriotic Night; Friday, June 1, Soloist Night; Tuesday, June 5, "Tech" Night. This will also be the last appearance of Conductor Max Zach. The programme for this evening is as follows:

March, "Bride Elect"	Sousa
Overture to "Zampa"	Hérold
Waltz, "Artist's Life"	Strauss
Selection from "The Fortune Teller"	Herbert
Overture, "Sphinx"	Thompson
Waltz, "Harlequin's Wedding"	Zach
Marche des Batteurs, from "Xaviere"	Dubois
Overture to "Tannhäuser"	Wagner
Selection from "The Rounders"	Englander
Waltz, "Pomone"	Waldteufel
"In the Mill"	Gillet
March, "Whistling Rufus"	Mills

Boston Courier.

ESTABLISHED 1795. MAY 26, 1900.

MUSIC.

THE POP CONCERTS.

Contentment and approbation in constantly increasing degrees attend the nightly sequence of the "Pops" at Mechanics Hall. All the conditions combine graciously to give physical comfort and æsthetic pleasure. Mr. Zach has fitted the work of his orchestra in volume and quality to the character of the auditorium, whose eminently clear and favorable acoustics transmit every class of music most favorably, the responsiveness of the wooden construction more than atoning for any lack of mere material force in the band itself and apparently adding from its own harmonic nature something of fulness to the tones it takes up. Mr. Zach chooses his music with admirable consideration of all the conditions, and does not too often ask his audience to concede the silenced attention which they are always ready to give upon occasion. He finds place always for the ringing march, the gay dance, the strong overture and the varied arrangement or selection of favorite operatic melodies, and he encourages his men to round out everything to the full. The new things are numerous and selected for merit as well as for novelty, so that people who go mainly for the programme are sure to be repaid. And then the fresh, lively-moving air and the excellent ventilation, which carries aloft and away the smoke so fast that it has no time to annoy those who admit it only under pretext the necessity of smoking and cannot cling to them when they leave the hall. The space for promenading is a special satisfaction of the season, and they who sit at the tables also rejoice in plentiful elbow-room and in the easy, quick and dexterous serving of their "combinations" which the open order of the tables insures. Altogether, this season is in all respects the great success of all the series.

HOWARD MALCOM TICKNOR.

SUNDAY, MAY 13, 1900.

PROMENA...

The 15th season of summer promenade concerts opened last Thursday evening in Mechanic's hall with every indication that the favorite musical diversion has lost none of its former popularity. The immense auditorium is admirably adapted to this style of entertainment, for the wide corridors permit throngs of promenaders to move about, thus making the concerts really "promenades" to those who so desire. The hall will be most attractively cool during even the warmest weather, and there seems to be nothing to cloud the success of the season. The program for Monday evening is:

March from "La Reine de Saba"	Gounod
Overture, "Martha"	Flotow
Waltz, "Wine, Women and Song"	Strauss
Selections from operas by	Meyerbeer
Waltz, "Harlequin's Journey"	Zach
Entre Triomphale des Boyards	Halvorsen
The Money-Trap	Koehler
(First time.)
Prelude to Act I, "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Offenbachiana	Conradi
Waltz, "Snowballs"	Ziehrer
Entr'acte, "Forgetmenot"	Macbeth
Teufel's March	Sousa

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, MAY 19, 1900

The "Pop Concerts" have again jumped into favor with the public, and Mechanics Hall has been found to be far more comfortable and better adapted to these entertainments than was the old Music Hall. The acoustics are particularly good for so large an auditorium, but the effect of the music will be increased in future by bringing the orchestra further forward into the hall and the erection of a sounding board. The spacious promenades are thronged during the intermissions and are much appreciated. The orchestra under Mr. Zach could hardly be improved, and to hear a Strauss waltz performed by so fine a body of musicians is worth a long journey. The audiences this week have been large and the advance bookings give every indication of a very prosperous season of these delightful entertainments. The programme for this evening will be as follows:

March, "Vienna Duke"	Wagner
Waltz, "Blue Danube"	Strauss
Overture, "Banditen Streiche"	Suppé
Selection, "Faust"	Gounod
Overture, "William Tell"	Rossini
'Cello obbligato, Mr. J. Keller.
Pizzicati	Ellenberg
Intermezzo, "Naila"	Delibes
Selection, "Wizard of the Nile"	Herbert
Waltz, "Lustige Brüder"	Vollstedt
Arabian Wedding	Tavan
(First time.)
Narcissus	Nevin
March, "Runaway Girl"	Monckton

Boston Courier.

ESTABLISHED 1795. MAY 19, 1900.

MUSIC.

THE "POPS."

The transfer of the famous and favorite "Pop" concert from the old Music Hall to the great auditorium of the Mechanics Building has proved a success. There was but one possible qualification foreseen, and that has not resulted unfavorably. It was feared that an orchestra of but fifty musicians or thereabouts, might be found too small for the immense space its tone would be expected to fill, and in which even the largest brass bands have not seemed too powerful. But this possible objection has amounted practically to nothing, and for various reasons. The construction of the room itself, chiefly in wood and with amplitude of free spaces for the circulation of sound, has favored the reception and transmission of the music, so that it reaches every corner clearly and in due proportion, even if sometimes a bit faintly—this diminishing its apparent volume, but not its beauty. Then again, the evenness, purity, and symmetry of the playing insure a perfect delivery of the music to the currents which are to bear it on its way, and guarantee the fulness of effect which a fagged or unequal performance could never create. And yet further, the "Pop" audiences, although they go for amusement and a good time, are nevertheless lovers of real music, and will always listen attentively when the best or most delicate selections are played. So that the value of the hall as a room for these concerts is established from the artistic standpoint. On the other hand, one can now have the room, the freedom and the sense of independence of one's neighbors which had long been unobtainable desiderata in Music Hall, while the excellently thoughtful and attentive service gains in promptness, quietude and ease. Of the programmes it hardly seems necessary to say much. Mr. Zach is a musician true and tried in the conductor's position; he knows both how to choose music and how to get it played. He understands also how to make all the components of an evening's music balance—the old with the new, the grave with the gay, the dance and march with the overture and pot-pourri, the soft and sentimental with the humorous and the serious. Altogether, therefore, it is easy to comprehend why the "Pops" are greater favorites this season than ever before—no less with swelldom, which wants its special reserved tables than with the public at large, which just wants to drop in, to wander in the wide lobbies and to take its chance for a vacant seat and a casual glass of something refreshing.

MUSIC A...

Mechanics B... The "Pops"

The "Pops" began last evening at Mechanics Hall; an orchestra of fifty ... Mr. Max Zach as conductor, and Mr. ... Roth as leading first violin, played the following programme:

March, "Throw the Double Lasso"	Wa...
Waltz, "Marienleben"	...
Overture to "Piccolino"	...
Ballet-Music from "Sylvia"	...
Kermesse flamande, from "Mignon"	Th...
(First time.)
Waltz, "Wiener Blut"	...
Entr'acte-Gavotte	...
(First time.)
Overture to "Tannhäuser"	Wagner
Waltz, "Harlequin's Wedding" (new)	Zach
Selection from "The Rounders"	Englander
(First time.)
Polka, "Tyrolean"	Zeller
March, "The Man Behind the Gun"	Sousa
(First time.)

There was a good deal of speculation before the concert as to what the effect of an orchestra of fifty in Mechanics Hall would be. Of course, the effect of Sousa's Band in the same hall was no sound criterion; even the fact that that band was not too much for the hall was not worth much as a basis for calculating the probable effect of an orchestra. The remembered effect of the opera there was a far better one; though this or that individual's memory of how opera sounded was naturally conditioned to a great extent by the particular part of the hall in which he sat during the last opera season in the Huntington Avenue barn. At all events, opinions differed widely beforehand; some persons predicting that the orchestra would be all but inaudible; others (of whom I was one) counting on the really phenomenal acoustics of the place, holding that the effect would be as good as, if not better than, in the Old Music Hall of not entirely blessed memory. Well, it turned out that these latter were wrong; there was one factor which they (or, at least, I) had forgotten to take into account. This was the enormous and by no means silent audience at the tables on the floor; to make headway against the chit-chat of this mass of people was even a harder task for the band than to fill the vast cubic space of the hall itself. As a matter of fact, thanks to the excellent acoustics of Mechanics Hall, the music, barring some of the softer passages, was distinctly audible; but this was all; although the quality of tone was wondrously rich and beautiful, it was so subdued that it failed to arrest the attention, one had to listen with conscious effort, the effect was virtually nil. It was like ideal table music, an agreeable sound of the presence of which one is conscious, but to which one is not impelled to listen; a pleasant spur to conversation.

To judge of the excellence of the playing was impossible; it all sounded exquisite. It was curious to note the applause; the things most applauded were those whose principal charm lay in the rhythm, the waltzes, for instance, and the overture to "Tannhäuser." Wagner's scoring seems able to conquer anything and everything. But, though one of the waltzes was encored, the applause in general was not particularly hearty, and came, for the most part, from tables near the stage. It by no means follows, however, that people did not have a grand good time; there are many differences between a "Pop" and an ordinary concert, and it is not necessary that the music should hold the first place in the minds of the audience at a "Pop." I have no doubt that most of the occupants of table seats enjoyed themselves quite as much as I did, which is saying a good deal. The vast space of the floor made crowding unnecessary, and everyone had plenty of elbow room; the service, too, was better and more prompt than in the old Music Hall. There was no attempt made at decorating the stage, probably for the sake of giving the orchestra every possible chance; but the large and jolly audience was a pleasant sight in itself. I much doubt if the more subdued effect of the music will make any real difference in the success of the concerts; this first one was a splendid send off, and there need be no fear of this year's "Pops" lacking their usual support from the pleasure-seeking public.

This evening the orchestra will play overtures by Délibes and Suppé, marches by Kral, Sabathil and Fahrbach; waltzes by Strauss and Vollstedt, selections from "The Fortune Teller" and "Cavalleria Rusticana," and pieces by Tschaikowsky, Westerhout and Spindler. W. F. A.

[114]

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CVII., NO. 149.

TUESDAY, MAY 29, 1900.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The Promenade concerts continue on their way at Mechanics' Hall every evening, and their large patronage fully attests their popularity. The new sounding board and bringing the orchestra farther forward into the hall have greatly added to the effect of the music. The audience last evening was especially enthusiastic over the excellent programme, as rendered by the orchestra, under the direction of Conductor Max Zach. Tomorrow (Wednesday) will be the first of the special evenings, "Patriotic night." The programme for this evening is:

March, "Puppenfee" ..... Bayer
Waltz, "Sentiers Fleuris" ..... Waldteufel
Overture to "Die Fledermaus" ..... Strauss
Selection from "Carmen" ..... Bizet
Overture to "Oberon" ..... Weber
Intermezzo ..... Atherton
Prelude to "Lohengrin" ..... Wagner
(a) Castiliana, (b) Andalouse, (c) Aragonaise, from "Le Cid" ..... Massenet
Waltz, "Lustige Bruder" ..... Vollstedt
Menuet for string orchestra ..... Rolzoni
"Funeral March of a Marionette" ..... Gounod
March, "Fra Bombarda" ..... Czibulka

Tomorrow evening added interest will be given to the concert because of the attendance of the Boer envoys with the reception committee from the city government, who will be the guests of the management. It is expected that the national hymn of the Boers will be played by the orchestra.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, MAY 20, 1900.

SUMMER "POP" CONCERTS.

Not even the most inclement weather dims the success of Boston's perennial and most popular summer show, the "pops" at Mechanic's hall. Every one goes, and great satisfaction is expressed on all sides at the added room, effective ventilation and the spacious promenades entirely around the hall. Large parties have been in order, and it is quite the fad for whist clubs, amateur dramatic associations and the like to attend in a body. Nearly all of the prominent clubs have their special tables. Conductor Zach is making some most attractive programs, to which are added each night favorites of past seasons, which win instant and hearty recognition from the audience. The program for tomorrow evening is as follows:

March from The Senemde ..... Herbert
Overture to Phedre ..... Massenet
Waltz, Faschings Kinder ..... Ziehrer
Selection from The Fortune Teller ..... Herbert
Danse Fantastique ..... Maquarre
(First time.)
Overture to Barber of Seville ..... Rossini
Entr'acte, Philemon and Baucis ..... Gounod
Finale, Lohengrin, first act ..... Wagner
Waltz, Denkspruche ..... Ed. Strauss
Hymn to St Cecilia ..... Gounod
Violin obligato, Mr Otto Roth.
Polka, Hunter's Yarn ..... Komzak
March, Bride Elect ..... Sousa

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, MAY 26, 1900

The new quarters of the Pop concerts at Mechanics Hall seem to be as well filled nightly as was the old Music Hall in former seasons, and they give greater satisfaction. Society enjoys the savor of bohemianism and the rest of the world enjoys society, and both classes find pleasure in the best music given so perfectly by the orchestra under the direction of Mr. Max Zach. The special nights appointed so far are: Wednesday, May 30, Patriotic Night; Friday, June 1, Soloist Night; Tuesday, June 5, "Tech" Night. This will also be the last appearance of Conductor Max Zach. The programme for this evening is as follows:

March, "Bride Elect" ..... Sousa
Overture to "Zampa" ..... Herold
Waltz, "Artist's Life" ..... Strauss
Selection from "The Fortune Teller" ..... Herbert
Overture, "Sphinx" ..... Thompson
Waltz, "Harlequin's Wedding" ..... Zach
Marche des Batteurs, from "Xaviere" ..... Dubois
Overture to "Tannhäuser" ..... Wagner
Selection from "The Rounders" ..... Englander
Waltz, "Pomone" ..... Waldteufel
"In the Mill" ..... Gillet
March, "Whistling Rufus" ..... Mills

Boston Courier.

ESTABLISHED 1795. MAY 26, 1900.

MUSIC.

THE POP CONCERTS.

Contentment and approbation in constantly increasing degrees attend the nightly sequence of the "Pops" at Mechanics Hall. All the conditions combine graciously to give physical comfort and æsthetic pleasure. Mr. Zach has fitted the work of his orchestra in volume and quality to the character of the auditorium, whose eminently clear and favorable acoustics transmit every class of music most favorably, the responsiveness of the wooden construction more than atoning for any lack of mere material force in the band itself and apparently adding from its own harmonic nature something of fulness to the tones it takes up. Mr. Zach chooses his music with admirable consideration of all the conditions, and does not too often ask his audience to concede the silenced attention which they are always ready to give upon occasion. He finds place always for the ringing march, the gay dance, the strong overture and the varied arrangement or selection of favorite operatic melodies, and he encourages his men to round out everything to the full. The new things are numerous and selected for merit as well as for novelty, so that people who go mainly for the programme are sure to be repaid. And then the fresh, lively-moving air and the excellent ventilation, which carries aloft and away the smoke so fast that it has no time to annoy those who admit it only under pretext the necessity of smoking and cannot cling to them when they leave the hall. The space for promenading is a special satisfaction of the season, and they who sit at the tables also rejoice in plentiful elbow-room and in the easy, quick and dexterous serving of their "combinations" which the open order of the tables insures. Altogether, this season is in all respects the great success of all the series.

HOWARD MALCOM TICKNOR.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, MAY 13, 1900.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The 15th season of summer promenade concerts opened last Thursday evening in Mechanic's hall with every indication that the favorite musical diversion has lost none of its former popularity. The immense auditorium is admirably adapted to this style of entertainment, for the wide corridors permit throngs of promenaders to move about, thus making the concerts really "promenades" to those who so desire. The hall will be most attractively cool during even the warmest weather, and there seems to be nothing to cloud the success of the season. The program for Monday evening is:

March from "La Reine de Saba" ..... Gounod
Overture, "Martha" ..... Flotow
Waltz, "Wine, Women and Song" ..... Strauss
Selections from operas by ..... Meyerbeer
Waltz, "Harlequin's Journey" ..... Zach
Entre Triomphale des Boyards ..... Halvorsen
The Mouse-Trap ..... Koehler
(First time.)
Prelude to Act I, "Lohengrin" ..... Wagner
Offenbachiana ..... Conradi
Waltz, "Snowballs" ..... Ziehrer
Entr'acte, "Forgetmenot" ..... Macbeth
Teufel's March ..... Suppe

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, MAY 19, 1900

The "Pop Concerts" have again jumped into favor with the public, and Mechanics Hall has been found to be far more comfortable and better adapted to these entertainments than was the old Music Hall. The acoustics are particularly good for so large an auditorium, but the effect of the music will be increased in future by bringing the orchestra further forward into the hall and the erection of a sounding board. The spacious promenades are thronged during the intermissions and are much appreciated. The orchestra under Mr. Zach could hardly be improved, and to hear a Strauss waltz performed by so fine a body of musicians is worth a long journey. The audiences this week have been large and the advance bookings give every indication of a very prosperous season of these delightful entertainments. The programme for this evening will be as follows:

March, "Vienna Dude" ..... Wagner
Waltz, "Blue Danube" ..... Strauss
Overture, "Banditen Streiche" ..... Suppé
Selection, "Faust" ..... Gounod
Overture, "William Tell" ..... Rossini
'Cello obbligato, Mr. J. Keller.
Pizzicati ..... Eilenberg
Intermezzo, "Naila" ..... Delibes
Selection, "Wizard of the Nile" ..... Herbert
Waltz, "Lustige Brüder" ..... Vollstedt
Arabian Wedding ..... Tavan
(First time.)
Narcissus ..... Nevin
March, "Runaway Girl" ..... Monckton

Boston Courier.

ESTABLISHED 1795. MAY 19, 1900.

MUSIC.

THE "POPS."

The transfer of the famous and favorite "Pop" concert from the old Music Hall to the great auditorium of the Mechanics Building has proved a success. There was but one possible qualification foreseen, and that has not resulted unfavorably. It was feared that an orchestra of but fifty musicians or thereabouts, might be found too small for the immense space its tone would be expected to fill, and in which even the largest brass bands have not seemed too powerful. But this possible objection has amounted practically to nothing, and for various reasons. The construction of the room itself, chiefly in wood and with amplitude of free spaces for the circulation of sound, has favored the reception and transmission of the music, so that it reaches every corner clearly and in due proportion, even if sometimes a bit faintly—this diminishing its apparent volume, but not its beauty. Then again, the evenness, purity, and symmetry of the playing insure a perfect delivery of the music to the currents which are to bear it on its way, and guarantee the fulness of effect which a ragged or unequal performance could never create. And yet further, the "Pop" audiences, although they go for amusement and a good time, are nevertheless lovers of real music, and will always listen attentively when the best or most delicate selections are played. So that the value of the hall as a room for these concerts is established from the artistic standpoint. On the other hand, one can now have the room, the freedom and the sense of independence of one's neighbors which had long been unobtainable desiderata in Music Hall, while the excellently thoughtful and attentive service gains in promptness, quietude and ease. Of the programmes it hardly seems necessary to say much. Mr. Zach is a musician true and tried in the conductor's position; he knows both how to choose music and how to get it played. He understands also how to make all the components of an evening's music balance—the old with the new, the grave with the gay, the dance and march with the overture and pot-pourri, the soft and sentimental with the humorous and material. Altogether, therefore, it is easy to comprehend why the "Pops" are greater favorites this season than ever before—no less with swelldom, which wants its special reserved tables than with the public at large, which just wants to drop in, to wander in the wide lobbies and to take its chance for a vacant seat and a casual glass of something refreshing.

Boston Transcript

FRIDAY, MAY 11, 1900

MUSIC AND DRAMA

Mechanics Hall: The Pops

The "Pops" began last evening at Mechanics Hall; an orchestra of fifty, with Mr. Max Zach as conductor, and Mr. Otto Roth as leading first violin, played the following programme:

March, "Under the Double Eagle" ..... Wagner
Waltz, "Meerleuchten" ..... Ziehrer
Overture to "Piccolino" ..... Guiraud
Ballet-Music from "Sylvia" ..... Delibes
Kermesse flamande, from "Milenka" ..... Jan Blockx
(First time.)
Waltz, "Wiener Blut" ..... Strauss
Entr'acte-Gavotte ..... Gillet
(First time.)
Overture to "Tannhäuser" ..... Wagner
Waltz, "Harlequin's Wedding" (new) ..... Zach
Selection from "The Rounders" ..... Englander
(First time.)
Polka, "Tyrolean" ..... Zeller
March, "The Man Behind the Gun" ..... Sousa
(First time.)

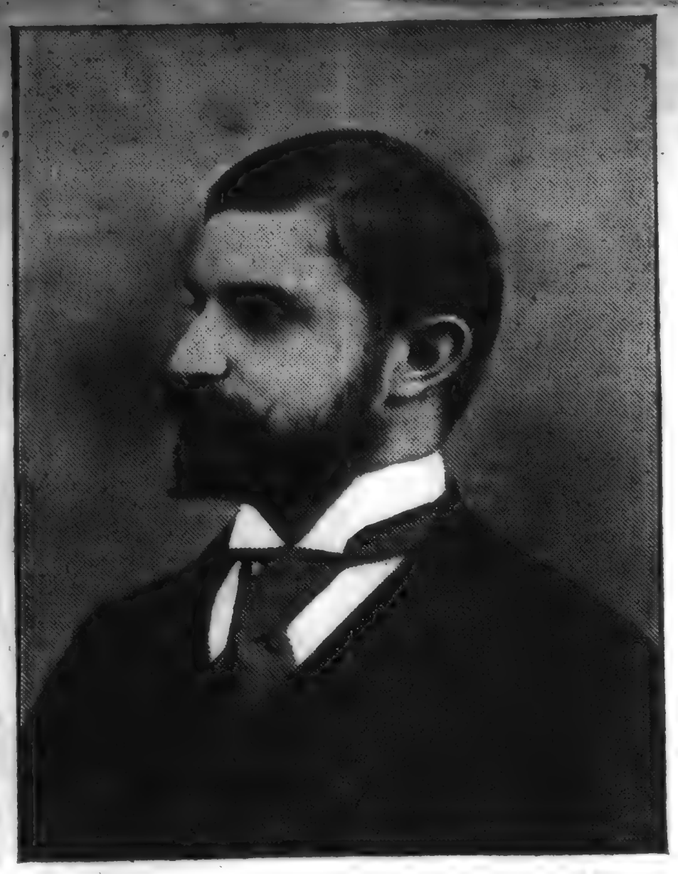
There was a good deal of speculation before the concert as to what the effect of an orchestra of fifty in Mechanics Hall would be. Of course, the effect of Sousa's Band in the same hall was no sound criterion; even the fact that that band was not too much for the hall was not worth much as a basis for calculating the probable effect of an orchestra. The remembered effect of the opera there was a far better one; though this or that individual's memory of how opera sounded was naturally conditioned to a great extent by the particular part of the hall in which he sat during the last opera season in the Huntington Avenue barn. At all events, opinions differed widely beforehand; some persons predicting that the orchestra would be all but inaudible; others (of whom I was one) counting on the really phenomenal acoustics of the place, holding that the effect would be as good as, if not better than, in the Old Music Hall of not entirely blessed memory. Well, it turned out that these latter were wrong; there was one factor which they (or, at least, I) had forgotten to take into account. This was the enormous and by no means silent audience at the tables on the floor; to make headway against the chit-chat of this mass of people was even a harder task for the band than to fill the vast cubic space of the hall itself. As a matter of fact, thanks to the excellent acoustics of Mechanics Hall, the music, barring some of the softer passages, was distinctly audible; but this was all; although the quality of tone was wondrously rich and beautiful, it was so subdued that it failed to arrest the attention, one had to listen with conscious effort, the effect was virtually nil. It was like ideal table music, an agreeable sound of the presence of which one is conscious, but to which one is not impelled to listen; a pleasant spur to conversation.

To judge of the excellence of the playing was impossible; it all sounded exquisite. It was curious to note the applause; the things most applauded were those whose principal charm lay in the rhythm, the waltzes, for instance, and the overture to "Tannhäuser." Wagner's scoring seems able to conquer anything and everything. But, though one of the waltzes was encored, the applause in general was not particularly hearty, and came, for the most part, from tables near the stage. It by no means follows, however, that people did not have a grand good time; there are many differences between a "Pop" and an ordinary concert, and it is not necessary that the music should hold the first place in the minds of the audience at a "Pop." I have no doubt that most of the occupants of table seats enjoyed themselves quite as much as I did, which is saying a good deal. The vast space of the floor made crowding unnecessary, and everyone had plenty of elbow room; the service, too, was better and more prompt than in the old Music Hall. There was no attempt made at decorating the stage, probably for the sake of giving the orchestra every possible chance; but the large and jolly audience was a pleasant sight in itself. I much doubt if the more subdued effect of the music will make any real difference in the success of the concerts; this first one was a splendid send off, and there need be no fear of this year's "Pops" lacking their usual support from the pleasure-seeking public.

This evening the orchestra will play overtures by Délibes and Suppé, marches by Kral, Sabathil and Fahrbach; waltzes by Strauss and Vollstedt, selections from "The Fortune Teller" and "Cavalleria Rusticana," and pieces by Tschaikowsky, Westerhout and Spindler. W. F. A.

[114]

INCOMPLETE



(Photograph by Ritz.)

CONDUCTS THE "POPS."

Max Zach, who succeeds Timothee Adamowski on the Leader's Stand.

WHEW! IT WAS COLD.

First Pop Concert of the Season Held in Mechanics' Hall Last Night— Big Audience Foregathers.

The fifteenth season of the Pops, Mr. C. A. Ellis, manager, and Mr. Max Zach, conductor, began last night at Mechanics' Hall.

This is the first time these concerts have been given in a hall that is sacred from association with food shows, ducks and swimming tanks, plows, dogs, fertilizers, and sporadic grand opera.

In one respect Mechanics' Hall has an advantage over the late Music Hall: there is room to walk about, and at a Promenade Concert it is a pleasant sight to see occasionally men and women promenading, either ostentatiously or shyly—just as Artemus Ward once apologized for a joke in a letter to Vanity Fair by saying that he thought the publication of a joke improved a comic paper once in a while.

THE AUDIENCE MIGHT HAVE DANCED.

The air was so cool last evening that you might reasonably have expected to see the audience walking at a brisk gait between the pieces, or dancing recklessly to the music by the band, but the hearers sat for the most part as though they were at a Symphony concert or at a Lowell lecture.

The audience was a large one. It would have crowded Music Hall. It is said that 1100 or 1200 were within the bars that, as ever, divide the social sheep from the too social goats. There were some striking costumes, which were designed evidently for summer weather; there were many men in immaculate evening dress, and there were others who tried to hear the music. Of these last some wondered why they had never heard Wagner's march, "Under the Double Eagle," performed under Mr. Gericke, Mr. Paur or Mr. Nikisch. Others, when the orchestra played softly, remembered the saying of the half-crazed and ultra-radical French musician: "To express satisfactorily silence in music, I should need at least two brass bands."

The First Program.

And this reminds me that Mr. Zach had chosen the program as follows:

March, "Under the Double Eagle"...Wagner
Waltz, "Meerleuchten".....Ziehrer
Overture to "Piccolino".....Guiraud
Ballet music, "Sylvia".....Delibes
Kermesse Flamande.....Jan Blockx
(First time.)
Waltz, "Vienna Blood".....Strauss
Entr'acte-Gavotte..... Gillet
(First time.)
Overture, "Tannhaeuser".....Wagner
Waltz, "Harlequin's Wedding" (new)...Zach
Selection from "The Rounders"....Englander
(First time.)
Polka, "Tyrolean".....Zeller
March, "Man Behind the Gun".....Sousa
(First time.)

It is always a pleasure to hear the suite from "Sylvia" and the music from "The Rounders" brought quickly to the mind a delightful story of true love that was not crossed. Uncle Amos was badly disappointed because Guiraud's overture to "Piccolino" was not played. [illegible] an autumn from Blockx's ballet reminds me that this Flemish composer of marked talent has been neglected in this city. The congregation, not accustomed to the surroundings, applauded at first in a subdued spirit, but warmed gradually as members recognized each other at long distance.

Gallery in Festal Array.

The first gallery was well peopled and the sight from above was festal. Even in a hot night this hall will not become stuffy, such are the easy means of ventilation.

After all, real enjoyment at these concerts rests with the audience itself. Strangers have suggested that there should be preparatory schools in the art of genuine amusement for the benefit of true Bostonians. It might help if dancing were allowed outside the bars during the waltzes, and the formality of introduction should be waived. Here is good music; here are light refreshments; here is the comfort of smoking at ease while the orchestra is playing; here are managers ready to please the audience; and, pray, what else is wanted? Warm weather; a greater affability of manner on the part of those thrown into close proximity; that cordial feeling toward one another; that throwing off of crusty conventionalisms, that spirit of "Come now, let us enjoy ourselves for two or three hours," which have characterized in past seasons the patrons of the Chutes.

And surely there is nothing in the immediate neighborhood of Mechanics' Hall, or in the atmosphere of the district, to encourage stiffness of manner, to check the genial smile, to chill the glad hand, to chasten [illegible] natural wish for enjoyment.

Hale.

POPS OPEN IN BLAZE OF GLORY.

First Concert in Mechanics' Hall Given With Many New Features.

SCENE AT THE FIRST POP CONCERT IN MECHANICS' HALL, THE FIRST EVER HELD OUTSIDE MUSIC HALL.

For the first time since their organization the Pop concerts were given outside of Music Hall and began their fifteenth season last evening in Mechanics' building. It was quite a departure and marked the beginning of the transit of musical Boston from its down-town precincts to a new Back Bay home.

There has been much speculation as to the feasibility of making this change of location, but if last evening's gathering is to be taken as any criterion the new abiding place of the Pops will be more popular than ever.

The large hall of Mechanics' building is utilized and the centre is partitioned off for the "elect," that is, those who sit at reserved tables, while on the outside there are the places for those who do not care to mingle with the swim or such as desire to promenade.

Indeed, quite an innovation has been established, which, if it is maintained, will add materially to the public favor with which these concerts have been held. During the entr'actes the table patrons left the inclosure and walked around the large corridors, as was the custom during the grand opera, and thus the social feature has been greatly enhanced.

There are now 220 tables within the inclosure, in place of some 100 in the old Music Hall, while the facilities for walking about are much increased. Then, too, the balconies afford better opportunity for hearing the music and viewing the kaleidoscopic scene below. In short, the pleasures of the Pops are materially enhanced by the new quarters.

Still another feature will be more appreciated as the weather becomes seasonable, namely the means of ventilation. Even on the hottest nights the hall will be cool while the immense area of open skylights will give almost perfect ventilation from tobacco smoke, pleasing alike to the patrons of the floor and the gallery.

Max Zach was warmly welcomed when he came on the stage and the different numbers of his excellent programme were warmly applauded. The orchestra is scarcely loud enough for the big hall save on the heaviest numbers and in some of the lighter selections was almost inaudible. This may cause some care in the selection of programmes, yet the patrons did not seem to object but chatted earnestly and continuously whether or no the music was playing. Possibly this may be an advantage, for comparatively few pay much attention to the orchestra, and more to the party of friends with whom they happen to be.

The programme last evening was especially attractive, notably the ballet music from "Sylvia," the Strauss waltz "Vienna Blood" and selections from "The Rounders."

Mr. Zach has made some excellent selections for the next few nights, and it is evident that he intends to maintain his popularity as a leader of these concerts.

All Boston was present, and Manager Comee glanced over the brilliant assemblage with pardonable pride. Among those in the audience were Mr. and Mrs. Henry L. Upham, General Curtis Guild, Jr., and Mrs. Guild, Paymaster Littlefield and party, Fred Purmort and party, Mr. and Mrs. George Herric Billings and party, Mr. and Mrs. William F. Fitzgerald and party, Dr. H. H. Jernegan, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Riley, Mr. and Mrs. Herman [illegible] Chellus, Max Heinrich, Dr. Wyllie, Grace Atwell, the well-known actress, and a party of friends, Mrs. W. G. Benedict and party, besides all the old subscribers who have attended these concerts since the inception.

[115]

INCOMPLETE

OPENING NIGHT OF THE SUMMER "POP" CONCERTS.

Large and Fashionable Audience in Mechanic's Hall Enjoys the Attractive Program Interpreted by Max Zach's Orchestra.

BOSTON GLOBE—FRIDAY, MAY 11, 1900.

OPENING NIGHT AT THE "POPS" AT MECHANIC'S HALL.

The opening of the "pop" concert season in Mechanic's hall last evening was a gala affair.

In one sense it was like looking at an old Music hall "pop" through a powerful opera glass—everything, though of a familiar character, being on a greatly enlarged scale.

The area inside the railing that incloses the reserved tables is twice as large as of yore, the reserved tables have been doubled in number, and so have those for "Tom, Dick and Harry" outside the charmed circle; yet they were all full last evening, and people were crying for more.

For nearly half an hour before the beginning of the concert a handsomely dressed crowd was steadily filing in past the box office window, and by 8 o'clock, when the orchestra, under the baton of Max Zach, started the evening's flow of melody, the great auditorium presented an animated and imposing picture.

Yet for nearly an hour thereafter little parties of fashionable people continued to arrive and were swallowed up in the great throng that seemed as if it had reached its utmost possible limit of expansion, and yet could always afford space for two or three more.

The stage of Mechanic's hall, since the removal of the organ, having a practically perfect semicircular shape at the back furnishes decidedly more symmetrical and appropriate background for the orchestra—in fact it almost conveys the impression of having been especially built for the purpose it is now devoted to.

The railed inclosure on the floor extends almost to the line of the overhang of the balcony, still leaving a large space for "everybody's" tables and for a promenade outside.

Two fine broad aisles, large enough to accommodate several persons abreast, extend through the entire length of the inclosure, affording a quick and remarkably convenient means of communicating with any one of the several hundred tables.

The stock of refreshments is kept beneath the stage, and the army of waiters who serve them, coming from that quarter, which is the opposite end of the building from the entrance to the hall, all inconvenience arising from promenaders and waiters coming in contact with each other is entirely avoided.

In the front lobby, just at the left of the main entrance, is a spacious and convenient room for checking wraps of all sorts.

From the balcony, which contained a large gathering of people satisfied to take their entertainment without gustatory accompaniment, a view of the great audience below was a most attractive spectacle.

The number of persons at the tables were estimated at over 2000, and as the proportion of women to men is usually two or three to one, and the prevailing idea seemed to be to make it a dressy affair, the sea of pink, pale blue, green and white, in glistening silks, satins and ribbons, was a beautiful exhibition of patchwork on a very large scale.

A still more interesting spectacle, however, and one that is undoubtedly to become a permanent one, as it is a new one, was that made by a considerable portion of the audience who, during the intermissions, fell into line and promenaded all around the 20-foot aisle that completely surrounds the hall, beneath the gallery.

There is room enough for everybody, and with two processions of elegantly gowned promenaders moving in opposite directions at the same time, there is a charm about the pageant that is sure to render it one of the mighty features of the "pops" hereafter.

The season is to last until July 4. Mr Zach will conduct during the first four weeks and will be succeeded by Gustave Strube, who will fill out the remaining four.

One reform in the interest of the convenience of the thousands of patrons who are likely to attend during the present season that suggested itself last evening, is that the electric cars should stop in front of the entrance to the hall, instead of carrying their passengers on to the further corner of the next street, which in inclement weather will prove an insufferable nuisance.

An idea of the character of the great audience may be gained from a few names picked at random, after a glance at the promenaders. There were Maj Henry L. Higginson, Mrs E. C. Agassiz, Amos Cotting, Dr "Billy" Brooks, Mr and Mrs Curtis Guild Jr, Mrs William Hooper, Lewis Tucker, Hon Joshua Holden, Postmaster Hibbard, and his assistant, Mr Mansfield, with their wives; R. C. Dixey and party, John LaValle, Mark Andrews, Frederick Carpenter, Alfred Glazier, W. F. Apthorp, Mr and Mrs Edward H. Clement and Stephen H. Williams.

Last evening's program was as follows:

March, Under the Double Eagle	Wagner
Waltz, Meerleuchten	Ziehrer
Overtre to Piccolino	Guirand
Ballet music, Sylvia	Delibes
Kermesse Flamande, from Milenka (First time.)	Jan Block
Waltz, Vienna Blood	Strauss
Entr'acte-Gavotte	Gillet
(First time.)
Overture, Tannhäuser	Wagner
Waltz, Harlequin's Wedding, new	Zach
Selection from The Rounders	Englander
(First time.)
Polka, Tyrolean	Zeller
March, Man Behind the Gun	Sousa
(First time.)

Conductor Zach did not rely entirely on standard selections for the opening night, but devoted one-third of his program to new compositions. The evening began with a spirited interpretation of the Wagner march, "Under the Double Eagle," which narrowly escaped an encore, and as many of the auditors were late in arriving it was not until after the "Meerleuchten" waltz that the patrons fairly got settled down to enjoy the first part of the delightful program.

The members of the orchestra have so long been associated [illegible] Bostonians take it as a [illegible] course that the work of sym[illegible]ils for little or no unfavorable criticism. And this was the case last evening, as for many years past at the "pops." Some of the numbers were encored, and one or two of the more delicate works which deserved to be encored lost some of their effectiveness by reason of the size of the auditorium, but the program as a whole was up to the regular "pop" standard and was very cordially received.

The closing number of the first part, Delibes' ballet music from "Silvia," first aroused real enthusiasm, notably in the charming "pizzicati" movement, which was played in a delightful manner. The excerpt from "Milenka," by Jan Block, given for the first time, was not specially interesting, aside from its excellent interpretation, but Gillet's "Entr'acte" gavotte was a very pleasing novelty, dainty and graceful and deserving of the encore demanded and granted. The "Tannhauser" overture went well and won the usual applause.

Mr Zach's jolly waltz, "Harlequin's Wedding," came in for prompt and noisy demonstrations of appreciation; the selection from "The Rounders" and the Sousa march, "Man Behind the Gun," were each received with great favor; also the "Tyrolean" polka, by Zeller, a lively little dance composition, exquisitely played by the orchestra. There was sufficient variety on Mr Zach's program to suit all tastes, but it was evident that the "bold, percussion" style of music met with the most favor, being able to hold the attention of distant auditors more effectively than was the case with some of the lighter selections.

The program for this evening will be as follows:

March, Jolly Soldiers	Sabathil
Overture, Le Roi l'a dit	Delibes
Waltz, Artist's Life	Strauss
Selection from The Fortune Teller	Herbert
Waltz, Lustige Bruder	Vollstedt
March, Szechenyi	Fahrbach
Selection, Cavalleria Rusticana	Mascagni
Polonaise	Tschaikow
Overture, Pique Dame	Suppé
Reade D'Amour
Caprit
Hoch Habsburg

[116]

INCOMPLETE

The leading feature of the week was the opening of the Pop concerts Thursday in the big audience hall of Mechanics' building. They opened, too, with eclat, enthusiasm and gay attire. The mercury may indulge in acrobatic climbings (or descents as on Thursday); we may be warm one hour and chilly the next; we may start out in the morning with shirt waist and low shoes and again in the evening with furs and high boots; the Boston Elevated may pack us into box cars at noon, or open ones as the temperature warrants—all these things are possible. But there is one sign which tells us infallibly what season it is actually and ought to be in evidence—the commencement night at the "Pops" which even the intelligent and Harvard College trained management sometimes call promenade concerts, though nobody promenades during the concert except the waiters and, in the intermission, the band. Now we know that early spring has passed and the summer season is on. The audience was a little in doubt Thursday whether or not to take advantage of the management's thoughtfulness in providing a splendid promenade, until finally, some of the younger set, during the first intermission started out to investigate; others followed and there you are! This going out in opera fashion to greet friends and make new acquaintances is to be one of the charming features of the season's concerts and may justify the management in calling them "promenade concerts."

Mr. Zach was given a most cordial welcome and everyone seemed contented amid the new surroundings. One missed, however, the customary decorations of old Music Hall, and it is hoped that the barrenness of the place will be relieved in some way. Many suggestions were offered Mr. Ellis, one that the outer row of tables be fringed with trees of some description, at least in the rear of the hall, thus separating the promenaders from the outer tables; another was that a cloth of deep red be suspended from the balcony, this to be garlanded with laurel. One Back Bay belle, who is nothing if not patriotic, declared that one American flag on the stage would satisfy her.

Within the inclosed precinct were 22 tables, averaging five persons to a table and the cream of Boston society was represented. Mr. C. A. Ellis, Mr. F. R. Comee, Mr. L. H. Mudgett deserve great credit for the admirable arrangements which will be improved if need be to suit the wish of all.

Mr. Henry L. Higginson and party were among the early arrivals. The ladies were handsomely gowned and evening dress prevailed among the men. It was a typical first night audience as at the theatre. Mrs. Henry M. Whitman, gowned richly in black velvet and silk, [illegible] arrived early and sat well in front [illegible] friends.

[illegible]ong many well-known faces were [illegible]ially noted: General and Mrs. Curtis [illegible] with Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Bennett [illegible] Miss Mary Johnson, Miss Heloise [illegible]ey, Mr. and Mrs E. H. Clement, Mrs. [illegible]H. Washburn with friends, Mr. and [illegible]s. William Hooper, Mr. Walter Haw[illegible]s, Mr. and Mrs. Patterson, Mr. and [illegible]rs. James Stack, Miss Grace Atwell [illegible]ith Mrs. Washington G. Benedict, Mr. [illegible]arence Benedict, Miss Florence M. Bul[illegible]d, the fiance of Vallette Benedict, [illegible]s. Louis Whicher, Miss Going, Mr. and [illegible]rs. Hibbard, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel [illegible]ank, Mr. and Mrs. Hecht, Dr. Strong, [illegible]. and Mrs. John Lavalle, Mr. and Mrs. [illegible]enry M. Upham, Dr. and Mrs. Frank Watson, Dr. and Mrs. Winter with party, Paymaster Littlefield, United States Navy, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Carpenter, Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Holden, Dr. and Mrs. Henry Arthur Osgood, Mr. Charles Hayden, Mr. Kenibbs, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Riley, Miss Elenore Bolton and her [illegible]ee, Mr. Kuntz, Miss Fisher, Mrs. A. [illegible]lark, Mr. Wilhelm Heinrich with [illegible]d, Mr. and Mrs. George Herric Billings, Mrs. Philip Hale, Miss Going, Dr. H. H. Jernegan, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dennee, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Briggs, Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Kirtland, Mme. Kirtland, Miss Lee, Mrs. Yeaton, Mr. George Tebbitts, Miss Stearns of Providence, Mr. Von Auken, Dr. Nolen, Mrs. L. B. Robinson, Mr. Stillings, Mr. R. C. Dixey, Mrs. Carrie A. Richmond, Mr. Walter Deland Caine, Mr. Arthur K. Peck, Mr. Herbert Leland, Mr. and Mrs. Frank J. Bonnelle, Miss Blanche Bonnelle, Mrs. Fred R. Comee, Mr. and Mrs. Frank I. Chick, Colonel Harry Hastings, Mr. and Mrs. Heman P. Chellus, Captain and Mrs. W. H. Alline, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas O. Rogers, Mrs. G. H. Sprague, Mr. Dexter Niswell, Mr. W. H. Bowker, Dr. and Mrs Ingalls, Miss Helen M. Fogler, Mrs. Somes, Dr. Chadwick, Mr. Louis Elson, Mrs. Agassiz, Mr. Lewis Tucker, Mr. and Mrs. Mansfield, Mr. Mark Andrews, Mr. and Mrs. Apthorp, Mr. Stephen H. Williams, Mr. and Mrs. Fiske Warren, Miss Osgood, Mr. Fred Purmort and party, Mr. and Mrs. Gericke, Mr. Grant Walker, Mrs. Harry Pratt McKean, Miss Isabel Stevens, Mrs. John C. Grey and daughter, Miss Katherine Crowingshield and Mr. Johnson Morton.

Mrs. Curtis Guild, Jr., and Miss Mary Johnson have returned from Atlantic City, where they have been sojourning several weeks. They received a cordial welcome from many friends at the opening night of the pop concerts. The ladies were handsomely gowned, Miss Johnson in violet and white silk; Mrs. Guild wore a handsome opera cloak of white broadcloth with lace collar. They were accompanied by Colonel Guild and Mr. and Mrs. [illegible]phen Bennett, the latter wearing the [illegible]est toilet there—a black net heavily [illegible]gled with cut steel and jet. A [illegible]sian hat topped her head, glittering [illegible] steel. The ladies wore many dia[illegible]s and were the centre of attraction.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry M. Upham (Grace Le Baron) sail on the New England May 28, for a three months' stay abroad. Mrs. Upham is recovering from a severe illness lasting many weeks and was in attendance at the pop concert Thursday, accompanied by Mr. Upham, Dr. and Mrs. Arthur Henry Osgood. Mrs. Upham wore a superb black velvet garment with jet trimmings and presented a most distingue appearance. Mrs. Osgood was also handsomely attired.

"This Country, with its ... Belongs to the People who ..."

BOSTON EVENING REC[illegible]

OPENING "POP" CONCERT.

"Dost thou think, because thou art virtuous, there shall be no more cakes and ale?" We agree with the righteous indignation of Sir Toby Belch; let those who crave more symphonies buy an aeolian and play them in solitude, for ourselves we will gladly change Brahms for beer, and Strauss for straws attached to colored lemonade for a few weeks if the weather is propitious. Judging from the manner in which Mechanics Hall was crowded last night, the public agree with the incendiary sentiments expressed above, and are quite ready to wag their heads, tap their feet, and drink their beverages, to March and Waltz music, instead of further studying the inner thought and last dying speech of Zarathustra.

After all, the change is not such a violent one! A Frenchman who had taken out naturalization papers in England said: "Eet ees no very great deefferenze! Before, I have lost zee battail of Vaterloo; now I have won him!" In like manner the critic may state that before he indulged in Richard Strauss, and now he has exchanged him for Johann.

The new abode of the concerts, Mechanics Hall, suits its purpose and affords plenty of elbow room. Some of the more delicate numbers may suffer a little, but the more robust music, which forms, and ought to form, the bulk of a smoking-concert, rather gains than loses by its informal frame.

Everybody seemed in good humor when Mr. Max Zach came to the conductor's stand, and he received a welcome that proved that his services in behalf of the musical-stay-at-homes in the warm season were not forgotten. The programme was of the usual character, giving its most ambitious numbers in the central part, the second hour of the concert, and its chief rollick at the close. Managers Ellis and Comee had been ubiquitous in perfecting all arrangements for the comfort of the audience, for there is much more than the music to be arranged for on these occasions, and every table had its array of guests in brilliant attire and holiday mood.

There is little that is critical to write about these informal concerts; the overture to "Tannhaeuser" assimilated with extracts from Anhaeuser, and the applause was liberal throughout the evening. As a matter of record we append the opening programme:—

1. March, "Under the Double Eagle"...Wagner
2. Waltz, "Meerleuchten".....Ziehrer
3. Overture to "Piccolino".....Guirand
4. Ballet music, "Sylvia".....Delibes
   a. Les Chasseresses.
   b. Valse Lente.
   c. Pizzicati.
   d. Finale.
5. Kermesse Flamande, from "Milenka"..... Jan Blockx (First time)
6. Waltz, "Vienna Blood".....Strauss
7. Entr'acte-Gavotte .....Gillet (First time)
8. Overture, "Tannhauser".....Wagner
9. Waltz, "Harlequin's Wedding." New... Zach
10. Selection from "The Rounders"....Englander (First time)
11. Polka, "Tyrolean".....Zeller
12. March, "Man Behind the Gun"....Sousa (First time)

Not a bad list for a beginning, and equally varied musical bills of fare are offered for each evening of the first week.

Louis C. Elson.

The first of the "Pop" concerts at Mechanics' Hall, Thursday evening, proved a great success when Mr. Max Zach, the leader, entertained the large audience with a delightful programme, including a waltz of his own composition. Mr. Fred R. Comee, too, deserves the greatest praise for the immense success of this initial performance under his able management. In the hall were Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Higginson, Mme. Agassiz, Mrs. Henry Whitman, and Mr. and Mrs. Gericke at a front table. Near them sat General and Mrs. Curtis Guild, Jr., with Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Bennett; Mr. and Mrs. John Lavalle, Miss M. Johnson and Mr. Charles Hayden formed a jolly party while at the next table sat Mr. and Mrs. Louis E. Whicher with friends. Mr. and Mrs. William Hooper were at a table. Mr. and Mrs. F. B. Carpenter had Mr. Charles W. Littlefield and friends with them. Col. and Mrs. Fred King had a party with them. Mr. and Mrs. Otis Kimball and Miss Kimball occupied a table and near them were Dr. J. G. Chadwick and friends. Mr. Carl Sobeski was at Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Riley's table. Others in the hall were Mr. and Mrs. Frank S. Chick, Mr. Walter S. Hawkins, Mrs. Fiske Warren, Mr. and Mrs. Adams, Mr. George H. Tebbitts, Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Leland, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Frank, Mr. and Mrs. W. Patterson, Mr. Henry Hastings, Mr. Fred Pennant and others.

Concerts

THE DEMOLISHMENT of Music hall has begun. All last week a corps of workmen were busy tearing it down and a mass of debris is the sorry sight that has greeted the eyes of inquisitive visitors the last few days. For there has come a good many visitors to the old place, for there has been no amusement features to attract them, most of them having come to procure some relics of the old home of music. At Mr. Higginson's orders all the statuary has been carefully removed. Mr. Comee has secured the old bell from the Winter-street entrance for his relic and Mr. Mudgett has one of the little bronze cupids with a trumpet which surmounted the chandeliers. Most of the relic seekers have wanted the number and letter-plate which marked the seat they had sat in for years, and still others have wanted even more, and have asked if they might not purchase the entire seats. Wherever the lights were fastened on to the balcony there were plaster rosettes, and these were spoken for even before they were taken down.

As everyone knows by this time the old Music hall is destined to be a theatre, having been purchased by Mr. Allen, the owner of the Castle Square theatre and hotel. The stage will be placed opposite its original position, with entrance from Bromfield street. There will be a large and elegant foyer with entrances at both Winter street and Hamilton place. Henry W. Savage is to be its manager and the contract calls for its completion Oct. 1. Mr. Savage has denied the report that the theatre will be devoted to vaudeville and says it will be available for concert, opera or theatrical purposes.

The Pop concerts still live if Music hall is dying, and there is great rejoicing all along the line that the opening of the season is no further off than next Thursday evening. They will be under the same management as heretofore, with Mr. F. R. Comee at the head, and they are to be given in the spacious Mechanics' building which will afford more room and better facitities than they have ever had. Max Zach will conduct an orchestra of fifty Symphony players the first half and Mr. Strube the last half of the season.

The programme for the opening night on Thursday will be:

March, "Under the Double Eagle".....Wagner
Waltz, "Meerlentchen,,, ...Ziehrer
Overture to "Piccolino".. .....Gairand
Ballet music, 'Sylvia.".....Delibes
Les Chasseuresses.
Valse Lente.
Pizzicati.
Finale.
"Kermesse Flamande," from "Milenka"....
.....Jan Block
(First Time)
Waltz, "Vienna Blood,".....Strauss
Entr'acte Gavotte .. .. Gillet
(First Time)
Overture, "Tannhauser".....Wagner
Waltz, "Harlequin's Wedding." New. ..Zach
Selection from "The Rounders" .....Englander
(First Time.)
Polka, "Tyrolean".....Zeller
March, "Man behind the Gun".....Sousa
(First Time,)

THE BEACON.

The Pop Concerts.

There is a general opinion that the only fault to be found with the Pop concerts is that they are too soon over. The new quarters are as well filled as was the smaller hall and give greater satisfaction. As the warmer weather comes it is doubtful if there will be accommodation even in the large hall for the crowds that are attracted there. Society enjoys the savor of bohemianism and the rest of the world enjoys society, and both classes find pleasure in the best music given so perfectly by the orchestra under Mr. Max Zach's direction, and the programs are made up from the best composers. The season ends June 30, and it is a misfortune that these concerts cannot be given through the summer months. Seats may be secured for any date in advance.

THE BEACON.

The Pop Concerts.

The Pop concerts gain rather than lose in popularity as the days pass. Last week's Military night was a great success, musically and in point of numbers. Next week promises to be the week of the season. Monday will be Harvard night, and one may safely prophesy that there will be no vacant chairs there. Tuesday evening is devoted to Wagner, and there will be selections from Tannhäuser, Die Meistersinger, Die Walküre, Rienzi, Lohengrin, The Flying Dutchman and The Evening Star. One does not think of Wagner as a popular composer, but there is none represented at these concerts whose music wins more warm and genuine applause than this great master. It would be a pretty compliment to the musicians of this city if one evening's program were to be arranged from the compositions of Boston musicians, nor would there be any dearth of suitable numbers for the evening. One regrets that the concerts are so near their close. The season has been most successful in all respects.

The greatest night in the history of the Pops was Monday, "Graduates' Night," when all seats were taken and much standing room occupied. It was a jolly crowd, with not a trace of disorder. Manager Comee was in his best mood, and deserved the many kind words said of his skill in decorating the hall and providing so many opportunities for happenings not on the programme. Of the Harvard men present one is especially worthy of mention, Mr. James Mills Pierce of the class of '53, who enjoyed the show as well as any freshman. The boys had a deep respect for the banner over his head, bearing the figures '53, for they left it standing when every piece of scarlet decoration had disappeared. In the crowd were noticed Dr. and Mrs. Arthur Henry Osgood, with Mr. and Mrs. H. Staples Potter; Mrs. Amsden, Mr. Richard D. Sears, Mr. Charles H. Gibson, Dr. Garceau, Mrs. Barbara N. Galpin, Mr. George H. Galpin, Mr. Hecht, Mr. Ezra Marble, Mrs. Leon F. Whitney, Miss Morrison, Mrs. B. C. Lincoln, Miss Lelia Boothby, Mr. Josef Adamowski, Mr. Max Zach, Miss Lillian Marshall, Professor and Mrs. Currier, Mrs. F. Loring Wheeler, Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Kittredge, Mr. and Mrs. Dunn, Miss Florence Kittredge, Mr. Courtenay Guild, Mr. Thomas Hall, Miss Susie Hall, Miss Fanny Stearns, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dennee, Mr. Bartlett, Colonel W. A. Pew, Mrs. John H. Gibbs, Mr. Chauncy Simmons, Mrs. Fred Comee, Mrs. Frederick Galloupe, Mrs. Robert M. Morse, Mr. N. H. Ladd, Captain and Mrs. W. H. Allline, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas O. Rogers, Mr. Dexter Wiswell, Miss Marion Goodale, Mr. Negus, Mr. Walter Dugan, Mr. G. L. Willman, Mr. and Mrs. Morse, Mr. N. T. Wood, Mr. E. L. Davenport, Mr. Howard Davenport and the wife of Colonel Meysenburg, who was with the Kittredge party.

FINANCIAL NOTES.

The Pop Concerts.

Perhaps it is that blessings brighten as they take their flight which makes parties eager to make the most of the few evenings remaining before the Pops close for the season. Perhaps, too, it may be that it has been found that there are few more comfortable places wherein to spend an evening than the hall where these concerts are given. On the hottest evenings of the week it was cool in the hall, and thousands availed themselves of the opportunity to enjoy the comforts associated with a Pop concert. Even the departure of so large a number of society people appears to have had little effect upon the size of the audiences. The music grows better, due to arrangements made to improve the hall acoustically and to the orchestra becoming accustomed to the space. Monday next will be devoted to the graduates of the season, and Tuesday is Request night, the program being made to conform with requests from the public.

—Under the most favorable auspices the Pop Concerts made their debut for the new century on Thursday evening, when Mechanic's Hall was filled with a large and fashionable audience. A splendid program was arranged for the first night, and Mr. Zach received an ovation from those present. Everyone enjoyed the promenade, which is a new feature of the [illegible]airs, and Mr. C. A. Ellis, Mr. Comee and Mr. Mudgett were highly commended for the admirable arrangement. A most attractive group at one of the tables included Mrs. Curtis Guild, jr., and Miss Mary Johnson. The ladies were handsomely attired, Miss Johnson in violet and white silk; Mrs. Guild wore a handsome opera cloak of white broadcloth with lace collar. They were accompanied by Colonel Guild and Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Bennett, the latter wearing the richest toilette there—a black net heavily spangled with cut steel and jet. A Parisian hat topped her head, glittering with steel. The ladies were many diamonds and were the centre of attraction. At another table sat Mr. and Mrs. Henry L. Higginson, Mme. Agassiz, Mr. and Mrs. Wilhelm Gericke and Mrs. Henry Whitman. At another table were Col. and Mrs. Fred King, Mr. and Mrs. William Perkins, Mr. and Mrs. John Lavalle, Miss Mollie Johnson and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hayden. Elsewhere were noted Mr. and Mrs. Otis Kimball, Miss Kimball, Dr. James Chadwick, the Hon. and Mrs. Thomas Riley, with Mr. Carl Sobeski, Mrs. Max Zach, Otto Rothe, Mr. and Mrs. Amory, Mr. John Lindsey, Mr. Clifford Howe, Mrs. Harry Pratt McKean, who is visiting friends in town, Mr. and Mrs. Fiske Warren, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Clement, Mrs. C.H. Washburn with friends, Mr. and Mrs. William Hooper, Mr. Walter Hawkins, Mr. and Mrs. Patterson, Mr. and Mrs. James Stack, Miss Grace Atwell with Mrs. George G. Benedict, Mr. Clarence Benedict, Miss Florence M. Bullard, the fiancee of Vallette Benedict, Mr. and Mrs. Hibbard, Mr. and Mrs. Hecht, Dr. Strong, Mr. and Mrs. Henry M. Upham, Dr. and Mrs. Frank Watson, Dr. and Mrs. Winter with party, Paymaster Littlefield, United States Navy, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Carpenter, Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Holden, Dr. and Mrs. Henry Arthur Osgood, Miss Fisher, Mrs. A. C. Clark, Mr. Wilhelm Heinrich with friend, Mr. and Mrs. George Herric Billings, Dr. H. H. Jernegan, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dennee, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Briggs, Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Kirtland, Mme. Kirtland, Miss Lee, Mrs. Yeaton, Mr. George Tebbets, Miss Stearns of Providence, Mr. Von Aulken, Dr. Nolen, Mrs. L. B. Robinson, Mr. Stillings, Mr. R. C. Dixey, Mrs. Carrie A. Richmond, Mr. Walter Deland Came, Mr. Arthur K. Peck, Mr. and Mrs. M. Herbert Leland, Mr. and Mrs. Frank J. Bonnelle, Miss Blanche Bonnelle, Mrs. Fred R. Comee, Mr. and Mrs. Frank [illegible]ol. Harry Hastings, Mr. and Mrs. Heman P. Chellus, Capt. and Mrs. W. H. Allline, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas O. Rogers, Mrs. G. H. Sprague, Mr. Dexter W. Niswell, Mr. W. H. Bowker, Dr. and Mrs. Ingalls, Miss Helen M. Fogler, Mrs. Somes, Dr. Chadwick, Mr. Louis Elson, Mr. Lewis Tucker, Mr. and Mrs. Mansfield, Mr. Mark Andrews, Mr. and Mrs. Apthorp, Mr. Stephen H. Williams, Miss Osgood, Mr. Fred Purmort and party, Mr. Grant Walker, Miss Isabel Stevens, Mrs. John C. Grey and daughter, Miss Katharine Crowninshield and Mr. Johnson Morton.

THE BEACON.

The Pop Concerts.

There could be no more delightful way of spending these hot evenings than at the Pops, with cooling drinks at command, just enough informality, and such perfect music to enjoy. Next week's plan provides for special evenings. Monday will be devoted in large measure to Wagner, with some Strauss waltzes for those who like other music. Tuesday is Technology night, and for this popular music has been provided. This will be the last appearance of Mr. Zach as conductor. Mr. Gustav Strube will assume the position of conductor on Wednesday. The orchestra is generous in the matter of encores. On Thursday evening of this week Mr. Zach's Lost in Dreams was so enthusiastically received that it was repeated. An evening rarely passes without extra numbers. The tables are filled nightly by appreciative hearers from this city and the suburbs, and the hall is cool and comfortable even in the hottest weather.

BOSTON TIMES

The dear old Pops continue along their merry way in Mechanics' building and every one of the thousands of patrons is happy in being such. There is nothing else like the Pop concerts. They are all we want and just what we want for hot weather music. It would be invidious to think of improving them, every one is so well satisfied to have them as they are. Mr. F. R. Comee is the force behind the throne that looks out for the business side of them, and provides so well for the convenience and comfort of patrons. Mr. Max Zach is nightly winning new admirers by the way he handles his orchestra of Symphony men and the programmes he selects. Tonight's programme will be:

Persian March .....Strauss
Overture to "Mignon" .....Thomas
Waltz, "Die Schonbrunner" .....Lanner
Selection from "Fatinitza" .....Suppe
Scherzo-Valse, from "Boabdil".....Moszkowski
Malaguena,
Pastorale.. .....Helen Hopekirk
Waltz, "Neu-Wien".....Strauss
Ride of the Valkyries .....Wagner
Selection from "The Fencing-master"..DeKoven
Valse, from "Sylvia" .....Delibes
Pizzicati,
Husarenritt .....Spindler
Tabasco March .....Chadwick

[118]

Concerts

THE DEMOLISHMENT of Music hall has begun. All last week a corps of workmen were busy tearing it down and a mass of debris is the sorry sight that has greeted the eyes of inquisitive visitors the last few days. For there have been a good many visitors to the old place, if there has been no amusement features to attract them, most of them having come to procure some relics of the old home of music. At Mr. Higginson's orders all the statuary has been carefully removed. Mr. Comee has secured the old bell from the Winter-street entrance for his relic and Mr. Mudgett has one of the little bronze cupids with a trumpet which surmounted the chandeliers. Most of the relic seekers have wanted the number and letter-plate which marked the seat they had sat in for years, and still others have wanted even more, and have asked if they might not purchase the entire seats. Wherever the lights were fastened on to the balcony there were plaster rosettes, and these were spoken for even before they were taken down.

As everyone knows by this time the old Music hall is destined to be a theatre, having been purchased by Mr. Allen, the owner of the Castle Square theatre and hotel. The stage will be placed opposite its original position, with entrance from Bromfield street. There will be a large and elegant foyer with entrances at both Winter street and Hamilton place. Henry W. Savage is to be its manager and the contract calls for its completion Oct. 1. Mr. Savage has denied the report that the theatre will be devoted to vaudeville and says it will be available for concert, opera or theatrical purposes.

The Pop concerts still live if Music hall is dying, and there is great rejoicing all along the line that the opening of the season is no further off than next Thursday evening. They will be under the same management as heretofore, with Mr. F. R. Comee at the head, and they are to be given in the spacious Mechanics' building which will afford more room and better facitities than they have ever had. Max Zach will conduct an orchestra of fifty Symphony players the first half and Mr. Strube the last half of the season.

The programme for the opening night on Thursday will be:

March, "Under the Double Eagle" ..... Wagner
Waltz, "Meerlentchen,,, ... Ziehrer
Overture to "Piccolino" ..... Gairand
Ballet music, 'Sylvia." ..... Delibes
Les Chasseuresses.
Valse Lente.
Pizzicati.
Finale.
"Kermesse Flamande," from "Milenka" ..... Jan Block
(First Time)
Waltz, "Vienna Blood," ..... Strauss
Entr'acte Gavotte ..... Gillet
(First Time)
Overture, "Tannhauser" ..... Wagner
Waltz, "Harlequin's Wedding." New. ..... Zach
Selection from "The Rounders" ..... Englander
(First Time.)
Polka, "Tyrolean" ..... Zeller
March, "Man behind the Gun" ..... Sousa
(First Time.)

THE BEACON.

The Pop Concerts.

There is a general opinion that the only fault to be found with the Pop concerts is that they are too soon over. The new quarters are as well filled as was the smaller hall and give greater satisfaction. As the warmer weather comes it is doubtful if there will be accommodation even in the large hall for the crowds that are attracted there. Society enjoys the savor of bohemianism and the rest of the world enjoys society, and both classes find pleasure in the best music given so perfectly by the orchestra under Mr. Max Zach's direction, and the programs are made up from the best composers. The season ends June 30, and it is a misfortune that these concerts cannot be given through the summer months. Seats may be secured for any date in advance.

THE BEACON.

The Pop Concerts.

The Pop concerts gain rather than lose in popularity as the days pass. Last week's Military night was a great success, musically and in point of numbers. Next week promises to be the week of the season. Monday will be Harvard night, and one may safely prophesy that there will be no vacant chairs there. Tuesday evening is devoted to Wagner, and there will be selections from Tannhäuser, Die Meistersinger, Die Walküre, Rienzi, Lohengrin, The Flying Dutchman and The Evening Star. One does not think of Wagner as a popular composer, but there is none represented at these concerts whose music wins more warm and genuine applause than this great master. It would be a pretty compliment to the musicians of this city if one evening's program were to be arranged from the compositions of Boston musicians, nor would there be any dearth of suitable numbers for the evening. One regrets that the concerts are so near their close. The season has been most successful in all respects.

The greatest night in the history of the Pops was Monday, "Graduates' Night," when all seats were taken and much standing room occupied. It was a jolly crowd, with not a trace of disorder. Manager Comee was in his best mood, and deserved the many kind words said of his skill in decorating the hall and providing so many opportunities for happenings not on the programme. Of the Harvard men present one is especially worthy of mention, Mr. James Mills Pierce of the class of '53, who enjoyed the show as well as any freshman. The boys had a deep respect for the banner over his head, bearing the figures '53, for they left it standing when every piece of scarlet decoration had disappeared. In the crowd were noticed Dr. and Mrs. Arthur Henry Osgood, with Mr. and Mrs. H. Staples Potter; Mrs. Amsden, Mr. Richard D. Sears, Mr. Charles H. Gibson, Dr. Garceau, Mrs. Barbara N. Galpin, Mr. George H. Galpin, Mr. Hecht, Mr. Ezra Marble, Mrs. Leon F. Whitney, Miss Morrison, Mrs. B. C. Lincoln, Miss Leila Boothby, Mr. Josef Adamowski, Mr. Max Zach, Miss Lillian Marshall, Professor and Mrs. Currier, Mrs. F. Loring Wheeler, Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Kittredge, Mr. and Mrs. Dunn, Miss Florence Kittredge, Mr. Courtenay Guild, Mr. Thomas Hall, Miss Susie Hall, Miss Fanny Stearns, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dennee, Mr. Bartlett, Colonel W. A. Pew, Mrs. John H. Gibbs, Mr. Chauncy Simmons, Mrs. Fred Comee, Mrs. Frederick Galloupe, Mrs. Robert M. Morse, Mr. N. H. Ladd, Captain and Mrs. W. H. Alline, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas O. Rogers, Mr. Dexter Wiswell, Miss Marion Goodale, Mr. Negus, Mr. Walter Dugan, Mr. G. L. Willman, Mr. and Mrs. Morse, Mr. N. T. Wood, Mr. E. L. Davenport, Mr. Howard Davenport and the wife of Colonel Meysenburg, who was with the Kittredge party.

FINANCIAL NOTES.

The Pop Concerts.

Perhaps it is that blessings brighten as they take their flight which makes parties eager to make the most of the few evenings remaining before the Pops close for the season. Perhaps, too, it may be that it has been found that there are few more comfortable places wherein to spend an evening than the hall where these concerts are given. On the hottest evenings of the week it was cool in the hall, and thousands availed themselves of the opportunity to enjoy the comforts associated with a Pop concert. Even the departure of so large a number of society people appears to have had little effect upon the size of the audiences. The music grows better, due to arrangements made to improve the hall acoustically and to the orchestra becoming accustomed to the space. Monday next will be devoted to the graduates of the season, and Tuesday is Request night, the program being made to conform with requests from the public.

—Under the most favorable auspices the Pop Concerts made their debut for the new century on Thursday evening, when Mechanic's Hall was filled with a large and fashionable audience. A splendid program was arranged for the first night, and Mr. Zach received an ovation from those present. Everyone enjoyed the promenade, which is a new feature of these [illegible]airs, and Mr. C. A. Ellis, Mr. Comee and Mr. [illegible]gett were highly commended for the admirable arrangement. A most attractive group at one of the tables included Mrs. Curtis Guild, jr., and Miss Mary Johnson. The ladies were handsomely attired, Miss Johnson in violet and white silk; Mrs. Guild wore a handsome opera cloak of white broadcloth with lace collar. They were accompanied by Colonel Guild and Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Bennett, the latter wearing the richest toilette there—a black net heavily spangled with [illegible]ut steel and jet. A Parisian hat topped her head, glittering with steel. The ladies wore many diamonds and were the centre of attraction. At another table sat Mr. and Mrs. Henry L. Higginson, Mme. Agassiz, Mr. and Mrs. Wilhelm Gericke and Mrs. Henry Whitman. At another table were Col. and Mrs. Fred King, Mr. and Mrs. William Perkins, Mr. and Mrs. John Lavalle, Miss Mollie Johnson and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hayden. Elsewhere were noted Mr. and Mrs. Otis Kimball, Miss Kimball, Dr. James Chadwick, the Hon. and Mrs. Thomas Riley, with Mr. Carl Sobeski, Mrs. Max Zach, Otto Rothe, Mr. and Mrs. Amory, Mr. John Lindsey, Mr. Clifford Howe, Mrs. Harry Pratt McKean, who is visiting friends in town, Mr. and Mrs. Fiske Warren, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Clement, Mrs. C. H. Washburn with friends, Mr. and Mrs. William Hooper, Mr. Walter Hawkins, Mr. and Mrs. Patterson, Mr. and Mrs. James Stack, Miss Grace Atwell with Mr. George G. Benedict, Mr. Clarence Benedict, Miss Florence M. Bullard, the fiancee of Vallette Benedict, Mr. and Mrs. Hibbard, Mr. and Mrs. Hecht, Dr. Strong, Mr. and Mrs. Henry M. Upham, Dr. and Mrs. Frank Watson, Dr. and Mrs. Winter with party, Paymaster Littlefield, United States Navy, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Carpenter, Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Holden, Dr. and Mrs. Henry Arthur Osgood, Miss Fisher, Mrs. A. C. Clark, Mr. Wilhelm Heinrich with friend, Mr. and Mrs. George Herric Billings, Dr. H. H. Jernegan, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dennee, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Briggs, Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Kirtland, Mme. Kirtland, Miss Lee, Mrs. Yeaton, Mr. George Tebbets, Miss Stearns of Providence, Mr. Von Auken, Dr. Nolen, Mrs. L. B. Robinson, Mr. Stillings, Mr. R. C. Dixey, Mrs. Carrie A. Richmond, Mr. Walter Deland Came, Mr. Arthur K. Peck, Mr. and Mrs. M. Herbert Leland, Mr. and Mrs. Frank J. Bonnelle, Miss Blanche Bonnelle, Mrs. Fred R. Comee, Mr. and Mrs. Frank S[illegible]ck[illegible]l. Harry Hastings, Mr. and Mrs. Heman P. Chelius, Capt. and Mrs. W. H. Alline, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas O. Rogers, Mrs. G. H. Sprague, Mr. Dexter W. Niswell, Mr. W. H. Bowker, Dr. and Mrs. Ingalls, Miss Helen M. Fogler, Mrs. Somes, Dr. Chadwick, Mr. Louis Elson, Mr. Lewis Tucker, Mr. and Mrs. Mansfield, Mr. Mark Andrews, Mr. and Mrs. Apthorp, Mr. Stephen H. Williams, Miss Osgood, Mr. Fred Purmort and party, Mr. Grant Walker, Miss Isabel Stevens, Mrs. John C. Grey and daughter, Miss Katharine Crowninshield and Mr. Johnson Morton.

THE BEACON.

The Pop Concerts.

There could be no more delightful way of spending these hot evenings than at the Pops, with cooling drinks at command, just enough informality, and such perfect music to enjoy. Next week's plan provides for special evenings. Monday will be devoted in large measure to Wagner, with some Strauss waltzes for those who like other music. Tuesday is Technology night, and for this popular music has been provided. This will be the last appearance of Mr. Zach as conductor. Mr. Gustav Strube will assume the position of conductor on Wednesday. The orchestra is generous in the matter of encores. On Thursday evening of this week Mr. Zach's Lost in Dreams was so enthusiastically received that it was repeated. An evening rarely passes without extra numbers. The tables are filled nightly by appreciative hearers from this city and the suburbs, and the hall is cool and comfortable even in the hottest weather.

BOSTON TIMES

The dear old Pops continue along their merry way in Mechanics' building and every one of the thousands of patrons is happy in being such. There is nothing else like the Pop concerts. They are all we want and just what we want for hot weather music. It would be invidious to think of improving them, every one is so well satisfied to have them as they are. Mr. F. R. Comee is the force behind the throne that looks out for the business side of them, and provides so well for the convenience and comfort of patrons. Mr. Max Zach is nightly winning new admirers by the way he handles his orchestra of Symphony men and the programmes he selects. Tonight's programme will be:

Persian March ..... Strauss
Overture to "Mignon" ..... Thomas
Waltz, "Die Schonbrunner" ..... Lanner
Selection from "Fatinitza" ..... Suppe
Scherzo-Valse, from "Boabdil" ..... Moszkowski
Malaguena,
Pastorale ..... Helen Hopekirk
Waltz, "Neu-Wien" ..... Strauss
Ride of the Valkyries ..... Wagner
Selection from "The Fencing-master" ..... DeKoven
Valse, from "Sylvia" ..... Delibes
Pizzicati,
Husarenritt ..... Spindler
Tabasco March ..... Chadwick

THE BOSTON

SATURDAY EVENING

Gazette

ESTABLISHED 1813

The programme for the first "Pop," to take place Thursday, May 10, is:

March, "Under the Double Eagle".. Wagner
Waltz, "Meerleuchten"..... Ziehrer
Overture to "Piccolino"..... Guirand
Ballet Music, "Sylvia"..... Delibes
"Kermesse Flamande," from "Milenka" ..... Jan Block
(First Time.)
Waltz, "Vienna Blood"..... Strauss
Entr'acte-Gavotte ..... Gillet
(First Time.)
Overture, "Tannhauser" ..... Wagner
Waltz, "Harlequin's Wedding." New Zach
Selection from "The Rounders".... Englander
(First Time.)
Polka, "Tyrolean"..... Zeller
March, "Man Behind the Gun"... Sousa
(First Time.)

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, MAY 6, 1900

The Pops

Next Thursday evening, May 10, is the opening night of the fifteenth season of the Pops. The change of location from old Music Hall to Mechanics Hall promises more than well, for in spite of the double capacity of the latter auditorium, every reserved table for the opening night was sold a week in advance. There will be twice as many unreserved tables as in Music Hall, and a generous supply of balcony seats, both reserved and unreserved, but no tables in the balcony. A spacious cont room will be at the disposal of patrons. The number of the special telephone in the ticket office is 1492 Back Bay. The programme for the opening night follows:

March, "Under the Double Eagle"..... Wagner
Waltz, "Meerleuchten"..... Ziehrer
Overture to "Piccolino"..... Guirand
Ballet Music, "Sylvia"..... Delibes
"Kermesse Flamande," from "Milenka"... Jan Block
(First time.)
Waltz, "Vienna Blood"..... Strauss
Entr'acte-Gavotte ..... Gillet
(First time.)
Overture, "Tannhauser"..... Wagner
Waltz, "Harlequin's Wedding." New..... Zach
Selection from "The Rounders"..... Englander
(First time.)
Polka, "Tyrolean"..... Zeller
March, "Man behind the Gun"..... Sousa
(First time.)

THE BEACON.

The Pop Concerts.

Next Thursday will be the opening night of the Pop Concerts. They will be given at Mechanics Building this season, but will be conducted on the plan which has been so successful in previous years. The following program will be presented, under the direction of Mr. Max Zach, conductor: March, Under the Double Eagle, Wagner; waltz, Meerleuchten, Ziehrer; overture to Piccolino, Guirand; ballet music, Sylvia, including a, Les Chasseuresses; b, Valse Lente; c, Pizzicati; d, Finale, Delibes. Kermesse Flamande, from Milenka, Jan Block, will be given for the first time, and the same is true of Gillet's Entr'acte Gavotte, a selection from The Rounders and Sousa's Man Behind the Gun. The remaining numbers are waltz, Vienna Blood, Strauss; overture, Tannhäuser, Wagner; waltz, Harlequin's Wedding, new, Zach; polka, Tyrolean, Zeller.

Boston Courier.

ESTABLISHED 1795. MAY 5, 1900.

THE POP CONCERTS.

Young and old are about equally interested in the Pop Concert season to open May 10, which has become as regular a part of the year's program in Boston as the Easter holidays or Christmas vacation.

This year the opening of the concert season is particularly anticipated owing to the change of location from Music Hall to Mechanic's Building, which will be as attractively arranged for the occasion as its somewhat inartistic interior admits.

Some days ago every table had been engaged for the opening night, and seats were almost unobtainable except from speculators. It is safe to predict that Mr. Max Zach, who is a prime favorite with music lovers, will receive an ovation when he steps upon the stage Thursday evening. Mr. Zach is liked particularly by the students, to whom he caters painstakingly, never failing to respond to their sometimes almost unreasonable requests for "Up the Street," "Stars and Stripes Forever" and other kindred melodies, dear to their youthful hearts.

All the special features which have made the concerts so popular in bygone seasons will be observed this year. Harvard night, with its attendant decorations of crimson, Technology night, with gray and red programs and embellishments, and various composers' nights will be duly announced, and doubtless will prove as attractive as ever.

Mr. Zach is to conduct for the first half of the season only, and in accordance with the usual custom, Mr. Strube will wield the baton during the latter half.

Boston has come to love the pop concerts, and its most conservative citizens have learned to enjoy the evenings of semi-Bohemia. The enthusiasm, the beer and light beverages, the delightful music, the smoky atmosphere even, which suggests so thoroughly continental life, blend in inducing a light and happy frame of mind, and good cheer never fails to reign supreme. Everyone comes away feeling happy and rejuvenated by the evening's entertainment, and everyone is glad that the season is so near at hand.

The fact that Mr. Fred R. Comee, who has so skilfully and ably managed the concerts in former years, is once more at the head of the enterprise, is proof sufficient that the concert season will be guided to a happy and successful issue.

The programme for the opening night will be as follows:

March, "Under the Double Eagle," . . Wagner
Waltz, "Meerleuchten," . . . . . Ziehrer
Overture to "Piccolino," . . . . . Guirand
Ballet Music, "Sylvia," . . . . . Delibes
"Kermesse Flamande," from "Milenka," Jan Block
(First time.)
Waltz, "Vienna Blood," . . . . . Strauss
Entr'acte-Gavotte . . . . . Gillet
(First time.)
Overture, "Tannhauser" . . . . . Wagner
Waltz, "Harlequin's Wedding," New Zach
Selection from "The Rounders." . . Englander
(First time.)
Polka, "Tyrolean," . . . . . Zeller
March, "Man Behind the Gun," . . . Sousa
(First time.)

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, MAY 6, 1900.

THE "POPS" OPENING.

Music halls come and go, but the pops go on forever, so next Thursday evening the 15th season of these established favorites will begin in Mechanic's hall. They are the summer sequence of the symphonies, not only retaining the Symphony patronage, but also attracting an enormous following of admirers of light music and genteel Bohemia.

Everything at Mechanic's hall will be on the same general plan as at old Music hall, except there will be no tables in the balcony. There will be double the capacity, both in reserved and unreserved tables. There will be ample room everywhere, a generous promenade all around the hall, no crowding of tables, and almost an entire absence of smoke, because of the huge overhead space. A special telephone has been placed in the ticket office, and numbered 1492, Back Bay, for obvious reasons.

Conductor Zach has arranged a very pleasing program for the opening night, as follows:

March, Under the Double Eagle.....Wagner
Waltz, Meerleuchten.....Ziehrer
Overture to Piccolino.....Guirand
Ballet music, Sylvia.....Delibes
Kermesse Flamande, from "Milenka" Jan Block
(First time.)
Waltz, Vienna Blood.....Strauss
Entr'atte-Gavotte.....Gillet
(First time.)
Overture, Tannhauser.....Wagner
Waltz, Harlequin's Wedding, new.....Zach
Selection from The Rounders.....Englander
(First time.)
Polka, Tyrolean.....Zeller
March, Man Behind the Gun .....Sousa
(First time.)

SUNDAY HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. CVII., NO. 126.

SUNDAY, MAY 6, 1900.

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC.

The "Pop" Concerts Begin Next Thursday Evening.

Programme Arranged by Conductor Zach for the Opening at Mechanics' Hall — Massenet's New Opera, "The Promised Land"— Notes on Events Here and Abroad.

THE Pops will begin their 15th season next Thursday evening, May 10, in Mechanics' Hall. The general plan of arrangement will be the same as in past years, but there will be no tables in the balcony. The increased capacity of Mechanics' Hall allows twice as many tables, both reserved and unreserved, on the floor as in the old hall. There seems to be no doubt as to the continued success of these concerts in their new location, as every reserved table was sold a week in advance. The number of the special telephone in the ticket office is 1492 Back Bay. The programme which Conductor Zach has selected for the opening night is as follows:

March, "Under the Double Eagle".....Wagner
Waltz, "Meerleuchten".....Ziehrer
Overture to "Piccolino".....Guirand
Ballet music, "Sylvia".....Delibes
"Kermesse Flamande," from "Milenka" Jan Block
(First time.)
Waltz, "Vienna Blood".....Strauss
Entr'acte-Gavotte.....Gillet
(First time.)
Overture, "Tannhauser".....Wagner
Waltz, "Harlequin's Wedding." new.....Zach
Selection from "The Rounders".....Englander
(First time.)
Polka, "Tyrolean".....Zeller
March, "Man Behind the Gun".....Sousa
(First time.)

Mrs. John L. Gardner has closed her Beacon street house and gone out to her estate in Brookline. It is understood that she will be on hand with a party for the first Pop concert at Mechanics' Hall Thursday night.

Apropos, we are glad to learn from Mr. Comee that every table and almost every seat in the balconies have been taken by society people, so that there will be a very representative company for the inauguration of the Pops in their new quarters.

Mr. and Mrs. Eben Sutton [illegible]

Boston Journal.

SUNDAY, MAY 6, 1900.

THE POPS.

Everybody is on the alert for the opening of the Pops next Thursday evening, May 10—not at the old home where for 14 years these concerts established a reputation as an institution of Boston—but in Mechanics' Hall. Here there will be the same plan of arrangement as in the past, but with double capacity as to tables, both reserved and unreserved. There will be no crowding of tables. Everybody can promenade as much as he likes in the broad aisle outside the tables, and the enormous overhead space will carry off the smoke completely. A special telephone has been placed in the ticket office, and the number is 1492 Back Bay. Conductor Zach has prepared an attractive program for the opening night, which is appended:

PROGRAM.

1. March, "Under the Double Eagle,".. Wagner
2. Waltz, "Meerleuchten".....Ziehrer
3. Overture to "Piccolino".....Guirand
4. Ballet Music, "Sylvia".....Delibes
   a. Les Chasseuresses.
   b. Valse Lente.
   c. Pizzicati.
   d. Finale.
5. "Kermesse Flamande," from "Milenka".....Jan Block
   (First Time.)
6. Waltz, "Vienna Blood".....Strauss
7. Entr'acte-Gavotte..... Gillet
   (First Time.)
8. Overture, "Tannhauser".....Wagner
9. Waltz, "Harlequin's Wedding." New Zach
10. Selection from "The Rounders"..... Englander
    (First Time.)
11. Polka, "Tyrolean".....Zeller
12. March, "Man behind the Gun"....Sousa
    (First Time.)

BOSTON [illegible]

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. CVII., NO. 115.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 25, 1900.

"POPS" TRANSFERRED.

They Will Begin at Mechanics' Hall on the 10th of May—Last Week of Music Hall.

The announcement that the "Pop" concerts this season are to be held in Mechanics' Hall recalls the fact that old Music Hall is soon to be a thing of the past. On Saturday night next, at the end of the Symphony concert, it ceases to exist. The transfer of this property in consequence of its sale occurs on May 1.

It is an odd coincidence that Music Hall's closing should occur on a Saturday, for it was opened on the same day of the week, Nov. 20, 1852, 48 years ago, as an amusement place.

On May 10 the large hall in Mechanics' building will be thrown open for the first concert of the 15th season of "Pops." There has already been a large demand for seats, and the occasion will no doubt be a memorable one in Boston musical circles.

The arrangement generally will be the same as at Music Hall, with the exception that no tables are to be placed in the balcony, the incline being too steep to permit. The increase in size of the hall, as compared with the older building, will allow a larger reserve space for tables, and a more generous allowance for those tables free with the admission.

Then, again, there is an additional feature in the broad walk about the body of the hall, which affords a most excellent opportunity for a promenade.

The "Pops" grew as a natural summer sequence of the Symphony concerts, and, while they are most popular in fact as well as in name, there is a limit to this good idea, as was found, and therefore the concerts are fewer in number than many would wish. An extended season would not be profitable, so, basing its judgment upon experience in the past, the management has decided to continue them only until July 1.

The enormous overhead space will carry off all the smoke, and the air will this year be free from that objection, should such have proved to be the case. Special nights have been set aside for the various colleges, Harvard, M. I. T., etc., and the numerous composers' nights so enjoyable in seasons gone by.

On May 10 will be given the 750th concert, and many features of interest will be introduced in the programme selected by Conductors Zach and Gustav Strube. In the 15 years but two of the conductors have died, they being Messrs. Ad Neuendorff and Wilhelm Rietzel.

A list of the conductors follows: Season of 1885, Mr. Ad Neuendorff; 1886, Mr. John C. Mullaly; 1887, Wilhelm Rietzel and Ad Neuendorff; 1888, Franz Kneizel and Ad Neuendorff; 1889, Ad Neuendorff; 1890, no concerts; 1891, T. Adamowski and E. Gruenberg; 1892, T. Adamowski; 1893, T. Adamowski; 1894, T. Adamowski; 1895, A. de Novellis; 1896, Max Zach; 1897, Max Zach and Leo Strube; 1898, Max Zach and Gustav Strube; 1899, Max Zach and Gustav Strube; 1900, Max Zach and Gustav Strube.

All the conductors, with the exception of Neuendorff and Novellis, were members of the Symphony orchestra.

BOSTON POST,

The Representative Democratic Paper OF NEW ENGLAND.

The Pops.

Almost every attraction on the list of amusements has its light season save the Pops, which for 14 years filled old Music Hall every night for eight weeks. This year the scene changes to Mechanics' Hall, with a much larger capacity, which gives a decided advantage in every way. The plan will be on the same general basis as in the past, except there will be no tables in the balcony. A broad aisle around the space allotted to tables will give an excellent opportunity for promenading. There will be no crowding of tables, and no discomfort from smoke, which will be effectually absorbed by the large space overhead. A special telephone has been placed in the ticket office numbered 1492, Back Bay.

Conductor Zach offers for the opening night the following programme: March, "Under the Double Eagle," Wagner; waltz, "Meerlechten," Ziehrer; overture to "Piccolino," Guirand; ballet music, "Sylvia," Delibes; Les Chasseuresses, Valse Lente, Pizzicati, finale; "Kermesse Flamande," from "Milenka," Jan Block; waltz, "Vienna Blood," Strauss; entr'acte-gavotte, Gillet; overture, "Tannhauser," Wagner; waltz, "Harlequin's Wedding," new, Zach; selection from "The Rounders," Englander; polka, "Tyrolean," Zeller; march, "Man Behind the Gun," Sousa.

Schultz

[119]

THE BOSTON
SATURDAY EVENING
Gazette
ESTABLISHED 1813

The programme for the first "Pop," to take place Thursday, May 10, is:

March, "Under the Double Eagle"... Wagner
Waltz, "Meerleuchten"..... Ziehrer
Overture to "Piccolino"..... Guirand
Ballet Music, "Sylvia"..... Delibes
"Kermesse Flamande," from "Milenka" ..... Jan Block
(First Time.)
Waltz, "Vienna Blood"..... Strauss
Entr'acte-Gavotte ..... Gillet
(First Time.)
Overture, "Tannhauser" ..... Wagner
Waltz, "Harlequin's Wedding." New ..... Zach
Selection from "The Rounders"..... Englander
(First Time.)
Polka, "Tyrolean"..... Zeller
March, "Man Behind the Gun"... Sousa
(First Time.)

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, MAY 5, 1900

The Pops

Next Thursday evening, May 10, is the opening night of the fifteenth season of the Pops. The change of location from old Music Hall to Mechanics Hall promises more than well, for in spite of the double capacity of the latter auditorium, every reserved table for the opening night was sold a week in advance. There will be twice as many unreserved tables as in Music Hall, and a generous supply of balcony seats, both reserved and unreserved, but no tables in the balcony. A spacious coat room will be at the disposal of patrons. The number of the special telephone in the ticket office is 1492 Back Bay. The programme for the opening night follows:

March, "Under the Double Eagle".....Wagner
Waltz, "Meerleuchten".....Ziehrer
Overture to "Piccolino".....Guirand
Ballet Music, "Sylvia".....Delibes
"Kermesse Flamande," from "Milenka".....Jan Block
(First time.)
Waltz, "Vienna Blood".....Strauss
Entr'acte-Gavotte ..... Gillet
(First time.)
Overture, "Tannhäuser".....Wagner
Waltz, "Harlequin's Wedding." New.....Zach
Selection from "The Rounders".....Englander
(First time.)
Polka, "Tyrolean".....Zeller
March, "Man behind the Gun".....Sousa
(First time.)

THE BEACON.

The Pop Concerts.

Next Thursday will be the opening night of the Pop Concerts. They will be given at Mechanics Building this season, but will be conducted on the plan which has been so successful in previous years. The following program will be presented, under the direction of Mr. Max Zach, conductor: March, Under the Double Eagle, Wagner; waltz, Meerleuchten, Ziehrer; overture to Piccolino, Guirand; ballet music, Sylvia, including a, Les Chasseuresses; b, Valse Lente; c, Pizzicati; d, Finale, Delibes. Kermesse Flamande, from Milenka, Jan Block, will be given for the first time, and the same is true of Gillet's Entr'acte Gavotte, a selection from The Rounders and Sousa's Man Behind the Gun. The remaining numbers are waltz, Vienna Blood, Strauss; overture, Tannhäuser, Wagner; waltz, Harlequin's Wedding, new, Zach; polka, Tyrolean, Zeller.

Boston Courier.

ESTABLISHED 1795. MAY 5, 1900.

THE POP CONCERTS.

Young and old are about equally interested in the Pop Concert season to open May 10, which has become as regular a part of the year's program in Boston as the Easter holidays or Christmas vacation.

This year the opening of the concert season is particularly anticipated owing to the change of location from Music Hall to Mechanic's Building, which will be as attractively arranged for the occasion as its somewhat inartistic interior admits.

Some days ago every table had been engaged for the opening night, and seats were almost unobtainable except from speculators. It is safe to predict that Mr. Max Zach, who is a prime favorite with music lovers, will receive an ovation when he steps upon the stage Thursday evening. Mr. Zach is liked particularly by the students, to whom he caters painstakingly, never failing to respond to their sometimes almost unreasonable requests for "Up the Street," "Stars and Stripes Forever" and other kindred melodies, dear to their youthful hearts.

All the special features which have made the concerts so popular in bygone seasons will be observed this year. Harvard night, with its attendant decorations of crimson, Technology night, with gray and red programs and embellishments, and various composers' nights will be duly announced, and doubtless will prove as attractive as ever.

Mr. Zach is to conduct for the first half of the season only, and in accordance with the usual custom, Mr. Strube will wield the baton during the latter half.

Boston has come to love the pop concerts, and its most conservative citizens have learned to enjoy the evenings of semi-Bohemia. The enthusiasm, the beer and light beverages, the delightful music, the smoky atmosphere even, which suggests so thoroughly continental life, blend in inducing a light and happy frame of mind, and good cheer never fails to reign supreme. Everyone comes away feeling happy and rejuvenated by the evening's entertainment, and everyone is glad that the season is so near at hand.

The fact that Mr. Fred R. Comee, who has so skilfully and ably managed the concerts in former years, is once more at the head of the enterprise, is proof sufficient that the concert season will be guided to a happy and successful issue.

The programme for the opening night will be as follows:

March, "Under the Double Eagle," . . Wagner
Waltz, "Meerleuchten, ... Ziehrer
Overture to "Piccolino," . . . . . Guirand
Ballet Music, "Sylvia," . . . . . Delibes
"Kermesse Flamande," from "Milenka," Jan Block
(First time.)
Waltz, "Vienna Blood," . . . . . Strauss
Entr'acte-Gavotte . . . . . Gillet
(First time.)
Overture, "Tannhauser" . . . . . Wagner
Waltz, "Harlequin's Wedding," New Zach
Selection from "The Rounders." . . Englander
(First time.)
Polka, "Tyroleau," . . . . . Zeller
March, "Man Behind the Gun," . . . Sousa
(First time.)

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, MAY 6, 1900.

THE "POPS" OPENING.

Music halls come and go, but the pops go on forever, so next Thursday evening the 15th season of these established favorites will begin in Mechanic's hall. They are the summer sequence of the symphonics, not only retaining the Symphony patronage, but also attracting an enormous following of admirers of light music and genteel Bohemia.

Everything at Mechanic's hall will be on the same general plan as at old Music hall, except there will be no tables in the balcony. There will be double the capacity, both in reserved and unreserved tables. There will be ample room everywhere, a generous promenade all around the hall, no crowding of tables, and almost an entire absence of smoke, because of the huge overhead space. A special telephone has been placed in the ticket office, and numbered 1492, Back Bay, for obvious reasons.

Conductor Zach has arranged a very pleasing program for the opening night, as follows:

March, Under the Double Eagle.....Wagner
Waltz, Meerleuchten.....Ziehrer
Overture to Piccolino.....Guirand
Ballet music, Sylvia.....Delibes
Kermesse Flamande, from "Milenka".Jan Block
(First time.)
Waltz, Vienna Blood.....Strauss
Entr'acte-Gavotte .....Gillet
(First time.)
Overture, Tannhauser.....Wagner
Waltz, Harlequin's Wedding, new.....Zach
Selection from The Rounders.....Englander
(First time.)
Polka, Tyrolean.....Zeller
March, Man Behind the Gun .....Sousa
(First time.)

SUNDAY HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. CVII., NO. 126.

SUNDAY, MAY 6, 1900.

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC.

The "Pop" Concerts Begin Next Thursday Evening.

Programme Arranged by Conductor Zach for the Opening at Mechanics' Hall — Massenet's New Opera, "The Promised Land"— Notes on Events Here and Abroad.

THE Pops will begin their 15th season next Thursday evening, May 10, in Mechanics' Hall. The general plan of arrangement will be the same as in past years, but there will be no tables in the balcony. The increased capacity of Mechanics' Hall allows twice as many tables, both reserved and unreserved, on the floor as in the old hall. There seems to be no doubt as to the continued success of these concerts in their new location, as every reserved table was sold a week in advance. The number of the special telephone in the ticket office is 1492 Back Bay. The programme which Conductor Zach has selected for the opening night is as follows:

March, "Under the Double Eagle".....Wagner
Waltz, "Meerleuchten".....Ziehrer
Overture to "Piccolino".....Guirand
Ballet music, "Sylvia".....Delibes
"Kermesse Flamande," from "Milenka".....Jan Block
(First time.)
Waltz, "Vienna Blood".....Strauss
Entr'acte-Gavotte.....Gillet
(First time.)
Overture, "Tannhauser".....Wagner
Waltz, "Harlequin's Wedding," new.....Zach
Selection from "The Rounders".....Englander
(First time.)
Polka, "Tyrolean".....Zeller
March, "Man Behind the Gun".....Sousa
(First time.)

Mrs. John L. Gardner has closed her Beacon street house and gone out to her estate in Brookline. It is understood that she will be on hand with a party for the first Pop concert at Mechanics' Hall Thursday night.

Apropos, we are glad to learn from Mr. Comee that every table and almost every seat in the balconies have been taken by society people, so that there will be a very representative company for the inauguration of the Pops in their new quarters.

Mr. and Mrs. Eben Sutton [illegible]

Boston Journal.

SUNDAY, MAY 6, 1900.

THE POPS.

Everybody is on the alert for the opening of the Pops next Thursday evening, May 10—not at the old home where for 14 years these concerts established a reputation as an institution of Boston—but in Mechanics' Hall. Here there will be the same plan of arrangement as in the past, but with double capacity as to tables, both reserved and unreserved. There will be no crowding of tables. Everybody can promenade as much as he likes in the broad aisle outside the tables, and the enormous overhead space will carry off the smoke completely. A special telephone has been placed in the ticket office, and the number is 1492 Back Bay. Conductor Zach has prepared an attractive program for the opening night, which is appended:

PROGRAM.

1. March, "Under the Double Eagle,".. Wagner
2. Waltz, "Meerleuchten".....Ziehrer
3. Overture to "Piccolino".....Guirand
4. Ballet Music, "Sylvia".....Delibes
   a. Les Chasseuresses.
   b. Valse Lente.
   c. Pizzicati.
   d. Finale.
5. "Kermesse Flamande," from "Milenka".....Jan Block
   (First Time.)
6. Waltz, "Vienna Blood".....Strauss
7. Entr'acte-Gavotte..... Gillet
   (First Time.)
8. Overture, "Tannhauser".....Wagner
9. Waltz, "Harlequin's Wedding." New Zach
10. Selection from "The Rounders"..... Englander
    (First Time.)
11. Polka, "Tyrolean".....Zeller
12. March, "Man behind the Gun"....Sousa
    (First Time.)

BOSTON HERALD,

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. CVII., NO. 116.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 25, 1900.

"POPS" TRANSFERRED.

They Will Begin at Mechanics' Hall on the 10th of May—Last Week of Music Hall.

The announcement that the "Pop" concerts this season are to be held in Mechanics' Hall recalls the fact that old Music Hall is soon to be a thing of the past. On Saturday night next, at the end of the Symphony concert, it ceases to exist. The transfer of this property in consequence of its sale occurs on May 1.

It is an odd coincidence that Music Hall's closing should occur on a Saturday, for it was opened on the same day of the week, Nov. 20, 1852, 48 years ago, as an amusement place.

On May 10 the large hall in Mechanics' building will be thrown open for the first concert of the 15th season of "Pops." There has already been a large demand for seats, and the occasion will no doubt be a memorable one in Boston musical circles.

The arrangement generally will be the same as at Music Hall, with the exception that no tables are to be placed in the balcony, the incline being too steep to permit. The increase in size of the hall, as compared with the older building, will allow a larger reserve space for tables, and a more generous allowance for those tables free with the admission.

Then, again, there is an additional feature in the broad walk about the body of the hall, which affords a most excellent opportunity for a promenade.

The "Pops" grew as a natural summer sequence of the Symphony concerts, and, while they are most popular in fact as well as in name, there is a limit to this good idea, as was found, and therefore the concerts are fewer in number than many would wish. An extended season would not be profitable, so, basing its judgment upon experience in the past, the management has decided to continue them only until July 1.

The enormous overhead space will carry off all the smoke, and the air will this year be free from that objection, should such have proved to be the case. Special nights have been set aside for the various colleges, Harvard, M. I. T., etc., and the numerous composers' nights so enjoyable in seasons gone by.

On May 10 will be given the 750th concert, and many features of interest will be introduced in the programme selected by Conductors Zach and Gustav Strube. In the 15 years but two of the conductors have died, they being Messrs. Ad Neuendorff and Wilhelm Rietzel.

A list of the conductors follows: Season of 1885, Mr. Ad Neuendorff; 1886, Mr. John C. Mullaly; 1887, Wilhelm Rietzel and Ad Neuendorff; 1888, Franz Kneizel and Ad Neuendorff; 1889, Ad Neuendorff; 1890, no concerts; 1891, T. Adamowski and E. Gruenberg; 1892, T. Adamowski; 1893, T. Adamowski; 1894, T. Adamowski; 1895, A. de Novellis; 1896, Max Zach; 1897, Max Zach and Leo Strube; 1898, Max Zach and Gustav Strube; 1899, Max Zach and Gustav Strube; 1900, Max Zach and Gustav Strube.

All the conductors, with the exception of Neuendorff and Novellis, were members of the Symphony orchestra.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

The Pops.

Almost every attraction on the list of amusements has its light season save the Pops, which for 14 years filled old Music Hall every night for eight weeks. This year the scene changes to Mechanics' Hall, with a much larger capacity, which gives a decided advantage in every way. The plan will be on the same general basis as in the past, except there will be no tables in the balcony. A broad aisle around the space allotted to tables will give an excellent opportunity for promenading. There will be no crowding of tables, and no discomfort from smoke, which will be effectually absorbed by the large space overhead. A special telephone has been placed in the ticket office numbered 1492, Back Bay.

Conductor Zach offers for the opening night the following programme: March, "Under the Double Eagle," Wagner; waltz, "Meerlechten," Ziehrer; overture to "Piccolino," Guirand; ballet music, "Sylvia," Delibes; Les Chasseuresses, Valse Lente, Pizzicati, finale; "Kermesse Flamande," from "Milenka," Jan Block; waltz, "Vienna Blood," Strauss; entr'acte-gavotte, Gillet; overture, "Tannhauser," Wagner; waltz, "Harlequin's Wedding," new, Zach; selection from "The Rounders," Englander; polka, "Tyrolean," Zeller; march, "Man Behind the Gun," Sousa.

Schultz

POP CONCERT TABLES COVETED

This Season of "Pops" Opens May 10 at Mechanics Building—More Tables Than Ever Sold Today for the Opening Night

An early evidence that the change of the "Pop" concerts from Music Hall to Mechanics Building for this season is in no way a handicap was shown by the fact that at the opening sale of tickets this morning more than the capacity of Music Hall was sold out. As never before will the concerts flourish, for there are to be 220 tables, more than twice the old number. Patrons will be glad to hear that in this spacious place there will be plenty of room for each table, and the same promenade which gladdened the hearts of the opera lovers will be thronged by the devotees of these concerts. This broad thoroughfare is just outside of the table space and under the broad balcony. There will be no tables in the balcony, as they will be reserved for the music lovers who have come to enjoy the music and to view Bohemia. The frequenters of the balcony will be glad to know that the great open roof space is well ventilated, and that a thousand smokers cannot becloud the air.

All the fashionable folk were represented at the ticket window this forenoon, and long before the noon hour had come more than a hundred tables had been taken. It was remarked by more than one purchaser that this sale was memorable, as it is the first radical change from Music Hall which is necessitated on account of the transfer of the property May 1. The opening night of this season, May 10, will mark the 750th performance.

For many years it has been the custom to select the conductor from the ranks of the Symphony Orchestra. This year Max Zach will again wield the baton. There will be, as usual, the special nights devoted to composers and requests. Harvard is honored by having two nights—the regular Harvard night and Harvard Graduates' night. The latter was instituted two years ago, and made an instant success. Last year the house was practically taken by college men and their friends on this occasion, and the general public was much disgruntled because there was not room enough for them. This year there will be plenty of room for all. The one and only entrance to this gay and festive concert hall will be the one at the corner of Newton street and Huntington avenue.

HERALD—BOSTON
APRIL 29, 1900—I

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC.

The "Pop" Season Begins in 10 Days in a New Place.

Mechanics' Hall Is to Be the Scene of the Concerts for the Present Year—An English Woman Composer Engaged on a "Transvaal War Symphony."

IN 10 days the "Pops" will begin their 15th season in a new home. The long and useful career of old Music Hall ended last night with the closing Symphony concert of the 19th season; but Boston's music lovers will transfer their summer allegiance to Mechanics' Hall, as is evidenced by the long list of purchasers who have already secured nearly every table for the opening night. Everything will be on the same general plan as in the past 14 years. Decided advantages will be found in less crowded tables, the generous space on the floor for promenading and the dissipation of the smoke in the enormous space overhead. One feature to which special attention is called is that reserved seats, either at tables or in the balcony, can be secured by telephoning to the special telephone of the Pops, 1492 Back Bay.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, APRIL 29, 1900.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

Everybody is interested at this season of the year to learn all they can about the "Pops," and there is more than the usual news this year because of the change from old Music hall to Mechanic's hall. Except for this change in location, everything will be on the same general plan as in the past 14 years. There will be some decided advantages in less crowded tables, a generous promenade outside the tables, and a welcome freedom from smoke because of the enormous space overhead. The opening night, Thursday, May 10, will be even more brilliant in point of numbers, as practically all the reserved tables are already sold to a long list of regular patrons, who represent the best social element of Boston.

One feature to which special attention is called is that reserved seats, either at tables or in the balcony, can be secured by telephoning to the special telephone, 1492 Back Bay.

APRIL 22, 1900

THE "POPS."

Thursday evening, May 10, is the answer to the all-prevailing question as to when the "Pops" begin. For 14 years these concerts have been a potent factor in the list of Boston's amusements. They attract all classes, the admission fee is a moderate one, there is a fascination in the freedom from restraint, and yet absolute quiet prevails during the performance of some dainty or inspiring selection. In a word—these "Pops" are unique. Because of the sale of the old Music Hall property, the coming fifteenth season of these concerts will be given in Mechanics' Hall, in the large audience room at the corner of Huntington Avenue and West Newton Streets, used for opera and other musical entertainments. For 48 years old Music Hall has stood for the best in music in this city, for 19 years it has been the home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from its foundation in 1881, and for 14 years the scene of the "Pops." The plan of arrangement will be the same as in the old Music Hall, except there will be no tables in the balcony. The same scale of prices will prevail, 25 cents for general admission, and 50 cents for reserved seat at tables or in the balcony, the latter price including the admission. There will be an orchestra of 50 musicians from the ranks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Max Zach as conductor for the first half of the season, and Gustav Strube directing the last half. Otto Roth will be the concert master. All the usual features which have made these concerts the unrivaled success of every summer since they began will be maintained. "Harvard," "Technology" and "Graduates" nights, with evenings devoted to favorite composers, will add to the attractiveness of the season. The sale of seats opens at the Winter Street box office of Music Hall next Monday morning, April 23, at 9.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, APRIL 21, 1900

The Pops

The fifteenth season of the pop concerts begins on Thursday evening, May 10. Owing to the sale of the old Music Hall property, the last Symphony concert next Saturday night ends not only the present season, but the nineteenth year of occupancy by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the forty-eighth season of the old hall as the home of the best music in Boston. The coming season of the Pops will be given in Mechanics Hall, in the large audience room at the corner of Huntington avenue and West Newton street, used for opera and other musical entertainments.

The plan of arrangement will be the same as in the old Music Hall, except there will be no tables in the balcony. The same scale of prices will prevail, twenty-five cents for general admission, and fifty cents for a reserved seat at tables or in the balcony, the latter price including admission. There will be an orchestra of fifty musicians from the ranks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Mr. Max Zach as conductor for the first half of the season and Mr. Gustav Strube directing the last half. Mr. Otto Roth will be the concert meister.

All the usual features which have made these concerts the unrivalled success of every summer since they began will be maintained. "Harvard," "Technology" and "Graduates'" nights, with evenings devoted to favorite composers, will add to the attractiveness of the season. There is, and always has been, a unique magnetism about these concerts which attracts all classes. There are the winter patrons who continue their allegiance to the summer sequence of the Symphonies, the lovers of the best light music, the man about town, the man of business who wishes to forget it for a while, his clerk who finds the modest admission fee to his liking, while the staid and conservative spectator looks down on "Bohemia" from the balconies.

The sale of seats opens at the Winter street box office of Music Hall next Monday morning, April 23, at nine o'clock.

APRIL 22, 1900—

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC.

Season of the "Pops" Begins May 10 in Mechanics' Hall.

Mr. Max Zach Conducts the First Half, and Mr. Gustave Strobe the Second—Mr. George Grossmith's Final Appearances This Week—News of Other Artists.

THE 15th season of the "Pops" is at hand, and Thursday evening, May 10, will be the opening night. This will be a most eventful season, because of the change from old Music Hall, which goes out of existence on May 1, after 48 years of most honorable usefulness as a home for all that is best in music. The coming season of these concerts will be given in Mechanics' Hall, in the large audience room, at the corner of Huntington avenue and West Newton street, used for opera and other musical entertainments. The plan of arrangement will be the same as in the old Music Hall, except there will be no tables in the balcony. The same scale of prices will prevail. There will be an orchestra of 50 musicians from the ranks of the Boston Symphony orchestra, with Mr. Max Zach as conductor for the first half of the season, Mr. Gustav Strube directing the other half. Mr. Otto Roth will be the concertmeister. All the usual features which have made these concerts the success of every summer since they began will be maintained. "Harvard," "Technology" and "graduates'" nights, with evenings devoted to favorite composers, will add to the attractiveness of the season. Perhaps the best idea of these concerts is contained in the following quotation from The Herald some years ago: "The 'Pops,' like the symphonies, are absorbing in a way. Boston loves them. They are democratic. Here is the clerk, business man, professional man, student, the various gradations of society, men and women alike. Everybody goes, smokes and drinks a little, and feels agreeably relaxed by observing his neighbors, as well as hearing the tuneful music. To the right and left in the balconies are the conservative spectators, who have come partly to hear the music and partly to see 'Bohemia.'" The sale of seats opens at the Winter street box office of Music Hall next Monday morning, April 23, at 9.

SUNDAY GLOBE

APRIL 22, 1900.

THE POPS.

The world must and will be amused, and each season of the year develops its own peculiar forms of such amusement. In the world of music here in Boston everybody turns in one direction at this time to the "Pops." For 14 years these unique concerts have satisfied thousands of patrons against all forms of imitation, and no successful substitute has yet been dicovered. One does not soon tire of these entertainments, for it is a comfort to either listen or talk, as one likes, while the chance to refresh one's self is not to be despised.

Because old Music hall passes out of existence in a brief week, after 48 years of service as the home of good music, the coming season of the "Pops" will be given in Mechanic's hall, in the large audience room at the corner of Huntington av and West Newton st, used for opera and other musical entertainments. The plan of arrangement will be the same as in the old Music hall, except there will be no tables in the balcony. The same scale of prices will prevail, 25 cents for general admission, and 50 cents for a reserved seat at tables or in the balcony, the latter price including the admission.

There will be an orchestra of 50 musicians from the ranks of the Boston symphony orchestra, with Mr Max Zach as conductor for the first half of the season, and Mr Gustav Strube directing the last half. Mr Otto Roth will be the concert meister. All the usual features which have made these concerts the unrivalled success of every summer since they began will be maintained. "Harvard," "Technology" and "Graduates" nights, with evenings devoted to favorite composers, will add to the attractiveness of the season. The sale of seats will open at the Winter st box office of Music hall next Monday morning, April 23, at 9.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 25, 1900.

For the first time since they were started the "Pop" concerts are to be given away from Music Hall. This is their fifteenth season, and they will take place in Mechanics' Hall—an orchestra of fifty pieces, under the leadership of Max Zach. Thursday, May 10, is the opening night.

ESTABLISHED
EDITED BY

THE concert days of the old Music hall are numbered. Nothing has brought that fact more forcibly to mind than the announcements that have gone out concerning the season of "pop" concerts. Now the "pop" concerts are as inadvertently associated with Music hall in the minds of the thousands of Bostonians who have basked in the exhilarating pleasure of their smoke, music and beer for so long that they have lost all count of the time, that the announcement headed "Mechanics' hall," and which then read on "15th season—The 'Pop's.' Orchestra of 50—Mr. Max Zach, conductor," came as a shock to make them realize that a change in the Boston musical aspect is right upon us. The "pop" concerts are a kind of entertainment that will attract Bohemian music lovers anywhere, so long as they are given under the management that long ago made them such a thoroughly Bostonese institution, and if we don't feel just at home at the starting out in Mechanics' building, it will not be long before he 50 well-known faces of the Symphony players, and Max Zach on the conductor's stand, will make us feel that we are among tried and true friends, to say the least, and it will be better to be in new quarters with the old friends, than in old quarters with strangers. Thursday, May 10, is the date set for the opening night of the "pop" concerts in Mechanic's hall, and the seats will be put on sale tomorrow at Music hall.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

SUNDAY MORNING, APRIL 22, 1900.
(Copyright, 1900, Post Publishing Company.)

The Pops.

No satisfactory substitute for or successful imitation of these unique entertainments has yet been discovered, which is in itself a tribute to their strength and popularity. Just now on all sides is heard the query as to the time of their beginning. Thursday evening, May 10, is the date, and in this connection it is strange to note the ever-prevailing impression that the beginning is earlier than usual, in face of the fact that the opening date has been practically the same for ten years.

As old Music Hall passes out of existence May 1, at the age of 48, the home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since its founding nineteen years ago, and also of the pops since their start fourteen years since, will be deserted save for the echoes of countless superb concerts and merry summer nights.

The coming, and fifteenth season, of the pops will be given in Mechanics Hall, in the large audience room, at the corner of Huntington avenue and West Newton street, used for opera and other musical entertainments. The plan of arrangement will be the same as in the old Music Hall, except there will be no tables in the balcony. The same scale of prices will prevail, 25 cents for general admission and 50 cents for a reserved seat at tables or in the balcony, the latter price including the admission.

There will be an orchestra of fifty musicians from the ranks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Mr. Max Zach as conductor for the first half of the season, and Mr. Gustav Strube directing the last half. Mr. Otto Roth will be the concertmeister. All the usual features which have made these concerts the unrivalled success of every summer since they began will be maintained. "Harvard," "Technology" and "graduates" nights, with evenings devoted to favorite composers, will add to the attractiveness of the season. The sale of seats opens at the Winter street box office of Music Hall next Monday morning, April 23, at 9 o'clock.

On May 10 the Pop concerts will for the first time open in another building than the old Music Hall. A lease has been made of the Mechanics' building on Huntington avenue, from May 10 to July 1, with a privilege of renewal if desired by the management. The orchestra will consist of fifty musicians, and will be under the leadership of Max Zach.

It will be interesting to note the success of this scheme under new conditions. The Pop concerts were the first entertainments in Boston where liquors were sold, and for a long time they held a monopoly. Then came the Sans Souci, which set managers to thinking, and later it followed the Columbia. Now the idea is to be tried in many places next season. Whether or no the fashionable contingent, which was always a prominent characteristic of the Pop concerts, will follow them on to the Back Bay remains to be seen.

[120]

ENT. [illegible] SCRIPT,
MONDAY, APRIL 23,

POP CONCERT TABLES COVETED

This Season of "Pops" Opens May 10 at Mechanics Building—More Tables Than Ever Sold Today for the Opening Night

An early evidence that the change of the "Pop" concerts from Music Hall to Mechanics Building for this season is in no way a handicap was shown by the fact that at the opening sale of tickets this morning more than the capacity of Music Hall was sold out. As never before will the concerts flourish, for there are to be 220 tables, more than twice the old number. Patrons will be glad to hear that in this spacious place there will be plenty of room for each table, and the same promenade which gladdened the hearts of the opera lovers will be thronged by the devotees of these concerts. This broad thoroughfare is just outside of the table space and under the broad balcony. There will be no tables in the balcony, as they will be reserved for the music lovers who have come to enjoy the music and to view Bohemia. The frequenters of the balcony will be glad to know that the great open roof space is well ventilated, and that a thousand smokers cannot becloud the air.

All the fashionable folk were represented at the ticket window this forenoon, and long before the noon hour had come more than a hundred tables had been taken. It was remarked by more than one purchaser that this sale was memorable, as it is the first radical change from Music Hall which is necessitated on account of the transfer of the property May 1. The opening night of this season, May 10, will mark the 750th performance.

For many years it has been the custom to select the conductor from the ranks of the Symphony Orchestra. This year Max Zach will again wield the baton. There will be, as usual, the special nights devoted to composers and requests. Harvard is honored by having two nights—the regular Harvard night and Harvard Graduates' night. The latter was instituted two years ago, and made an instant success. Last year the house was practically taken by college men and their friends on this occasion, and the general public was much disgruntled because there was not room enough for them. This year there will be plenty of room for all. The one and only entrance to this gay and festive concert hall will be the one at the corner of Newton street and Huntington avenue.

HERALD—BOSTON,
APRIL 29, 1900—I

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC.

The "Pop" Season Begins in 10 Days in a New Place.

Mechanics' Hall Is to Be the Scene of the Concerts for the Present Year—An English Woman Composer Engaged on a "Transvaal War Symphony."

IN 10 days the "Pops" will begin their 15th season in a new home. The long and useful career of old Music Hall ended last night with the closing Symphony concert of the 19th season; but Boston's music lovers will transfer their summer allegiance to Mechanics' Hall, as is evidenced by the long list of purchasers who have already secured nearly every table for the opening night. Everything will be on the same general plan as in the past 14 years. Decided advantages will be found in less crowded tables, the generous space on the floor for promenading and the dissipation of the smoke in the enormous space overhead. One feature to which special attention is called is that reserved seats, either at tables or in the balcony, can be secured by telephoning to the special telephone of the Pops, 1492 Back Bay.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, APRIL 29, 1900.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

Everybody is interested at this season of the year to learn all they can about the "Pops," and there is more than the usual news this year because of the change from old Music hall to Mechanic's hall. Except for this change in location, everything will be on the same general plan as in the past 14 years. There will be some decided advantages in less crowded tables, a generous promenade outside the tables, and a welcome freedom from smoke because of the enormous space overhead. The opening night, Thursday, May 10, will be even more brilliant in point of numbers, as practically all the reserved tables are already sold to a long list of regular patrons, who represent the best social element of Boston.

One feature to which special attention is called is that reserved seats, either at tables or in the balcony, can be secured by telephoning to the special telephone, 1492 Back Bay.

BOSTON SUNDAY JOURNAL
APRIL 22 1900

THE "POPS."

Thursday evening, May 10, is the answer to the all-prevailing question as to when the "Pops" begin. For 14 years these concerts have been a potent factor in the list of Boston's amusements. They attract all classes, the admission fee is a moderate one, there is a fascination in the freedom from restraint, and yet absolute quiet prevails during the performance of some dainty or inspiring selection. In a word—these "Pops" are unique. Because of the sale of the old Music Hall property, the coming fifteenth season of these concerts will be given in Mechanics' Hall, in the large audience room at the corner of Huntington Avenue and West Newton Streets, used for opera and other musical entertainments. For 48 years old Music Hall has stood for the best in music in this city, for 19 years it has been the home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from its foundation in 1881, and for 14 years the scene of the "Pops." The plan of arrangement will be the same as in the old Music Hall, except there will be no tables in the balcony. The same scale of prices will prevail, 25 cents for general admission, and 50 cents for reserved seat at tables or in the balcony, the latter price including the admission. There will be an orchestra of 50 musicians from the ranks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Max Zach as conductor for the first half of the season, and Gustav Strube directing the last half. Otto Roth will be the concert master. All the usual features which have made these concerts the unrivaled success of every summer since they began will be maintained. "Harvard," "Technology" and "Graduates" nights, with evenings devoted to favorite composers, will add to the attractiveness of the season. The sale of seats opens at the Winter Street box office of Music Hall next Monday morning, April 23, at 9.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, APRIL 21, 1900

The Pops

The fifteenth season of the pop concerts begins on Thursday evening, May 10. Owing to the sale of the old Music Hall property, the last Symphony concert next Saturday night ends not only the present season, but the nineteenth year of occupancy by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the forty-eighth season of the old hall as the home of the best music in Boston. The coming season of the Pops will be given in Mechanics Hall, in the large audience room at the corner of Huntington avenue and West Newton street, used for opera and other musical entertainments.

The plan of arrangement will be the same as in the old Music Hall, except there will be no tables in the balcony. The same scale of prices will prevail, twenty-five cents for general admission, and fifty cents for a reserved seat at tables or in the balcony, the latter price including admission. There will be an orchestra of fifty musicians from the ranks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Mr. Max Zach as conductor for the first half of the season and Mr. Gustav Strube directing the last half. Mr. Otto Roth will be the concert meister.

All the usual features which have made these concerts the unrivalled success of every summer since they began will be maintained. "Harvard," "Technology" and "Graduates'" nights, with evenings devoted to favorite composers, will add to the attractiveness of the season. There is, and always has been, a unique magnetism about these concerts which attracts all classes. There are the winter patrons who continue their allegiance to the summer sequence of the Symphonies, the lovers of the best light music, the man about town, the man of business who wishes to forget it for a while, his clerk who finds the modest admission fee to his liking, while the staid and conservative spectator looks down on "Bohemia" from the balconies.

The sale of seats opens at the Winter street box office of Music Hall next Monday morning, April 23, at nine o'clock.

[illegible] HERALD
APRIL 22, 1900.

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC.

Season of the "Pops" Begins May 10 in Mechanics' Hall.

Mr. Max Zach Conducts the First Half, and Mr. Gustave Strobe the Second—Mr. George Grossmith's Final Appearances This Week—News of Other Artists.

THE 15th season of the "Pops" is at hand, and Thursday evening, May 10, will be the opening night. This will be a most eventful season, because of the change from old Music Hall, which goes out of existence on May 1, after 48 years of most honorable usefulness as a home for all that is best in music. The coming season of these concerts will be given in Mechanics' Hall, in the large audience room, at the corner of Huntington avenue and West Newton street, used for opera and other musical entertainments. The plan of arrangement will be the same as in the old Music Hall, except there will be no tables in the balcony. The same scale of prices will prevail. There will be an orchestra of 50 musicians from the ranks of the Boston Symphony orchestra, with Mr. Max Zach as conductor for the first half of the season, Mr. Gustav Strube directing the other half. Mr. Otto Roth will be the concertmeister. All the usual features which have made these concerts the success of every summer since they began will be maintained. "Harvard," "Technology" and "graduates'" nights, with evenings devoted to favorite composers, will add to the attractiveness of the season. Perhaps the best idea of these concerts is contained in the following quotation from The Herald some years ago: "'The 'Pops,' like the symphonies, are absorbing in a way. Boston loves them. They are democratic. Here is the clerk, business man, professional man, student, the various gradations of society, men and women alike. Everybody goes, smokes and drinks a little, and feels agreeably relaxed by observing his neighbors, as well as hearing the tuneful music. To the right and left in the balconies are the conservative spectators, who have come partly to hear the music and partly to see 'Bohemia.'" The sale of seats opens at the Winter street box office of Music Hall next Monday morning, April 23, at 9.

SUNDAY GLOBE
APRIL 22, 1900.

THE POPS.

The world must and will be amused, and each season of the year develops its own peculiar forms of such amusement. In the world of music here in Boston everybody turns in one direction at this time to the "Pops." For 14 years these unique concerts have satisfied thousands of patrons against all forms of imitation, and no successful substitute has yet been dicovered. One does not soon tire of these entertainments, for it is a comfort to either listen or talk, as one likes, while the chance to refresh one's self is not to be despised.

Because old Music hall passes out of existence in a brief week, after 48 years of service as the home of good music, the coming season of the "Pops" will be given in Mechanic's hall, in the large audience room at the corner of Huntington av and West Newton st, used for opera and other musical entertainments. The plan of arrangement will be the same as in the old Music hall, except there will be no tables in the balcony. The same scale of prices will prevail, 25 cents for general admission, and 50 cents for a reserved seat at tables or in the balcony, the latter price including the admission.

There will be an orchestra of 50 musicians from the ranks of the Boston symphony orchestra, with Mr Max Zach as conductor for the first half of the season, and Mr Gustav Strube directing the last half. Mr Otto Roth will be the concert meister. All the usual features which have made these concerts the unrivalled success of every summer since they began will be maintained. "Harvard," "Technology" and "Graduates" nights, with evenings devoted to favorite composers, will add to the attractiveness of the season. The sale of seats will open at the Winter st box office of Music hall next Monday morning, April 23, at 9.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 25, 1900.

For the first time since they were started the "Pop" concerts are to be given away from Music Hall. This is their fifteenth season, and they will take place in Mechanics' Hall—an orchestra of fifty pieces, under the leadership of Max Zach. Thursday, May 10, is the opening night

BOSTON TR[illegible]
Ame ESTABLISHED 1[illegible]
EDITED BY ELMER [illegible]

THE concert days of the old Music hall are numbered. Nothing has brought that fact more forcibly to mind than the announcements that have gone out concerning the season of "pop" concerts. Now the "pop" concerts are as inadvertently associated with Music hall in the minds of the thousands of Bostonians who have basked in the exhilarating pleasure of their smoke, music and beer for so long that they have lost all count of the time, that the announcement headed "Mechanics' hall," and which then read on "15th season—The 'Pop's.' Orchestra of 50—Mr. Max Zach, conductor," came as a shock to make them realize that a change in the Boston musical aspect is right upon us. The "pop" concerts are a kind of entertainment that will attract Bohemian music lovers anywhere, so long as they are given under the management that long ago made them such a thoroughly Bostonese institution, and if we don't feel just at home at the starting out in Mechanics' building, it will not be long before he 50 well-known faces of the Symphony players, and Max Zach on the conductor's stand, will make us feel that we are among tried and true friends, to say the least, and it will be better to be in new quarters with the old friends, than in old quarters with strangers. Thursday, May 10, is the date set for the opening night of the "pop" concerts in Mechanic's hall, and the seats will be put on sale tomorrow at Music hall.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

SUNDAY MORNING, APRIL 22, 1900.
(Copyright, 1900, Post Publishing Company.)

The Pops.

No satisfactory substitute for or successful imitation of these unique entertainments has yet been discovered, which is in itself a tribute to their strength and popularity. Just now on all sides is heard the query as to the time of their beginning. Thursday evening, May 10, is the date, and in this connection it is strange to note the ever-prevailing impression that the beginning is earlier than usual, in face of the fact that the opening date has been practically the same for ten years.

As old Music Hall passes out of existence May 1, at the age of 48, the home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since its founding nineteen years ago, and also of the pops since their start fourteen years since, will be deserted save for the echoes of countless superb concerts and merry summer nights.

The coming, and fifteenth season, of the pops will be given in Mechanics' Hall, in the large audience room, at the corner of Huntington avenue and West Newton street, used for opera and other musical entertainments. The plan of arrangement will be the same as in the old Music Hall, except there will be no tables in the balcony. The same scale of prices will prevail, 25 cents for general admission and 50 cents for a reserved seat at tables or in the balcony, the latter price including the admission.

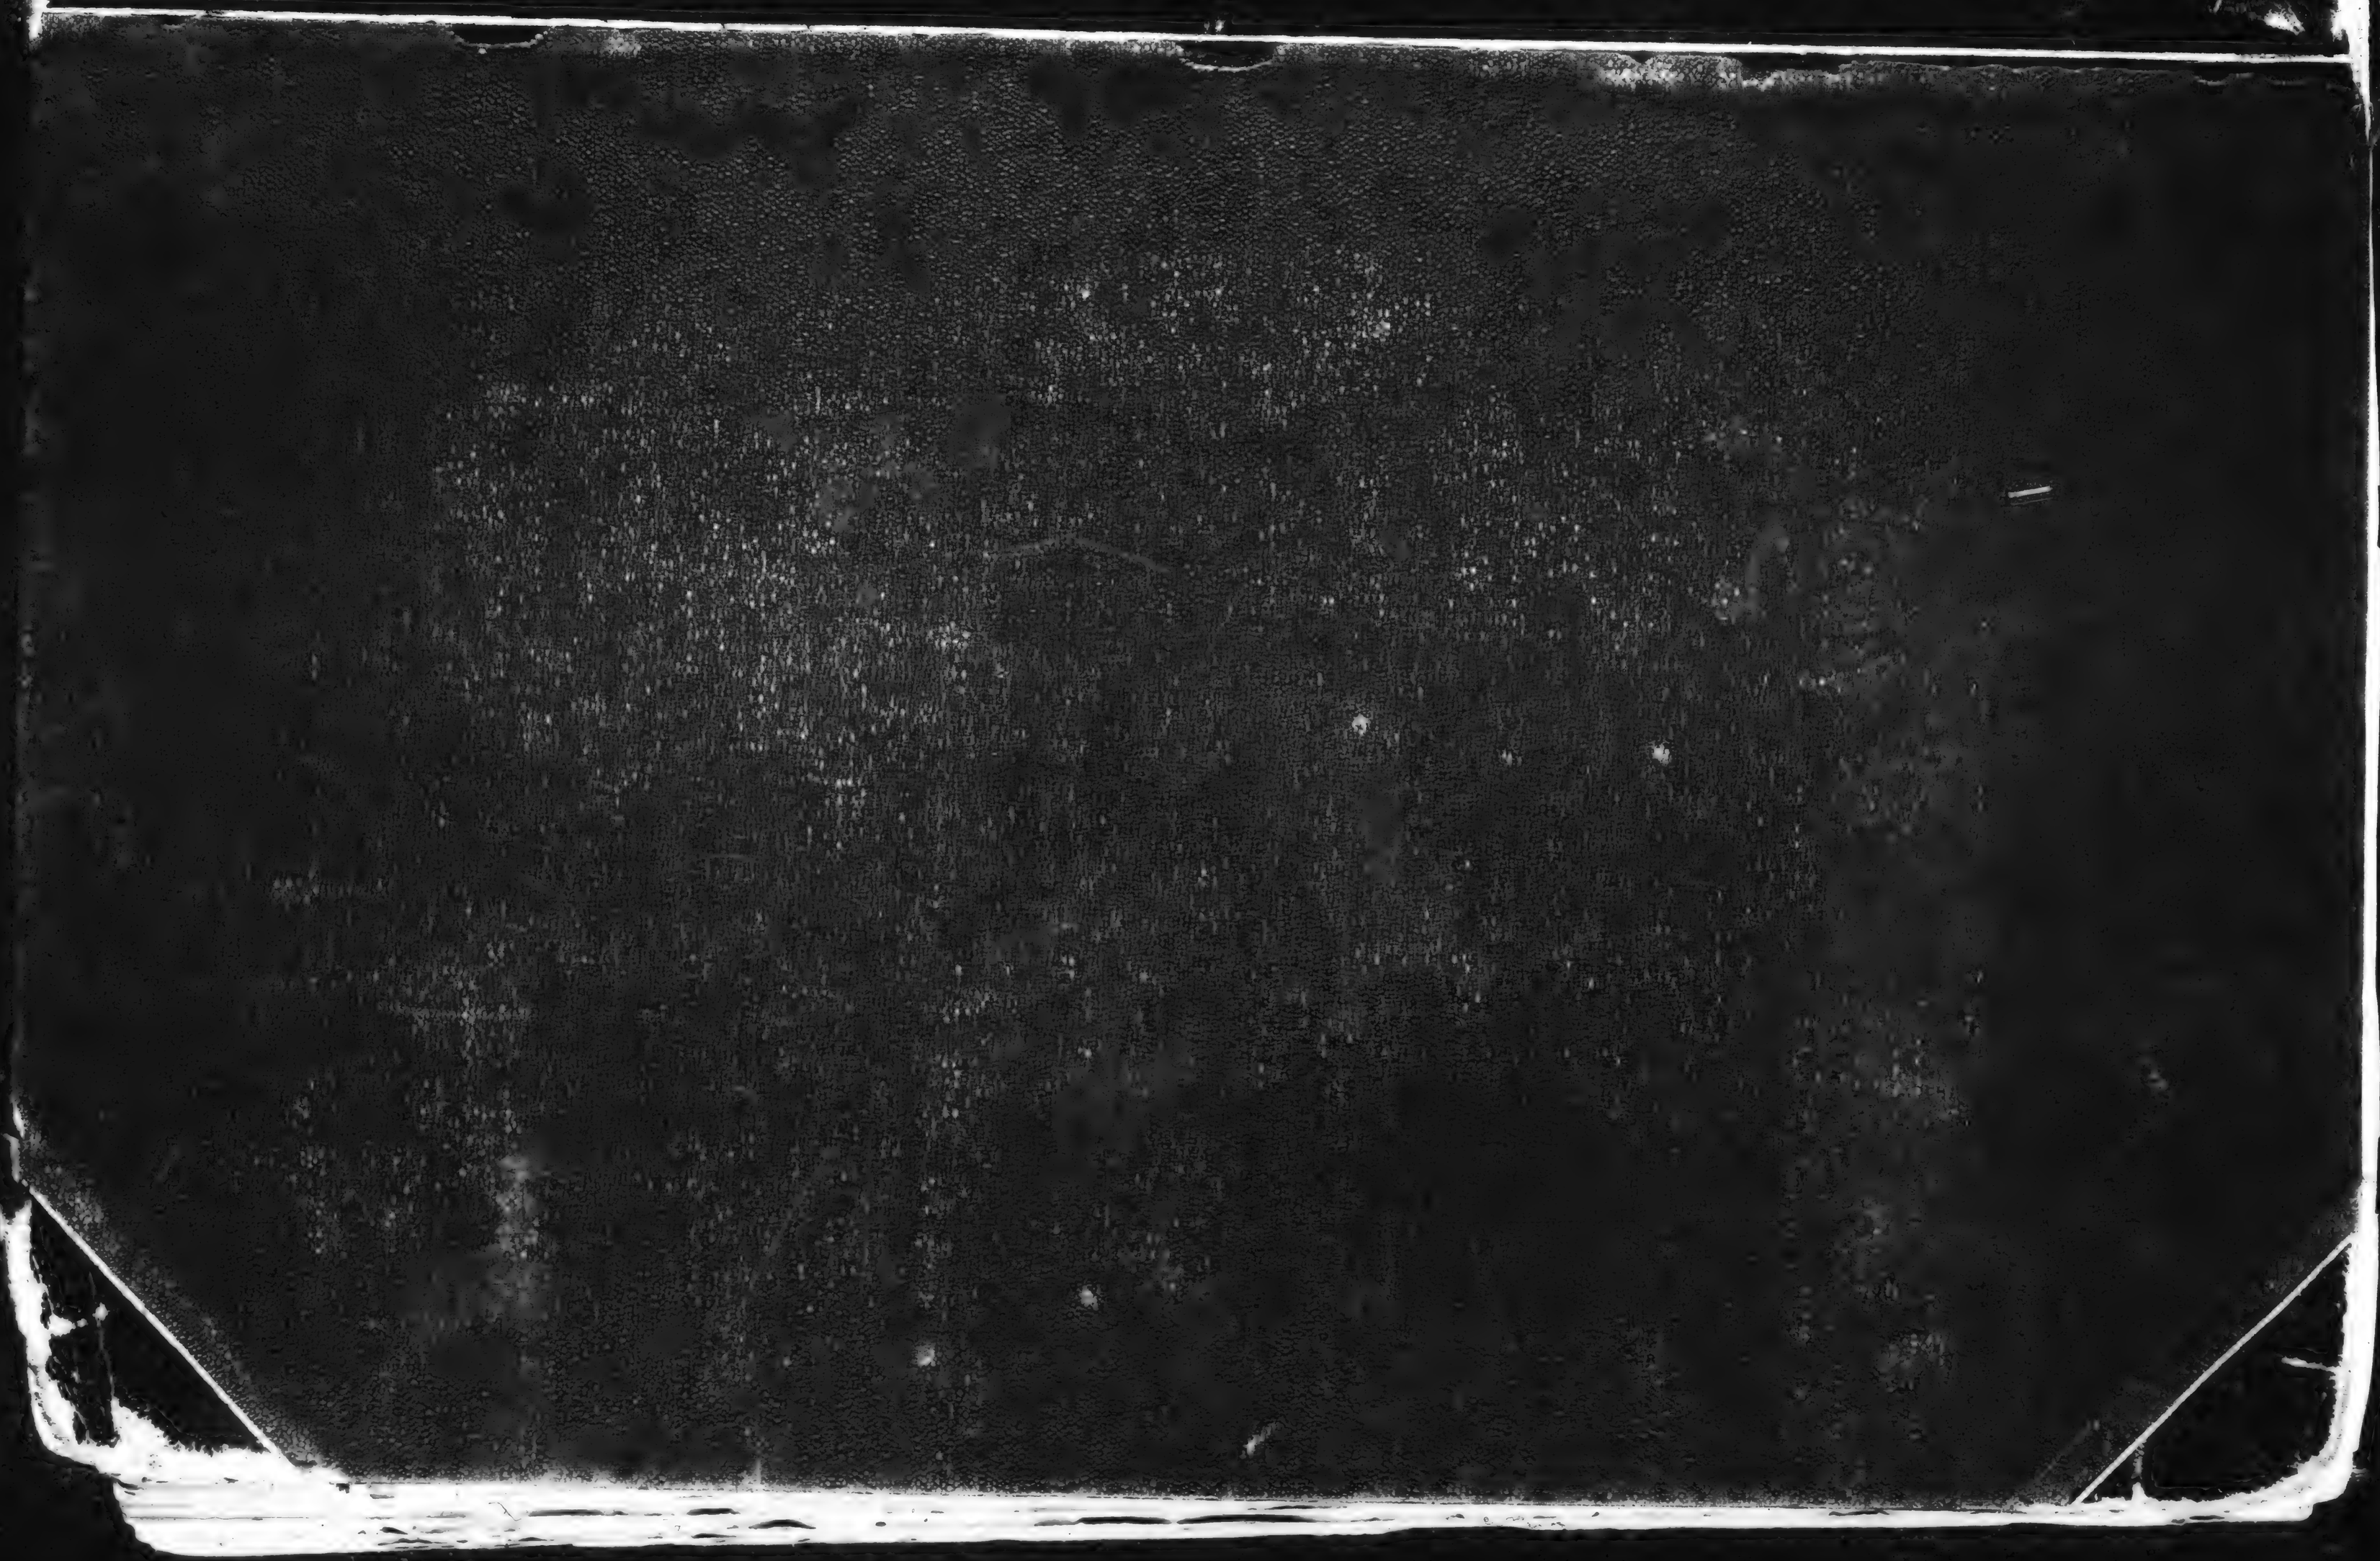
There will be an orchestra of fifty musicians from the ranks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Mr. Max Zach as conductor for the first half of the season, and Mr. Gustav Strube directing the last half. Mr. Otto Roth will be the concertmeister. All the usual features which have made these concerts the unrivalled success of every summer since they began will be maintained. "Harvard," "Technology" and "graduates" nights, with evenings devoted to favorite composers, will add to the attractiveness of the season. The sale of seats opens at the Winter street box office of Music Hall next Monday morning, April 23, at 9 o'clock.

On May 10 the Pop concerts will for the first time open in another building than the old Music Hall. A lease has been made of the Mechanics' building on Huntington avenue, from May 10 to July 1, with a privilege of renewal if desired by the management. The orchestra will consist of fifty musicians, and will be under the leadership of Max Zach.

It will be interesting to note the success of this scheme under new conditions. The Pop concerts were the first entertainments in Boston where liquors were sold, and for a long time they held a monopoly. Then came the Sans Souci, which set managers to thinking, and after it followed the Columbia. Now the idea is to be tried in many places next season. Whether or no the fashionable contingent, which was always a peculiar characteristic of the Pop concerts, will follow them on to the Back Bay, remains to be seen.

✦ ✦ ✦ ✦

[illegible]

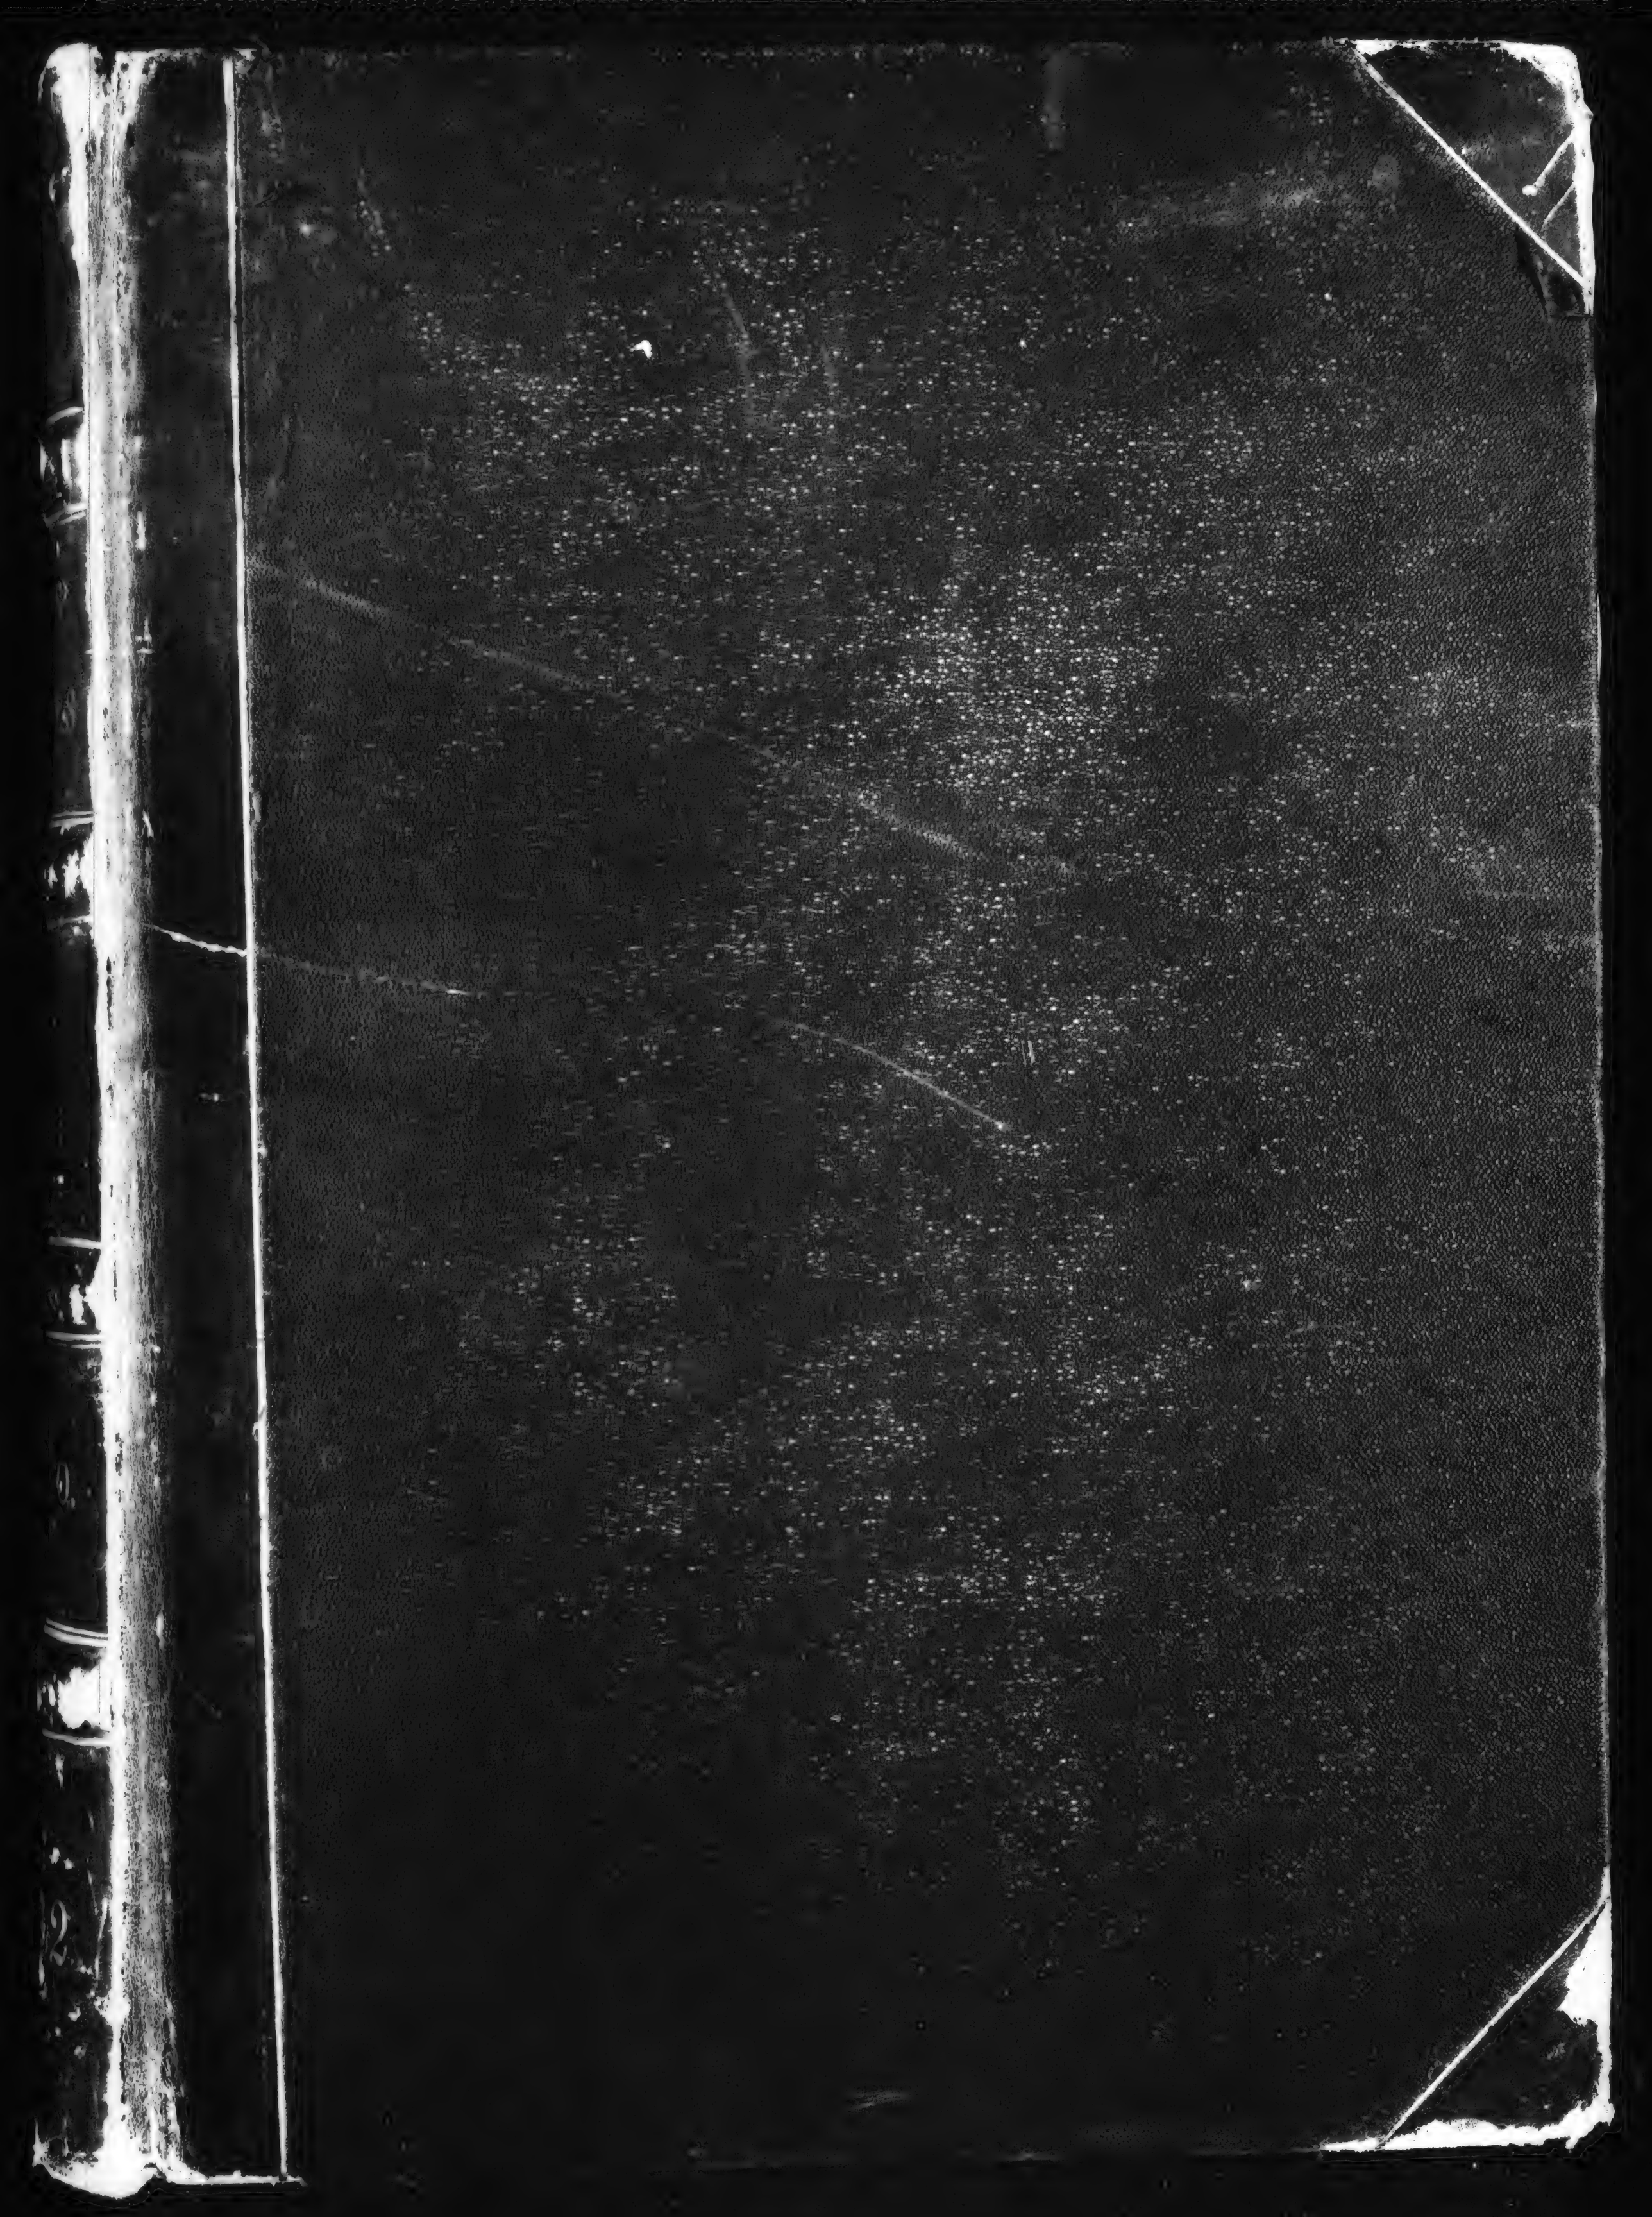


END OF VOLUME

VOLUME 16

BSO

1900 - 1901



SHIPMAN'S
Invoice & Scrap
BOOK

HILL, SMITH & CO.
STATIONERS
BOSTON.

BOSTON EVENING RECORD.
SEPTEMBER 26 1900

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The ever growing curiosity of the public to see the inside of the new Symphony Hall was gratified on Monday and Tuesday of this week, when for the first time the fullest opportunity was given everybody to inspect the hall in every part. On the above days the season tickets for the 24 Friday afternoon public rehearsals were put on sale at auction. The fact that every seat in the house was sold, except, of course, the second balcony, which will be given, as usual, first come, first served, to the purchasers of 25 cent tickets, and notably that the prices realized were generally better than last year, is the best possible evidence that everybody is delighted with the new hall.

And what was true of the Friday afternoon tickets should apply as well to the sales of the season tickets for the 24 Saturday evening concerts, which are announced for the coming Thursday and Friday, Sept. 27 and 28. The $12 tickets will be sold on Thursday and the $7.50 tickets on Friday. The entire second balcony will be included, as usual, in the $7.50 tickets. The arrangement of the new hall is so admirable in every way that there are no poor seats anywhere.

LARGE SYMPHONY BIDS.

It was with considerable surprise that the people who were gathered in Symphony Hall yesterday morning watched the sale of the seats under the balcony on the floor and those of the five rear rows opposite the stage in the first balcony. The par value of all these seats was $7.50, and the average premium bid was about $17.50, making an unprecedented aggregate for this part of the house.

The seats generally went one at a time except when the agents spoke up, and these purchasers usually bought in four, that being the limit allowed one person at one time.

There are a great many reasons why seats went for such a high figure. Chief among them is that—that many fathers and mothers did not dare to let their daughters go to the old Music Hall, knowing that it was a fire trap.

This new hall is as fireproof as any building can be, and the breadth of aisles, the seat spaces and the prodigality of entrances leading into the spacious marble foyer surrounding the hall make egress, even when it is packed, a matter of but a few moments.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CVIII., NO. 89.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 27, 1900.

CONCERT SEATS CHEAPER.

Pronounced Fall in Prices as Compared with Those of Seats for Rehearsals.

It was again demonstrated this morning, at the sale of Symphony tickets in Symphony Hall, how much more popular the Friday afternoon rehearsals are than the Saturday evening concerts, for seats that brought $40 and $50 for the rehearsals could be had for a little over half that today. The bidding was healthy for all that, with spirited competition for the better seats.

The $12 seats for the rehearsals were sold this morning, the $7.50 seats for the rehearsals being due tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock, when the sale of seats comes to a close.

The first seat, the one for which Mr. Herrick paid a premium of $280 on Monday, brought $5. This comparison indicates nothing so far as the value of the seat is concerned, of course, but the difference is shown by the fact that the seat next to it, which had no artificial value on Monday, sold for $20 at that time, and it brought $5 today. The best seats in the first row, not a particularly desirable location, brought $17, and thereabout. The prices gradually advanced as the first 10 rows were sold, but up to noon the best premiums were running from $20 to $30, with very few of the latter. Good seats were selling for from $10 to $18 premium. Some in row K brought $31, and this seemed to be the best for the morning up to that time.

The bronzes for the big electroliers at the outside Huntington avenue entrance of the hall have been placed in position, and they add much to the appearance of the front. When they have their clusters of lights in place, they will form rather imposing beacons.

By reason of the large number of $12 seats, it is hardly probable that today's sale will be over before 6 o'clock or later.

BOSTON EVENING RECORD.
Y SEPTEMBER 27 19

SYMPHONY SEATS STILL COMMAND FAT PREMIUMS.

At the opening of the sale of $12 symphony tickets for concerts, about 300 persons were present, but this number was rapidly increased as the choice seats were reached.

During the first hour and a half but five rows were auctioned off. The bidding was rather spirited, especially for the centre seats. The average premium paid for seats in the first five rows was $12, although scattered seats brought as high as $22.

Last year seats in the first row brought only from $2 to $10 premium; this year they were sold at from $4 to $17 premium.

Brokers took a large proportion of the seats.

Bidding for the $12 Saturday evening symphony concert seats began in Symphony Hall this morning. The managers say that the premiums ran rather higher than last year.

Two seats, M 18 and 19, brought $67 premium each. There were several that were bid in for over $50 and under $65, and quite a number for between $30 and $40.

A still larger number went for sums between $20 and $30, and there were a great many sold for less than $20.

Bidding on lower floor seats had reached only half way down the hall by 1 p.m., a great many single seats being purchased.

The number of people present was fairly large, and the agents and speculators were quite conspicuous.

Mrs. Jack Gardiner was present for a short time.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CVIII., NO. 90.

FRIDAY, SEPT. 28, 1900.

SYMPHONY RECORDS BROKEN.

Highest Prices Ever Paid Bid for Two Concert Seats.

The Premium on Each Is Just $560—Rumors That Mrs. "Jack" Gardner Is the One Who Will Have Them—Good Prices Paid for Other Places at Yesterday's Sale.

The highest price ever paid for a Symphony seat in Boston, and perhaps the highest ever paid in the world, was the chief and record-breaking result of the sale of $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. Mr. Connelly, the Adams House ticket agent, was the successful bidder, and the premium was just $560. The previous record was insignificant by comparison, being $380, which was paid for a choice seat for the second season of the reign of Conductor Nikisch.

Not only was this large sum paid for one seat, but two seats were taken on the bid, which made the total premium for the two seats amount to $1120, not including the price proper of the seats, which was $12 apiece. Altogether the holder of these two will thus pay $1144 for his 24 concerts, or $47.66 2-3 per concert. One might suppose that such a prodigal might prefer to hire the orchestra outright and be done with it, but, then, human ways are queer, sometimes.

The excitement came like a thunderbolt from clear heavens. The seats on the floor of the house had all been sold, at premiums ranging from $3.50 to $67, and Auctioneer Walter Jackson proceeded to the balcony seats, starting with row A on the extreme right hand side, seat No. 1. This brought a fair premium, and the bids for following seats fast reached the $60 mark.

The first aisle was reached, and the better side of it, seat "A 15" was announced.

"How much am I bid?" asked Mr. Jackson.

A commonplace starter came from the floor, and the bids began to crawl up. Soon those in the hall realized that a great battle was on, and interest before long gave way to open-mouthed wonderment, and then to stupefaction.

The man who forced Mr. Connelly to such efforts was a Mr. Jackson, who is a brother to the auctioneer. For his yeoman service he might fairly be termed more than a brother. Mr. Jackson was buying, or trying to buy, for a Mr. Pratt, it was said. And it seems an even gamble that Mr. Pratt was really lucky not to get the seat.

The name of the person for whom Mr. Connelly bought was a mystery. Mrs. "Jack" Gardner always had the seats corresponding to these in the old hall, and Dame Rumor suggested that she will be seen in A 15 on the evening of Oct. 20, the date of the first concert for the season. No doubt, this section of the hall will be watched with interest.

It seemed strange to many an old Symphony sharp that Mr. Connelly should take two seats on this bid, and thus double his great premium. The seat for which he bid was an aisle seat, and one of the most desirable in the house. The seats just before and after A 15 went for from $50 to $60 each. It was very evidently the aisle seat which was chiefly wanted. Probably if he had taken only the one, his opponent would not have bid so excessively for the second seat. Mr. Connelly probably would have gotten A 16 for from $60 to $100 at most.

But he said he would have the two, come what might, and he got them. It will doubtless be long before the record is beaten—and Mr. Herrick's $280 paid for the first seat sold on Monday, and the first ever sold in the new hall, must now make him feel rather blue, for his glory was shortlived, although he did pay so much for a $20 seat.

All in all, the sale was very successful, and, as was the case with the sale of rehearsal seats, the bids showed a very even advance over last year.

The prices were not nearly so high as for the rehearsals, of course, premiums of from $20 to $30 drawing some of the best seats in the house. In the balcony some very good seats went for $10.

Today, the last day of the sale, the $7.50 seats for the concerts will be sold, the auction beginning at 10 o'clock.

Boston Daily Globe.
FRIDAY, SEPT. 28, 1900.

PREMIUM OF $1120 PAID.

Top Notch for Two Symphony Concert Seats.

Figures Attained at the Auction Sale After Spirited Bidding.

Procured by Ticket Agent Connelly, Whose Purchases Reach $15,000.

The sale of seats at auction for the symphony concerts yesterday broke the record as regards premiums paid for choice tickets. The sale was continued at Symphony hall, as on the previous day.

The premium received for two seats numbered 15 and 16 in the balcony was $1120. This was at the rate of $560 premium for each seat, and the successful bidder was Mr Connelly, the ticket agent. The bidding for these two seats was conducted amidst the greatest excitement. Many wealthy citizens were among the bidders and Mr Connelly finally came off the victor. He immediately paid for his purchase, which, it is understood, was for a prominent and wealthy man in this city, whose name was not divulged.

The seats which commanded such a high figure are for a series of 24 concerts, which are to mark the opening of the new Symphony hall. Mr Connelly's purchases for the concert up to last night aggregated nearly $15,000.

Taking it as a whole, the sale for the first series of Saturday evening concerts was a pronounced success, from the management's standpoint.

The record for the forenoon was made at $67, which amount of premium was bid for two center seats in row M. The premiums ranged from this sum down to a nominal figure for back, first and floor seats, several bids of $50, $40 and $35 being received.

The premiums for concert seats do not average as high as those received for rehearsal seats, but the management has every reason to be satisfied.

There was a large attendance of interested people in the hall—which, by the way, looks very cheerful in daytime—but, as usual, the more important bidders were represented by the local ticket agents.

The bidding did not become especially spirited until after the first four or five rows were auctioned off, and the center of the $12 section formed the principal battle ground.

Seats in row A brought from $3 to $17, compared with $2 to $10 last year, the center seats, as in the case of all the sales, bringing the higher premiums.

Premiums received in row B ranged between $4 and $18, with $10.50, $11.50, $15.50 and $17 between.

In row C sales started in at $10.50 premium, went as high as $16 for center seats, and wound up at $8 for the end seats.

The real interest began when row D was reached. The starter here got $3.50 for Nos. 1 and 2, and the premium here ran up to $31 for No. 20. Several seats commanded $14 and $15 premiums, and the end seats brought $8 and $8.50 premium.

In row E the range was $8 to $26, with some very spirited buying for some of the most desirable places and $9.50 for the last end seats.

Seats in row F commanded $10 to $26, and four were bought for $22 premium. Row G brought good prices all the way through, starting in at $11 premium, running up to $26, and closing at $12 for the last two.

When the center of row H was reached No. 18 brought $31 premium and No. 19 $41, both being bought by agents for customers. The minimum premiums were $8.50 for the first three seats and $10.50 for the last one.

Premiums in row I averaged high, the range being $7.50 and $27. Row J premiums started at $7.50 and worked up to $26, with several $20 premiums between.

The high point for row K was $31, with premiums of $23.50, $30, $22 and $24 also received. Row L seats commanded from $11.50 to $37, seat 16 bringing the latter figure, and 12, 13, 14 and 15 bringing $31.

In row M, where the highest premiums were received, the consecutive premiums were as follows: Nos. 1 and 2 $13, 3 and 4 $13.50, 5, 6, 7 and 8 $20; 9 $20, 10, 11, 12, 13 $17; 14, 15, 16 and 17 $36; 18 (on the aisle) $67, 19 $67, 20 $50, 21 $26, 22, 23, 24 and 25 $20.50; 28 and 29 $32, 30 $16.50, 31, 32 and 33 $13.50, 34, 35 and 36 $9.

The average was somewhat lower in the case of row N, although premiums ranged from $11 to $36. Individual premiums between included $25, $30 and $33.

Row O premiums worked up from $12.50 to $40, seat No. 19 bringing the latter. Other premiums received were $14, $25, $28, $31 and $32, the last one being $13.50.

The interest in the bidding extended to row P and beyond, premiums in the former being $8.50, $13.50, $23, $30, $25, $36, $40 and $44. Seats 19 and 20 brought the last mentioned premium, and the bidding for them started in at $30.

Today the auction sale of $7.50 concert seats will be held.

Boston Journal.
FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1900.

SYMPHONY PRICES KEEP ON CLIMBING.

At the opening of the sale of $12 Symphony tickets for concerts Thursday about 300 persons were present, but this number was rapidly increased when the bidding began.

During the first hour and a half but five rows were auctioned off. The bidding was rather spirited, especially for the centre seats. The average premium paid for seats in the first five rows was $12, although scattered seats brought as high as $22.

Last year seats in the first row brought only from $2 to $10 premium; this year they were sold at from $4 to $17 premium.

Brokers have done little bidding, but have taken a large proportion of the seats.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.
The Official Paper of the State.
The Official Paper of the City.
FRIDAY MORNING, SEPT. 28, 1900.

SEATS STILL AT PREMIUM.

At the opening of the sale of $12 symphony tickets for concerts, about 300 persons were present, but this number was rapidly increased as the choice seats were reached.

During the first hour and a half but five rows were auctioned off. The bidding was rather spirited, especially for the centre seats. The average premium paid for seats in the first five rows was $12, although scattered seats brought as high as $22.

Last year seats in the first row brought only from $2 to $10 premium; this year they were sold at from $4 to $17 premium.

Brokers took a large proportion of the seats.

Bidding for the $12 Saturday evening symphony concert seats began in Symphony Hall yesterday morning. The managers say that the premiums ran rather higher than last year.

Two seats, M 18 and 19, brought $67 premium each. There were several that were bid in for over $50 and under $65, and quite a number for between $30 and $40.

A still larger number went for sums between $20 and $30, and there were a great many sold for less than $20.

Bidding on lower floor seats had reached only half way down the hall by 1 p.m., a great many single seats being purchased.

The number of people present was fairly large, and the agents and speculators were quite conspicuous.

Mrs. Jack Gardner was present for a short time.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CVIII., NO. 91.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 29, 1900.

RECORD FOR THE SYMPHONY.

Sale of Tickets for This Season Has Surpassed Everything in the History of This City.

The sale of Symphony concert tickets came to an end yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall shortly before 2 o'clock. It was probably the most remarkable sale in the history of music in this city, the average price of the seats being higher than ever before, and the record for a single bid being so utterly smashed by Mr. Connelly's $560 price as to make it problematical if ever the record will be broken again.

The $7.50 seats for the concerts were auctioned yesterday, a goodly throng being on hand to bid them in. The premiums were not startling, as they never are for these seats, but they certainly were discouraging to a great many music lovers to whom the outlay for seats means more than the big premiums paid by some of the people who sit on the floor.

In the upper balcony, which is reserved for the Saturday evening concerts, although not for the rehearsals, and where many of Boston's musicians are found during the season, seats went for from $3 to $5 higher, on the average, than they did last year. The last rows on the floor did not seem so much favored as the front and second row seats in the second balcony, where the highest premiums of the day were paid. These latter seats brought premiums of from $10 to $17. Some seats went for $4 or $5, but these were on the floor back under the first balcony, or behind the "dead line."

As the last four rows in the second balcony were sold, these being the last put up for either concert or rehearsal, all others having been sold, the bidding grew rather amusing. It was now a question of these or nothing, and as a result the last four rows averaged very well, the last row, for instance, actually bringing higher premiums than those third or fourth in front of it. And there were some badly disappointed people when the sale was over.

The first rehearsal will take place on Friday afternoon, Oct. 19, and the first concert on the Saturday evening afterward. In the mean time, the 5000 and odd tickets sold will rest in pocketbooks and safety vaults, while their owners are wondering how Mr. Gericke's big orchestra will sound in its fine new home.

The prodigal who pays $47.66 for the privilege of going to a Saturday night Symphony concert is entitled to join that gentleman who once paid Barnum $500 to hear Jenny Lind. It is a curious distinction, and I hope no dreadful 50-cent concertgoer will be permitted to occupy the sacred seats! Mr. Ellis must really order a red velvet rope to be placed across them, and a perpetual placard "engaged" fastened to their back.

The Symphony auction season is over, and let's hope the successful and unsuccessful bidders are all satisfied. It's their own fault if they feel otherwise.

Boston Journal.
SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1900.

The opening of the new Symphony Hall with the sale of tickets for the Symphony concerts on Monday was largely attended and much interest was shown in the sale of the first seat to a well-known speculator for $280 premium. Among those present were Rev. A. A. Berle, Mrs. Charles Whitcomb, Mr. F. M. Stanwood, Mrs. Reed, Miss Belle Reed, Mr. and Mrs. H. Messinger Leland, ex-Mayor Cobb, Miss Lucy Cobb, Gen. Blackmar, Mrs. Samuel Aldrich, Mrs. A. L. Hathaway, Miss Fay, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Young, Mr. Norman McLeod, Mrs. Fred Carpenter, Mrs. Walter Jackson and many others.

[2]

$572 FOR A SEAT.

Broker Connelly Pays Highest Price at Symphony Sale.

SEAT IS IN THE BALCONY.

He and Mr. Pratt, Also a Dealer Worked Hard for A 15 Right.

OTHER PRICES NOT SO HIGH.

Yesterday Auctioneer Jackson swung his baton, keeping tim[illegible] the liveliest measure of the daily vocal concert of bidders for seats in Symphony Hall that has yet taken place.

And by skilful and masterly conducting he led Soloist Connelly up to the highest note—price, that is to say—of the sale, which was $572 for seat No. A 15, right; which is in the balcony at that. What is particularly desirable in this seat, only Mr. Connelly or Mr. Pratt, who bid against him, can explain. Both are ticket agents.

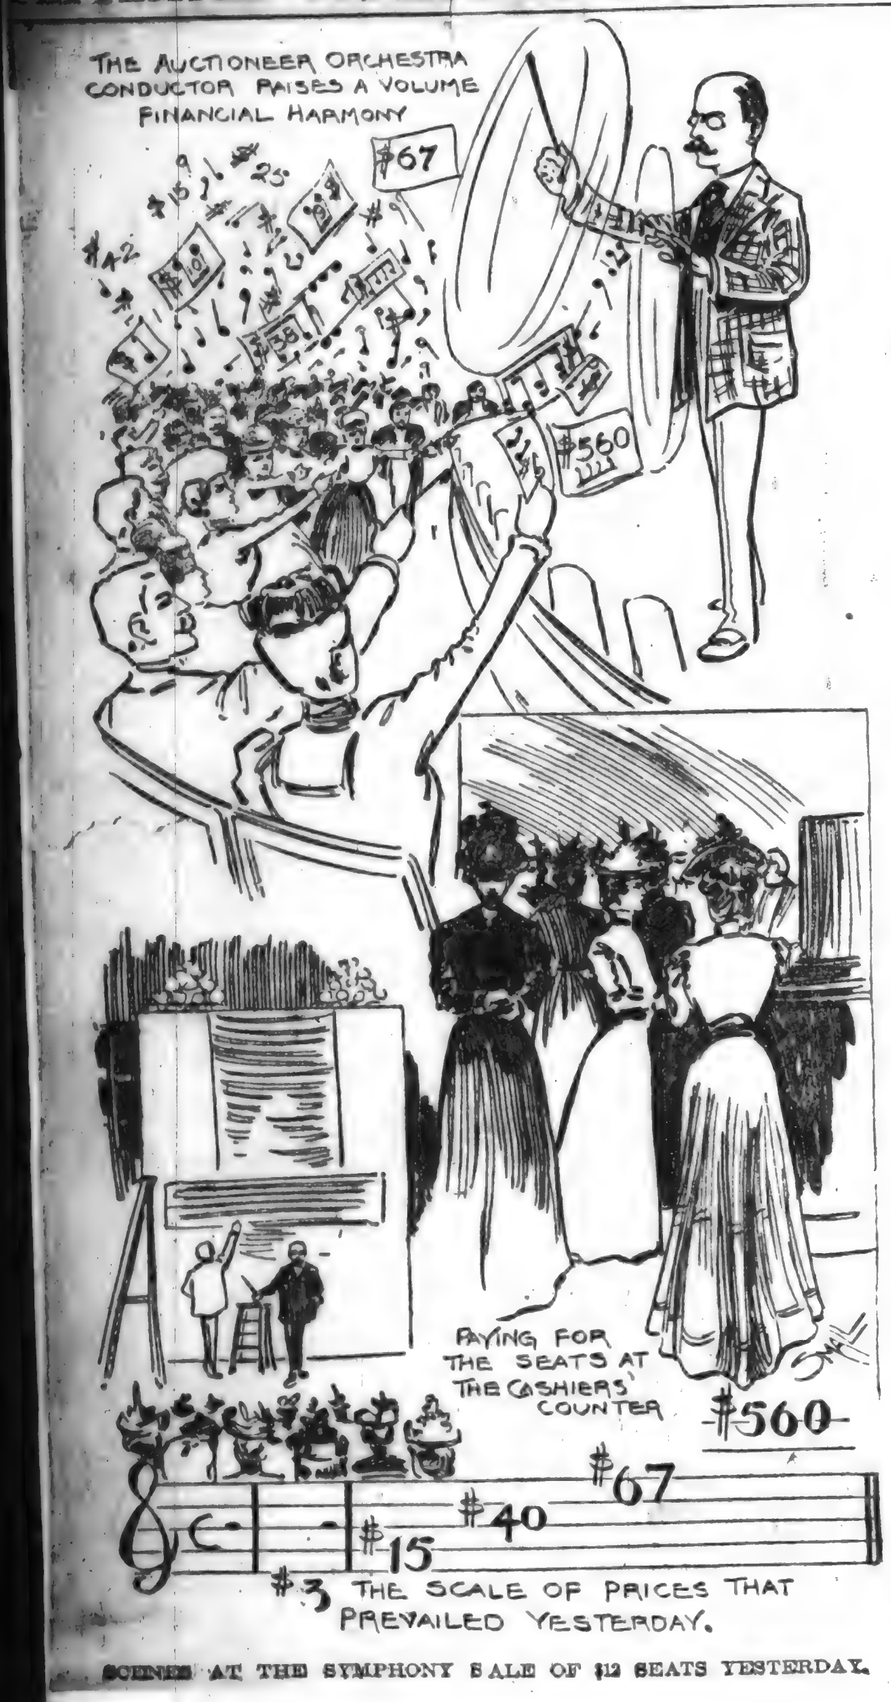
This seat was sold in the afternoon. The contest began at $15, offered by Mr. Connelly; then Mr. Pratt cut in and the solo became a duet, surging upwards to the tune of $2-$5-$7.50-$10-banknotes, which were evidently musical in their range and pitch. The duet went for a while at a presto pace, and gradually dwindled into an andante, Maestro Jackson skilfully managing nuance and measure, ending with Mr. Connelly's solo note of $572.

It was the sale of $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts, and the attendance was large, and although no other bid came anywhere near the record one, the bidding was spirited and lively. The next highest bid was $67, given for two seats in the centre of Row M. The lowest bid was $3.

The speculators were out in force. The most interesting of these from a spectator's point of view was Miss Goring, a young and very business-like woman, who bid in many choice seats. The premiums for concert seats average less than those given for rehearsal seats.

Tomorrow the $7.50 concert seats will be offered.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.
SEPTEMBER 28, 19



SCENES AT THE SYMPHONY SALE OF $12 SEATS YESTERDAY.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.
SEPTEMBER 29, 19

MRS. "JACK'S" NEW RECORD.

She Pays $1120 for a $12 Symphony Concert Seat That She Wanted.

MRS. JOHN L. GARDNER,
Who has made a new record in the high premium paid for a Symphony Concert seat

Mrs. John L. Gardner is the reputed purchaser of the two $12 Symphony concert seats which sold at the record-breaking price of $1120 Thursday afternoon, and the incident is the talk of the day in Back Bay circles. The seats were bought by Mr. Connelly, the ticket agent, and at the time there was considerable speculation as to who the principal was.

The name of T. W. Lawson was at first connected with the transaction, but after it had been authentically learned that his seats were on the floor and had been bid in at a much more moderate price, it was pretty well understood that Mrs. "Jack" Gardner had established a new record for premiums.

This, it was thought, had some influence in the sale of the $7.50 seats for the Saturday evening Symphony concerts at yesterday's auction sale.

This sale opened promptly at 10 o'clock, and there was fully as large an attendance as at Thursday's $12 sale, a large number of ladies being present. Some of these made personal bids, but they usually started pretty low and were soon outclassed by their masculine competitors.

Initial bids of $1, $2 and $3, where they were entertained at all by the auctioneer, soon expanded to $7, $10 and even $15, and an unusually high average of premiums was received for every row sold.

One noticeable effect of the Gardner sale was that the second balcony seats located immediately above commanded a much higher premium than any other seats in that balcony, the premium in several cases amounting to $17.50.

The first seats to be offered yesterday morning were the nine rows at the rear of the $12 floor series. These brought a premium of from $4 to $12.50, the last four seats sold commanding $4.50 each above the regular price.

Next came the five $7.50 rows at the rear of the first balcony. In Row E the premiums ranged from $7 to $12.50; in Row F from $7 to $9.50; in Row G from $5.75 to $8.75; in Row H from $4.75 to $7.50, and in Row I from $4.50 to $4.75.

The second balcony side seats were next auctioned off, beginning with Row A on the right looking toward the platform. These seats brought excellent prices, the first selling at $11 premium, and the price subsequently running up to $16, with a later drop to $10.

Row B on the same side also brought comparatively high bids, premiums ranging from $7 to $11, the central seats bringing $9 to $10.

When Row A on the opposite side was reached there was an immediate increase in interest. This is the row above the Gardner seats, and it brought high premiums right down to the very end.

The first two seats brought $12 each, the next four $13.50, and Nos. 7 to 13 all commanded $17.50 premium. After this there was a drop to $15.50 for Seats 14 and 15, and subsequently bids ranged from that figure down to $11.50.

The first bid in Row B started at $3, but the seat was knocked down at $12 premium, the same as the first one in Row A, and $2 more than the first seat in the corresponding row on the opposite side of the balcony.

From $12 the premiums for Row B seats sagged to $11 and finally $10.75, but it was still to be considered a bull market.

The remaining seats, those in the rear of the second balcony, also brought excellent prices. Altogether the concert sales have brought several thousands of dollars in premiums.

SEATS FOR SYMPHONIES.

Sale Began Monday in the New Hall—Praise for the Fine Auditorium—Prices for Seats Unusually High.

The first sale of seats for the Symphony Concerts was held yesterday in the new Symphony Hall. It was a successful sale from every point of view. The hall was crowded all day. The seats sold for an unusually high average price, though no fancy prices were paid, except for the first seat in the hall, which Herrick bought for $280, after a sharp bid with Mr. Connelly, for the sake of the distinction of being the first purchaser. In the old hall this seat never brought over $12. Other premiums were paid of over a hundred dollars, but none ran up to the old-time figures of $200 or $300 that were paid for seats which two people desired at any cost. But the high average was kept up well to the rear of the hall, seats in Row X bringing in some cases $43 premium. Walter Jackson was the auctioneer, and Chief Usher Hartshorn was on his old perch on the stepladdder.

Everyone commented on the new hall, of course, and most of the comments were in praise. Everybody, too, had a try at the seats, which were found more comfortable than the old ones. One woman, however, hunting for "Her old seat under the clock," was much disconcerted because she could find no clock.

HALL IS BRIGHT AND LIGHT.

The new hall is lighter and brighter in every way, and has the added advantage of a rising floor and balconies. It contains, too, 170 more seats, making the seating capacity 2569. White paint and gilt are everywhere, but white paint on the shelf of a ticket office looks like a dangerous experiment. However, "The great unwashed" do not flock to the Symphonies. The only unattractive part of the hall is the lobby on the second floor at the rear of the first balcony. It is very bare, and cries out woefully for a fresco painter.

Comments were plentiful.

"Isn't it the loveliest—just think how Otto Roth will show up against that white organ front, under the gold pipes!" exclaimed one girl with golden hair and a fat pocketbook. She later paid $25 00 premium on a seat in the third row from the front, out of that same pocketbook.

"There are but two rows of seats in the upper balcony," commented a stout man, who had been searching over the plan of the seats, apparently for something with which to find fault.

"And the Apollo Belvidere has had a bath," snickered another girl. "No, it's a new Apollo," answered her friend.

And sure enough, the Apollo is pure white this time.

"Why, how do you do! What seats are you going to get?" was the stock greeting.

Looking for Their Old Seats.

"I don't know, but I mean to try for those we had last year," was the usual answer, completely ignoring the fact that there were no seats in the vacant lot last year where now the hall stands. And the women, trying to find where they should sit this year, actually went up and down the aisles, looking for the old familiar seats.

The corner block of seats, in front had been taken out to make room for a makeshift office, where Mr. Ellis and Mr. Comee received tribute. Mr. Mudgett roamed about the hall from place to place.

Jack Herrick, the ticket speculator, was pang in the middle of the front row, handy to the auctioneer's eye, and Mr. Connelly, another very well-known ticket agent, came and sat near Mr. Herrick after their first bout.

The elderly women, whose declining years have been cheered by the symphony, found the only discoverable flaw in the gem. All of a sudden one burst out with, "This place is draughty, as sure as the world!" and they both drew their wraps tighter and shivered; but no one else has found a word of fault.

The First Seat Offered.

Mr. Jackson offered "the first seat in the new Symphony Hall" with a smile. It was understood, apparently, that this was to be fought for, for the bidding started in at $15 premium from Mr. Herrick, and ran by fives to $30. Then Mr. Connelly appeared in the contest, and the auctioneer beat time, a dollar a beat, between the two until the people were laughing and rising in their seats to see who was doing the bidding. Then Mr. Jackson went up $5 at a leap again, and finally $10 at a time, until Mr. Connelly stopped at $280, at which figure Mr. Herrick took the seat. He said afterward that he merely bought it for himself, for a special use. Another ticket agent of Boston, who has offices in the large hotels, said that he had come setting a limit of $1000 on the seat. He did not appear in the bidding, however.

The seats in the first row went off well, though the prices ruled so low that there was some astonishment among the people at first. Mr. Herrick did some very clever buying, taking advantage of the "four seats on a bid" rule a number of times in cases where the first seat bid on was the last one of a row, his four thus giving him two end seats.

Some of the Premiums.

A8 brought $15 premium; the next two went at $18 50 each, and the average for the rest of the row was $18. The seats in the middle of the hall brought $20, and on the far end the price went down to $15. Rev. A. A. Berle bought his season's seats in this first row.

Mr. Francis M. Stanwood got a seat in the second row, paying $22 premium for it. Messrs. Herrick and Connelly had a duel about the aisle seats on each side of the centre aisle, each securing one set of seats. The highest price in this row was $30.

The bidding started at $10 offers in the third row. The average premium was $20 until the aisle was reached; then it went at once to $25. Before the centre aisle was reached the figure had reached $31 50, which Mr. Herrick paid for four seats on the aisle.

Three rows took an hour and a quarter in selling, and not yet had the choicest seats been reached. In Row D the price jumped absurdly up and down. Sixty-two dollars was paid for an aisle seat in the centre, the next one to it going for less than half that, and the third for $25 50.

These Were Higher Still.

The prices in E were higher still, and just as erratic. They averaged $36 premium a seat, but were all over the thermometer, some of them, near the side of the hall, selling for $21 50.

Prices ranged usually from $40 to $60 in row H, though No. 20 brought $90, and the bids started at all the way from $16 to $30. Row I saw a general increase, the first seat, far on the side, bringing $30 premium, and prices running into the 60s and 70s freely. Four seats on the middle aisle brought $76. Row J ran even better, a dealer paying $102 50 each for Nos. 16, 17 and 18, after starting the bidding at $25. Two seats across the aisle went for $72 each. The following row, while not running so well on the average, had two seats on the middle aisle for which a dealer paid $102. Fifty dollars was a fair premium to pay for the best grade of seats in this part of the hall.

Bids in row P began with $25, and ran up to $60 toward the middle sections, two seats in the centre bringing $70. In row Q $25 and $26 were paid for the seats under the balcony; $50 was the favorite price at which seats toward the middle were sold, while Nos. 15, 17 and 18 reached $107, although only one of these was an end seat. The adjoining seats brought $51. It was after 2 o'clock when the sale of this row was completed, and an intermission was then taken before continuing the auction. There were between 200 and 300 in the hall during the early afternoon.

It was well on toward evening before the last seat in the gallery before the dead-line was reached. Seats in row A in the gallery brought good prices—Nos. 22, 23 and 24 brought $80, and one seat brought $90. The back row brought $12 and $14. The management closed a very successful day well pleased with the results. Tomorrow the $7 50 seats for the Friday rehearsals will be sold at 10.30, and on Thursday and Friday will be sold the $12 and $7 50 seats for the Saturday concerts.

Boston ... Sept ...

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1900

SALE IN THE NEW HALL

Admirers of the Symphony Orchestra

Flocked to the Auction for the Rehearsals

There Was a Flurry for the First Ticket

It Brought a Premium of $280 as a Curiosity

There was a lively little contest when the sale of Symphony tickets opened this morning as to who should buy the first seat in the new Symphony Hall. It brought $280 premium, and Herrick bought it for the distinction attached to the transaction. The seat is too far front to be very desirable, for any but sentimental reasons, and in the old hall has never brought more than $11 or $12. The desk people at the hall made a good deal out of the fact that the first seat to be sold there brought a total of $292.

After that first skyrocket, the prices were not at all of a pyrotechnic order. The rest of the first row ranged from $10 to $15, and the other seats in the front of the hall brought, at first, premiums of $18 and $20, then crept up, as the rows were bit by bit taken, to $30, $40 and even to $60.

There was an interested gathering in the new hall, but the interest was not so much in the bidding as it has been in other years. Scores of people dropped in to get a look at the place, rather than to bid. Both these and the regular Symphony patrons were more than a little pleased with the hall, too. Everybody was delighted with the seats. They are much more comfortable than those in the old hall. There are more of them, too—215 more on the floor than in the old hall, 82 less in the first balcony, and 39 more in the second balcony; a total of 170 more; the entire capacity being 2569. And yet the place looks smaller inside than the old home of the Symphonies.

All the morning there was an audience nearly as large as it will be on the opening night. The vast majority came in from out of town, and not a few brought traces of the country with them in the great bunches of autumn flowers like the asters and goldenrod, and here and there a branch of autumn foliage which had been brought to some city friend. A large contingent of musical and literary people from Worcester were present. Generally speaking, the smart set were not in evidence, for it is still too early to come to town, and their orders had been placed as of yore with the agents. But among the early comers noted were E. S. Grew, William Endicott, Jr., R. G. Shaw, E. Rollins Morse, Mrs. John L. Gardner, Mr. and Mrs. Franz Zerrahn, General and Mrs. Blackmar, General Lawrence, Miss Brewer, James Blake, C. P. Curtis, Dr. J. F. Bush, Mrs. N. H. Cotton, Miss Kimball, Miss Josephine Sherwood of Radcliffe fame, who has written several operettas; Mrs. Anna D. West, a prominent club woman, and Miss Saltonstall in the midst of a bevy of society girls. As to Symphony Hall itself—it had a dearly familiar look. Indeed, it seemed just like the old stand freshened up to the dazzling point. Two elderly women, whose declining years have been cheered by the symphony, found the only discoverable flaw in the gem. All of a sudden one burst out with, "This place is draughty, as sure as the world!" and they both drew their wraps tighter and shivered; but no one else has found a word of fault with the place.

Only the $12 floor seats for the Friday afternoon rehearsals were on sale this morning, and the bids were for the amounts which were to be paid over and above that price. After that first duet of bids between Herrick and Connolly, in which Herrick came out ahead, the prices went much as usual. The first four seats in row B went for $18 premium each, the next seats in order for $20, $22, $20.50, $20, $24.50, $30, and then dropped down to $22 and $19. Row C started off at $14, and ranged through $27, $22, $25.50, $26, $24 and so on. In row D the bids took a little better tone, seat No. 10 going for $35.50; Nos. 15 and 16 for $37; Nos. 17 and 18 for $41.50; and No. 29 for $62.50, which proved to be the best price in the first six rows barring that first sale. Herrick and Connolly bought freely, the former paying $36.50 for D 20, 21, 22 and 23, and $40 for D 28.

Bids in Row E began with $24, ran up to $34 and $35 toward the middle sections, with $42 and $51 for the seats next the aisle. Row F was even better. Seats on the side aisle brought $31 and $46, while Nos. 22 and 23, in the middle brought $59. Other prices in that row were $30, $45, $37. In Row G, seats on the aisle, Nos. 18, 19, 20 and 22 brought $65. Nos. 9 and 10 on the side aisle brought $48. From $29 to $39.50 was the range for most of the others in that row.

Prices ranged usually from $[illegible] to $[illegible] in row H, though No. 20 brought $90, and the bids started at all the way from $16 to $30. Row I saw a general increase, the first seat, far on the side, bringing $30 premium, and prices running into the sixties and seventies freely. Four seats on the middle aisle brought $76. Row J ran even better, a dealer paying $102.50 each for Nos. 16, 17 and 18 after starting the bidding at $25. Two seats across the aisle went for $72 each. The following row, while not running so well on the average, had two seats on the middle aisle, for which a dealer paid $102. Fifty dollars was a fair premium to pay for the best grade of seats in the [illegible] of the hall.

Bids in row P began with $25, and ran up to $60 toward the middle sections, two seats in the centre bringing $70. In row Q $25 and $26 were paid for the seats under the balcony; $50 was the favorite price at which seats toward the middle were sold, while Nos. 15, 17 and 18 reached $107, although only one of these was an end seat. The adjoining seats brought $51. It was after two o'clock when the sale of this row was completed, and an intermission was then taken before continuing the auction. There were between two and three hundred in the hall during the early afternoon.

In general, prices were running rather higher than last year. Yet it was noticeable that the very high bids for special places were lower than similar bids of two years ago. H 17, for example, which brought $820 premium in 1899, went for less than a hundred last year, and this year went to a dealer for $61; and G 18, which in 1898 brought $800, could command only $75 last year, and today brought $65. Somebody noticed this difference and called Manager Ellis's attention to it.

"Well," he said, "that's easy enough to explain. It merely means that in that particular year two different dealers had orders for the same seats, with no limit on the price, so that there was nothing for them to do but to bid against one another until one weakened. That only happens when someone wants special places."

The Auctioneer for this first sale was Walter Jackson, and Chief Usher Hartshorn, who has been a familiar figure at the sales in the old hall for many years, was, as usual, perched on the step-ladder this morning, marking off the seats as sold, on the big chart erected on the platform. It will be six or seven o'clock this evening before all the twelve-dollar seats are out of the way, and tomorrow morning at ten o'clock the $7.50 seats will be sold. The sale of $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts begins on Thursday morning, and of the $7.50 seats on Friday morning.

BOSTON TIMES

SEPTEMBER 23, 1900.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

As the "Pops" have marked the finish of each musical year in Boston for many years, so the symphony concerts usher in the opening of a new season. For the past 19 years the old Music hall has been quite too small to hold the multitude of patrons who have thronged to as good instrumental concerts as can be heard either in America or Europe. In fact, no auditorium of reasonably practical dimensions could contain those who wish to attend these concerts. And this more than generous patronage is based not, as many would like to argue, upon a fad, for no fad or fashion can live but a few years, but rather upon the hard, substantial, incontrovertible fact that symphony patrons get what they pay for each year. It is not necessary to assure the public that the standard of the past 19 years will be bettered, for everybody is satisfied in the knowledge that the coming musical feast will equal its predecessors. As a matter of fact, the management does not deem it expedient to indulge in the enthusiastic comments on the orchestra and its work so freely made by the patrons, many of them having attended the concerts from the beginning. The world over, there does not exist another such an institution, founded and maintained by one man, and that man actuated solely by a desire to present good music in the best way. From the very first, these concerts have been given in old Music hall, famous more from the traditions inseparable from the home of good music for 46 years than for anything else, save, perhaps, the happy luck of good acoustics.

But at last, after years of patient resignation and a toleration made easier by the best orchestra in America, there comes the change longed and well-nigh prayed for, a new hall. Symphony hall, at the junction of Massachusetts avenues, bids fair to be a fitting and suitable home for the Boston Symphony orchestra. Thanks to the generous and widespread support of some 400 Symphony patrons, the 20th season of the orchestra will begin in new quarters as beautiful and complete in the details of convenience, comfort, safety and acoustics as eminent architects, men of science and skilled builders can make them. The glorious privilege of personal opinion is in no way to be forestalled, nor will the ever-present pessimist be denied the divine right to grumble, and still the opinion is hazarded that the delight of the majority will prevail and the general verdict be a favorable one.

Among other soloists who will appear at these concerts are Mme. Ternina, Mme. Schumann-Heink, Miss Aus Der Ohe, Messrs. Dohnanyi, Godowsky, Gebhardt, Goodrich, Kneisel, Loeffler, Adamowski, Roth, Becker and Schroeder.

Mr. Gericke, who begins his eighth season as conductor and the third of the present regime, during his three months' sojourn abroad has undoubtedly discovered attractive novelties with which to enrich his programmes.

Unless all signs fail, the sale of season tickets which opens at Symphony hall on Monday morning, Sept. 24, at 10 o'clock, will break all records. With a total seating capacity of 2569, there are exactly 172 more seats than in the old hall, and the sub-division of prices will leave about the same number of $12 and $7.50 seats as before.

The $12 seats for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals will be sold on Monday, Sept. 24; the $7.50 seats for the same series will be sold on Tuesday, Sept. 25, and the $12 and $7.50 tickets for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold on Thursday and Friday, Sept. 27 and 28 respectfully. Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram and will be marked off as sold.

[4]

Boston Journal.
TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1900.

SEATS FOR SYMPHONIES.

Sale Began Monday in the New Hall—Praise for the Fine Auditorium—Prices for Seats Unusually High.

The first sale of seats for the Symphony Concerts was held yesterday in the new Symphony Hall. It was a successful sale from every point of view. The hall was crowded all day. The seats sold for an unusually high average price, though no fancy prices were paid, except for the first seat in the hall, which Herrick bought for $280, after a sharp bid with Mr. Connelly, for the sake of the distinction of being the first purchaser. In the old hall this seat never brought over $12. Other premiums were paid of over a hundred dollars, but none ran up to the old-time figures of $200 or $300 that were paid for seats which two people desired at any cost. But the high average was kept up well to the rear of the hall, seats in Row X bringing in some cases $43 premium. Walter Jackson was the auctioneer, and Chief Usher Hartshorn was on his old perch on the stepladdder.

Everyone commented on the new hall, of course, and most of the comments were in praise. Everybody, too, had a try at the seats, which were found more comfortable than the old ones. One woman, however, hunting for "Her old seat under the clock," was much disconcerted because she could find no clock.

HALL IS BRIGHT AND LIGHT.

The new hall is lighter and brighter in every way, and has the added advantage of a rising floor and balconies. It contains, too, 170 more seats, making the seating capacity 2569. White paint and gilt are everywhere, but white paint on the shelf of a ticket office looks like a dangerous experiment. However, "The great unwashed" do not flock to the Symphonies. The only unattractive part of the hall is the lobby on the second floor at the rear of the first balcony. It is very bare, and cries out woefully for a fresco painter.

Comments were plentiful.

"Isn't it the loveliest—just think how Otto Roth will show up against that white organ front, under the gold pipes!" exclaimed one girl with golden hair and a fat pocketbook. She later paid $35 50 premium on a seat in the third row from the front, out of that same pocketbook.

"There are but two rows of seats in the upper balcony," commented a stout man, who had been searching over the plan of the seats, apparently for something with which to find fault.

"And the Apollo Belvidere has had a bath," snickered another girl. "No, it's a new Apollo," answered her friend.

And sure enough, the Apollo is pure white this time.

"Why, how do you do! What seats are you going to get?" was the stock greeting.

Looking for Their Old Seats.

"I don't know, but I mean to try for those we had last year," was the usual answer, completely ignoring the fact that there were no seats in the vacant lot last year where now the hall stands. And the women, trying to find where they should sit this year, actually went up and down the aisles, looking for the old familiar seats.

The corner block of seats, in front had been taken out to make room for a makeshift office, where Mr. Ellis and Mr. Comee received tribute. Mr. Mudgett roamed about the hall from place to place.

Mr. Herrick, the ticket speculator, sat pang in the middle of the front row, handy to the auctioneer's eye, and Mr. Connelly, another very well-known ticket agent, came and sat near Mr. Herrick after their first bout.

The elderly women, whose declining years have been cheered by the symphony, found the only discoverable flaw in the gem. All of a sudden one burst out with, "This place is draughty, as sure as the world!" and they both drew their wraps tighter and shivered; but no one else has found a word of fault.

The First Seat Offered.

Mr. Jackson offered "the first seat in the new Symphony Hall" with a smile. It was understood, apparently, that this was to be fought for, for the bidding started in at $15 premium from Mr. Herrick, and ran by fives to $30. Then Mr. Connelly appeared in the contest, and the auctioneer beat time, a dollar a beat, between the two until the people were laughing and rising in their seats to see who was doing the bidding. Then Mr. Jackson went up $5 at a leap again, and finally $10 at a time, until Mr. Connelly stopped at $280, at which figure Mr. Herrick took the seat. He said afterward that he merely bought it for himself, for a special use. Another ticket agent of Boston, who has offices in the large hotels, said that he had come setting a limit of $1000 on the seat. He did not appear in the bidding, however.

The seats in the first row went off well, though the prices ruled so low that there was some astonishment among the people at first. Mr. Herrick did some very clever buying, taking advantage of the "four seats on a bid" rule a number of times in cases where the first seat bid on was the last one of a row, his four thus giving him two end seats.

Some of the Premiums.

A3 brought $15 premium; the next two went at $18 50 each, and the average for the rest of the row was $18. The seats in the middle of the hall brought $20, and on the far end the price went down to $15. Rev. A. A. Berle bought his season's seats in this first row.

Mr. Francis M. Stanwood got a seat in the second row, paying $22 premium for it. Messrs. Herrick and Connelly had a duel about the aisle seats on each side of the centre aisle, each securing one set of seats. The highest price in this row was $30.

The bidding started at $10 offers in the third row. The average premium was $20 until the aisle was reached; then it went at once to $25. Before the centre aisle was reached the figure had reached $31 50, which Mr. Herrick paid for four seats on the aisle.

Three rows took an hour and a quarter in selling, and not yet had the choicest seats been reached. In Row D the price jumped absurdly up and down. Sixty-two dollars was paid for an aisle seat in the centre, the next one to it going for less than half that, and the third for $25 50.

These Were Higher Still.

The prices in E were higher still, and just as erratic. They averaged $36 premium a seat, but were all over the thermometer, some of them, near the side of the hall, selling for $21 50.

Prices ranged usually from $40 to $60 in row H, though No. 20 brought $90, and the bids started at all the way from $16 to $30. Row I saw a general increase, the first seat, far on the side, bringing $30 premium, and prices running into the 60s and 70s freely. Four seats on the middle aisle brought $76. Row J ran even better, a dealer paying $102 50 each for Nos. 16, 17 and 18, after starting the bidding at $25. Two seats across the aisle went for $72 each. The following row, while not running so well on the average, had two seats on the middle aisle for which a dealer paid $102. Fifty dollars was a fair premium to pay for the best grade of seats in this part of the hall.

Bids in row P began with $25, and ran up to $60 toward the middle sections, two seats in the centre bringing $79. In row Q, $25 and $26 were paid for the seats under the balcony; $50 was the favorite price at which seats toward the middle were sold, while Nos. 15, 17 and 18 reached $107, although only one of these was an end seat. The adjoining seats brought $51. It was after 2 o'clock when the sale of this row was completed, and an intermission was then taken before continuing the auction. There were between 200 and 300 in the hall during the early afternoon.

It was well on toward evening before the last seat in the gallery before the dead-line was reached. Seats in row A in the gallery brought good prices—Nos. 22, 23 and 24 brought $80, and one seat brought $90. The back row brought $12 and $14. The management closed a very successful day well pleased with the results. Tomorrow the $7 50 seats for the Friday rehearsals will be sold at 10.30, and on Thursday and Friday will be sold the $12 and $7 50 seats for the Saturday concerts.

Boston Transcript
MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1900

SALE IN THE NEW HALL

Admirers of the Symphony Orchestra

Flocked to the Auction for the Rehearsals

There Was a Flurry for the First Ticket

It Brought a Premium of $280 as a Curiosity

There was a lively little contest when the sale of Symphony tickets opened this morning as to who should buy the first seat in the new Symphony Hall. It brought $280 premium, and Herrick bought it for the distinction attached to the transaction. The seat is too far front to be very desirable, for any but sentimental reasons, and in the old hall has never brought more than $11 or $12. The desk people at the hall made a good deal out of the fact that the first seat to be sold there brought a total of $292.

After that first skyrocket, the prices were not at all of a pyrotechnic order. The rest of the first row ranged from $10 to $15, and the other seats in the front of the hall brought, at first, premiums of $18 and $20, then crept up, as the rows were bit by bit taken, to $30, $40 and even to $60.

There was an interested gathering in the new hall, but the interest was not so much in the bidding as it has been in other years. Scores of people dropped in to get a look at the place, rather than to bid. Both these and the regular Symphony patrons were more than a little pleased with the hall, too. Everybody was delighted with the seats. They are much more comfortable than those in the old hall. There are more of them, too—215 more on the floor than in the old hall, 82 less in the first balcony, and 39 more in the second balcony; a total of 170 more; the entire capacity being 2569. And yet the place looks smaller inside than the old home of the Symphonies.

All the morning there was an audience nearly as large as it will be on the opening night. The vast majority came in from out of town, and not a few brought traces of the country with them in the great bunches of autumn flowers like the asters and goldenrod, and here and there a branch of autumn foliage which had been brought to some city friend. A large contingent of musical and literary people from Worcester were present. Generally speaking, the smart set were not in evidence, for it is still too early to come to town, and their orders had been placed as of yore with the agents. But among the early comers noted were E. S. Grew, William Endicott, Jr., R. G. Shaw, E. Rollins Morse, Mrs. John L. Gardner, Mr. and Mrs. Franz Zerrahn, General and Mrs. Blackmar, General Lawrence, Miss Brewer, James Blake, C. P. Curtis, Dr. J. F. Bush, Mrs. N. H. Cotton, Miss Kimball, Miss Josephine Sherwood of Radcliffe fame, who has written several operettas; Mrs. Anna D. West, a prominent club woman, and Miss Saltonstall in the midst of a bevy of society girls. As to Symphony Hall itself—it had a dearly familiar look. Indeed, it seemed just like the old stand freshened up to the dazzling point. Two elderly women, whose declining years have been cheered by the symphony, found the only discoverable flaw in the gem. All of a sudden one burst out with, "This place is draughty, as sure as the world!" and they both drew their wraps tighter and shivered; but no one else has found a word of fault with the place.

Only the $12 floor seats for the Friday afternoon rehearsals were on sale this morning, and the bids were for the amounts which were to be paid over and above that price. After that first duet of bids between Herrick and Connolly, in which Herrick came out ahead, the prices went much as usual. The first four seats in row B went for $18 premium each, the next seats in order for $20, $22, $20.50, $20, $24.50, $30, and then dropped down to $22 and $19. Row C started off at $14, and ranged through $27, $22, $25.50, $26, $24 and so on. In row D the bids took a little better tone, seat No. 10 going for $35.50; Nos. 15 and 16 for $37; Nos. 17 and 18 for $41.50; and No. 29 for $62.50, which proved to be the best price in the first six rows barring that first sale. Herrick and Connolly bought freely, the former paying $36.50 for D 20, 21, 22 and 23, and $40 for D 28.

Bids in Row E began with $24, ran up to $34 and $35 toward the middle sections, with $42 and $51 for the seats next the aisle. Row F was even better. Seats on the side aisle brought $31 and $46, while Nos. 22 and 23, in the middle brought $59. Other prices in that row were $50, $45, $37. In Row G, seats on the aisle, Nos. 18, 19, 20 and 22 brought $65. Nos. 9 and 10 on the side aisle brought $48. From $29 to $39.50 was the range for most of the others in that row.

Prices ranged usually from $40 to $60 in row H, though No. 20 brought $90, and the bids started at all the way from $16 to $30. Row I saw a general increase, the first seat, far on the side, bringing $30 premium, and prices running into the sixties and seventies freely. Four seats on the middle aisle brought $76. Row J ran even better, a dealer paying $102.50 each for Nos. 16, 17 and 18 after starting the bidding at $25. Two seats across the aisle went for $72 each. The following row, while not running so well on the average, had two seats on the middle aisle, for which a dealer paid $102. Fifty dollars was a fair premium to pay for the best grade of seats in the part of the hall.

Bids in row P began with $25, and ran up to $60 toward the middle sections, two seats in the centre bringing $79. In row Q $25 and $26 were paid for the seats under the balcony; $50 was the favorite price at which seats toward the middle were sold, while Nos. 15, 17 and 18 reached $107, although only one of these was an end seat. The adjoining seats brought $51. It was after two o'clock when the sale of this row was completed, and an intermission was then taken before continuing the auction. There were between two and three hundred in the hall during the early afternoon.

In general, prices were running rather higher than last year. Yet it was noticeable that the very high bids for special places were lower than similar bids of two years ago. H 17, for example, which brought $220 premium in 1898, went for less than a hundred last year, and this year went to a dealer for $61; and G 18, which in 1898 brought $300, could command only $75 last year, and today brought $65. Somebody noticed this difference and called Manager Ellis's attention to it.

"Well," he said, "that 's easy enough to explain. It merely means that in that particular year two different dealers had orders for the same seats, with no limit on the price, so that there was nothing for them to do but to bid against one another until one weakened. That only happens when someone wants special places."

The auctioneer for this first sale was Walter Jackson, and Chief Usher Hartshorn, who has been a familiar figure at the sales in the old hall for many years, was, as usual, perched on the step-ladder this morning, marking off the seats as sold, on the big chart erected on the platform. It will be six or seven o'clock this evening before all the twelve-dollar seats are out of the way, and tomorrow morning at ten o'clock the $7.50 seats will be sold. The sale of $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts begins on Thursday morning, and of the $7.50 seats on Friday morning.

BOSTON TIMES
SEPTEMBER 23, 1900.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

As the "Pops" have marked the finish of each musical year in Boston for many years, so the symphony concerts usher in the opening of a new season. For the past 19 years the old Music hall has been quite too small to hold the multitude of patrons who have thronged to as good instrumental concerts as can be heard either in America or Europe. In fact, no auditorium of reasonably practical dimensions could contain those who wish to attend these concerts. And this more than generous patronage is based not, as many would like to argue, upon a fad, for no fad or fashion can live but a few years, but rather upon the hard, substantial, incontrovertible fact that symphony patrons get what they pay for each year. It is not necessary to assure the public that the standard of the past 19 years will be bettered, for everybody is satisfied in the knowledge that the coming musical feast will equal its predecessors. As a matter of fact, the management does not deem it expedient to indulge in the enthusiastic comments on the orchestra and its work so freely made by the patrons, many of them having attended the concerts from the beginning. The world over, there does not exist another such an institution, founded and maintained by one man, and that man actuated solely by a desire to present good music in the best way. From the very first, these concerts have been given in old Music hall, famous more from the traditions inseparable from the home of good music for 46 years than for anything else, save, perhaps, the happy luck of good acoustics.

But at last, after years of patient resignation and a toleration made easier by the best orchestra in America, there comes the change longed and well-nigh prayed for, a new hall. Symphony hall, at the junction of Massachusetts avenues, bids fair to be a fitting and suitable home for the Boston Symphony orchestra. Thanks to the generous and widespread support of some 400 Symphony patrons, the 20th season of the orchestra will begin in new quarters as beautiful and complete in the details of convenience, comfort, safety and acoustics as eminent architects, men of science and skilled builders can make them. The glorious privilege of personal opinion is in no way to be forestalled, nor will the ever-present pessimist be denied the divine right to grumble, and still the opinion is hazarded that the delight of the majority will prevail and the general verdict be a favorable one.

Among other soloists who will appear at these concerts are Mme. Ternina, Mme. Schumann-Heink, Miss Aus Der Ohe, Messrs. Dohnanyi, Godowsky, Gebhardt, Goodrich, Kneisel, Loeffler, Adamowski, Roth, Becker and Schroeder.

Mr. Gericke, who begins his eighth season as conductor and the third of the present regime, during his three months' sojourn abroad has undoubtedly discovered attractive novelties with which to enrich his programmes.

Unless all signs fail, the sale of season tickets which opens at Symphony hall on Monday morning, Sept. 24, at 10 o'clock, will break all records. With a total seating capacity of 2569, there are exactly 172 more seats than in the old hall, and the sub-division of prices will leave about the same number of $12 and $7.50 seats as before.

The $12 seats for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals will be sold on Monday, Sept. 24; the $7.50 seats for the same series will be sold on Tuesday, Sept. 25, and the $12 and $7.50 tickets for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold on Thursday and Friday, Sept. 27 and 28 respectfully. Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram and will be marked off as sold.

[4]

BOSTON HERALD.
PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CVIII., NO. 87.
TUESDAY, SEPT. 25, 1900.

A SCRAMBLE FOR SEATS

Great Hustle Today at the Symphony Sale.

All of the $7.50 Positions Went in Two Hours.

And It Was Very Hard to Get One for Less Than $21.

Speculators Gobbled Many of the Choice Places.

Looks Now as if They Will Reap a Golden Harvest.

It took just two hours to auction off the $7.50 seats for the Symphony rehearsals at Symphony Hall this morning. This was not so much because of the rush with which they went—although goodness knows they went fast enough—as it was by reason of the scarcity of the $7.50 seats in the first place.

There were 8½ rows on the floor thus reserved, these being the last rows, of course, and similarly, the last 4½ rows in the first balcony were sold. The first seat sold on the floor, No. 1 in KK, brought $19.50. Two seats brought $21 and $21.50, respectively, in this row, but no others exceeded the start-off.

Row LL ran very evenly, the prices being from $20 to $22, the next being slightly lower. One seat in NN drew $21.50, but this was more the result of stubbornness than because of the virtue of the seat. The lowest premium for the $7.50 seats on the floor, and, for that matter, in the balcony, too, was $12.50, and just two seats were gotten at this rate. In general, it was not easy to get a seat for less than $21, including the "par value" of the seat.

There was a brisk demand for the rear balcony seats, the start-off price being $13. The highest price paid for the best seat left in the balcony was $30, and the lowest for row A $16, this, of course, merely accounting for the premium. Row F ran to from $16 to $19, G from $15 to $16.50, and H and I from $14 to $16, I being the last and a half row. Perhaps it would be well for those who go to the rehearsals year after year to file some of these figures for future reference.

All in all, the prices maintained a high average for the rehearsals, and, of course, every seat in the house was sold. The speculators bought seat after seat, and group after group, although they could not buy more than four seats on one bid. They uniformly showed the benefit of their experience, frequently getting aisle seats on inside prices, and it looks as if they will reap a golden harvest. Occasionally, a bit of the buying would be so ill judged as to cause a little to run through the big hall, but in general the seats maintained a pretty high average. At any rate, every one was treated alike, and if not suited with their choice, people have little but themselves and the universal love of the great orchestra to blame for it.

Auctioneer Jackson won some warm approval by his fairness to all, and this was one of the pleasantest features of the scramble.

There will be no sale tomorrow. The sale of the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be held at 10 A. M. Monday, and of the $7.50 seats for the concerts on Tuesday at 10 A. M.

BOSTON EVENING RECORD.
SEPTEMBER 25, 1

...new rule prohibiting persons from the floor (those without seats) will ...n profits not a little, at the sym... concerts, but it will be welcomed ... holders, who for so many years ... been obliged to worm their way ... such perspiring crowds.

* * * * *

There are few men in Boston with a more equable temperament than Samuel Eichhorn, the city assessor. For years he has been a great sufferer, but through all he has remained good natured, pleasant and genial. Many men would ... a fortune to learn the secret of his ... good nature.

Boston Daily Globe.
TUESDAY, SEPT. 25, 1900.

SYMPHONY PREMIUMS HIGH.

Those Waiting for a Small Margin Were Disappointed in the Bidding at Hall This Morning.

The public auction sale of seats for the Friday afternoon rehearsals of the Symphony orchestra was resumed this morning in Symphony hall, at the corner of Massachusetts and Huntington avs, and although the number of seats to be offered at auction was less than one-third as many as on the opening day, the attendance was fully as large.

The $7.50 seats were offered this morning, which comprised the last eight rows on the floor of the hall, and the last four rows at the end of the hall in the first balcony, about 40 in all.

The sale began promptly at 10 o'clock, Walter Jackson conducting it. Bidding was spirited throughout, and not once during the morning did the premium for any seat fall below $12.50. In fact, there were few sales at that figure, the average for the morning being about $15 premium, which is in addition to the regular price of the seats for the concert season.

The highest bid of the morning was $23, for a seat in row E in the balcony, immediately back of the $12 seats.

Most of the bidding at the beginning of the sale, for seats on the floor, was started at $15, and ran up as high as $22, while the lowest premium in the first row of $7.50 seats was $15.50.

Comparatively few of the seats sold this morning were secured by ticket agents, and an unusually large number were sold singly. From inquiries made at the bureau of information it was evident that not a few of those present were expecting the premium to fall as low as $5, and some questioned the gentleman in charge of the bureau as to the probable time of reaching the seats that might go at that premium, as in former years.

Bidding for the gallery seats started at $5, and quickly ran up to $19 for the first seat, and that was about the average maintained for the row. The other three rows brought premiums averaging about $17, $16 and $15 respectively. A dozen seats in the two rear corners of the first balcony brought premiums of $14 and $14.50.

The sale occupied just two hours.

Boston Courier.
ESTABLISHED 1795. SEPT. 22, 1900.

THE NEW SYMPHONY SEASON.

There will surely be a great gathering on Monday in the new building upon which excellent judgment has bestowed the befitting and significant name of Symphony Hall. Beside the intending purchasers of seats for the coming season, there will be the curious, who want to inspect the building so far as they may and those who are interested to hear the new organ—for this hall is to have a noble new instrument of its own!—which will be played for a half an hour before the sale begins. The formal opening and dedication, so to call it, of the hall to its high purposes will be a separate occasion, when Beethoven's great mass in D will be performed by the Cecilia and a fine solo quartette supported by the full orchestra. The season itself may be expected to reach the highest point of worth and delight, for Mr. Gericke, who has been abroad during the summer, will prepare a set of eminently strong and beautiful programmes, and the band itself will be practically the same, although two or three individual changes may possibly be made. The solo list, so far as it is announced, includes the names of the most prominent men in the orchestra as usual, together with a mention of some European artists of the best esteem as singers or instrumentalists. The customary system of auction sale, so long established in popular approval, will be followed and we shall be much surprised if the premiums do not exceed almost any which have been hitherto obtained, even though the hearers have to establish their close relationships and test their places by that tearing from them which is the proof of the musical pudding.

HOWARD MALCOM TICKNOR.

Boston Journal.
WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1900.

SYMPHONY SALE.

The $7 50 Seats for Rehearsals Bring Good Prices—Applicants Turned Away.

The second sale of Symphony seats—the $7 50 seats for the rehearsals—was run off quickly Tuesday morning, and was over by noon. There was a much smaller crowd in the hall than on Monday, but those who were there came to buy, and sales were very good. The average of premiums ranged between $15 and $25, and naturally there were no fancy prices paid for these seats. Had there been fifty or a hundred more seats Tuesday morning they could have been disposed of, as many were left disappointed, and many more came too late for the sale.

It is remarkable that people will pay more for the seats in the first row of the $7 50 section than they do for the seats in the last row of the $12 section. For instance, the premium on the last row in the balcony sold Monday was from $12 to $14, which, with the seat price, makes a total of $24 or $26. But Tuesday the seats directly behind these sold at premiums of $20 and $23, which brought the total up to $27 50 or $30 50. This may be partly due to the fact that these seats are sold early, while bidding is fresh, instead of late in the day, as is the case with the last of the $12 seats; but it is due more, probably, to the tendency of human nature to exaggerate the difference between $7 50 and $12, and, being deluded thereby into paying an exaggerated premium.

Yesterday closed the sale of seats for the Friday rehearsals.

THE Republican Journal OF NEW ENGLAND.
SEPTEMBER 26.

SYMPHONY SEATS.

Second Day of Sale Brings High Prices.

EAGER BIDDING ALL DAY.

Friday's Rehearsal Tickets Sold Higher Than Ever Before—Lowest Bid of Morning Was $13—Who Will Attend Fridays.

It was with considerable surprise that the people who were gathered in Symphony Hall yesterday morning watched the sale of the seats under the balcony on the floor and those of the five rear rows opposite the stage in the first balcony.

The par value of all these seats was $7.50, and the average premium bid was about $17.50, making an unprecedented aggregate for this part of the house. So generally has it been understood that the premius here is usually about $7.50, that in some cases there were hurried borrowings of the necessary dollars, and in nearly every case there was surprise to think the competition was so lively.

The seats generally went one at a time, except when the agents spoke up, and these purchasers usually bought in four, that being the limit allowed one person at one time.

There are a great many reasons why seats went for such a high figure.

Added to all the advantages in the new building there is the element of novelty in hearing the Symphony artists in a new place, and many patrons who have sat in the same Symphony seats for years declared that the greater advantages of this hall over the other made them willing to pay more for their seats.

The lowest bid of the morning was $13, this being for seat 19 in Row PP under the balcony. The highest bid was $23.50 for 17 in Row E of the first balcony.

Friday rehearsals are the joy of the debutantes. Many were present yesterday morning, and some did their own bidding. Now and then a girl raised her own bid a dollar or so, and would have paid the money, proud of her achievement, had not the auctioneer reminded her of the etiquette of never bidding against one's self.

Among those who will attend the Friday afternoon concerts are Mrs. Frank Bartlett, Mrs. Edgar Anthony, Miss Gertrude Nickerson, Mrs. Oliver W. Mink of Manchester-by-the-Sea, Mrs. F. W. Chandler of Marlboro street, Caroline B. Balch, one of the social leaders of Newburyport; Miss J. W. Lincoln, Miss E. T. Thompson, Miss E. E. Coolidge and Mrs. L. W. Scudder. Others who bought were Dr. H. P. Mosher of Beacon street, E. W. Tyler, W. L. Lovell, T. F. Saxton, F. F. Cutter, E. R. Shippen, F. S. Sturgess and Winthrop Smith.

There was little interest in the sale of the rear seats of the $12 section on the floor, late Monday afternoon, but when the gallery seats were reached at 5:30 o'clock, even people who had been waiting since early morning were aroused to something like activity.

The first seat, right over the musicians at the proscenium arch, brought $55 premium. Then the prices increased until $30 was reached for two seats halfway back.

The best price on the other side was $90, and rear rows sold from $13 to $17.

BOSTON HERALD.
PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CVIII., NO. 88.
WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 26, 1900.

A SCRAMBLE FOR SEATS.

Symphony Sale of $7.50 Places All Over in a Couple of Hours—No Sale Today.

It took just two hours to auction off the $7.50 seats for the Symphony rehearsals at Symphony Hall yesterday morning. This was not so much because of the rush with which they went—although goodness knows they went fast enough—as it was by reason of the scarcity of the $7.50 seats in the first place.

There were 8½ rows on the floor thus reserved, these being the last rows, of course, and similarly, the last 4½ rows in the first balcony were sold. The first seat sold on the floor, No. 1 in KK, brought $19.50. Two seats brought $21 and $21.50, respectively, in this row, but no others exceeded the start-off.

Row LL ran very evenly, the prices being from $20 to $22, the next being slightly lower. One seat in NN drew $21.50, but this was more the result of stubbornness than because of the virtue of the seat. The lowest premium for the $7.50 seats on the floor, and, for that matter, in the balcony, too, was $12.50, and just two seats were gotten at this rate. In general, it was not easy to get a seat for less than $21, including the "par value" of the seat.

There was a brisk demand for the rear balcony seats, the start-off price being $13. The highest price paid for the best seat left in the balcony was $30, and the lowest for row A $16, this, of course, merely accounting for the premium. Row F ran to from $16 to $19, G from $15 to $16.50, and H and I from $14 to $16, I being the last and a half row.

There will be no sale today. The sale of the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be held at 10 A. M. Monday, and of the $7.50 seats for the concerts on Tuesday at 10 A. M.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 26, 1900

SYMPHONY PREMIUMS HIGH.

More Seats for Friday Afternoon Rehearsals Disposed of, the Top Figure Being $23.

The public auction sale of seats for the Friday afternoon rehearsals of the Symphony orchestra was resumed yesterday morning in Symphony hall, at the corner of Massachusetts and Huntington avs, and although the number of seats to be offered at auction was less than one-third as many as on the opening day, the attendance was fully as large.

The $7.50 seats which were offered comprised the last eight rows on the floor of the hall, and the last four rows at the end of the hall in the first balcony, about 40 in all.

The sale began promptly at 10 o'clock, Walter Jackson conducting it. Bidding was spirited throughout, and not once during the morning did the premium for any seat fall below $12.50. In fact, there were few sales at that figure, the average being about $15 premium, which is in addition to the regular price of the seats for the concert season.

The highest bid was $22, for a seat in row E in the balcony, immediately back of the $12 seats.

Most of the bidding at the outset of the sale, for seats on the floor, was started at $15, and ran up as high as $22, while the lowest premium in the first row of $7.50 seats was $15.50.

Comparatively few of the seats disposed of were secured by ticket agents, and an unusually large number were sold singly. From inquiries made at the bureau of information it was evident that not a few of those present were expecting the premium to fall as low as $5, and there were questions as to the probable time of reaching the seats that might go at that premium, as in former years.

Bidding for the gallery seats started at $5, and quickly ran up to $19 for the first seat, and that was about the average maintained for the row. The other three rows brought premiums averaging about $17, $16 and $15 respectively. A dozen seats in the two rear corners of the first balcony brought premiums of $14 and $14.50.

The sale occupied just two hours.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.
The Official Paper of the State.
The Official Paper of the City.
WEDNESDAY MORNING, SEPT. 26, 1900.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The ever growing curiosity of the public to see the inside of the new Symphony Hall was gratified on Monday and Tuesday of this week, when for the first time the fullest opportunity was given everybody to inspect the hall in every part. On the above days the season tickets for the 24 Friday afternoon public rehearsals were put on sale at auction. The fact that every seat in the house was sold, except, of course, the second balcony, which will be given, as usual, first come, first served, to the purchasers of 25 cent tickets, and notably that the prices realized were generally better than last year, is the best possible evidence that everybody is delighted with the new hall.

And what was true of the Friday afternoon tickets should apply as well to the sales of the season tickets for the 24 Saturday evening concerts, which are announced for the coming Thursday and Friday, Sept. 27 and 28. The $12 tickets will be sold on Thursday and the $7.50 tickets on Friday. The entire second balcony will be included, as usual, in the $7.50 tickets. The arrangement of the new hall is so admirable in every way that there are no poor seats anywhere.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.
SEPTEMBER 27, 1

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The new Symphony Hall, at Huntington and Massachusetts avenues, was thrown open to the public for the first time on Monday and Tuesday of the present week, on which days the auction sales of seats for the Friday afternoon rehearsals were held. While there were no exaggerated nor abnormal prices realized, the general tendency throughout the sales was toward higher prices. Every seat in the house for the entire series of twenty-four Friday afternoons was sold at these auctions, with the exception of the second balcony, which, as has been the custom for many years past, will be given "first come first served," to the holders of 25-cent tickets.

These are offered for sale on Monday morning of each week in which there is to be a public rehearsal.

This morning at 10 o'clock the $12 seats for the twenty-four Saturday evening concerts will be offered for sale at auction, and on Friday morning, at the same hour, the $7.50 seats for the Saturday evening series.

Boston Journal.
THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1900.

Curiosity to see the inside of Symphony Hall was gratified on Monday and Tuesday of this week, when the season tickets for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals were put on sale. The fact that every seat in the house was sold, except, of course, the second balcony, shows great interest in the concerts. Season tickets for the 24 Saturday evening concerts will be sold, the $12 tickets on Thursday and the $7 50 tickets on Friday. The entire second balcony will be included in the $7 50 tickets.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CVIII., NO. 87.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 25, 1900.

SCRAMBLE FOR SEATS

Great Hustle Today at the Symphony Sale.

All of the $7.50 Positions Went in Two Hours.

And It Was Very Hard to Get One for Less Than $21.

Speculators Gobbled Many of the Choice Places.

Looks Now as if They Will Reap a Golden Harvest.

It took just two hours to auction off the $7.50 seats for the Symphony rehearsals at Symphony Hall this morning. This was not so much because of the rush with which they went—although goodness knows they went fast enough—as it was by reason of the scarcity of the $7.50 seats in the first place.

There were 8½ rows on the floor thus reserved, these being the last rows, of course, and similarly, the last 4½ rows in the first balcony were sold. The first seat sold on the floor, No. 1 in KK, brought $19.50. Two seats brought $21 and $21.50, respectively, in this row, but no others exceeded the start-off.

Row LL ran very evenly, the prices being from $18 to $22, the next being slightly lower. One seat in NN drew $21.50, but this was more the result of stubbornness than because of the virtue of the seat. The lowest premium for the $7.50 seats on the floor, and, for that matter, in the balcony, too, was $12.50, and just two seats were gotten at this rate. In general, it was not easy to get a seat for less than $21, including the "par value" of the seat.

There was a brisk demand for the rear balcony seats, the start-off price being $19. The highest price paid for the best seat left in the balcony was $30, and the lowest for row A $16, this, of course, merely accounting for the premium. Row F ran to from $16 to $19, G from $15 to $16.50, and H and I from $14 to $16, I being the last and a half row. Perhaps it would be well for those who go to the rehearsals year after year to file some of these figures for future reference.

All in all, the prices maintained a high average for the rehearsals, and, of course, every seat in the house was sold. The speculators bought seat after seat, and group after group, although they could not buy more than four seats on one bid. They uniformly showed the benefit of their experience, frequently getting aisle seats on inside prices, and it looks as if they will reap a golden harvest. Occasionally, a bit of the buying would be so ill judged as to cause a smile to run through the big hall, but in general the seats maintained a pretty even average. At any rate, every one was treated alike, and if not suited with their choice, people have little but themselves and the universal love of the great orchestra to blame for it.

Auctioneer Jackson won some warm approval by his fairness to all, and this was one of the pleasantest features of the scramble.

There will be no sale tomorrow. The sale of the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be held at 10 A. M. Monday, and of the $7.50 seats for the concerts on Tuesday at 10 A. M.

BOSTON EVENING RECORD.

AY SEPTEMBER 25 1

This new rule prohibiting persons from the floor (those without seats) will diminish profits not a little, at the symphony concerts, but it will be welcomed by seat-holders, who for so many years have been obliged to worm their way through perspiring crowds.

* * * * *

There are few men in Boston with a more equable temperament than Samuel Hichborn, the city assessor. For years he has been a great sufferer, but through it all he has remained good natured, pleasant and genial. Many men would give a fortune to learn the secret of his uniform good nature.

* * * * *

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 25, 1900.

SYMPHONY PREMIUMS HIGH.

Those Waiting for a Small Margin Were Disappointed in the Bidding at Hall This Morning.

The public auction sale of seats for the Friday afternoon rehearsals of the Symphony orchestra was resumed this morning in Symphony hall, at the corner of Massachusetts and Huntington avs, and although the number of seats to be offered at auction was less than one-third as many as on the opening day, the attendance was fully as large.

The $7.50 seats were offered this morning, which comprised the last eight rows on the floor of the hall, and the last four rows at the end of the hall in the first balcony, about 40 in all.

The sale began promptly at 10 o'clock, Walter Jackson conducting it. Bidding was spirited throughout, and not once during the morning did the premium for any seat fall below $12.50. In fact, there were few sales at that figure, the average for the morning being about $15 premium, which is in addition to the regular price of the seats for the concert season.

The highest bid of the morning was $23, for a seat in row E in the balcony, immediately back of the $12 seats.

Most of the bidding at the beginning of the sale, for seats on the floor, was started at $15, and ran up as high as $22, while the lowest premium in the first row of $7.50 seats was $15.50.

Comparatively few of the seats sold this morning were secured by ticket agents, and an unusually large number were sold singly. From inquiries made at the bureau of information it was evident that not a few of those present were expecting the premium to fall as low as $5, and some questioned the gentleman in charge of the bureau as to the probable time of reaching the seats that might go at that premium, as in former years.

Bidding for the gallery seats started at $5, and quickly ran up to $19 for the first seat, and that was about the average maintained for the row. The other three rows brought premiums averaging about $17, $16 and $15 respectively. A dozen seats in the two rear corners of the first balcony brought premiums of $14 and $14.50.

The sale occupied just two hours.

Boston Courier.

ESTABLISHED 1795. SEPT. 22, 1900.

THE NEW SYMPHONY SEASON.

There will surely be a great gathering on Monday in the new building upon which excellent judgment has bestowed the befitting and significant name of Symphony Hall. Beside the intending purchasers of seats for the coming season, there will be the curious, who want to inspect the building so far as they may and those who are interested to hear the new organ—for this hall is to have a noble new instrument of its own'—which will be played for a half an hour before the sale begins. The formal opening and dedication, so to call it, of the hall to its high purposes will be a separate occasion, when Beethoven's great mass in D will be performed by the Cecilia and a fine solo quartette supported by the full orchestra. The se ason itself may be expected to reach the highest point of worth and delight, for Mr. Gericke, who has been abroad during the summer, will prepare a set of eminently strong and beautiful programmes, and the band itself will be practically the same, although two or three individual changes may possibly be made. The solo list, so far as it is announced, includes the names of the most prominent men in the orchestra as usual, together with a mention of some European artists of the best esteem as singers or instrumentalists. The customary system of auction sale, so long established in popular approval, will be followed and we shall be much surprised if the premiums do not exceed almost any which have been hitherto obtained, even though the hearers have to establish their new relationships and test their places by that hearing from them which is the proof of the musical pudding.

HOWARD MALCOM TICKNOR.

Boston Journal.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1900.

SYMPHONY SALE.

The $7.50 Seats for Rehearsals Bring Good Prices—Applicants Turned Away.

The second sale of Symphony seats—the $7.50 seats for the rehearsals—was run off quickly Tuesday morning, and was over by noon. There was a much smaller crowd in the hall than on Monday, but those who were there came to buy, and sales were very good. The average of premiums ranged between $15 and $25, and naturally there were no fancy prices paid for these seats. Had there been fifty or a hundred more seats Tuesday morning they could have been disposed of, as many were left disappointed, and many more came too late for the sale.

It is remarkable that people will pay more for the seats in the first row of the $7.50 section than they do for the seats in the last row of the $12 section. For instance, the premium on the last row in the balcony sold Monday was from $12 to $14, which, with the seat price, makes a total of $24 or $26. But Tuesday the seats directly behind these sold at premiums of $20 and $23, which brought the total up to $27.50 or $30.50. This may be partly due to the fact that these seats are sold early, while bidding is fresh, instead of late in the day, as is the case with the last of the $12 seats; but it is due more, probably, to the tendency of human nature to exaggerate the difference between $7.50 and $12, and, being deluded thereby into paying an exaggerated premium.

Yesterday closed the sale of seats for the Friday rehearsals.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

SEPTEMBER 26,

SYMPHONY SEATS.

Second Day of Sale Brings High Prices.

EAGER BIDDING ALL DAY.

Friday's Rehearsal Tickets Sold Higher Than Ever Before—Lowest Bid of Morning Was $13—Who Will Attend Fridays.

It was with considerable surprise that the people who were gathered in Symphony Hall yesterday morning watched the sale of the seats under the balcony on the floor and those of the five rear rows opposite the stage in the first balcony.

The par value of all these seats was $7.50, and the average premium bid was about $17.50, making an unprecedented aggregate for this part of the house. So generally has it been understood that the premius here is usually about $7.50, that in some cases there were hurried borrowings of the necessary dollars, and in nearly every case there was surprise to think the competition was so lively.

The seats generally went one at a time, except when the agents spoke up, and these purchasers usually bought in four, that being the limit allowed one person at one time.

There are a great many reasons why seats went for such a high figure.

Added to all the advantages in the new building there is the element of novelty in hearing the Symphony artists in a new place, and many patrons who have sat in the same Symphony seats for years declared that the greater advantages of this hall over the other made them willing to pay more for their seats.

The lowest bid of the morning was $13, this being for seat 19 in Row PP under the balcony. The highest bid was $23.50 for 17 in Row E of the first balcony.

Friday rehearsals are the joy of the debutantes. Many were present yesterday morning, and some did their own bidding. Now and then a girl raised her own bid a dollar or so, and would have paid the money, proud of her achievement, had not the auctioneer reminded her of the etiquette of never bidding against one's self.

Among those who will attend the Friday afternoon concerts are Mrs. Frank Bartlett, Mrs. Edgar Anthony, Miss Gertrude Nickerson, Mrs. Oliver W. Mink of Manchester-by-the-Sea, Mrs. F. W. Chandler of Marlboro street, Caroline B. Balch, one of the social leaders of Newburyport; Miss J. W. Lincoln, Miss E. T. Thompson, Miss E. E. Coolidge and Mrs. L. W. Scudder. Others who bought were Dr. H. P. Mosher of Beacon street, E. W. Tyler, W. L. Lovell, T. F. Saxton, F. F. Cutter, E. R. Shippen, F. S. Sturgess and Winthrop Smith.

There was little interest in the sale of the rear seats of the $12 section on the floor, late Monday afternoon, but when the gallery seats were reached at 5:30 o'clock, even people who had been waiting since early morning were aroused to something like activity.

The first seat, right over the musicians at the proscenium arch, brought $55 premium. Then the prices increased until $33 was reached for two seats halfway back.

The best price on the other side was $90, and rear rows sold from $13 to $18.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CVIII., NO. 88.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 26, 1900.

A SCRAMBLE FOR SEATS.

Symphony Sale of $7.50 Places All Over in a Couple of Hours—No Sale Today.

It took just two hours to auction off the $7.50 seats for the Symphony rehearsals at Symphony Hall yesterday morning. This was not so much because of the rush with which they went—although goodness knows they went fast enough—as it was by reason of the scarcity of the $7.50 seats in the first place.

There were 8½ rows on the floor thus reserved, these being the last rows, of course, and similarly, the last 4½ rows in the first balcony were sold. The first seat sold on the floor, No. 1 in KK, brought $19.50. Two seats brought $21 and $21.50, respectively, in this row, but no others exceeded the start-off.

Row LL ran very evenly, the prices being from $18 to $22, the next being slightly lower. One seat in NN drew $21.50, but this was more the result of stubbornness than because of the virtue of the seat. The lowest premium for the $7.50 seats on the floor, and, for that matter, in the balcony, too, was $12.50, and just two seats were gotten at this rate. In general, it was not easy to get a seat for less than $21, including the "par value" of the seat.

There was a brisk demand for the rear balcony seats, the start-off price being $19. The highest price paid for the best seat left in the balcony was $30, and the lowest for row A $16, this, of course, merely accounting for the premium. Row F ran to from $16 to $19, G from $15 to $16.50, and H and I from $14 to $16, I being the last and a half row.

There will be no sale today. The sale of the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be held at 10 A. M. Monday, and of the $7.50 seats for the concerts on Tuesday at 10 A. M.

Boston Daily Globe.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 26, 1900

SYMPHONY PREMIUMS HIGH.

More Seats for Friday Afternoon Rehearsals Disposed of, the Top Figure Being $23.

The public auction sale of seats for the Friday afternoon rehearsals of the Symphony orchestra was resumed yesterday morning in Symphony hall, at the corner of Massachusetts and Huntington avs, and although the number of seats to be offered at auction was less than one-third as many as on the opening day, the attendance was fully as large.

The $7.50 seats which were offered comprised the last eight rows on the floor of the hall, and the last four rows at the end of the hall in the first balcony, about 40 in all.

The sale began promptly at 10 o'clock, Walter Jackson conducting it. Bidding was spirited throughout, and not once during the morning did the premium for any seat fall below $12.50. In fact, there were few sales at that figure, the average being about $15 premium, which is in addition to the regular price of the seats for the concert season.

The highest bid was $23, for a seat in row E in the balcony, immediately back of the $12 seats.

Most of the bidding at the outset of the sale, for seats on the floor, was started at $15, and ran up as high as $22, while the lowest premium in the first row of $7.50 seats was $15.50.

Comparatively few of the seats disposed of were secured by ticket agents, and an unusually large number were sold singly. From inquiries made at the bureau of information it was evident that not a few of those present were expecting the premium to fall as low as $5, and there were questions as to the probable time of reaching the seats that might go at that premium, as in former years.

Bidding for the gallery seats started at $5, and quickly ran up to $19 for the first seat, and that was about the average maintained for the row. The other three rows brought premiums averaging about $17, $16 and $15 respectively. A dozen seats in the two rear corners of the first balcony brought premiums of $14 and $14.50.

The sale occupied just two hours.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.
The Official Paper of the State.
The Official Paper of the City.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, SEPT. 26, 1900.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The ever growing curiosity of the public to see the inside of the new Symphony Hall was gratified on Monday and Tuesday of this week, when for the first time the fullest opportunity was given everybody to inspect the hall in every part. On the above days the season tickets for the 24 Friday afternoon public rehearsals were put on sale at auction. The fact that every seat in the house was sold, except, of course, the second balcony, which will be given, as usual, first come, first served, to the purchasers of 25 cent tickets, and notably that the prices realized were generally better than last year, is the best possible evidence that everybody is delighted with the new hall.

And what was true of the Friday afternoon tickets should apply as well to the sales of the season tickets for the 24 Saturday evening concerts, which are announced for the coming Thursday and Friday, Sept. 27 and 28. The $12 tickets will be sold on Thursday and the $7.50 tickets on Friday. The entire second balcony will be included, as usual, in the $7.50 tickets. The arrangement of the new hall is so admirable in every way that there are no poor seats anywhere.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

SEPTEMBER 27, 1

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The new Symphony Hall, at Huntington and Massachusetts avenues, was thrown open to the public for the first time on Monday and Tuesday of the present week, on which days the auction sales of seats for the Friday afternoon rehearsals were held. While there were no exaggerated nor abnormal prices realized, the general tendency throughout the sales was toward higher prices. Every seat in the house for the entire series of twenty-four Friday afternoons was sold at these auctions, with the exception of the second balcony, which, as has been the custom for many years past, will be given "first come first served," to the holders of 25-cent tickets.

These are offered for sale on Monday morning of each week in which there is to be a public rehearsal.

This morning at 10 o'clock the $12 seats for the twenty-four Saturday evening concerts will be offered for sale at auction, and on Friday morning, at the same hour, the $7.50 seats for the Saturday evening series.

Boston Journal.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1900.

Curiosity to see the inside of Symphony Hall was gratified on Monday and Tuesday of this week, when the season tickets for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals were put on sale. The fact that every seat in the house was sold, except, of course, the second balcony, shows great interest in the concerts. Season tickets for the 24 Saturday evening concerts will be sold, the $12 tickets on Thursday and the $7.50 tickets on Friday. The entire second balcony will be included in the $7.50 tickets.

The Official Paper of the State.

The Official Paper of the City.

TUESDAY MORNING, OCT. 16, 1900.

TEMPLE OF MUSIC.

Formal Dedication of Boston's New Symphony Hall.

An Interesting Programme Opens the Season.

Oh Art Divine, behold thy new-made dwelling:
Within its walls a solemn chant we raise;
To Thee our heart-felt homages are welling,
While in thine own pure tones is proudly swelling
The Song of Praise.

Now for the first time are the echoes blending,
Where long hereafter they shall have their home,
From Past to Future Music's greeting sending;
May it ring on, in cadence never-ending,
Through years to come.

Here shall resound the clang of happy singing,
As thy disciples gather round thy throne;
And, while the chorus in its might is ringing,
The list'ning soul from Earth to Heaven is swinging
On wings of Tone.

And when the mighty symphonies are pealing
A lofty message shall be sent abroad,
That bids "Be Still" to every earthly feeling,
While the rapt heart finds every phrase revealing
A path to God.

Peace on these portals evermore shall hover;
Where Music dwells unrest can never be;
Oh Art! teach thou the seeker to discover
Here one sweet spot where pain and strife are over,—
Because of Thee!

The reviewer promises not to burst forth thus again until another Symphony Hall is built. It was an occasion to make one poetic; the great new hall, the brilliant audience, the combination (so long denied to Bostonians) of a good organ with our excellent orchestra, the return of our honored conductor, and the performance of a work that is undeniably Titanic, but is so difficult that it is rarely heard.

Amid all the advance in science, architectural acoustics has not progressed any since the days of Pythagoras—indeed it may possibly have retrogressed, for the old Athenians probably knew, what we do not, how a hall would act upon sound, before it was actually tested. The modern architect must needs stagger on in blind experiment in the matter of his acoustical building, and such beautiful halls as Sayles Memorial in Providence, or the Trocadero in Paris, are standing proofs of the inability of the modern architect to wrest the secrets of reverberation of sound from the treasure box of nature.

Berlioz has said that a hall must be in itself a musical instrument, a perfect sounding box; yet the humiliating truth must be confessed that no architect knows what his acoustical result is to be until he has his audience in his hall and the first performance has taken place; at the best he can but copy some hall that has proved itself properly resonant, and trust the rest to providence. It was therefore an anxious moment that supervened between the gathering of the audience and the performance of the first chorus.

At the close of the first number, however, all doubts seemed set at rest. Of course, the reviewer cannot speak with absolute authority on such a point; he can only speak of the result in the place where he sat. To give a detailed and reliable account, he would need to wander from place to place during the performance. But it may be emphatically stated that the accounts gathered from three sources, in different parts of the hall, agree in praising the acoustical qualities of the building in unmeasured terms. The new hall is a success.

The Bach Chorale, which began the programme, was clear in every part, and Mr. Higginson's voice in the speech, modestly called "a report" on the programme, was easily audible in every corner. So was the ode to instrumental music, written and read by Mr. Owen Wister, and then came the "piece de resistance," the great mass.

Beethoven's Mass in D is a stupendous work, and its vocal difficulties throw even the trials of the ninth symphony chorister into the shade. It is "musician's music," and almost every one who takes honest delight in it will be found to be a professional musician or at least a very earnest student; if ever a work was "Caviare to the general," it is this mass.

One may recall the fact that Beethoven, although nominally a Catholic, was in reality somewhat agnostic and by no means a worshipper as Haydn and Mozart were, among Catholics, and Bach was, in the Protestant fold. We may recall also that Beethoven always clothed his musical thoughts in an orchestral guise, and was never a master of practical vocal expression. Under these circumstances it may be imagined that the grand points of the work were somewhat veiled, as they are in almost every performance. In ancient Athens the singers used to take pride in executing a certain kind of song written entirely in the highest register (called "Orthian"); Beethoven has produced a modern "crux" of this kind. One cannot feel easy, even as auditor, while the singers are in such evident discomfort, and while the issue of each successive battle with superhuman difficulties is in doubt.

Beethoven called this his greatest and worthiest work (Milton said his "Paradise Regained" was much better than his "Paradise Lost") and every great conductor of the world re-echoes the opinion; it is by no means a comfortable grandeur, and the glory of the symphonies is a much more readily comprehended [illegible]

[illegible] the center of the "Sanctus perdius," the fugue began, which again and again stormed the vocal heights, but it were flattery to call the result always perfect singing or excellent ensemble.

The nub of all the difficulties is found in the great fugue which ends the Credo, with the words, "Et Vitam Venturi saeculi, Amen." Here the composer has attained his highest contrapuntal power, and this becomes the climax of the work, before the end is reached, as the "Hallelujah" chorus causes the "Messiah" to attain its moment of greatest grandeur before it reaches its third part.

Such a number requires a degree of technical study on the part of the auditor before anything like comprehension or appreciation can be reached, but it is well worth the study, and such abstruse music has the advantage over mere prettiness in the fact that an easily grasped (Homophonic) number tells all that it has to say, at a first hearing, while such a magnificent piece of polyphony may seem almost ugly at first, but grows more and more attractive as one becomes familiar with the intricate design, and increases in interest with each successive hearing.

The points of absolute beauty in the Mass, however, were the "Kyrie," the "Et Incarnatus," the "Benedictus" (in which Mr. Kneisel gave a most artistic violin obligato) and the tender "Agnus Dei."

The quartette of soloists consisted of Miss Clementine De Vere, Miss Gertrude May Stein, Mr. Evan Williams and Mr. Joseph S. Baernstein. All were adequate, and praise can even go beyond this tepid adjective. Mr. Baernstein, though rather light-toned for the ensemble work, was exquisite in his solo at the beginning of the "Agnus Dei," and Miss Stein equally effective in the duet with him in the "Benedictus." Mr. Evan Williams sang with much expression whenever this was possible, in spite of the fact of his having met with a slight accident just before the performance.

Miss Clementine De Vere had just the voice for the trying soprano part, and her high voice "told" well in passages that would have exhausted many another singer.

The orchestral support was altogether praiseworthy, and the finding of a good organ, placed properly for ensemble work, and a fine organist, (Mr. Wallace Goodrich), was something so unusual in a Boston classical concert of this generation that one might readily grow ecstatically enthusiastic over it.

The Boston musical public was evidently grateful in the whole matter; they applauded Mr. Gericke to the echo, they paid a hearty tribute to the performance (and to the Cecilia chorus) at the close; and, if they did not indulge in any hurrahing, they paid to Mr. Higginson, our greatest musical benefactor, the much more eloquent tribute of rising up, "en masse," when he first came upon the platform.

Louis C. Elson.

HIGGINSON'S ADDRESS.

H. L. Higginson said, in the course of his address:—

"The directors of this building have allowed me the honor and the pleasure of welcoming to your new music hall, and they ask you to call it henceforth Symphony Hall. As no detailed report of the directors' scheme and acts has ever been made to the public, you will, perhaps, be glad to hear a few words on the subject.

"The directors have tried to fulfil the trust imposed on them and to make the hall satisfactory to you.

"If it is a success, the credit and your thanks are due to four men—Mr. McKim, Mr. Norcross, Prof. Sabine of Harvard, and, last but not least, C. E. Cotting, who, with his wide experience, has watched and guided the construction and guarded our slender purse. Without his aid the hall might not have been ready tonight, and I rejoice for him that his task is fulfilled.

"Prof. Sabine has studied thoroughly our questions of acoustics, has applied his knowledge to our problem, and, I think, with success. Prof. Cross of the Institute of Technology has also given us the benefit of his counsel, and the help of these three gentleman has been a pure labor of love. You see the handiwork of Mr. Norcross and of his excellent sub-contractors and assistants, but you have not seen their energy and patience in our behalf.

"As for Mr. McKim, he is here, but will not speak for himself, his partners and his office. Abandoning his pet idea with absolute cheerfulness, he set himself to devise a plan not entirely to his liking, and even in the execution of this plan he has given up many hopes, wishes and fancies, because the directors had no more money.

Our capital is $500,000, of which $410,700 has been subscribed, and, as this sum was far too small, the directors have borrowed the remaining cost, which is about $350,000, making the total cost rising $750,000. They mortgaged the hall with reluctance, but had no other course, as the money was essential. The building has been leased by the directors for 10 years to me, who am to meet costs of administration, taxes and all charges, and to pay to the stockholders the rest of the receipts.

"Let me add that the beauty of the hall has been done entirely by Mr. McKim, and I hope that it pleases you.

"It had long been clear that our home of music in Boston must be moved, for the old Music Hall was faulty in safety, in ventilation, in convenience, in lack of a good organ, and to a certain degree in acoustics. Around the old hall, from the opening night on Nov. 29, 1852, hang the happy memories of 50 years' triumphs—the concerts of the Musical Fund Society, the Handel and Haydn, the Germanians, the Harvard Musical Society, the Apollo, the Cecilia—of Sontag, Albani, Carl Eckert, Bergman, Thomas, Zerrahn, Thalberg, Rubinstein, Von Bulow, Wieniawski, Ole Bull, Sarasate, Paderewski, Patti, Nilsson, Sembrich, Lehman, Ternina and countless artists—of great organ recitals, as well as echoes of noble sermons and church services, of lectures, of great public meetings—nor can any one forget the men, who, from public spirit, built the old hall with one gentleman at their head, whose life and means without stint were devoted to art—C. C. Perkins.

"Whether this hall can ever give so much joy to our people as the old Music Hall, no one can tell. Much depends on the public, which has always been loyal and stanch to the orchestra, and for the orchestra I can only promise in return that it will try to do its share."

[illegible] The most noted names of Greater Boston were extraordinarily well represented in the audience.

Of course there were musical people without number, some from outside the limits of the state, and scholars, and professional men as well as mere leaders of fashion.

Few men without conventional evening clothes were to be seen, and some elaborate costumes were worn by the women, although the majority evidenced the usual Bostonian quiet taste.

Among those present, with parties, were:—

Mrs. S. L. Aspinwall, J. B. Ayer, Frederic Amory, Mrs. F. L. Ames.

W. S. Bigelow, W. W. Blackmar, J. A. Burnham, Mrs. F. G. Blake, J. C. Bancroft, J. A. Beebe, F. H. Beebe, W. P. Blake, Stephen Bullard, F. V. Balch, T. D. Boardman, Dr. E. H. Bradford, E. P. Beebe.

T. J. Coolidge, jr., C. P. Curtis, E. W. Codman, C. R. Codman, Louis Cabot, C. E. Cotting, A. A. Carey, Mrs. A. F. Carey, R. M. Cushing, Samuel Carr, E. S. Converse.

Mrs. Oliver Ditson, E. S. Draper, L. S. Dabney, Rev. E. W. Donald, Allen Danforth, W. S. Dexter.

Wm. Endicott, jr., C. W. Eliot, Dana Estes, R. D. Evans.

F. P. Fish, G. F. Fabyan, T. R. Fay and company, Mrs. E. N. Fairchild, Mrs. J. T. Fields, Mrs. Chas. Faulkner, Arthur Foote.

J. C. Gray, H. S. Grew, C. E. Guild, jr., Mrs. J. L. Gardner, Eliot Hubbard, Chas. Head, H. H. Hunnewell, Mrs. Aug. Hemenway, jr., W. D. Hunt, Franklin Haven, jr., Wm. Hooper, John Homans, 2d, E. D. Jordan.

H. T. Kidder, D. P. Kimball.

Mrs. M. E. Lowell, T. K. Lothrop, Miss Annie Lyman, B. J. Lang, G. D. Low, Mrs. W. C. Loring, Henry Lee, G. C. Lee, Matthew Luce, Jr., J. P. Lyman, H. W. Lamb, Sen. Lodge, T. W. Lawson.

Wm. Minot, Laurence Minot, Miss Madeline Mixter, W. P. Mason, H. L. Morse, O. T. Mink, Nathan Matthews, Richard Olney.

A. A. Pope, J. K. Paine, J. J. Putnam.

M. H. Richardson, H. R. Reed, Arthur Reed.

H. F. Sears, A. Shuman, Mrs. G. H. Shaw, F. C. Shattuck, B. Schlesinger, J. M. Sears, C. E. Sampson, Alexander Steinert, Q. A. Shaw, W. B. Sewall, C. H. Stearns.

E. L. Thorndike, W. B. Thomas.

Mrs. S. D. Warren, Mrs. Ellen Weld, H. T. Whitney, J. W. Wheelwright, Henry Woods, Grant Walker, Mrs. F. E. Zerrahn.

Boston Journal.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 18, 1900.

The sounding-board on the stage of the new Symphony Hall seems to be an exact copy in wood of Mrs. W. F. Apthorp's, which was patented over a year ago, and is probably to be used in glass in the new Chickering Hall.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1900.

Mrs. George W. Ellis.

Mrs. George W. Ellis, who died on Wednesday, October 10, at her home on Devon road, Chestnut Hill, Boston, was the mother of Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The funeral was Friday afternoon at Chestnut Hill. The Rev. Dr. George A. Gordon officiated, and many of Mr. Ellis' friends, associated with him both professionally and socially, were there. The music was by the quartet of the Old South Church.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1900.

FINE HOME FOR MUSIC.

Description of the New Symphony Hall in Boston.

Symphony Hall, the new home for the Boston Orchestra, in Boston, at Massachusetts and Huntington avenues, is thus described by the Journal, of that city:

Cheerfulness and warmth of color effects were the most dominant characteristics of the hall to the Journal reporter who entered the auditorium about eight o'clock last evening.

The walls and ceiling are a very light gray in color, and the general plan of interior decorations being of the style of the Italian renaissance. There are two balconies, the seats in both all commanding a fine view of the stage.

All of the seats in the hall are upholstered in rich, dark green leather. They are about the same pattern as those in the old Music Hall, and are all alike. The seating capacity of the hall is 2,589. Of this number, 466 seats are on the floor, 598 in the first balcony and 505 in the second balcony. The seating capacity of the old Music Hall was 2,307. Some of the best seats in the house are those in the upper balcony, which Major Higginson has decided shall be sold for 25 cents apiece for the Friday afternoon rehearsals. The custom maintained at the old hall is thus continued.

The proscenium arch is, perhaps, the most imposing feature of the hall. It is square and 62 feet by 45 feet in dimensions. A broad band of gold comprises the frame in which is worked a handsome design, consisting of acanthus leaves and fruits. On a wide golden scroll where the keystone of the arch would naturally be is the name of Beethoven.

A fine organ takes up the entire background of the stage. The decoration of this, as well as the walls of the stage, is in light gray, while the pipes are of gold. There are entrances to the stage at the right and left, through which the musicians can enter and retire.

The organ contains 58 stops, 21 combinations, 10 couplers, 3,485 pipes. The console is movable and is attached to the organ by a flexible cable 100 feet in length. The cable contains 372 wires. In the pedal organ there is an open diapason of 32 feet pitch, the longest pipe being large enough for a man to crawl through, turn around and come out again.

Like the proscenium arch, the balcony railings are of gold color and quite showy. The tops of the balcony rails are upholstered in crimson plush.

From the handsomely designed ceiling, done in panels with curved beams, are suspended a number of artistic chandeliers of bronze or brass, which contain hundreds of incandescent lights, of 16 and 32 candle power, respectively. These chandeliers are placed so near the ceiling that they will not annoy the audience with their glare. The lights on the stage are placed behind the proscenium arch, and are thus out of sight of the people for the most part. Upon the front of the organ are two small clusters of electric lights, too. The lighting arrangements are perfect. There are 2,000 electric lamps in all.

The acoustic properties of the hall have not yet been thoroughly tested. Special attention has been given to the matter, however, and an expert on such matters, Prof. Wallace C. Sabine, of Harvard University, has been employed to make the hall as nearly perfect as possible in this respect.

Last evening Mr. Comee stood upon the stage and talked in an ordinary tone of voice with a gentleman seated in the upper balcony. Both could distinguish what the other said without the least trouble. Several selections were also played upon the organ, and this, too, indicated that the acoustic properties of the hall were excellent.

The general public will have a chance to judge for themselves on the night of Monday, October 15, when the first concert to be held in the hall—the dedicatory concert—will be held. On that night Beethoven's Mass in D will be given by the full Symphony Orchestra, under Mr. Gericke, with a chorus from the Cecelia Society of 200 voices and a quartet composed of Clementine Devere, Gertrude Mayster, Evan Williams and Joseph Beresheim.

Throughout the building is fireproof, and there are 16 exits from each balcony and from the floor, while the corridors are large enough to hold the entire audience comfortably. On the second floor is a large foyer, or promenade, with an arched ceiling and a gem of an echo. This is on the Huntington avenue side, right over the main entrance.

There are four coat-rooms, two on the floor and two in the first balcony, with a capacity of nearly 2,000 boxes. There are also spacious toilet and dressing rooms for ladies and for gentlemen.

A feature of the new hall that will be appreciated is the almost perfect system of heating and ventilation. It is a system said to be in use nowhere else in the world. The cool, fresh air is drawn in from the top of the building, and by means of fans and suction is made to pass through pipes, by which it can be fixed at any temperature, hot or cold, and then is forced into the auditorium from perforations in the ceiling and out again through registers in the floor. In this way it is claimed that the air will be kept constantly cool and fresh.

The rise in the floor of the auditorium begins at the letter K, and extends to the back wall of the hall; rises, also, in both balconies, both in the center and on the sides.

There is a marquise over the Massachusetts avenue entrance, 65 feet in length, which is for the convenience of carriaged principally. There will also be ticket offices located at this entrance. The main entrance, however, is on Huntington avenue.

The exterior of the building suggests the architecture of the North Italian Renaissance. It is very plain, but substantial looking. Ground was broken June 12, 1899. The builders were the Norcross Bros.; the architects, McKim, Mead & White, and the heating and ventilating apparatus was put in under the direction of Alfred R. Wolff, heating expert, of New York.

At the recent auction of the seats for the concerts this season a premium of $1,120 was paid for two seats.

[6]

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.
The Official Paper of the State.
The Official Paper of the City.
TUESDAY MORNING, OCT. 16, 1900.

TEMPLE OF MUSIC.

Formal Dedication of Boston's New Symphony Hall.

An Interesting Programme Opens the Season.

Oh Art Divine, behold thy new-made dwelling:
Within its walls a solemn chant we raise;
To Thee our heart-felt homages are welling,
While in thine own pure tones is proudly gwelling
The Song of Praise.

Now for the first time are the echoes blending,
Where long hereafter they shall have their home,
From Past to Future Music's greeting sending;
May it ring on, in cadence never-ending,
Through years to come.

Here shall resound the clang of happy singing,
As thy disciples gather round thy throne;
And, while the chorus in its might is ringing,
The list'ning soul from Earth to Heaven is swinging
On wings of Tone.

And when the mighty symphonies are pealing
A lofty message shall be sent abroad,
That bids "Be Still" to every earthly feeling,
While the rapt heart finds every phrase revealing
A path to God.

Peace on these portals evermore shall hover;
Where Music dwells unrest can never be;
Oh Art! teach thou the seeker to discover
Here one sweet spot where pain and strife are over,—
Because of Thee!

The reviewer promises not to burst forth thus again until another Symphony Hall is built. It was an occasion to make one poetic; the great new hall, the brilliant audience, the combination (so long denied to Bostonians) of a good organ with our excellent orchestra, the return of our honored conductor, and the performance of a work that is undeniably Titanic, but is so difficult that it is rarely heard.

Amid all the advance in science, architectural acoustics has not progressed any since the days of Pythagoras—indeed it may possibly have retrogressed, for the old Athenians probably knew, what we do not, how a hall would act upon sound, before it was actually tested. The modern architect must needs stagger on in blind experiment in the matter of his acoustical building, and such beautiful halls as Sayles Memorial in Providence, or the Trocadero in Paris, are standing proofs of the inability of the modern architect to wrest the secrets of reverberation of sound from the treasure box of nature.

Berlioz has said that a hall must be in itself a musical instrument, a perfect sounding box; yet the humiliating truth must be confessed that no architect knows what his acoustical result is to be until he has his audience in his hall and the first performance has taken place; at the best he can but copy some hall that has proved itself properly resonant, and trust the rest to providence. It was therefore an anxious moment that supervened between the gathering of the audience and the performance of the first chorus.

At the close of the first number, however, all doubts seemed set at rest. Of course, the reviewer cannot speak with absolute authority on such a point; he can only speak of the result in the place where he sat. To give a detailed and reliable account, he would need to wander from place to place during the performance. But it may be emphatically stated that the accounts gathered from three sources, in different parts of the hall, agree in praising the acoustical qualities of the building in unmeasured terms. The new hall is a success.

The Bach Chorale, which began the programme, was clear in every part, and Mr. Higginson's voice in the speech, modestly called "a report" on the programme, was easily audible in every corner. So was the ode to instrumental music, written and read by Mr. Owen Wister, and then came the "piece de resistance," the great mass.

Beethoven's Mass in D is a stupendous work, and its vocal difficulties throw even the trials of the ninth symphony chorister into the shade. It is "musician's music," and almost every one who takes honest delight in it will be found to be a professional musician or at least a very earnest student; if ever a work was "Caviare to the general," it is this mass.

One may recall the fact that Beethoven, although nominally a Catholic, was in reality somewhat agnostic and by no means a worshipper as Haydn and Mozart were, among Catholics, and Bach was, in the Protestant fold. We may recall also that Beethoven always clothed his musical thoughts in an orchestral guise, and was never a master of practical vocal expression. Under these circumstances it may be imagined that the grand points of the work were somewhat veiled, as they are in almost every performance. In ancient Athens the singers used to take pride in executing a certain kind of song written entirely in the highest register (called "Orthian"); Beethoven has produced a modern "crux" of this kind. One cannot feel easy, even as auditor, while the singers are in such evident discomfort, and while the issue of each successive battle with superhuman difficulties is in doubt.

Beethoven called this his greatest and worthiest work (Milton said his "Paradise Regained" was much better than his "Paradise Lost") and every great conductor of the world re-echoes the opinion; it is by no means a comfortable grandeur, and the glory of the symphonies is a much more readily comprehended greatness.

[illegible] was delicious to speak of the singing in anything but praise—because it is so near the boundary line of impossibility; one could admire the courage of the "enfans perdus," the forlorn hope, which again and again stormed the vocal heights, but it were flattery to call the result always perfect singing or excellent ensemble.

The nub of all the difficulties is found in the great fugue which ends the Credo, with the words, "Et Vitam Venturi saeculi, Amen." Here the composer has attained his highest contrapuntal power, and this becomes the climax of the work, before the end is reached, as the "Hallelujah" chorus causes the "Messiah" to attain its moment of greatest grandeur before it reaches its third part.

Such a number requires a degree of technical study on the part of the auditor before anything like comprehension or appreciation can be reached, but it is well worth the study, and such abstruse music has the advantage over mere prettiness in the fact that an easily grasped (Homophonic) number tells all that it has to say, at a first hearing, while such a magnificent piece of polyphony may seem almost ugly at first, but grows more and more attractive as one becomes familiar with the intricate design, and increases in interest with each successive hearing.

The points of absolute beauty in the Mass, however, were the "Kyrie," the "Et Incarnatus," the "Benedictus" (in which Mr. Kneisel gave a most artistic violin obligato) and the tender "Agnus Dei."

The quartette of soloists consisted of Miss Clementine De Vere, Miss Gertrude May Stein, Mr. Evan Williams and Mr. Joseph S. Baernstein. All were adequate, and praise can even go beyond this tepid adjective. Mr. Baernstein, though rather light-toned for the ensemble work, was exquisite in his solo at the beginning of the "Agnus Dei," and Miss Stein equally effective in the duet with him in the "Benedictus." Mr. Evan Williams sang with much expression whenever this was possible, in spite of the fact of his having met with a slight accident just before the performance.

Miss Clementine De Vere had just the voice for the trying soprano part, and her high voice "told" well in passages that would have exhausted many another singer.

The orchestral support was altogether praiseworthy, and the finding of a good organ, placed properly for ensemble work, and a fine organist, (Mr. Wallace Goodrich), was something so unusual in a Boston classical concert of this generation that one might readily grow ecstatically enthusiastic over it.

The Boston musical public was evidently grateful in the whole matter; they applauded Mr. Gericke to the echo, they paid a hearty tribute to the performance (and to the Cecilia chorus) at the close; and, if they did not indulge in any hurrahing, they paid to Mr. Higginson, our greatest musical benefactor, the much more eloquent tribute of rising up, "en masse," when he first came upon the platform. Louis C. Elson.

HIGGINSON'S ADDRESS.

H. L. Higginson said, in the course of his address:—

"The directors of this building have allowed me the honor and the pleasure of welcoming to your new music hall, and they ask you to call it henceforth Symphony Hall. As no detailed report of the directors' scheme and acts has ever been made to the public, you will, perhaps, be glad to hear a few words on the subject.

"The directors have tried to fulfil the trust imposed on them and to make the hall satisfactory to you.

"If it is a success, the credit and your thanks are due to four men—Mr. McKim, Mr. Norcross, Prof. Sabine of Harvard, and, last but not least, C. E. Cotting, who, with his wide experience, has watched and guided the construction and guarded our slender purse. Without his aid the hall might not have been ready tonight, and I rejoice for him that his task is fulfilled.

"Prof. Sabine has studied thoroughly our questions of acoustics, has applied his knowledge to our problem, and, I think, with success. Prof. Cross of the Institute of Technology has also given us the benefit of his counsel, and the help of these three gentleman has been a pure labor of love. You see the handiwork of Mr. Norcross and of his excellent sub-contractors and assistants, but you have not seen their energy and patience in our behalf.

"As for Mr. McKim, he is here, but will not speak for himself, his partners and his office. Abandoning his pet idea with absolute cheerfulness, he set himself to devise a plan not entirely to his liking, and even in the execution of this plan he has given up many hopes, wishes and fancies, because the directors had no more money.

Our capital is $500,000, of which $410,709 has been subscribed, and, as this sum was far too small, the directors have borrowed the remaining cost, which is about $350,000, making the total cost rising $750,000. They mortgaged the hall with reluctance, but had no other course, as the money was essential. The building has been leased by the directors for 10 years to me, who am to meet costs of administration, taxes and all charges, and to pay to the stockholders the rest of the receipts.

"Let me add that the beauty of the hall has been done entirely by Mr. McKim, and I hope that it pleases you.

"It had long been clear that our home of music in Boston must be moved, for the old Music Hall was faulty in safety, in ventilation, in convenience, in lack of a good organ, and to a certain degree in acoustics. Around the old hall, from the opening night on Nov. 29, 1852, hang the happy memories of 50 years' triumphs—the concerts of the Musical Fund Society, the Handel and Haydn, the Germanians, the Harvard Musical Society, the Apollo, the Cecilia—of Sontag, Albani, Carl Eckert, Bergman, Thomas, Zerrahn, Thalberg, Rubinstein, Von Bulow, Wieniawski, Ole Bull, Sarasate, Paderewski, Patti, Nilsson, Sembrich, Lehman, Ternina and countless artists—of great organ recitals, as well as echoes of noble sermons and church services, of lectures, of great public meetings—nor can any one forget the men, who, from public spirit, built the old hall with one gentleman at their head, whose life and means without stint were devoted to art—C. C. Perkins.

"Whether this hall can ever give so much joy to our people as the old Music Hall, no one can tell. Much depends on the public, which has always been loyal and stanch to the orchestra, and for the orchestra I can only promise in return that it will try to do its share."

DISTINGUISHED AUDIENCE.

The most noted names of Greater Boston were extraordinarily well represented in the audience.

Of course there were musical people without number, some from outside the limits of the state, and scholars, and professional men as well as mere leaders of fashion.

Few men without conventional evening clothes were to be seen, and some elaborate costumes were worn by the women, although the majority evidenced the usual Bostonian quiet taste.

Among those present, with parties, were:—

Mrs. S. L. Aspinwall, J. B. Ayer, Frederic Amory, Mrs. F. L. Ames.

W. S. Bigelow, W. W. Blackmar, J. A. Burnham, Mrs. F. G. Blake, J. C. Bancroft, J. A. Beebe, F. H. Beebe, W. P. Blake, Stephen Bullard, F. V. Balch, T. D. Boardman, Dr. E. H. Bradford, E. P. Beebe.

T. J. Coolidge, jr., C. P. Curtis, E. W. Codman, C. R. Codman, Louis Cabot, C. E. Cotting, A. A. Carey, Mrs. A. F. Carey, R. M. Cushing, Samuel Carr, E. S. Converse.

Mrs. Oliver Ditson, E. S. Draper, L. S. Dabney, Rev. E. W. Donald, Allen Danforth, W. S. Dexter.

Wm. Endicott, jr., C. W. Eliot, Dana Estes, R. D. Evans.

F. P. Fish, G. F. Fabyan, T. R. Fay and company, Mrs. E. N. Fairchild, Mrs. J. T. Fields, Mrs. Chas. Faulkner, Arthur Foote.

J. C. Gray, H. S. Grew, C. E. Guild, jr., Mrs. J. L. Gardner, Eliot Hubbard, Chas. Head, H. H. Hunnewell, Mrs. Aug. Hemenway, jr., W. D. Hunt, Franklin Haven, jr., Wm. Hooper, John Homans, 2d, E. D. Jordan.

H. T. Kidder, D. P. Kimball.

Mrs. M. E. Lowell, T. K. Lothrop, Miss Annie Lyman, B. J. Lang, G. D. Low, Mrs. W. C. Loring, Henry Lee, G. C. Lee, Matthew Luce, Jr., J. P. Lyman, H. W. Lamb, Sen. Lodge, T. W. Lawson.

Wm. Minot, Laurence Minot, Miss Madeline Mixter, W. P. Mason, H. L. Morse, O. W. Mink, Nathan Matthews, Richard Olney.

A. A. Pope, J. K. Paine, J. J. Putnam.

M. H. Richardson, H. R. Reed, Arthur Reed.

H. F. Sears, A. Shuman, Mrs. G. H. Shaw, F. C. Shattuck, B. Schlesinger, J. M. Sears, C. E. Sampson, Alexander Steinert, Q. A. Shaw, W. B. Sewall, C. H. Stearns.

S. L. Thorndike, W. B. Thomas.

Mrs. S. D. Warren, Mrs. Ellen Weld, H. V. Whitney, J. W. Wheelwright, Henry Woods, Grant Walker, Mrs. F. E. Grahn.

Boston Journal.
THURSDAY, OCTOBER 18, 1900.

The sounding-board on the stage of the new Symphony Hall seems to be an exact copy in wood of Mrs. W. F. Apthorp's, which was patented over a year ago, and is probably to be used in glass in the new Chickering Hall.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.
NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1900

Mrs. George W. Ellis.

Mrs. George W. Ellis, who died on Wednesday, October 10, at her home on Devon road, Chestnut Hill, Boston, was the mother of Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The funeral was Friday afternoon at Chestnut Hill. The Rev. Dr. George A. Gordon officiated, and many of Mr. Ellis' friends, associated with him both professionally and socially, were there. The music was by the quartet of the Old South Church.

Baltimore American.
MONDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1900.

FINE HOME FOR MUSIC.

Description of the New Symphony Hall in Boston.

Symphony Hall, the new home for the Boston Orchestra, in Boston, at Massachusetts and Huntington avenues, is thus described by the Journal, of that city:

Cheerfulness and warmth of color effects were the most dominant characteristics of the hall to the Journal reporter who entered the auditorium about eight o'clock last evening.

The walls and ceiling are a very light gray in color, and the general plan of interior decorations being of the style of the Italian renaissance. There are two balconies, the seats in both all commanding a fine view of the stage.

All of the seats in the hall are upholstered in rich, dark green leather. They are about the same pattern as those in the old Music Hall, and are all alike. The seating capacity of the hall is 2,569. Of this number, 466 seats are on the floor, 598 in the first balcony and 505 in the second balcony. The seating capacity of the old Music Hall was 2,307. Some of the best seats in the house are those in the upper balcony, which Major Higginson has decided shall be sold for 25 cents apiece for the Friday afternoon rehearsals. The custom maintained at the old hall is thus continued.

The proscenium arch is, perhaps, the most imposing feature of the hall. It is square and 62 feet by 45 feet in dimensions. A broad band of gold comprises the frame in which is worked a handsome design, consisting of acanthus leaves and fruits. On a wide golden scroll where the keystone of the arch would naturally be is the name of Beethoven.

A fine organ takes up the entire background of the stage. The decoration of this, as well as the walls of the stage, is in light gray, while the pipes are of gold. There are entrances to the stage at the right and left, through which the musicians can enter and retire.

The organ contains 58 stops, 21 combinations, 10 couplers, 3,485 pipes. The console is movable and is attached to the organ by a flexible cable 100 feet in length. The cable contains 372 wires. In the pedal organ there is an open diapason of 32 feet pitch, the longest pipe being large enough for a man to crawl through, turn around and come out again.

Like the proscenium arch, the balcony railings are of gold color and quite showy. The tops of the balcony rails are upholstered in crimson plush.

From the handsomely designed ceiling, done in panels with curved beams, are suspended a number of artistic chandeliers of bronze or brass, which contain hundreds of incandescent lights, of 16 and 32 candlepower, respectively. These chandeliers are placed so near the ceiling that they will not annoy the audience with their glare. The lights on the stage are placed behind the proscenium arch, and are thus out of sight of the people for the most part. Upon the front of the organ are two small clusters of electric lights, too. The lighting arrangements are perfect. There are 2,000 electric lamps in all.

The acoustic properties of the hall have not yet been thoroughly tested. Special attention has been given to the matter, however, and an expert on such matters, Prof. Wallace C. Sabine, of Harvard University, has been employed to make the hall as nearly perfect as possible in this respect.

Last evening Mr. Comee stood upon the stage and talked in an ordinary tone of voice with a gentleman seated in the upper balcony. Both could distinguish what the other said without the least trouble. Several selections were also played upon the organ, and this, too, indicated that the acoustic properties of the hall were excellent.

The general public will have a chance to judge for themselves on the night of Monday, October 15, when the first concert to be held in the hall—the dedicatory concert—will be held. On that night Beethoven's Mass in D will be given by the full Symphony Orchestra, under Mr. Gericke, with a chorus from the Cecelia Society of 200 voices and a quartet composed of Clementine Devere, Gertrude Mayster, Evan Williams and Joseph Beresheim.

Throughout the building is fireproof, and there are 16 exits from each balcony and from the floor, while the corridors are large enough to hold the entire audience comfortably. On the second floor is a large foyer, or promenade, with an arched ceiling and a gem of an echo. This is on the Huntington avenue side, right over the main entrance.

There are four coat-rooms, two on the floor and two in the first balcony, with a capacity of nearly 2,000 boxes. There are also spacious toilet and dressing rooms for ladies and for gentlemen.

A feature of the new hall that will be appreciated is the almost perfect system of heating and ventilation. It is a system said to be in use nowhere else in the world. The cool, fresh air is drawn in from the top of the building, and by means of fans and suction is made to pass through pipes, by which it can be fixed at any temperature, hot or cold, and then is forced into the auditorium from perforations in the ceiling and out again through registers in the floor. In this way it is claimed that the air will be kept constantly cool and fresh.

The rise in the floor of the auditorium begins at the letter K, and extends to the back wall of the hall; rises, also, in both balconies, both in the center and on the sides.

There is a marquise over the Massachusetts avenue entrance, 65 feet in length, which is for the convenience of carriages principally. There will also be ticket offices located at this entrance. The main entrance, however, is on Huntington avenue.

The exterior of the building suggests the architecture of the North Italian Renaissance. It is very plain, but substantial looking. Ground was broken June 12, 1899. The builders were the Norcross Bros.; the architects, McKim, Mead & White, and the heating and ventilating apparatus was put in under the direction of Alfred R. Wolff, heating expert, of New York.

At the recent auction of the seats for the concerts this season a premium of $1,120 was paid for two seats.

[6]

INCOMPLETE

...TUESDAY, OCTOBER ..., 1900.

CITY'S NEW GLORY.

Symphony Hall Seen by the Public.

A MEMORABLE OCCASION.

Society and Talent Worship at Music's Shrine.

ACOUSTIC EXCELLENCE ACHIEVED.

A Solemn Mass of Beethoven Is Magnificently Rendered.

No more brilliant or important event has ever figured in the musical history of Boston, it is quite safe to say, than that which occurred in so eminently successful a manner last evening—the formal inauguration of Symphony Hall. For weeks the opening concert has been awaited. For years Boston's music lovers—and their name is legion—have patiently looked forward to and waited and hoped for a new home for its peerless orchestra, a new temple of music in music's highest forms.

Last night marked the culmination. The desire for the new building finally evolved into the accomplished fact when Conductor Wilhelm Gericke stepped between his musicians, re-enforced by a full chorus composed of over 250 members of the Cecilia Society, eminent soloists and a splendid organ on the one hand, and an audience which represented the best brains and culture of the commonwealth on the other.

The new hall has been so thoroughly described in The Herald that there is no necessity for dwelling upon it from that standpoint again. Suffice it to say that it made an indescribably charming appearance with its flood of electric light, its chaste and harmonious coloring, the modesty and yet effectiveness of its ornamentation and the excellent taste that has been maintained in the decorative aspect of the auditorium generally. Still more, it is gratifying to be able to state that the acoustic qualities of the hall are surprisingly near perfection. In this respect, particularly, it is a vast improvement on the old Music Hall, and congratulations are in order for the felicitious success that has been achieved in this highly important regard.

The broad aisles and that ease with which visitors could reach and leave their places in the auditorium met with instant appreciation. In fact, everybody was pleased, and it may be confidently stated that the splendid new temple of music is about all that could be possibly desired. Perhaps there were more draughts through the open doors than were quite to the comfort of those in the vicinity of them, but that will doubtless be remedied.

But there was nothing to carp at, and here were innumerable things to praise. Some of the latter were little and some were great. The uniforming of the ushers would seem a small matter—yet the neat, quiet and thoroughly tasteful uniforms which were seen on the employes of the hall last evening were a welcome change from the evening dress or gaudy trappings often seen in halls and theatres, and they were noted with approbation. The same taste appeared in other ways.

Palms and greens, placed in corridors and hallways, greatly softened the effect of bare walls and marble staircases. For last evening, owing to the size of the chorus, an addition was built to the stage. The organ console was placed directly before the conductor's desk.

After the splendid Bach chorale was rendered, Mr. H. L. Higginson stepped upon the stage and rendered what he was pleased to term a "report." He was given an inspiring greeting, the entire audience rising to do honor to the man who has done so much to make Symphony Hall possible. A well meant but poorly planned attempt to cheer him in no way detracted from the sincerity and meaning of the tribute which was paid. Said he:

"The directors of this building have ...ed me the honor and the pleasure ...ecoming to your new music hall, ... ask you to call it henceforth ...all. As no detailed report ...rs' scheme and acts has ...e to the public, you will, ... bear a few words on ...

...ied to fulfil the ... and to make the ... After a long ...te as the best in ...y bought it at ... foot paid ... ...ricultural Hall ...red lost ...

which you will presently hear the quality.

If it is a success, the credit and your thanks are due to four men—Mr. McKim, Mr. Norcross, Prof. Sabine of Harvard University, and, last but not least, Mr. C. E. Cotting, who, with his wide experience, has watched and guided the construction and guarded our slender purse. Without his aid the hall might not have been ready tonight, and I rejoice for him that his task is fulfilled. Prof. Sabine has studied thoroughly our questions of acoustics, has applied his knowledge to our problem, and, I think, with success. Prof. Cross of the Institute of Technology has also given us the benefit of his counsel, and the help of these three gentlemen has been a pure labor of love. You see the handiwork of Mr. Norcross and of his excellent subcontractors and assistants, but you have not seen their energy and patience in our behalf. As for Mr. McKim, he is here, but will not speak for himself, his partners and his office. Abandoning his pet idea with absolute cheerfulness, he set himself to devise a plan not entirely to his liking, and even in the execution of this plan he has given up many hopes, wishes and fancies, because the directors had no more money.

Our capital is $500,000, of which $410,-

REDUCTION

RATIO

13x

2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A4

A5

1.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

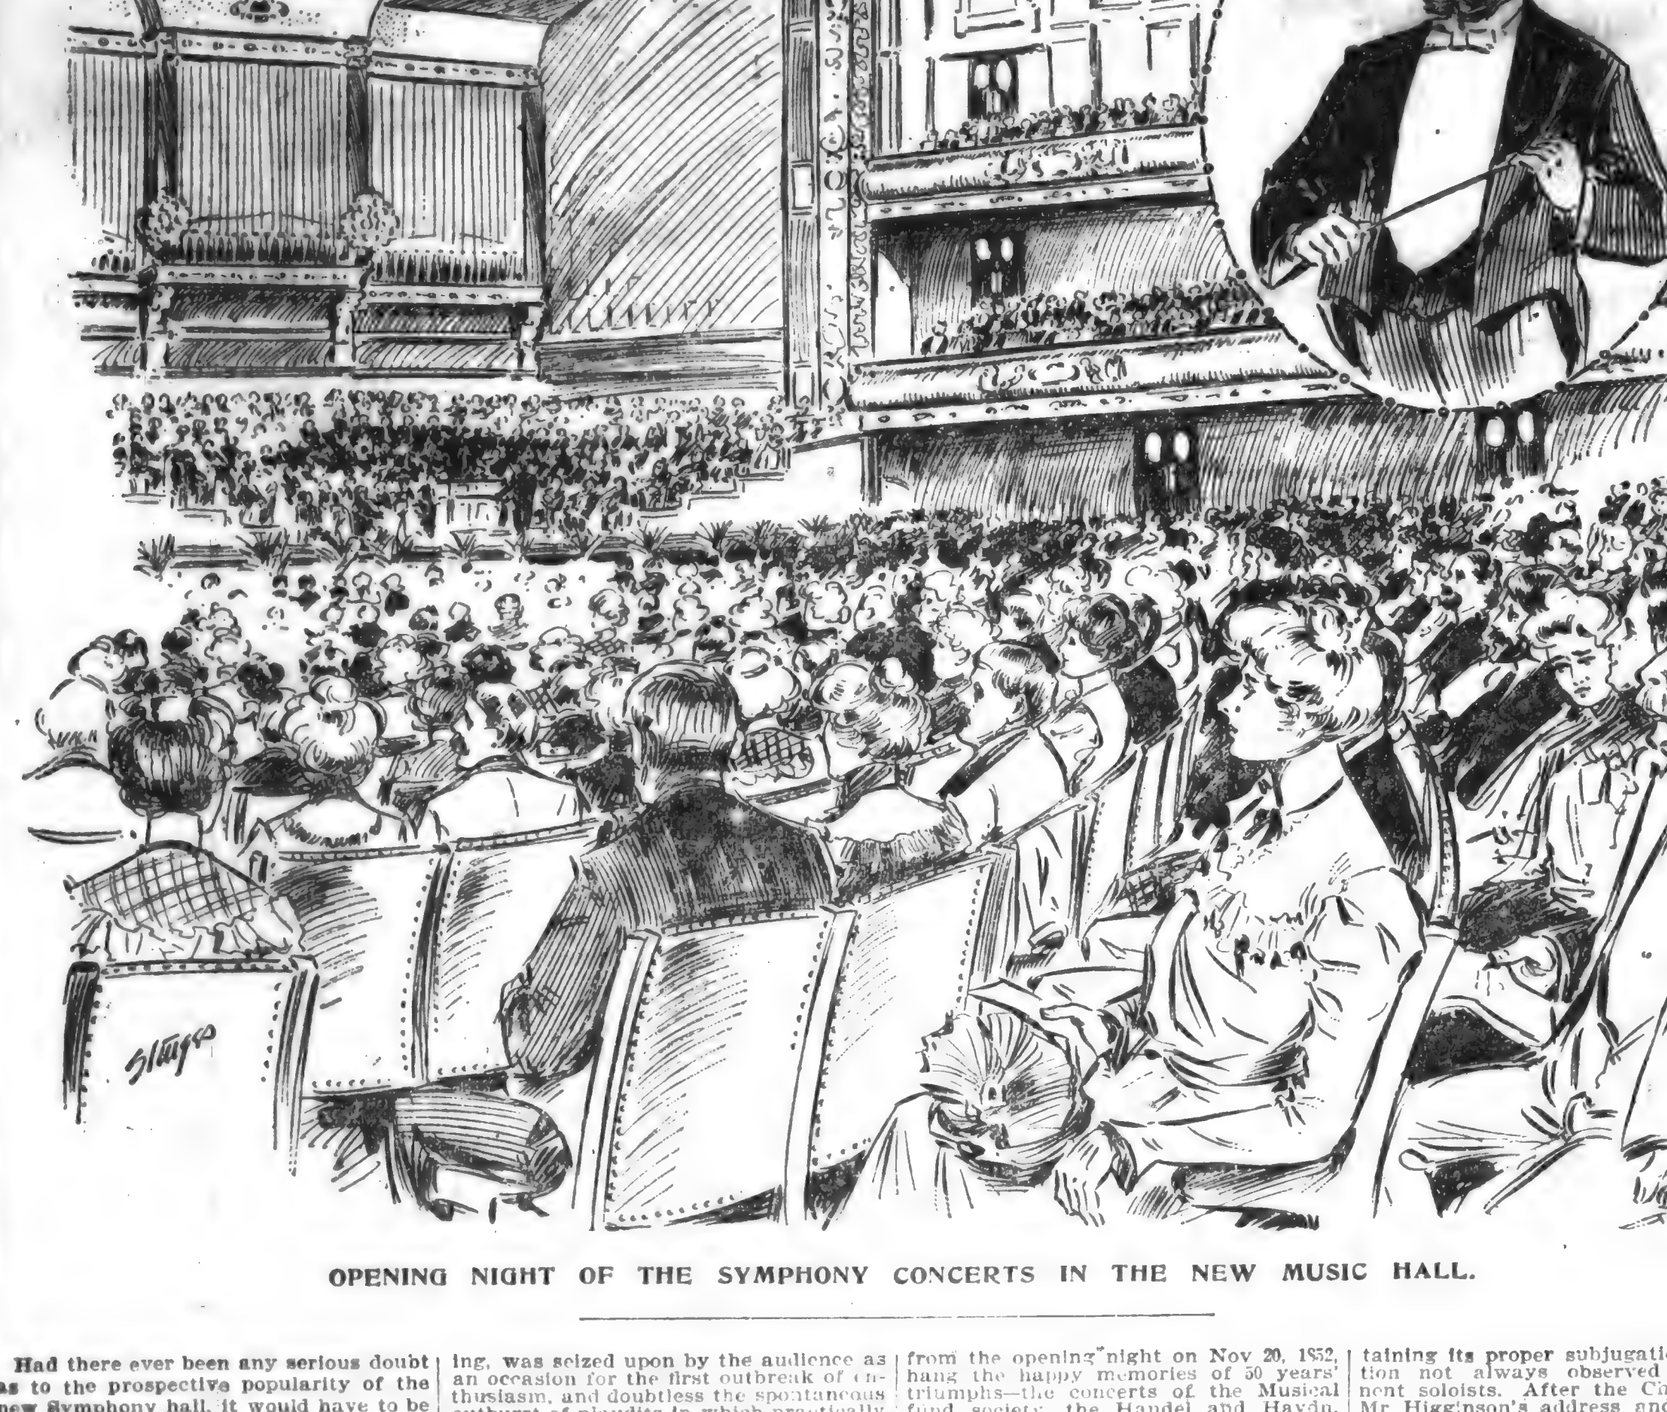
3.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

STON GLOBE—TUESDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1900.

OPENING OF BOSTON'S BEAUTIFUL SYMPHONY HALL.

Exceedingly Large and Refined Audience Enjoys the Initial Performance Under the Direction of Wilhelm Gericke.



OPENING NIGHT OF THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS IN THE NEW MUSIC HALL.

Had there ever been any serious doubt as to the prospective popularity of the new Symphony hall, it would have to be declared completely banished after the experiences incident to last evening's dedication.

For not only was the stately and beautiful temple, which is to be henceforth devoted to the worship of the goddess of music, filled by an audience representative of the wealth and cultured circles of Boston society, to a remarkable degree, but evidences of the complete satisfaction of everybody with the edifice and all its appointments were so apparent that even the most casual observer would not fail to see and understand them.

There was a bustling kind of subdued enthusiasm, and a sort of joyous murmer of general conversation to be heard, continually, both before the program chosen for the dedication of the hall began, and during the intermission, that probably never was known in like degree in old Music hall, and which testified as unmistakably as though in spoken phrase that everybody was happy in the new environment and felt justified in looking forward to many a happy hour in the future under like conditions.

The dedicatory program, conducted by Mr Wilhelm Gericke, was as follows:

Chorale ..... Bach
A report by H. L. Higginson.
The Bird of Passage, an ode to instrumental music ..... Owen Wister
Missa Solemnis ..... Beethoven

The joint participation of the symphony orchestra and the Cecilia society —the latter with augmented ranks—and of such noted artists as Mme Clementine de Vere, Miss Gertrude May Stein, Messrs Evan Williams, Joseph Baernstein and J. Wallace Goodrich and Franz Kneisel, certainly was calculated to give abundant promise of an evening of rare artistic enjoyment to lovers of the highest class music, and it is probably no exaggeration to say that so brilliant and picturesque an audience amid such chaste and harmonious surroundings has never before been seen in Boston.

A Symphony Audience.

It speaks volumes for the facilities of the new hall for receiving its patrons that during the half hour previous to the hour when the concert began there were probably no less than 250 carriages discharged their fashionable occupants at the eight or 10 entrances to the building, and that all were able to enter the hall as fast as they arrived without the slightest confusion or discomfort to anyone.

Under the "dress" gathering it was not extraordinarily so, for not a single decollete gown was seen save upon the platform, though the costumes worn by the female portion of the audience were prevailingly of rich fabrics and of rare and delicate shades and designs.

Possibly it may have been that this notable absence of display in feminine raiment was characteristic of the contrast between the taste of Boston society and that of New York, as shown upon similar occasions, rather than having been due to any general sentiment that last night's event did not call for an exhibition of the choicest product of the modiste's art.

Most of the familiar faces of substantial citizens known as faithful devotees of music were to be seen scattered about the auditorium, many professionals and teachers being seen in the balconies, more or less diligently following the score, which could be seen in great number.

Mrs John L. Gardner sat in the front row of the first balcony, at about the middle of the hall, accompanied by Mr George Proctor, the pianist, who held a score book which Mrs Gardner followed with the closest attention all the evening, frequently accentuating her interest by a marked swaying of her head and shoulders to the rhythm of the music.

The picture as the more marked as the famous little social leader was in deep mourning, the somberness of which was relieved only by a long string of diamonds that hung loosely about her neck.

The picture on the stage, framed by the beautiful golden proscenium arch, was even more attractive than that in the body of the hall.

The stage had been widened, temporarily, fully 15 feet, in order to accommodate the singers and musicians required, and the result was that half a dozen of the front rows of seats in the hall had to be dispensed with.

The women of the Cecilia society, who were massed on each side of the stage in ascending tiers, appeared like great banks of beautiful flowers, in their gowns of various delicate tints, for all were in evening dress and more in somber colors.

The men singers were massed at the back, against the organ, and the orchestra, what might be called the pit of the small amphitheater comprising the stage grouping, the soloists, the organist and his console and Mr Gericke, the director, being stationed in the center, and at the front of the platform.

Plaudits for Mr Gericke.

The entrance of Mr Gericke, preparatory to taking up his baton for the evening, was seized upon by the audience as an occasion for the first outbreak of enthusiasm, and doubtless the spontaneous outburst of plaudits in which practically the entire 3000 auditors appeared to take part, expressed not only their admiration for the great conductor and his past work, but also the concentrated satisfaction which they derived from their delightfully easy and homelike surroundings.

Bach's chorale, which was very brief, probably not lasting over five minutes, was no sooner concluded that the striking face and figure of Maj Henry L. Higginson was seen coming toward the front of the platform.

A sight of the man who has done so much for the cultivation and improvement of Boston's musical taste was enough to arouse a second outburst of applause, in which the spirit of genuine affection was conspicuously manifest.

A laughable episode immediately followed, when one enthusiastic Harvard graduate arose in the audience and called for a volley of Harvard cheers for the major.

Owing to the applause, just subsiding, and the unexpected nature of the request, and just possibly to the scarcity of Harvard men in the hall, the man who called for the cheers gave them very unaccompanied by any one else, but he did his self-appointed duty nobly, keeping up the true Harvard vociferousness to the end, and arousing a unified demonstration of genuine applause and merriment, Maj Higginson himself being unable to refrain from participating in the laughter at the faux pas of his zealous friend and admirer.

Maj Higginson's Speech.

Maj Higginson's speech, delivered in his always enjoyable conversational way, was as follows:

"The directors of this building have allowed me the honor and the pleasure of welcoming our new music hall, and they ask you to call it henceforth Symphony hall. As no detailed report of the directors' scheme and acts has ever been made to the public, you will perhaps be glad to hear a few words on the subject.

"The directors have tried to fulfil the trust imposed on them and to make the hall satisfactory to you. After a long search they chose this site as the best in Boston, and in 1893 they bought it at about the price per foot paid for the opposite lot, where the Horticultural hall is to stand. They pondered long over plans, and finally, laying aside with regret Mr McKim's beautiful design after the Greek theater, they adopted the shape of hall now in fashion and of late in vogue because successful. In this decision they have put aside the convictions and wishes of the architect—and they may have erred.

"It was no easy matter to achieve the absolute needs of the hall without injury to its beauty and without undue expense. They sought diligently to place a second and smaller room for chamber music or lectures within the space of the exterior walls, but found that such a plan would only result in a compromise, giving you two poorer halls. Therefore they have built this hall, of which you will presently hear the quality.

"If it is a success, the credit and your thanks are due to four men—Mr McKim, Mr Norcross, Prof Sabine of Harvard university, and, last but not least, Mr C. E. Cotting, who, with his wide experience, has watched and guided the construction and guarded our slender purse. Without his aid the hall might not have been ready tonight, and I rejoice for him that his task is fulfilled. Prof Sabine has studied thoroughly our questions of acoustics, has applied his knowledge to our problem, and, I think, with success. Prof Cross of the Institute of Technology has also given us the benefit of his counsel, and the help of these three gentlemen has been a pure labor of love. You see the handiwork of Mr Norcross and of his excellent subcontractors and assistants, but you have not seen their energy and patience in our behalf. As for Mr McKim, he is here, but will not speak for himself, his partners and his office. Abandoning his pet idea with absolute cheerfulness, he gave himself to devise a plan entirely to his liking, and even in the execution of this plan he has given up many hopes, wishes and fancies, because the directors had no more money.

"Our capital is $750,000, of which $610,700 has been subscribed, and, as this sum was far too small, the directors have borrowed the remaining sum, which is about $250,000, making the total cost rising $750,000. They mortgaged the hall with reluctance, but had no other course, as the money was essential. The building has been leased by the directors for 10 years to me, who am to meet costs of administration, taxes and all charges, and to pay to the stockholders the rest of the receipts.

"Let me add that the beauty of the hall has been won entirely by Mr McKim, and I hope that it pleases you. I think it very handsome and know that it is convenient and entirely safe. With the exception of the wooden floors laid directly on masonry and steel, the hall is built of brick, tile, steel and plaster, according to the foremen, Mr French, it cannot be burned, and thus the fear of fire which has hung over us for 29 years in the old hall is gone forever.

Memories of Other Days.

"It had long been clear that 'as home of music in Boston must be moved, for the old Music hall was faulty in safety, in ventilation, in convenience, in lack of a good organ, and, to a certain degree, in acoustics. Around the old hall, from the opening night on Nov 20, 1852, hang the happy memories of 20 years' triumphs—the concerts of the Musical fund society, the Handel and Haydn, the Germania, the Harvard musical society, the Apollo, the Cecilia—of Sontag, Alboni, Carl Eckert, Bergman, Thomas, Zerrahn, Thalberg, Rubinstein, Von Bulow, Wieniawski, Ole Bull, Sarasate, Porewski, Patti, Nilsson, Scmbrich, Lehmann, Fernina and countless artists—of great organ recitals, as well as echoes of noble sermons and church services, of lectures, of great public meetings—nor can any one forget the men who, from public spirit, built the old hall, with one gentleman at their head whose life and means without stint were devoted to art—Mr Charles C. Perkins.

"The old Music hall had become a sacred temple for our city, which had made many generations happy, and which it was said to leave; but the longest need of change quickened in 1859 by the supposed certainty of a street through the hall, moved you to offer your money freely during a period of financial distress and thus to give to the city this new home. To me it was of still moment, for without it the life of the orchestra would have ceased, and I have never said how deeply your sympathy and generosity touched me.

"It is all as it should be. Certain citizens of Boston build a hall, without regard to return in money, and by this act care for the happiness, the convenience, the education, of the inhabitants for 20 miles around this spot; and it is fitting in a republic that the citizens, and not the government in any form, should do such work and bear such burdens. To the more fortunate people of our land belongs the privilege of providing the higher branches of education and of art.

"As for the orchestra, it is always with us, and is always trying to improve itself—thus far with success. It is nearly of age, and is always glad to open for itself. Of its knowledge, its skill, its artistic qualities, its constant devotion to the best work year after year, of its consequent power to play its great repertory, I have no adequate words to speak—nor can I tell you how highly I prize our great string and wind-players, let alone our conductor, who has formed the orchestra and led it so long and who, I fear, even to save his men or me toil and trouble, lowered one jot his lofty standard of performance. I am very proud of them and of them; this band of artists, and I again thank them with all my heart, for they have done our city and our country signal and intelligent service, such as ennobles and educates a nation.

"Whether this hall can ever give so much joy to our people as the old Music hall no one can tell. Much depends on the public, which has always been loyal and stanch to the orchestra, and for the orchestra I can only promise in return that it will try to do its share.

"A gentleman rich in traditions and inheritances of art, poetry and music for several generations—himself a musician—has at my request written an ode which he will recite to you."

Mr Wister Presented.

At this point Maj Higginson presented Owen Wister, a young Philadelphian, who is a grandson of the late Fanny Kemble, the tragedienne, and great-grand nephew of the original Mrs Siddons and the famous John Philip and Charles Kemble. Mr Wister read quite a long ode to instrumental music, written by himself and entitled "The Bird of Passage."

An innovation that is to become permanent, and undoubtedly to prove a most popular one and which is a natural consequence of a hall constructed at the grand opera and "pop" concerts in it to years, was an intermission of 15 minutes about the middle of the program, during which the greater part of the audience promenaded about the spacious and cheerful lobbies, which are commodious enough to accommodate a crowd greater than the hall itself is capable of holding.

The avidity with which the opportunity was taken advantage of, last night, leaves no occasion to question that the promenade is destined to become a most attractive and enjoyable feature of the coming season's symphony concerts.

Both conductor Gericke and Mme de Vere, in speaking to a Globe representative, after the concert, had nothing but unqualified praise for the new hall, both from the standpoint of artistic taste and for its acoustic properties. Both declared that in the latter respect nothing more could be asked for.

Bach and Beethoven.

Bach's Chorale served as an introduction to the evening's program, the simplicity of form and brevity of the composition allowing the two musical contingents to become acquainted, as it were, before attempting the more serious work, Beethoven's mass. The singers acquitted themselves admirably as a rule, although in a few instances anticipating the beat of the director and making the attack a little uneven in volume and lacking in promptness. The orchestra played faultlessly, and the quality of the organ, or rather such portions of the register as was shown by Mr Goodrich, indicated that the instrument was all, and even more, than had been claimed for it.

The quartet singing by Miss de Vere, Miss Stein, Mr Williams and Mr Baernstein was most praiseworthy, their voices blending well and each maintaining its proper subjugation, a condition not always observed by prominent soloists. After the Chorale came Mr Higginson's address and the original ode by Mr Owen Wister, and following these the principal musical feature of the evening, Beethoven's mass in D for chorus, solo quartet, orchestra and organ, a composition which was last given in full by the Cecilia society in March, 1897, under Mr Lang's direction.

The enormous difficulties of the work render even an acceptable interpretation one hard to accomplish except by a choral body of exceptional ability. The organ is an important adjunct in the score, there is nothing that can strictly be called a solo for either organ or voice, and the chorus work is almost continuous. The quartets are frequently introduced, and the scoring for brasses is notably intricate. All in all, it is generally considered to be the most difficult work ever written for orchestra and chorus, so one may judge of the enormous amount of labor involved in interpreting Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis."

The music is divided, according to ecclesiastical form, into "Kyrie," "Gloria," "Credo," "Sanctus" and "Agnus Dei," each one elaborately extended. The Cecilia sang beautifully and enthusiastically, and observed all the lights and shades of the work, just as Mr Gericke signaled. The reiterated "Amens" were generally very smooth in exclamation, and the harmonious ensemble was preserved throughout in the most artistic manner. The changing tempo in the "Kyrie," usually a rough performance, went very well indeed, and the whole performance was highly to be commended.

The orchestra played as "one man" and showed that the grand organization was, as ever, one of the foremost in the world. Mr Kneisel's violin part in the "Sanctus" was beautifully given and throughout the evening chorus and orchestra vanished but little from a perfect unison in performance.

Mme de Vere's pure and high soprano voice was heard to great advantage and Miss Stein's contralto was very effective, although a trifle light in the fortissimo passages.

Mr Williams sang charmingly, although he was suffering greatly all the evening by reason of a severe accident which injured his right leg and almost compelled him to retire from the platform. Mr Baernstein was as satisfactory as ever. Mr Goodrich's organ work was all that could be desired, a fine performance on a magnificent instrument. The performance was a notable one in the musical annals of Boston and one long to be remembered by every one in the audience.

Who Were There.

The following list embraces the subscribers and others present. Many of the former were, of course, accompanied by several members of their families or by friends:

Mr Wm Endicott Jr
Mrs James T Fields
Mr & Mrs Hunnewell Jr
Mrs A Hemenway Jr
Mr F Pierson Beebe
Mr & Mrs T A Beebe
Mr & Mrs A A Carey
Mr & Mrs S Carr
Mr E S Converse
Mr F G Blake
Mr W F Blackmar
Mr F L Ames
Prof & Mrs B J Lang
Mrs F B Greene
Mr John K Paine
Mr Jas J Putnam
Mr Thomas W Lawson
Mrs Richard Olney
Mr Henry Lee Morse
Mr Grant Walker
Mr Henry Woods
Mr J W Wheelwright
Mrs Mary E Lowell
Mr & Mrs T J Coolidge Jr
Mrs Alice F Cary
Mr Francis V Balch
Mr Elliot Hubbard
Mr & Mrs Charles Head
Mr W D Hunt
Mr C E Guild Jr
Mr George B Fabyan
Mr R D Evans
Miss Mary Sanford
Mr Dana Estes
Miss Charles W Eliot
Mrs Oliver Ditson
Mr Louis Cabot
Col Henry Walker
Mr E C Codman
Mr E W Codman
Hon Eben S Draper
Dr W D Bradford
Mrs Susan L Aspinwall
Mr James Howe
Mr & Mrs W Donald
Mrs E W Fairchild
Mr Frederick P Fish
Gen W W Blackmar
Mrs Charles Faulkner
Mrs Arthur Foote
Prof Elliot W Norton
Mrs W G Deering
Miss Lyman
Mr Matthew Luce Jr
Mr & Mrs Bayard Tuckerman
Mr & Mrs J Burnham
Mr C O Baker
Mr Mason A Pevear
Mr Oliver W Mink
Mr Lawrence Minot
Mr William Minot
Mr Henry Saltonstall
Mr S L Thorndike
Mr David P Kimball
Mr & Mrs Eben D Jordan
Dr & Mrs Richardson
Mr Arthur Reed
Mr & Mrs W A Russell
Mr Frederic C Shattuck
Mrs G H Shaw
Mr & Mrs F E Peabody
Miss E Peabody
Mr & Mrs E D Jordan
Miss Sarah O Jewett
Mr & Mrs H Parkman
Mr W C Lovering
Mr & Mrs F E Sears Jr
Mr & Mrs G L Peabody
Mr & Mrs C H Cotting
Miss Bigelow
Mr & Mrs G Shattuck
Mr & Mrs J Abbott
Mrs R S Fay
Mr F F Hamlin
Mr & Mrs F H Peabody
Mr & Mrs P E Sears
Mr & Mrs Wm Hooper
Mr Henry S Grew
Mr John C Gray
Mr & Mrs N W Rice
Miss Rice
Mr James Howe
Mr & Mrs E F Stone
Mr Edward Atkinson
Mr Henry Rogers
Bishop & Mrs Lawrence
Mr & Mrs H H Clement
Mr Geo F Babbitt
Mr Geo L Osgood
Mrs F E Zerrahn
Mr George D Law
Mr & Mrs Henry K Bradley
Mr L M Stockton
Miss Madeline C Mixter
Miss Florence F Engle
Miss Gertrude Coleman
Mr Albert E Taylor
Miss Teresa Engle
Mr Quincy A Shaw
Mr & Mrs Alex Steinert
Mr Chas E Sampson
Mr Chas H Stearns
Mrs Eben H Weld
Mr & Mrs H M Whitney
Mr Samuel D Warren
Mr A Shuman
Mr & Mrs W F Thomas
Mr George C Lee
Mr T Deane Boardman
Col & Mrs Albert A Pope
Mrs S E Morse
Mr & Mrs Bacon Sumner
Mr & Mrs W H Sands
Miss Sands
Mr & Mrs W Bodman
Mr E Bodman
Mr & Mrs R P Blake
Mrs H L Higginson
Mrs A M Stovell
Mr & Mrs J Coolidge Jr
Mr & Mrs J Means
Mr & Mrs H Means
Prof & Mrs Michael Mrs F W Fay
Mr & Mrs J M Sears
Mr & Mrs R M Saltonstall
Mr W L Greene
Mr P B Harris
Mr & Mrs F K Castle
Mr J G Deshon
Mr & Mrs J Bradlee
Mr & Mrs F K Lothrop
Mr & Mrs W H Lothrop
Mrs F Spargo
Miss Nathan Matthews
Mr & Mrs Gaston E Boit
Charles and friend
Mr Geo C W Wilder
Mr & Mrs Wm Gaston
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott Jr
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 3d
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 4th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 5th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 6th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 7th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 8th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 9th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 10th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 11th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 12th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 13th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 14th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 15th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 16th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 17th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 18th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 19th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 20th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 21st
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 22nd
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 23rd
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 24th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 25th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 26th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 27th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 28th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 29th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 30th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 31st
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 32nd
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 33rd
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 34th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 35th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 36th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 37th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 38th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 39th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 40th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 41st
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 42nd
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 43rd
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 44th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 45th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 46th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 47th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 48th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 49th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 50th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 51st
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 52nd
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 53rd
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 54th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 55th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 56th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 57th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 58th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 59th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 60th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 61st
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 62nd
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 63rd
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 64th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 65th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 66th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 67th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 68th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 69th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 70th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 71st
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 72nd
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 73rd
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 74th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 75th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 76th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 77th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 78th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 79th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 80th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 81st
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 82nd
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 83rd
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 84th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 85th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 86th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 87th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 88th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 89th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 90th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 91st
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 92nd
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 93rd
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 94th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 95th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 96th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 97th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 98th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 99th
Mr & Mrs Wm Endicott 100th

America's Superb New Home of Symphony

Boston Will Formally Open and Dedicate Its Great Hall To-Morrow Night with an Elaborate Program, and All the Leaders of New World Music Will Be Present.

Miss Mary Moss Writes of the Event for "The Press."

Boston dedicates its new Symphony Hall to-morrow and none are better able to tell what this means than Miss Mary Moss, who stands for all that is best in musical life of Philadelphia. She has written exclusively for "The Sunday Press" the following description of the new hall which will enshrine the great orchestra so well-known to Philadelphians.

A MUSICAL event of unusual real and also sentimental interest will take place in Boston to-morrow night, the formal opening of the new Symphony Hall.

This building will replace the famous old Music Hall, which dated from 1852, when the need for it was brought to a climax by the lack of a suitable place where Jenny Lind could be heard to advantage.

In sixty days a committee raised the required sum of $100,000, and on November 20, 1852, 2500 people attended the opening concert.

The program consisted of the overtures to the "Zauberflote" and Oberon, and the Andante of Beethoven's C minor symphony, played by the Musical Fund Orchestra. The Handel and Hadyn Society and the Musical Education Society sang choruses. There were part songs by the Liederkrantz, solos by Madame Alboni and a "Greeting to the Fatherland" by the Germania Serenade Band. A pleasingly varied selection, contrasting oddly with the concert given last Spring, when the old Music Hall was formally closed, with ceremonies suited to the obsequies of a long cherished friend. The Symphony Orchestra, under Gericke, played a carefully selected program. The choice of a symphony, Beethoven's Mirth, sufficiently indicates the serious and emotional character of the occasion. The inadequacy of the building, its wretched acoustics, level floor, utter lack of protection from fire, and absence of all conveniences could no longer be endured, but, lovingly mindful of years of faithful service, the citizens publicly bade the old house a dignified farewell.

Those walls, bare enough to the eye, were rich in varied memories. They had witnessed stirring scenes, when Wendell Phillips gave his famous Sunday night lectures while a picked band of enthusiastic young men guarded the doors against expected attacks of a mob fanatically opposed to Abolitionists. Concerts of all kinds have been given there by artists big and small, by the Handel & Haydn Choral Society, and, above all, by that great orchestra which is so integral a part of Boston's musical life.

For a decade or more a movement has been afoot to raise money for a new hall. Finally a company was formed and stock issued to the amount of $500,000, a large part of which was subscribed for by Mr. Henry Higginson, who, with public-spirited generosity, has been most instrumental in helping his orchestra to a fitting habitation. The only privilege accorded to the stockholders is the right to buy their tickets in advance of the general public.

There is a legend that when the funds had been secured a serious obstacle cropped up, in the shape of the statue of Beethoven. Many years ago, two brothers, young men of moderate means, but princely generosity, commissioned Crawford, the sculptor (father of Marion Crawford) to make a statue of Beethoven, which they gave to the Handel & Haydn Society, to be used as an ornament for the Music Hall. The trouble was that no one could exactly remember whether this gift was intended to adorn that particular edifice, or whatever building should shelter the city's musical life. The donors could no longer be consulted, and in so conscientious a community as Boston this doubt naturally produced a deadlock, until the matter was compromised by putting the statute, at least for the time being, in the Public Library, and then the way was clear for the building of the new Symphony Hall.

It was designed by Messrs. McKim, Mead and White, of New York, in the severest style of North Italian Renaissance architecture. The walls are of "natural" colored brick, with facade and pillared portico of grayish white granite. The plainness of the exterior has called forth a certain note of unspoken apology in the many eulogiums that have been bestowed upon the building in Boston; but this very simplicity, with its justness of proportion, and absolute fitness for the purpose for which it is designed, cannot fail to satisfy any intelligent critics, and the internal arrangements are extraordinary in their completeness.

The hall is oblong, with a main floor and two balconies. The rows of seats, straight in the middle, at the ends curve slightly toward the stage. The incline of the floor is adjusted that every seat has a good view of the stage, all seats are the same size, and all are comfortable; moreover, they are covered with substantial green leather, which is both sightly and free from the burr-like adhesiveness of velvet. The seating capacity is 2569, against 2387 of the old hall.

The color scheme of the interior is gray, lightened with gold, but the gray is so softened, and the gold so judiciously applied, that the effect is rather quietly harmonious than striking. The bareness of the walls is relieved by pilasters, and a series of sixteen niches, which will ultimately contain statues. At the back of the stage the gold pipes of a great

REDUCTION

RATIO

12x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0

1.1

1.25

1.4

1.6

2.8

2.5

3.2

2.2

3.6

2.0

4.0

1.8

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR
TWENTIETH SEASON, 1900-1901
WILL GIVE A SERIES OF

24 CONCERTS

On Consecutive Saturday Evenings, from Oct. 20, 1900, to May 4, 1901, Omitting Nov. 10, Dec. 15, 1900, Jan. 19, Feb. 23 and March 23, 1901, and

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS

ON CONSECUTIVE FRIDAY AFTERNOONS, from Oct. 19, 1900, to May 3, 1901, Omitting Nov. 9, Dec. 14, 1900, Jan. 18, Feb. 22 and March 22, 1901.

SOLOISTS: Mme. TERNINA, Mme. SCHUMANN-HEINK, Miss AUS DER OHE, Messrs. DOHNANYI, GODOWSKY, GEBHARDT, GOODRICH, KNEISEL, LOEFFLER, ADAMOWSKI, ROTH, BECKER, SCHROEDER and Others

Tickets for the Series of Concerts and for the Series of Rehearsals, 12.00 and 7.50 according to location.

The $12 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, Monday, Sept. 24, at 10 A. M.
The $7.50 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, Tuesday, Sept. 25, at 10 A. M.
The $12 Seats for the Concerts will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, Thursday, Sept. 27, at 10 A. M.
The $7.50 Seats for the Concerts will be sold in like manner, at the same place, on Friday, Sept. 28, at 10 A. M.
Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets Will Be Delivered in the Hall, and Must Be Paid for as Soon as Bought, or They Will Be Resold

---

GLOBE—THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 20, 1900

SYMPHONY HALL,
Huntington and Massachusetts Aves.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MR. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.
TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS
On Consecutive Saturday Evenings, from Oct. 20, 1900, to May 4, 1901, omitting Nov. 10, Dec. 15, 1900, Jan. 19, Feb. 23 and March 23, 1901, and
TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS
On Consecutive Friday Afternoons, from Oct. 19, 1900, to May 3, 1901, omitting Nov. 9, Dec. 14, 1900, Jan. 18, Feb. 22 and March 22, 1901.

Tickets for the series of Concerts and for the series of Rehearsals, $12 and $7.50, according to location.
The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold by auction at Symphony Hall, MONDAY, Sept. 24, at 10 A. M.
The $7.50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold by auction at Symphony Hall, TUESDAY, Sept. 25, at 10 A. M.
The $12 seats for the concerts will be sold by auction at Symphony Hall on THURSDAY, Sept. 27, at 10 A. M.
The $7.50 seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place on FRIDAY, Sept. 28, at 10 A. M.
Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be resold.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Mr. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.
TWENTIETH SEASON, 1900-1901.

Soloists: Mmes. MELBA, TERNINA, SCHUMANN-HEINK, Miss AUS DER OHE, Messrs. DOHNANYI, GODOWSKY, GEBHARDT, BAUER, GOODRICH, KNEISEL, LOEFFLER, ADAMOWSKI, ROTH, BECKER, SCHROEDER and Others.

Auction Sale of $12 Seats for the Friday Afternoon Public Rehearsals at SYMPHONY HALL Huntington and Massachusetts Avenues.
Tomorrow (Monday), Beginning at 10 O'Clock.

Auction Sale of $7.50 Seats for Rehearsals, Tuesday, Sept. 25, at 10 A. M.
Auction Sale of 12.00 Seats for Concerts, Thursday, Sept. 27, at 10 A. M.
Auction Sale of 7.50 Seats for Concerts, Friday, Sept. 28, at 10 A. M.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

TWENTIETH SEASON.

AUCTION SALE OF $7.50 SEATS FOR THE FRIDAY AFTERNOON PUBLIC REHEARSALS AT SYMPHONY HALL (Huntington & Massachusetts Aves.), THIS (TUESDAY) MORNING AT 10 O'CLOCK.

Auction Sale of $12 Seats for Concerts THURSDAY, Sept. 27. Auction Sale of $7.50 Seats for Concerts FRIDAY, Sept. 28.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

TWENTIETH SEASON.

AUCTION SALE OF $12 SEATS FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING CONCERTS AT SYMPHONY HALL (Huntington and Massachusetts Aves.), TOMORROW (Thursday) MORNING AT 10 O'CLOCK, CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY.

Auction Sale of $7.50 Seats for Concerts FRIDAY, Sept. 28.

SYMPHONY HALL
(Huntington and Massachusetts Aves.)
MONDAY EVE'G, Oct. 15, at 8.
INAUGURAL CONCERT
Boston Symphony Orchestra.
MME. DE VERE
MISS STEIN
MR. WILLIAMS
MR. BAERNSTEIN
—AND—
The Cecilia Society
Mr. GERICKE, Conductor.
Mr. KNEISEL, Solo Violin.
Mr. GOODRICH, Organist.
PROGRAMME
CHORALE.....Bach
PROLOGUE
Mr. Wister.
Mass in D, for Chorus, Solo Quartet, Orchestra and Organ.....Beethoven
Tickets, with reserved seats, $5, $3 and $2, according to location. Sale of seats opens Monday morning, Oct. 8, at 8.30. A limited number of seats have been reserved for stockholders and invited guests. No more than ten seats will be sold to one person.

SYMPHONY HALL
(Huntington and Massachusetts Avenues).
MONDAY EVE'G, Oct. 15, at 8.
INAUGURAL CONCERT
Boston Symphony Orchestra.
MME. DE VERE,
MISS STEIN,
MR. WILLIAMS,
MR. BAERNSTEIN,
—AND—
The Cecilia Society
Mr. GERICKE, Conductor.
Mr. KNEISEL, Solo Violin.
Mr. GOODRICH, Organist.
PROGRAMME
CHORALE.....Bach
PROLOGUE
Mr. Wister.
Mass in D, for Chorus, Solo Quartet, Orchestra and Organ.....Beethoven
Tickets, with reserved seats, $5, $3 and $2, according to location. Sale of seats opens tomorrow (Monday) morning, Oct. 8, at 8.30. A limited number of seats have been reserved for stockholders and invited guests. No more than ten seats will be sold to one person. 1t oct7

Symphony Orchestra

TWENTIETH SEASON.

AUCTION SALE OF $12 SEATS FOR THE FRIDAY AFTERNOON PUBLIC REHEARSALS AT SYMPHONY HALL (Huntington and Massachusetts Aves.), THIS (MONDAY) MORNING, AT 10 O'CLOCK, CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY.

Auction Sale of $7.50 Seats for Friday Afternoon Public Rehearsals Tomorrow (TUESDAY). Auction Sale of $12 Seats for Concerts THURSDAY, Sept. 27. Auction Sale of $7.50 Seats for Concerts FRIDAY, Sept. 28. 1t

---

MERCHANTS and MANUFACTURERS 20TH CENTURY EXPOSITION
MECHANICS BUILDING, BOSTON.
Doors Open to the Public, MONDAY, Oct. 1, 1900, at 10 A.M. Formal opening exercises at 3 P.M.
FANCIULLI'S 71ST REG. BAND.
Oct. 1st to 6th—12 Concerts.
The official Band at the Inauguration of Greater New York.
Reserved Seat Sale opens THURSDAY, Sept. 27th, at Paul Revere Entrance.
SOUVENIR SPOONS
Specially designed for the Exposition. The 1st 500 ladies purchasing admission tickets will be given three spoons (Sousa, Fanciulli and Victor Herbert). The 2nd 500 two of these music composers spoons, and the 3d 500 one spoon each. Total of 3,000 souvenir spoons given away daily. All admission tickets must be purchased at entrance nearest Copley Square.
ADMISSION 25 CENTS. 1t

SYMPHONY HALL,
Huntington and Massachusetts Avenues.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,
MR. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.
Twenty-Four Public Rehearsals.
Twenty-Four Concerts.

Tickets for the series of Concerts and for the series of Rehearsals, $12 and $7.50, according to location.

The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold by auction at Symphony Hall, MONDAY, September 24, at 10 A. M.

The $7 50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold by auction at Symphony Hall, TUESDAY, September 25, at 10 A. M.

The $12 seats for the concerts will be sold by auction at Symphony Hall on THURSDAY, September 27, at 10 A. M.

The $7.50 seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place on FRIDAY, September 28, at 10 A. M.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be resold.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

TWENTIETH SEASON.

AUCTION SALE OF $12 SEATS FOR THE FRIDAY AFTERNOON PUBLIC REHEARSALS AT SYMPHONY HALL (Huntington and Massachusetts Aves.), THIS (MONDAY) MORNING, AT 10 O'CLOCK, CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY.

Auction Sale of $7.50 Seats for Friday Afternoon Public Rehearsals Tomorrow (TUESDAY). Auction Sale of $12 Seats for Concerts THURSDAY, Sept. 27. Auction Sale of $7.50 Seats for Concerts FRIDAY, Sept 28.

[10]

SYMPHONY HALL
Huntington and Massachusetts Avenues

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR
TWENTIETH SEASON, 1900-1901
WILL GIVE A SERIES OF

24 CONCERTS

On Consecutive Saturday Evenings, from Oct. 20, 1900, to May 4, 1901, Omitting Nov. 10, Dec. 15, 1900, Jan. 19, Feb. 23 and March 23, 1901, and

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS

ON CONSECUTIVE FRIDAY AFTERNOONS, from Oct. 19, 1900, to May 3, 1901, Omitting Nov. 9, Dec. 14, 1900, Jan. 18, Feb. 22 and March 22, 1901.

SOLOISTS: Mme. TERNINA, Mme. SCHUMANN-HEINK, Miss AUS DER OHE, Messrs. DOHNANYI, GODOWSKY, GEBHARDT, GOODRICH, KNEISEL, LOEFFLER, ADAMOWSKI, ROTH, BECKER, SCHROEDER and Others

Tickets for the Series of Concerts and for the Series of Rehearsals, 12.00 and 7.50 according to location,

The $12 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, Monday, Sept. 24, at 10 A. M.
The $7.50 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, Tuesday, Sept. 25, at 10 A. M.
The $12 Seats for the Concerts will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, Thursday, Sept, 27, at 10 A. M.
The $7.50 Seats for the Concerts will be sold in like manner, at the same place, on Friday, Sept. 28, at 10 A. M.
Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets Will Be Delivered in the Hall, and Must Be Paid for as Soon as Bought, or They Will Be Resold

---

GLOBE—THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 20, 1900

SYMPHONY HALL,
Huntington and Massachusetts Aves.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

MR. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.
TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS
On Consecutive Saturday Evenings, from Oct. 20, 1900, to May 4, 1901, omitting Nov. 10, Dec. 15, 1900, Jan. 19, Feb. 23 and March 23, 1901, and
TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS
On Consecutive Friday Afternoons, from Oct. 19, 1900, to May 3, 1901, omitting Nov. 9, Dec. 14, 1900, Jan. 18, Feb. 22 and March 22, 1901.

Tickets for the series of Concerts and for the series of Rehearsals, $12 and $7.50, according to location.
The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold by auction at Symphony Hall, MONDAY, Sept. 24, at 10 A. M.
The $7.50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold by auction at Symphony Hall, TUESDAY, Sept. 25, at 10 A. M.
The $12 seats for the concerts will be sold by auction at Symphony Hall on THURSDAY, Sept. 27, at 10 A. M.
The $7.50 seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place on FRIDAY, Sept. 28, at 10 A. M.
Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be resold.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Mr. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.
TWENTIETH SEASON, 1900-1901.

Soloists: Mmes. MELBA, TERNINA, SCHUMANN-HEINK, Miss AUS DER OHE, Messrs. DOHNANYI, GODOWSKY, GEBHARDT, BAUER, GOODRICH, KNEISEL, LOEFFLER, ADAMOWSKI, ROTH, BECKER, SCHROEDER and Others.

Auction Sale of $12 Seats for the Friday Afternoon Public Rehearsals at SYMPHONY HALL Huntington and Massachusetts Avenues.

Tomorrow (Monday), Beginning at 10 O'Clock.

Auction Sale of $7.50 Seats for Rehearsals,	Tuesday, Sept. 25, at 10 A. M.
Auction Sale of 12.00 Seats for Concerts,	Thursday, Sept. 27, at 10 A. M.
Auction Sale of 7.50 Seats for Concerts,	Friday, Sept. 28, at 10 A. M.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

TWENTIETH SEASON.

AUCTION SALE OF $7.50 SEATS FOR THE FRIDAY AFTERNOON PUBLIC REHEARSALS AT SYMPHONY HALL (Huntington & Massachusetts Aves.), THIS (TUESDAY) MORNING AT 10 O'CLOCK.

Auction Sale of $12 Seats for Concerts THURSDAY, Sept. 27. Auction Sale of $7.50 Seats for Concert FRIDAY, Sept. 28.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

TWENTIETH SEASON.

AUCTION SALE OF $12 SEATS FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING CONCERTS AT SYMPHONY HALL (Huntington and Massachusetts Aves.), TOMORROW (Thursday) MORNING AT 10 O'CLOCK, CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY.

Auction Sale of $7.50 Seats for Concerts FRIDAY, Sept. 28.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

TWENTIETH SEASON.

AUCTION SALE OF $7.50 SEATS FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING CONCERTS AT SYMPHONY HALL (Huntington and Massachusetts Aves.), THIS (Friday) MORNING, AT 10 O'CLOCK.

SYMPHONY HALL
(Huntington and Massachusetts Aves.)

MONDAY EVE'G, Oct. 15, at 8.

INAUGURAL CONCERT
Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MME. DE VERE
MISS STEIN
MR. WILLIAMS
MR. BAERNSTEIN
—AND—

The Cecilia Society

Mr. GERICKE, Conductor.
Mr. KNEISEL, Solo Violin.
Mr. GOODRICH, Organist.

PROGRAMME

CHORALE.....Bach

PROLOGUE
Mr. Wister.

Mass in D, for Chorus, Solo Quartet, Orchestra and Organ.....Beethoven
Tickets, with reserved seats, $5, $3 and $2, according to location. Sale of seats opens Monday morning, Oct. 8, at 8:30. A limited number of seats have been reserved for stockholders and invited guests. No more than ten seats will be sold to one person.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

TWENTIETH SEASON.

AUCTION SALE OF $12 SEATS FOR THE FRIDAY AFTERNOON PUBLIC REHEARSALS AT SYMPHONY HALL (Huntington and Massachusetts Aves.), THIS (MONDAY) MORNING, AT 10 O'CLOCK, CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY.

Auction Sale of $7.50 Seats for Friday Afternoon Public Rehearsals Tomorrow (TUESDAY). Auction Sale of $12 Seats for Concerts THURSDAY, Sept. 27. Auction Sale of $7.50 Seats for Concerts FRIDAY, Sept. 28. 1t

---

MERCHANTS and MANUFACTURERS 20TH CENTURY EXPOSITION
MECHANICS BUILDING, BOSTON.
Doors Open to the Public, MONDAY, Oct. 1, 1900, at 10 A.M. Formal opening exercises at 3 P.M.
FANCIULLI'S 71ST REG. BAND.
Oct. 1st to 6th—12 Concerts.
The official Band at the Inauguration of Greater New York.
Reserved Seat Sale opens THURSDAY, Sept. 27th, at Paul Revere Entrance.
SOUVENIR SPOONS
Specially designed for the Exposition. The 1st 500 ladies purchasing admission tickets will be given three spoons (Sousa, Fanciulli and Victor Herbert). The 2nd 500 two of these music composers spoons, and the 3d 500 one spoon each. Total of 3,000 souvenir spoons given away daily. All admission tickets must be purchased at entrance nearest Copley Square.
ADMISSION 25 CENTS. 1t

SYMPHONY HALL,
Huntington and Massachusetts Avenues.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,
MR. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.
Twenty-Four Public Rehearsals.
Twenty-Four Concerts.

Tickets for the series of Concerts and for the series of Rehearsals, $12 and $7.50, according to location.
The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold by auction at Symphony Hall, MONDAY, September 24, at 10 A. M.
The $7 50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold by auction at Symphony Hall, TUESDAY, September 25, at 10 A. M.
The $12 seats for the concerts will be sold by auction at Symphony Hall on THURSDAY, September 27, at 10 A. M.
The $7.50 seats for the concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place on FRIDAY, September 28, at 10 A. M.
Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be resold.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

TWENTIETH SEASON.

AUCTION SALE OF $12 SEATS FOR THE FRIDAY AFTERNOON PUBLIC REHEARSALS AT SYMPHONY HALL (Huntington and Massachusetts Aves.), THIS (MONDAY) MORNING, AT 10 O'CLOCK, CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY.

Auction Sale of $7.50 Seats for Friday Afternoon Public Rehearsals Tomorrow (TUESDAY). Auction Sale of $12 Seats for Concerts THURSDAY, Sept. 27. Auction Sale of $7.50 Seats for Concerts FRIDAY, Sept 28.

SYMPHONY HALL
(Huntington and Massachusetts Avenues).

MONDAY EVE'G, Oct. 15, at 8.

INAUGURAL CONCERT
Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MME. DE VERE,
MISS STEIN,
MR. WILLIAMS,
MR. BAERNSTEIN,
—AND—

The Cecilia Society

Mr. GERICKE, Conductor.
Mr. KNEISEL, Solo Violin.
Mr. GOODRICH, Organist.

PROGRAMME

CHORALE.....Bach

PROLOGUE
Mr. Wister.

Mass in D, for Chorus, Solo Quartet, Orchestra and Organ.....Beethoven
Tickets, with reserved seats, $5, $3 and $2, according to location. Sale of seats opens tomorrow (Monday) morning, Oct. 8, at 8.30. A limited number of seats have been reserved for stockholders and invited guests. No more than ten seats will be sold to one person. 1t oct7

[10]

ACADEMY OF MUSIC

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(87 Performers.)

Mr. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.

Twentieth Season, 1900-'01. Sixteenth Season in Philadelphia.

Two Series of Five Concerts Each.

FIRST SERIES.	SECOND SERIES.
Monday Ev'g, Nov. 5.	Wednesday Ev'g, Nov. 7.
Monday Ev'g, Dec. 10.	Wednesday Ev'g, Dec. 12.
Monday Ev'g, Jan. 14.	Wednesday Ev'g, Jan. 16.
Friday Ev'g, Feb. 22.	Wednesday Ev'g, Feb. 20.
Monday Ev'g, Mar. 18.	Wednesday Ev'g, Mar. 20.

SOLO ARTISTS ANNOUNCED LATER.

The scale of prices will be the same for each series.

Proscenium boxes seating eight, and boxes seating six and four, will be sold at $75, $63, and $42 respectively, for the series of five concerts.

Season Tickets, with reserved seats for the series of five concerts, $7, $5, and $3.50, according to location.

Season Ticket holders of last season will be allowed to retain THE SAME seats for both series, payment for the same to be made on or before SATURDAY, October 20, by cash, money order, or check, made payable to MISS H. HARRIS, to whom all renewals of seats should be sent, at Heppe's, 1115 CHESTNUT Street.

The public sale of season tickets to the first series will open at Heppe's MONDAY MORNING, October 15, at 8.30, and for the second series on the following Monday morning, October 22, at the same hour.

Programme books, with descriptive notes on the works to be performed, will be mailed in advance of each concert to purchasers of season tickets.

F. R. COMEE, Ass't Mgr. C. A. ELLIS, Mgr.

SYMPHONY HALL.

(Huntington and Massachusetts Avenues.)

TOMORROW EVE'G, Oct. 15, at 8.

INAUGURAL CONCERT

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MME. DE VERE,
MISS STEIN,
MR. WILLIAMS,
MR. BAERNSTEIN,
—AND—

The Cecilia Society.

Mr. GERICKE, Conductor.
Mr. KNEISEL, Solo Violin.
Mr. GOODRICH, Organist.

PROGRAMME:

CHORALE .....Bach

PROLOGUE:
Mr. Winter.

Mass in D for Chorus, Solo Quartet, Orchestra and Organ.....Beethoven

Tickets with reserved seats, $5, $3 and $2, according to location, now on sale.

SANDERS THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Mr. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.

TEN CONCERTS

ON THURSDAY EVENINGS—Nov. 1, Nov. 22, Dec. 6, Dec. 27, Jan. 10, Jan. 31, Feb. 14, March 14, April 11, May 2.

SOLOISTS:

Mrs. Georg Henschel, Mr. T. Adamowski,
Miss Gertrude May Stein, Mr. C. M. Loeffler,
Miss Freda Siemens, Mr. Otto Roth,
Mr. Alwin Schroeder

And Others to be Announced.

Season Tickets FOR THE TEN CONCERTS $7.50

On sale at the UNIVERSITY BOOKSTORE, Harvard Square, Saturday morning, October 27, at 8 o'clock. A limited number of seats have been reserved for College officers and invited guests.

TWENTIETH SEASON, 1900-1901.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.

1797th to 1802d CONCERT.

NOVEMBER ITINERARY.

Leave Boston Sunday, November 4, at 7, P. M. South Terminal Station, Track 16.
Arrive Philadelphia, Broad Street Station Penna. R. R., Monday, November 5, at 7, A.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music at 8.15, P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.
Leave Philadelphia, Tuesday, November 6, Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts., at 10.22, A.M.
Arrive Baltimore, at 12.45, P. M.
Concert at Music Hall, Mount Royal Avenue and Cathedral St., at 8.15, P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.
Leave Baltimore, Camden Street Station, B. & O. R. R., Wednesday, November 7, at 10.50, A.M. Mt. Royal Station, 10.54, A.M.
Arrive Philadelphia, Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts. at 12.53, P.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music, at 8.15, P. M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.
Leave Philadelphia, Reading Terminal, Twelfth and Market Streets, Thursday, November 8, at 10.30 A.M.
Arrive New York, Depot Central Railroad of New Jersey, Ferry foot of Liberty Street, at 12.35, P.M.
Concert at Carnegie Hall, Thursday, Nov. 8, at 8.15, P. M.
Concert at Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Friday, November 9, at 8.15. P. M.
Matinée at Carnegie Hall, Saturday afternoon, November 10, at 2.30.
Leave New York, Grand Central Station, at 5, P. M.
Arrive Boston, South Terminal Station, Saturday, November 10, at 11 P. M.

Instruments must be ready and marked to-night (Sunday), after the Concert.

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

SYMPHONY HALL, HUNTINGTON AND MASS. AVES,
BOSTON, SATURDAY, November 3, 1900. [OVER.]

TWENTIETH SEASON, 1900-1901.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.

1819th to 1820th CONCERT.

DECEMBER ITINERARY.

Leave Boston Sunday, December 9, at 7, P. M. South Terminal Station, Track 16.
Arrive Philadelphia, Broad Street Station Penna. R. R., Monday, December 10. at 7, A.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music at 8.15, P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.
Leave Philadelphia, Tuesday, December 11, Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts., at 10.22, A.M.
Arrive Baltimore, at 12.45, P. M.
Concert at Music Hall, Mount Royal Avenue and Cathedral St., at 8.15, P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.
Leave Baltimore, Camden Street Station, B. & O. R. R., Wednesday, December 12, at 10.50, A.M. Mt. Royal Station, 10.54, A.M.
Arrive Philadelphia, Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts. at 12.53, P.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music, at 8.15, P. M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.
Leave Philadelphia, Reading Terminal, Twelfth and Market Streets, Thursday, December 13, at 10.30 A.M.
Arrive New York, Depot Central Railroad of New Jersey, Ferry foot of Liberty Street, at 12.35, P.M.
Concert at Carnegie Hall, Thursday, Dec. 13, at 8.15, P. M.
Concert at Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Friday, December 14, at 8.15. P. M.
Matinee at Carnegie Hall, Saturday afternoon, December 15, at 2.30.
Leave New York, Grand Central Station, at 5, P. M.
Arrive Boston, South Terminal Station, Saturday, December 15, at 11 P. M.

Instruments must be ready and marked to-night (Saturday), after the Concert.

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

SYMPHONY HALL, HUNTINGTON AND MASS. AVES,
BOSTON, SATURDAY, December 8, 1900. [OVER.]

TWENTIETH SEASON, 1900-1901.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.

1832d to 1837th CONCERT.

JANUARY ITINERARY.

Leave Boston Sunday, January 13, at 7, P. M. South Terminal Station, Track 16.
Arrive Philadelphia, Broad Street Station Penna. R. R., Monday, January 14, at 7, A.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music at 8.15, P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.
Leave Philadelphia, Tuesday, January 15, Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts., at 10.22, A.M.
Arrive Baltimore, at 12.45, P. M.
Concert at Music Hall, Mount Royal Avenue and Cathedral St., at 8.15, P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.
Leave Baltimore, Camden Street Station, B. & O. R. R., Wednesday, January 16, at 10.50, A.M. Mt. Royal Station, 10.54, A.M.
Arrive Philadelphia, Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts. at 12.53, P.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music, at 8.15, P. M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.
Leave Philadelphia, Reading Terminal, Twelfth and Market Streets, Thursday, January 17, at 10.30 A.M.
Arrive New York, Depot Central Railroad of New Jersey, Ferry foot of Liberty Street, at 12.35, P.M.
Concert at Carnegie Hall, Thursday, January 17, at 8.15, P. M.
Concert at Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Friday, January 18, at 8.15. P. M.
Matinee at Carnegie Hall, Saturday afternoon, January 19, at 2.30.
Leave New York, Grand Central Station, at 5, P. M.
Arrive Boston, South Terminal Station, Saturday, January 19, at 11 P. M.

Instruments must be ready and marked to-night (Saturday), after the Concert.

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

SYMPHONY HALL, HUNTINGTON AND MASS. AVES,
BOSTON, SATURDAY, January 12, 1901. [OVER.]

TWENTIETH SEASON, 1900-1901.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.

1850th to 1855th CONCERT.

FEBRUARY ITINERARY.

Leave Boston Monday, February 18, at 10.03, A. M. South Terminal Station, Track 16.
Arrive New York 4.30 P. M.
Concert at Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Monday, February 18, at 8.15. P. M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.
Leave New York, Depot Central Railroad of New Jersey, Ferry foot of Liberty Street, Tuesday, February 19, at 10 A. M.
Arrive Baltimore, at 2.30, P. M.
Concert at Music Hall, Mount Royal Avenue and Cathedral St., at 8.15, P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.
Leave Baltimore, Camden Street Station, B. & O. R. R., Wednesday, February 20, at 10.50, A.M. Mt. Royal Station, 10.54, A.M.
Arrive Philadelphia, Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts. at 12.53, P.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music, at 8.15, P. M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.
Leave Philadelphia, Reading Terminal, Twelfth and Market Streets, Thursday, February 21, at 10.30 A.M.
Arrive New York, Depot Central Railroad of New Jersey, Ferry foot of Liberty Street, at 12.35, P.M.
Concert at Carnegie Hall, Thursday, February 21, at 8.15, P. M.
Leave New York, C. R. R. of N. J., foot Liberty St., Friday, February 22, at 1 P. M.
Arrive Philadelphia 3.30 P. M.
Concert at Academy of Music at 8 P. M.
Leave Philadelphia by special train from Reading terminal, 12th and Market Sts., at 10.40 P. M.
Matinee at Carnegie Hall, Saturday afternoon, February 23, at 2.30.
Leave New York, Grand Central Station, at 5, P. M.
Arrive Boston, South Terminal Station, Saturday, February 23, at 11 P. M.

Instruments must be ready and marked to-night (Saturday), after the Concert.

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

SYMPHONY HALL, HUNTINGTON AND MASS. AVES,
BOSTON, SATURDAY, February 16, 1901. [OVER.]

TWENTIETH SEASON, 1900-1901.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.

1797th to 1802d CONCERT.

NOVEMBER ITINERARY.

Leave Boston Sunday, November 4, at 7, P. M. South Terminal Station, Track 16.
Arrive Philadelphia, Broad Street Station Penna. R. R., Monday, November 5, at 7, A.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music at 8.15, P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.
Leave Philadelphia, Tuesday, November 6, Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts., at 10.22, A.M.
Arrive Baltimore, at 12.45, P. M.
Concert at Music Hall, Mount Royal Avenue and Cathedral St., at 8.15, P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.
Leave Baltimore, Camden Street Station, B. & O. R. R., Wednesday, November 7, at 10.50, A.M. Mt. Royal Station, 10.54, A.M.
Arrive Philadelphia, Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts. at 12.53, P.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music, at 8.15, P. M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.
Leave Philadelphia, Reading Terminal, Twelfth and Market Streets, Thursday, November 8, at 10.30 A.M.
Arrive New York, Depot Central Railroad of New Jersey, Ferry foot of Liberty Street, at 12.35, P.M.
Concert at Carnegie Hall, Thursday, Nov. 8, at 8.15, P. M.
Concert at Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Friday, November 9, at 8.15. P. M.
Matinee at Carnegie Hall, Saturday afternoon, November 10, at 2.30.
Leave New York, Grand Central Station, at 5, P. M.
Arrive Boston, South Terminal Station, Saturday, November 10, at 11 P. M.

Instruments must be ready and marked to-night (Sunday), after the Concert.

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

SYMPHONY HALL, HUNTINGTON AND MASS. AVES,
BOSTON, SATURDAY, November 3, 1900. [OVER.]

TWENTIETH SEASON, 1900-1901.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.

1815th to 1820th CONCERT.

DECEMBER ITINERARY.

Leave Boston Sunday, December 9, at 7, P. M. South Terminal Station, Track 16.
Arrive Philadelphia, Broad Street Station Penna. R. R., Monday, December 10, at 7, A.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music at 8.15, P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.
Leave Philadelphia, Tuesday, December 11, Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts., at 10.22, A.M.
Arrive Baltimore, at 12.45, P. M.
Concert at Music Hall, Mount Royal Avenue and Cathedral St., at 8.15, P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.
Leave Baltimore, Camden Street Station, B. & O. R. R., Wednesday, December 12, at 10.50, A.M. Mt. Royal Station, 10.54, A.M.
Arrive Philadelphia, Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts. at 12.53, P.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music, at 8.15, P. M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.
Leave Philadelphia, Reading Terminal, Twelfth and Market Streets, Thursday, December 13, at 10.30 A.M.
Arrive New York, Depot Central Railroad of New Jersey, Ferry foot of Liberty Street, at 12.35, P.M.
Concert at Carnegie Hall, Thursday, Dec. 13, at 8.15, P. M.
Concert at Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Friday, December 14, at 8.15. P. M.
Matinee at Carnegie Hall, Saturday afternoon, December 15, at 2.30.
Leave New York, Grand Central Station, at 5, P. M.
Arrive Boston, South Terminal Station, Saturday, December 15, at 11 P. M.

Instruments must be ready and marked to-night (Saturday), after the Concert.

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

SYMPHONY HALL, HUNTINGTON AND MASS. AVES,
BOSTON, SATURDAY, December 8, 1900. [OVER.]

TWENTIETH SEASON, 1900-1901.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.

1832d to 1837th CONCERT.

JANUARY ITINERARY.

Leave Boston Sunday, January 13, at 7, P. M. South Terminal Station, Track 16.
Arrive Philadelphia, Broad Street Station Penna. R. R., Monday, January 14, at 7, A.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music at 8.15, P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.
Leave Philadelphia, Tuesday, January 15, Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts., at 10.22, A.M.
Arrive Baltimore, at 12.45, P. M.
Concert at Music Hall, Mount Royal Avenue and Cathedral St., at 8.15, P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.
Leave Baltimore, Camden Street Station, B. & O. R. R., Wednesday, January 16, at 10.50, A.M. Mt. Royal Station, 10.54, A.M.
Arrive Philadelphia, Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts. at 12.53, P.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music, at 8.15, P. M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.
Leave Philadelphia, Reading Terminal, Twelfth and Market Streets, Thursday, January 17, at 10.30 A.M.
Arrive New York, Depot Central Railroad of New Jersey, Ferry foot of Liberty Street, at 12.35, P.M.
Concert at Carnegie Hall, Thursday, January 17, at 8.15, P. M.
Concert at Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Friday, January 18, at 8.15. P. M.
Matinee at Carnegie Hall, Saturday afternoon, January 19, at 2.30.
Leave New York, Grand Central Station, at 5, P. M.
Arrive Boston, South Terminal Station, Saturday, January 19, at 11 P. M.

Instruments must be ready and marked to-night (Saturday), after the Concert.

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

SYMPHONY HALL, HUNTINGTON AND MASS. AVES,
BOSTON, SATURDAY, January 12, 1901. [OVER.]

TWENTIETH SEASON, 1900-1901.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.

1850th to 1855th CONCERT.

FEBRUARY ITINERARY.

Leave Boston Monday, February 18, at 10.03, A. M. South Terminal Station, Track 16.
Arrive New York 4.30 P. M.
Concert at Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Monday, February 18, at 8.15. P. M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.
Leave New York, Depot Central Railroad of New Jersey, Ferry foot of Liberty Street, Tuesday, February 19, at 10 A. M.
Arrive Baltimore, at 2.30, P. M.
Concert at Music Hall, Mount Royal Avenue and Cathedral St., at 8.15, P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.
Leave Baltimore, Camden Street Station, B. & O. R. R., Wednesday, February 20, at 10.50, A.M. Mt. Royal Station, 10.54, A.M.
Arrive Philadelphia, Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts. at 12.53, P.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music, at 8.15, P. M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.
Leave Philadelphia, Reading Terminal, Twelfth and Market Streets, Thursday, February 21, at 10.30 A.M.
Arrive New York, Depot Central Railroad of New Jersey, Ferry foot of Liberty Street, at 12.35, P.M.
Concert at Carnegie Hall, Thursday, February 21, at 8.15, P. M.
Leave New York, C. R. R. of N. J., foot Liberty St., Friday, February 22, at 1 P. M.
Arrive Philadelphia 3.30 P. M.
Concert at Academy of Music at 8 P. M.
Leave Philadephia by special train from Reading terminal, 12th and Market Sts., at 10.40 P. M.
Matinee at Carnegie Hall, Saturday afternoon, February 23, at 2.30.
Leave New York, Grand Central Station, at 5, P. M.
Arrive Boston, South Terminal Station, Saturday, February 23, at 11 P. M.

Instruments must be ready and marked to-night (Saturday), after the Concert.

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

SYMPHONY HALL, HUNTINGTON AND MASS. AVES,
BOSTON, SATURDAY, February 16, 1901. [OVER.]

[12]

PROGRAMMES.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC, . . . PHILADELPHIA,

MONDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 5, AT 8.15.

WEBER.	OVERTURE to "Euryanthe."
DOHNANYI.	CONCERTO, for Pianoforte.
SCHUBERT	BALLET-MOVEMENT, and Entr'acte from "Rosamunde."
DVORAK.	SYMPHONY No. 5.

Soloist: Mr. ERNST DOHNANYI.

MUSIC HALL, ... BALTIMORE,

TUESDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 6, AT 8.15.

MOZART.	OVERTURE, "Magic Flute."
DOHNANYI.	CONCERTO, for Pianoforte.
SCHUBERT.	BALLET-MOVEMENT, and Entr'acte from "Rosamunde."
BEETHOVEN.	SYMPHONY No. 5.

Soloist: Mr. ERNST DOHNANYI.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC, ... PHILADELPHIA,

WEDNESDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 7, AT 8.15.

BERLIOZ.	OVERTURE, "The Roman Carnival."
RAFF.	ARIA, "Traum Konig."
MASSENET.	SUITE, "Esclarmonde."
WAGNER.	ARIA, from "Rienzi."
SCHUMANN.	SYMPHONY No. 2.

Soloist: Miss GERTRUDE MAY STEIN.

CARNEGIE HALL, ... NEW YORK,

THURSDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 8, AT 8.15.

BERLIOZ.	OVERTURE, "The Roman Carnival."
DOHNANYI	CONCETO, for Pianoforte.
CARL GOLDMARK.	SCHERZO. in A major.
DVORAK.	SYMPHONY No. 5.

Soloist: Mr. ERNST DOHNANYI.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC, ... BROOKLYN,

FRIDAY EVENING, NOVEMBRR 9, AT 8.15.

BERLIOZ.	OVERTURE, "The Roman Carnival."
DOHNANYI.	CONCERTO, for Pianoforte.
SCHUBERT.	BALLET-MOVEMENT, and Entr'acte from "Rosamunde."
DVORAK.	SYMPHONY No. 5.

Soloist: Mr. ERNST DOHNANYI.

CARNEGIE HALL, ... NEW YORK,

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 10, AT 2.30.

WEBER.	OVERTURE to "Euryanthe."
RAFF.	ARIA, "Traum Konig."
MASSENET.	SUITE, "Esclarmonde."
WAGNER.	ARIA from "Rienzi."
BEETHOVEN.	SYMPHONY No. 5.

Soloist: Miss GERTRUDE MAY STEIN. [OVER.]

PROGRAMMES.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC, . . . PHILADELPHIA,

MONDAY EVENING, JANUARY 14, AT 8.15.

WEBER.	OVERTURE, "Jubel."
HAYDN.	CONCERTO for Violoncello.
WAGNER.	WALDWEBEN from "Siegfried."
RICHARD STRAUSS.	SYMPHONIC FANTASIE, "In Italy."

Soloist: Mr. HUGO BECKER.

MUSIC HALL, ... BALTIMORE,

TUESDAY EVENING, JANUARY 15, AT 8.15.

SCHUMANN.	OVERTURE, Scherzo, and Finale.
HAYDN.	CONCERTO for Violoncello.
TCHAIKOVSKY.	SYMPHONY No. 5.

Soloist: Mr. HUGO BECKER.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC, . . . PHILADELPHIA,

WEDNESDAY EVENING, JANUARY 16, AT 8.15.

MOZART.	SYMPHONY in G minor, No. 40.
CESAR FRANCK.	SYMPHONIC Variations for Piano and Orchestra.
SCHUBERT.	FUNERAL MARCH.
LISZT.	SYMPHONIC Poem No. 3, "The Preludes."

Soloist: Mr. COURTLANDT PALMER.

CARNEGIE HALL, ... NEW YORK,

THURSDAY EVENING, JANUARY 17, AT 8.15.

SCHUMANN.	OVERTURE, Scherzo and Finale.
HAYDN.	CONCERTO for Violoncello.
RICHARD STRAUSS.	SYMPHONIC Fantasie, "In Italy."

Soloist: Mr, HUGO BECKER.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC, ... BROOKLYN,

FRIDAY EVENING, JANUARY 18, AT 8.15.

MOZART.	SYMPHONY in G minor, No. 40.
HAYDN.	CONCERTO for Violoncello.
WAGNER.	WALDWEBEN from "Siegfried."
LISZT.	SYMPHONIC Poem No. 3, "The Preludes."

Soloist: Mr. HUGO BECKER.

CARNEGIE HALL, ... NEW YORK,

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 19, AT 2.30.

TCHAIKOVSKY.	SYMPHONY No. 5, in E minor.
CESAR FRANCK.	SYMPHONIC Variations for Piano and Orchestra.
LISZT.	SYMPHONIC Poem No 3, "The Preludes."

Soloist: Mr. COURTLANDT PALMER. [OVER.]

PROGRAMMES.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC, . . . PHILADELPHIA,

MONDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 5, AT 8.15.

WEBER.	OVERTURE to "Euryanthe."
DOHNANYI.	CONCERTO, for Pianoforte.
SCHUBERT	BALLET-MOVEMENT, and Entr'acte from "Rosamunde."
DVORAK.	SYMPHONY No. 5.

Soloist: Mr. ERNST DOHNANYI.

MUSIC HALL, ... BALTIMORE,

TUESDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 6, AT 8.15.

MOZART.	OVERTURE, "Magic Flute."
DOHNANYI.	CONCERTO, for Pianoforte.
SCHUBERT.	BALLET-MOVEMENT, and Entr'acte from "Rosamunde."
BEETHOVEN.	SYMPHONY No. 5.

Soloist: Mr. ERNST DOHNANYI.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC, ... PHILADELPHIA,

WEDNESDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 7, AT 8.15.

BERLIOZ.	OVERTURE, "The Roman Carnival."
RAFF.	ARIA, "Traum Konig."
MASSENET.	SUITE, "Esclarmonde."
WAGNER.	ARIA, from "Rienzi."
SCHUMANN.	SYMPHONY No. 2.

Soloist: Miss GERTRUDE MAY STEIN.

CARNEGIE HALL, ... NEW YORK,

THURSDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 8, AT 8.15.

BERLIOZ.	OVERTURE, "The Roman Carnival."
DOHNANYI	CONCETO, for Pianoforte.
CARL GOLDMARK.	SCHERZO, in A major.
DVORAK.	SYMPHONY No. 5.

Soloist: Mr. ERNST DOHNANYI.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC, ... BROOKLYN,

FRIDAY EVENING, NOVEMBRR 9, AT 8.15.

BERLIOZ.	OVERTURE, "The Roman Carnival."
DOHNANYI.	CONCERTO, for Pianoforte.
SCHUBERT.	BALLET-MOVEMENT, and Entr'acte from "Rosamunde."
DVORAK.	SYMPHONY No. 5.

Soloist: Mr. ERNST DOHNANYI.

CARNEGIE HALL, ... NEW YORK,

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 10, AT 2.30.

WEBER.	OVERTURE to "Euryanthe."
RAFF.	ARIA, "Traum Konig."
MASSENET.	SUITE, "Esclarmonde."
WAGNER.	ARIA from "Rienzi."
BEETHOVEN.	SYMPHONY No. 5.

Soloist: Miss GERTRUDE MAY STEIN. [OVER.]

PROGRAMMES.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC, . . . PHILADELPHIA,

MONDAY EVENING, JANUARY 14, AT 8.15.

WEBER.	OVERTURE, "Jubel."
HAYDN.	CONCERTO for Violoncello.
WAGNER.	WALDWEBEN from "Siegfried."
RICHARD STRAUSS	SYMPHONIC FANTASIE, "In Italy."

Soloist: Mr. HUGO BECKER.

MUSIC HALL, ... BALTIMORE,

TUESDAY EVENING, JANUARY 15, AT 8.15.

SCHUMANN.	OVERTURE, Scherzo, and Finale.
HAYDN.	CONCERTO for Violoncello.
TCHAIKOVSKY.	SYMPHONY No. 5.

Soloist: Mr. HUGO BECKER.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC, ... PHILADELPHIA,

WEDNESDAY EVENING, JANUARY 16, AT 8.15.

MOZART.	SYMPHONY in G minor, No. 40.
CESAR FRANCK.	SYMPHONIC Variations for Piano and Orchestra.
SCHUBERT.	FUNERAL MARCH.
LISZT.	SYMPHONIC Poem No. 3, "The Preludes."

Soloist: Mr. COURTLANDT PALMER.

CARNEGIE HALL, ... NEW YORK.

THURSDAY EVENING, JANUARY 17, AT 8.15.

SCHUMANN.	OVERTURE, Scherzo and Finale.
HAYDN.	CONCERTO for Violoncello.
RICHARD STRAUSS.	SYMPHONIC Fantasie, "In Italy."

Soloist: Mr. HUGO BECKER.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC, ... BROOKLYN.

FRIDAY EVENING, JANUARY 18, AT 8.15.

MOZART.	SYMPHONY in G minor, No. 40.
HAYDN.	CONCERTO for Violoncello.
WAGNER.	WALDWEBEN from "Siegfried."
LISZT.	SYMPHONIC Poem No. 3, "The Preludes."

Soloist: Mr. HUGO BECKER.

CARNEGIE HALL, ... NEW YORK.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 19, AT 2.30.

TCHAIKOVSKY.	SYMPHONY No. 5, in E minor.
CESAR FRANCK.	SYMPHONIC Variations for Piano and Orchestra.
LISZT.	SYMPHONIC Poem No 3, "The Preludes."

Soloist: Mr. COURTLANDT PALMER. [OVER.]

TW

Boston

MR. WIL

NOV

Leave Boston Sun
Station, Track
Arrive Philadelphia
November 5, a
CONTINENTAL H
Concert at Academy
Hotel baggage not
owner's expens
Leave Philadelphia,
Twenty-fourth
Arrive Baltimore, a Concert at Music
at 8.15, P.M.
Hotel baggage not
owner's expen
Leave Baltimore,
day, Novembe
Arrive Philadelphi
CONTINENTAL
Concert at Academ
Hotel baggage not
owner's expen
Leave Philadelphi
Thursday, No
Arrive New York, foot of Liber
Concert at Carne
Concert at Acade
8.15. P. M.
Matinee at Carne
Leave New York,
Arrive Boston,
at 11 P. M.
Instruments m
the Concert.

SYMPHONY HALL
BOSTON, SA

PROGRAMMES.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC, . . . PHILADELPHIA,
MONDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 10, AT 8.15.

MENDELSSOHN.	OVERTURE, "Sea-calm and Prosperous Voyage."
LACHNER.	ARIA from "Katarina Cornaro."
SMETANA.	"From Bohemia's Groves and Meadows."
WAGNER.	PRELUDE and "Isolde's Love-Death," from "Tristan and Isolde."
GOLDMARK.	SYMPHONY No. 2.

Soloist: Miss TERNINA.

MUSIC HALL, ... BALTIMORE,
TUESDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 11, AT 8.15.

WEBER.	OVERTURE to "Euryanthe."
LACHNER.	ARIA from "Katarina Cornaro."
SMETANA.	"From Bohemia's Groves and Meadows."
WAGNER.	PRELUDE and "Isolde's Love-Death."
BRAHMS	SYMPHONY No. 1, in C minor.

Soloist: Miss TERNINA.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC, . . . PHILADELPHIA,
WEDNESDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 12, AT 8.15.

BEETHOVEN.	SYMPHONY No. 5.
TCHAIKOVSKY.	CONCERTO for Pianoforte, No. 1.
BIZET.	LITTLE SUITE, "Children's Games."
WAGNER.	OVERTURE to "Tannhauser."

Soloist: Mr. GEORGE W. PROCTOR.

CARNEGIE HALL, ... NEW YORK,
THURSDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 13, AT 8.15.

BRAHMS.	SYMPHONY No. 1.
SCHUMANN.	CONCERTO for Pianoforte.
SMETANA.	"From Bohemia's Groves and Meadows."
WAGNER.	OVERTURE to "Tannhauser."

Soloist: Mr. OSSIP GABRILOWITSCH.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC, ... BROOKLYN,
FRIDAY EVENING, DECEMBRR 14, AT 8.15.

MENDELSSOHN.	OVERTURE "Sea-calm and Prosperous Voyage."
BRAHMS.	CONCERTO for Violin.
BIZET.	LITTLE SUITE "Children's Games."
BEETHOVEN.	SYMPHONY No. 1.

Soloist: Mr. FRANZ KNEISEL.

CARNEGIE HALL, ... NEW YORK,
SATURDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 15, AT 2.30.

GOLDMARK.	SYMPHONY No. 2.
BRAHMS.	CONCERTO for Violin.
TANEYEFF.	OVERTURE to "The Oresteia" of Æschylus.
LISZT.	Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2.

Soloist: Mr. FRANZ KNEISEL. [OVER.]

PROGRAMMES.

B

Leav

Arriv

Co
Conc
Hote

Leav

Arriv
Conc

Hotel

Leav

Arriv
Co
Conc
Hote

Leav

Arriv

Conc
Conc

Mati
Leav
Arriv

In
the

SYMI

ACADEMY OF MUSIC, ... BROOKLYN,
MONDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 18, AT 8.15.

BEETHOVEN.	OVERTURE to "Fidelio."
SCHUMANN.	CONCERTO for Pianoforte.
DVORAK.	RHAPSODY No. 3.
BRAHMS.	SYMPHONY No. 1.

Soloist: Miss ADELE AUS DER OHE.

MUSIC HALL, ... BALTIMORE,
TUESDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 19, AT 8.15.

BRAHMS.	ACADEMIC FESTIVAL OVERTURE.
LISZT.	CONCERTO for Pianoforte, No. 1.
BERLIOZ.	FANTASTIC SYMPHONY.

Soloist: Miss AUS DER OHE.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC, . . . PHILADELPHIA,
WEDNESDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 20, AT 8.15.

BEETHOVEN.	OVERTURE to "Fidelio."
SCHUMANN.	CONCERTO for Pianoforte.
LOEFFLER.	"THE DEATH OF TINTAGILES."
BRAHMS.	SYMPHONY No. 1.

Soloist: Miss AUS DER OHE.

CARNEGIE HALL, ... NEW YORK,
THURSDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 21, AT 8.15.

BEETHOVEN.	OVERTURE to "Fidelio."
LISZT.	CONCERTO for Pianoforte, No. 1.
LOEFFLER.	"THE DEATH OF TINTAGILES."
BERLIOZ.	FANTASTIC SYMPHONY.

Soloist: Miss AUS DER OHE.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC, . . . PHILADELPHIA,
FRIDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 22, AT 8.15.

BRAHMS.	ACADEMIC FESTIVAL OVERTURE.
MENDELSSOHN.	CONCERTO for Violin.
DVORAK.	RHAPSODY No. 3.
BEETHOVEN.	SYMPHONY No. 3.

Soloist: Mr. FRITZ KREISLER.

CARNEGIE HALL, ... NEW YORK,
SATURDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 23, AT 2.30.

BRAHMS.	ACADEMIC FESTIVAL OVERTURE.
BEETHOVEN.	CONCERTO for Violin.
SAINT-SAENS.	SYMPHONY No. 3.

Soloist: Mr. FRITZ KREISLER. [OVER.]

TWENTIETH SEASON, 1900-1901.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.

1865th to 1870th CONCERT.

MARCH ITINERARY.

Leave Boston Sunday, March 17, at 7, P. M. South Terminal Station, Track 16.

Arrive Philadelphia, Broad Street Station Penna. R. R., Monday, March 18, at 7, A.M.

CONTINENTAL HOTEL.

Concert at Academy of Music at 8.15, P.M.

Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.

Leave Philadelphia, Tuesday, March 19, Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts., at 10.22, A.M.

Arrive Baltimore, at 12.45, P.M.

Concert at Music Hall, Mount Royal Avenue and Cathedral St., at 8.15, P.M.

Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.

Leave Baltimore, Camden Street Station, B. & O. R. R., Wednesday, March 20, at 10.50, A.M. Mt. Royal Station, 10.54, A.M.

Arrive Philadelphia, Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts. at 12.53, P.M.

CONTINENTAL HOTEL.

Concert at Academy of Music, at 8.15, P. M.

Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.

Leave Philadelphia, Reading Terminal, Twelfth and Market Streets, Thursday, March 21, at 10.30 A.M.

Arrive New York, Depot Central Railroad of New Jersey, Ferry foot of Liberty Street, at 12.35, P.M.

Concert at Carnegie Hall, Thursday, March 21, at 8.15, P. M.

Concert at Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Friday, March 22, at 8.15. P. M.

Matinee at Carnegie Hall, Saturday afternoon, March 23, at 2.30.

Leave New York, Grand Central Station, at 5, P. M.

Arrive Boston, South Terminal Station, Saturday, March 23, at 11 P. M.

Instruments must be ready and marked to-night (Saturday), after the Concert.

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

SYMPHONY HALL, HUNTINGTON AND MASS. AVES,
BOSTON, SATURDAY, March 16, 1901.

[OVER.]

PROGRAMMES.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC, ... PHILADELPHIA,
MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 18, AT 8.15.

SCHUMANN. SYMPHONY No. 3.
LISZT. CONCERTO for PIANOFORTE.
CÆSAR FRANCK. SYMPHONIC POEM, "The Accursed Huntsman."
BERLIOZ. OVERTURE to "Benvenuto Cellini."
Soloist: Mr. LEOPOLD GODOWSKY.

MUSIC HALL, ... BALTIMORE,
TUESDAY EVENING, MARCH 19, AT 8.15.

SCHUMANN. SYMPHONY No. 3.
D'ALBERT. CONCERTO for VIOLONCELLO.
BRAHMS. VARIATIONS on a THEME by Haydn.
WAGNER. OVERTURE to "Tannhauser."
Soloist: Mr. ALWIN SCHROEDER.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC, ... PHILADELPHIA,
WEDNESDAY EVENING, MARCH 20, AT 8.15.

DVORAK. OVERTURE to "Othello."
D'ALBERT. CONCERTO for VIOLONCELLO.
SCHUBERT. SYMPHONY No. 9.
Soloist: ALWIN SCHROEDER.

CARNEGIE HALL, ... NEW YORK,
THURSDAY EVENING, MARCH 21, AT 8.15.

DVORAK. OVERTURE to "Othello."
BRAHMS. VARIATIONS on a THEME by Haydn.
SCHUBERT. SYMPHONY No. 9.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC, ... BROOKLYN,
FRIDAY EVENING, MARCH 22, AT 8.15.

SCHUMANN. SYMPHONY No. 3.
LISZT. CONCERTO for PIANOFORTE.
CÆSAR FRANCK. SYMPHONIC POEM, "The Accursed Huntsman."
WAGNER. OVERTURE to "Tannhauser."
Soloist: Mr. LEOPOLD GODOWSKY.

CARNEGIE HALL, ... NEW YORK,
SATURDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 23, AT 2.30.

SCHUMANN. SYMPHONY No. 3.
LISZT. CONCERTO for PIANOFORTE.
CÆSAR FRANCK. SYMPHONIC POEM, "The Accursed Huntsman."
BERLIOZ. OVERTURE to "Benvenuto Cellini."
Soloist: Mr. LEOPOLD GODOWSKY. [OVER.]

NS CHRISTENED SYMPHONY HALL.

Name Given to Boston's New Temple of Music.

Sale of Tickets for Symphony Orchestra Concerts Opens There Monday Morning, Sept. 24—Conductor Gericke's Eighth Season—Notable Soloists.

NOTHING could possibly exemplify the intense significance of the annual announcement of the Boston Symphony Orchestra so much as to omit these concerts for a single season. Let the patrons of these concerts for the past 19 years look elsewhere for their orchestral music, and such a demand for the return of the old standard performance would go forth as would brook no refusal. Thanks to one individual who cherishes as an ideal the best in music, no such dire dilemma is possible, and, thanks to some 400 generous and public-spirited patrons, at last, after many years of patient waiting made tolerable only by the exquisite finish of the orchestral work, Boston is to have a hall worthy of its public and its organization.

Of this same body of musicians there is required no proclamation of greater perfection, only the simple assurance already accepted, that the record of the past will be equalled.

Symphony Hall, as the new edifice at the corner of Huntington and Massachusetts avenues is to be styled, should satisfy every genuine admirer of a healthful combination of the artistic, the useful and the beautiful. To satisfy everybody would indeed be the eighth wonder of the world, but the opinion is ventured that the great majority will be pleased.

Among the soloists who will appear at these concerts this season are Mme. Ternina, Mme. Schumann-Heink, Miss Aus Der Ohe, Messrs. Dohnanyi, Godowsky, Gebhardt, Goodrich, Kneisel, Loeffler, Adamowski, Roth, Becker and Schroeder.

Mr. Gericke, who begins his eighth season as conductor and the third of his present regime, during his three months' sojourn abroad, has discovered attractive novelties with which to enrich his programmes.

Unless all signs fail, the sale of season tickets, which opens at Symphony Hall on Monday morning, Sept. 24, at 10 o'clock, will break all records. With a total seating capacity of 2569, there are exactly 172 more seats than in the old Music Hall, and the subdivision of prices will leave about the same number of $12 and $7.50 seats as before.

The $12 seats for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals will be sold on Monday, Sept. 24; the $7.50 seats for the same series will be sold on Tuesday, Sept. 25, and the $12 and $7.50 tickets for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold on Thursday and Friday, Sept. 27 and 28, respectively. Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice, and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram and will be marked off as sold.

When I heard last week that it was to be christened "Symphony Hall" I wouldn't believe my ears, and refrained from mentioning the chosen name even as a possibility. But it seems it is too true. Musical Boston has lost its real music hall forever, and "Symphony Hall," is its la da da substitute! But why not "Nocturne Hall," or "Kappelmeister Hall," or "Sostenuto Hall," or, in fact, why not "Oratorio Hall"? These titles are no sillier than Symphony, and quite as appropriate for a hall which is to be devoted to all forms of musical entertainment. The prettiest thing to have done, if a distinctive name must be given, was to call this longed-for building Higginson Hall. That is a compliment to Boston's greatest music patron, to which every lover of the Symphony orchestra would subscribe many times over. I do wonder who spoiled a dignified "temple of art" by saddling it with that mountain resort barge sort of a name!

T T T T

The cat is out of the bag.

The dear Symphony girls have been puzzling their dizzy heads to know how they were to distinguish between the old Music Hall and the new Music Hall without going into an explanatory conversation as to which they mean.

The new temple of music, at the corner of Massachusetts and Huntington avenues, will be called Symphony Hall.

The announcement in tomorrow's papers of the sale of season tickets for the symphonies this winter in the new place will proclaim the name decided upon.

It is a very appropriate name and one which the music loving patrons of Boston will take to.

✣ ✣ ✣ ✣

How finely Symphony Hall sounds! Well named is our beautiful new hall of music. Every one of the many who have looked in at the big building during these weeks and been so courteously shown about, is delighted with the arrangements, the coloring, the light and the air of elegance and luxurious comfort everywhere. Mr. Ellis, Mr. Comee and others of the Symphony orchestra staff have commodious and finely fitted up offices. The symphony ticket auction will be at the hall on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday of next week, beginning at 10 o'clock. Half an hour before the sale on each day the splendid new organ will be played.

DOFF THE HATS.

City Regulation Strikes the Eye of Patrons of the New Symphony Hall as They Glance at the Concert Programs.

Some feminine eyes opened wide in surprise when, glancing over the concert program in the new Symphony Hall, they read the very last paragraph on the very last page. Within a red-bordered box were these words

> CITY OF BOSTON, REVISED REGULATION OF AUG. 5, 1898, CHAPTER 8, RELATING TO THE COVERING OF THE HEAD IN PLACES OF PUBLIC AMUSEMENT.
>
> Every licensee shall not, in his place of amusement, allow any person to wear upon the head a covering which obstructs the view of the exhibition or performance in such place of any person seated in any seat therein provided for spectators, it being understood that a low head covering, without projection, which does not obstruct such view, may be worn. Attest:
> J. M. GALVIN, City Clerk.

Here, seemingly, was an innovation, for the Symphony patrons did not remember seeing anything more than a simple request for the removal of hats on the programs last year in the old hall of music. This latest announcement appeared to be mandatory.

Some of the women who attend rehearsals in the afternoon said they did not think it was necessary to disarrange their hair and hide from sight beautiful creations of the milliner's art; others had become so accustomed to laying aside their hats at the theatres of the town that they did so mechanically, without a thought. A majority of those who go to the concerts in the evening ride in private carriages, and leave home unadorned, as to heads, by what might obstruct a view of the orchestra stage, consequently such did not fall to discussing the words in the red-bordered box.

There were individuals who argued that the law had been changed since Aug. 5, 1898, but they were wrong, because it is stated at the office of the City Clerk that neither repeal nor amendment has been recorded since that date.

Maj. Higginson said yesterday that the ordinance being in existence, it was placed on the program for the information of the patrons. Personally, he thought that the ladies should be fair and be willing to give everybody a free view of the stage.

Another gentleman declared that the Symphony management wouldn't play policeman, but the City Government had passed the ordinance and made it possible for any aggrieved person, with his line of vision obstructed, to enter complaint against a flaring hat. He remembered that last year at least one man was vexed because he had paid a large sum for his tickets and yet could not get a peek at the orchestra and the soloists. In conclusion, he remarked that excellent facilities for checking clothing of all kinds had been provided in the new Smphony Hall.

What seemed at first blush to be an innovation will probably turn out to be no innovation at all. The gracious women with musical tastes can be depended upon to wear hats, if they wear any, against which the meanest man on earth couldn't find an indictment.

Poor Mr. Owen Wister! Why did he find it necessary to tell the audience in Symphony Hall what he had thought of doing, what he might have done, and what he did not do? The audience was not interested in Mr. Wister's mental operations, doubts, hopes, perturbations; the peculiar introduction, which smacked of undue self-appreciation, prejudiced the audience against the poem; and the length of the poem and the halting delivery of the Bard from Philadelphia proved the sweet reasonableness of this prejudice. We heard one of the audience ask why Mr. Wister alluded so feelingly to Romona, and we felt like answering, "Because it is a good apple year;" but what Mr. Wister said was "Cremona."

G. F. M. writes: "Is it true that the Cecilia received over $800 for its services Monday night at Symphony Hall?" We do not know. Why do you not write to the Secretary of the honorable body? He would be charmed, especially if you should inclose a two-cent stamp.

Mr. Wyatt Subscribes To Concerts.

Mr. J. B. Noel Wyatt, the well-known Baltimore architect, has subscribed $200 to seats for the Boston Symphony concerts to be given in Baltimore. Mr. Wyatt will distribute the seats to members of the Maryland School for the Blind and others.

During a recent visit to Boston Mr. Wyatt was struck with the opportunity given students and others in that city to hear the concerts for 25 cents. On his return he wrote to Mr. Fred R. Comee, of the Boston Symphony organization, making the subscription, so that the plan could be put in practice in Baltimore.

Mr. Wyatt Subscribes To Concerts.

Mr. J. B. Noel Wyatt, the well-known Baltimore architect, has subscribed $200 to seats for the Boston Symphony concerts to be given in Baltimore. Mr. Wyatt will distribute the seats to members of the Maryland School for the Blind and others.

During a recent visit to Boston Mr. Wyatt was struck with the opportunity given students and others in that city to hear the concerts for 25 cents. On his return he wrote to Mr. Fred R. Comee, of the Boston Symphony organization, making the subscription, so that the plan could be put in practice in Baltimore.

The sale of season tickets for the Boston Symphony Orchestra series of concerts has progressed so far as to indicate that the present season will be the largest in its history. The single-ticket sale will begin in a few days. The programme for the first concert is one of exceptional beauty. It begins with Mozart's beautiful overture to the "Magic Flute," and closes with Beethoven's grand Fifth Symphony, which many proclaim to be his best. Between these numbers will appear Schubert's "Ballet Music" and "Entr'acte" from "Rosamunde" and the Dohnanyi piano concerto in E minor, played by the composer. This will be the first performance of this concerto in Baltimore.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The sale of season tickets for the Boston Symphony Orchestra series of concerts has now progressed so far as to indicate that the present season will be the largest in the history of these concerts. The single ticket sale will begin in a few days, and then those who do not wish to subscribe for all concerts will have an opportunity to secure seats for the first concert. The program for the first concert is one of exceptional beauty. It begins with Mozart's beautiful overture to the "Magic Flute," and closes with Beethoven's grand Fifth Symphony, which many proclaim to be his best. Between these numbers will appear Schubert's "Ballet Music" and "Entr'acte" from "Rosamunde," and the Dohnanyi piano concerto in E Minor, played by the composer. This will be the first performance of this concerto in Baltimore. Mr. Gericke, the director of the orchestra, relates an interesting story in connection with the Dohnanyi concerto. It seems that a certain piano manufacturer in Vienna offered three prizes for the best pianoforte concerto, 2,000 florins to the first winner, 1,000 to the second and 500 to the third. Mr. Gericke himself was selected as one of the judges, and associated with him were Professors Leschetizky and Epstein. Compositions were received from Germany, England, Bohemia and Holland. Mr. Gericke himself examined over seventy-two works, but was obliged to leave for America before completing the entire list. At the time when the competitors sent in their compositions Mr. Dohnanyi had not finished his concerto, and so submitted only the first movement. This work was so pre-eminently superior to all the others that Mr. Gericke left a letter on his departure, addressed to the other judges, stating that in his opinion Mr. Dohnanyi's composition was far ahead of all the others, in which decision his associates concurred.

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

Sale Of Seats Promises A Very Successful Season.

The sale of season tickets for the Boston Symphony series of concerts is progressing favorably, and the indications are that the present season will be the largest in the history of these concerts. The programme for the first concert is particularly attractive. It begins with Mozart's beautiful overture to the "Magic Flute" and closes with Beethoven's grand fifth symphony, which many proclaim to be his best. Between these numbers will appear Schubert's "Ballet Music" and "Entr'acte" from "Rosamunde" and the Dohnanyi piano concerto in E minor, played by the composer. This will be the first performance of this concerto in Baltimore, and it will no doubt have a special attractiveness for musicians. The story connected with it is interesting. A certain piano manufacturer in Vienna offered three prizes for the best pianoforte concerto. Mr. Gericke was selected as one of the judges, and associated with him were Professors Leschetizky and Epstein. Compositions were received from Germany, England, Bohemia and Holland. Mr. Gericke himself examined over 72 works, but was obliged to leave for America before completing the entire list. At the time when the competitors sent in their compositions Mr. Dohnanyi had not finished his concerto and so submitted only the first movement. This work was so pre-eminently superior to all the others that Mr. Gericke left a letter on his departure, addressed to the other judges, stating that in his opinion Mr. Dohnanyi's composition was far ahead of all the others, in which decision his associates concurred. The sale of single seats will begin in a few days.

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

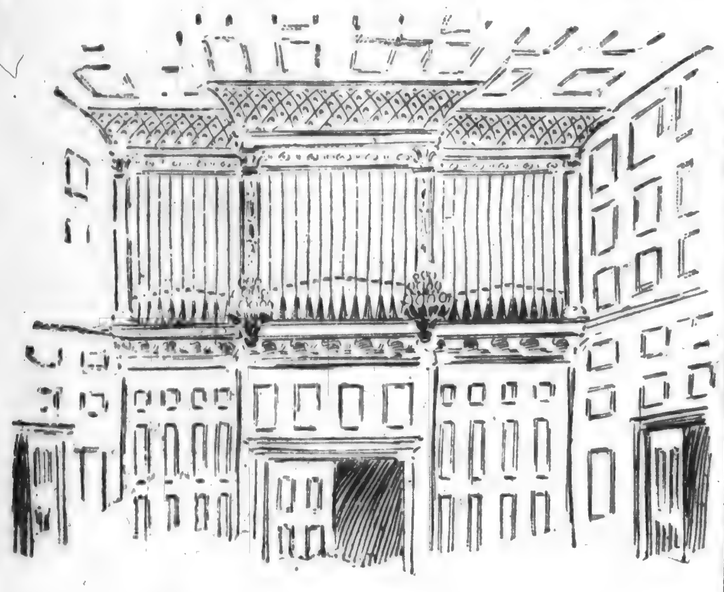
Sale Of Seats Promises A Very Successful Season.

The sale of season tickets for the Boston Symphony series of concerts is progressing favorably, and the indications are that the present season will be the largest in the history of these concerts. The programme for the first concert is particularly attractive. It begins with Mozart's beautiful overture to the "Magic Flute" and closes with Beethoven's grand fifth symphony, which many proclaim to be his best. Between these numbers will appear Schubert's "Ballet Music" and "Entr'acte" from "Rosamunde" and the Dohnanyi piano concerto in E minor, played by the composer. This will be the first performance of this concerto in Baltimore, and it will no doubt have a special attractiveness for musicians. The story connected with it is interesting. A certain piano manufacturer in Vienna offered three prizes for the best pianoforte concerto. Mr. Gericke was selected as one of the judges, and associated with him were Professors Leschetizky and Epstein. Compositions were received from Germany, England, Bohemia and Holland. Mr. Gericke himself examined over 72 works, but was obliged to leave for America before completing the entire list. At the time when the competitors sent in their compositions Mr. Dohnanyi had not finished his concerto and so submitted only the first movement. This work was so pre-eminently superior to all the others that Mr. Gericke left a letter on his departure, addressed to the other judges, stating that in his opinion Mr. Dohnanyi's composition was far ahead of all the others, in which decision his associates concurred. The sale of single seats will begin in a few days.

BLANK PAGE

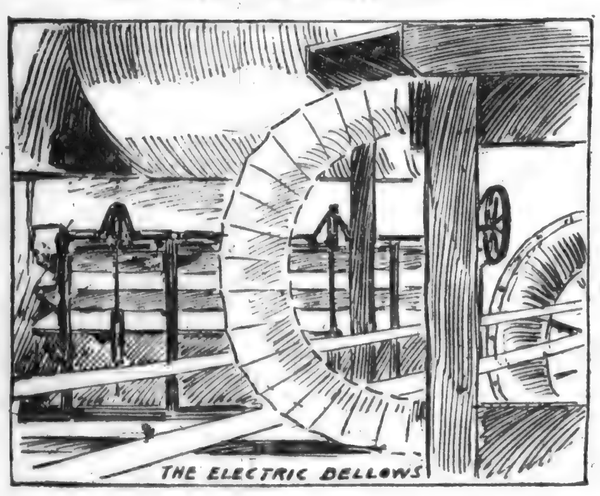
IT'S A WONDERFUL INSTRUMENT.

Organ in New Symphony Hall Proves to be Unexcelled by Any in the World.

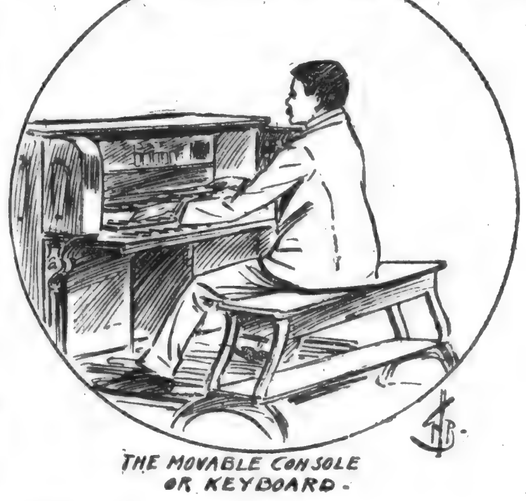


THE FAÇADE OF THE ORGAN.

A GLIMPSE INSIDE THE ORGAN.



THE ELECTRIC BELLOWS.



THE MOVABLE CONSOLE OR KEYBOARD.

THE NEW ORGAN IN SYMPHONY HALL.

The organ in new Symphony hall is a wonderful instrument, for several reasons, and its makers, George S. Hutchings & Co, claim that in all essential particulars there is not another in this country to match it, and not one in the world to excel it.

Those who know all about organs say that the Symphony hall one combines all the dignity and majesty necessary for religious music, with an admirable flexibility and brilliancy for rendering the lightest class of melodies, if desired.

A partial demonstration of its possibilities, both mechanically and musically, was given yesterday afternoon, for the benefit of representatives of the local newspapers, by J. Wallace Goodrich, organist, and Everett M. Skinner, the inventor of several of the attachments that make the organ a notable one, and who superintended its erection.

Mr Goodrich played the instrument by means of a portable keyboard, which might easily be mistaken for a small oak roll-top desk, and which, for the occasion, was located in the middle and at the front of the stage, the organist sitting back to the organ and facing the audience.

The secret of the organist's control of the instrument is a simple cable of about 1½ inches in diameter, composed of 300 and some odd separate wires, which, by a system of switches, or something of that sort, are made to govern the passage of the wind into the more than 3000 pipes which the organ contains.

The cable is carried through a hole in the stage down into the basement, where over 100 feet of it are coiled up for an emergency, and, should occasion ever require, the keyboard may be carried out into the auditorium—even up to the rear of the gallery if desired, and the organ played with as much facility as though the organist were sitting with his nose almost in contact with the pipes.

Two entire new features in this country contained in the new organ are what are known as "the great flute" and "celestial voice," and both need to be heard to be appreciated.

Both names are admirably descriptive of the tones they are applied to—the first being of a particularly full, round and powerful flutelike quality; the second probably being as near the human ideal of angel voices in celestial harmoney as any one can reasonably expect to be permitted to hear in this mundane sphere.

The smallest of the more than 3000 pipes is, of course, of the variety known as a reed, and is just about the size and shape of the stub of a lead pencil, such as one would abandon as of no further use. Its sound is a soft, shrill whistle, finer and higher than the highest note that the average small boy could reach in whistling.

The biggest pipe is the largest and most powerful in tone ever constructed. It is 32 feet long, more than two feet wide and weighs half a ton, and when it is sounded the result is quite remarkable.

The sound is such an extremely low bass that to the musical hearer it would not seem to be a musical tone at all. It is more like the whirr of a powerful dynamo, causing a buzzing in the ears and a perceptible trembling of the entire hall and everything in it. The tone has its value, however, and is known as C C C C to organ experts, but it is chiefly used to reinforce and give body and richness to higher tones, with which it will be used simultaneously.

As the aperture through which the wind passes into this monster pipe is only a half-inch crack, one may imagine from that what power there must be behind the air to produce such a result through so small an inlet.

The wind without the assistance of which all the genius of the organist would avail nothing, comes up through big zinc pipes resembling those that usually carry the hot air from a furnace up through the house.

The "wind room," if such a term may be used, is in the cellar, and is about 15 feet square, and is what the average person would probably call an airtight apartment, for notwithstanding the immense volume of air which the blower carries upstairs—2000 cubic feet a minute—the only visible means for the admission of air to the room is a crevice of less than two inches under the door.

The organ builder says much of the air gets in through the walls, which are of cement and tile, and are constructed with the special object of being sound proof, in order that the buzzing of the electric motor that runs the blower may not be heard in the hall above.

But the blower is only designed for ordinary playing. When the organist wants to "raise the roof" with his half-ton pipes he touches a button that connects the motor to a series of huge bellows, which add a wind pressure just double that of the blower.

After everything visible on the outside of the organ had been explained yesterday afternoon, Mr Skinner took The Globe reporter on a tour of investigation inside of it.

Entrance through a door at the side, on a level with the first balcony, revealed a sort of an alleyway, extending 50 feet or so, right through the organ to the opposite side of the stage, and 60 or 70 feet upward to the ceiling of the hall.

Climbing ladders and straddling across chasms, which to have missed one's footing would probably have meant a broken neck, the investigators found themselves in the very middle of the vast complexity of pipes of every conceivable size.

Against the back wall were the great 16 to 32 footers, and immediately around the visitors, and stretching away in every direction, was what looked like a most wonderful bric-a-brac display, the thousands of metallic reeds, resembling an endless collection of those attenuated vases in which a cluster of three or four long-stemmed roses are usually displayed.

When the organist turned on the music, letting loose the full power of all the "wind-jammers" and the half-ton pipes, the sensation experienced of being in the midst of it all was calculated to give one an idea of what it was like to be on the bridge of the Olympia with Dewey at the battle of Manila.

Boston Daily Globe.

SATURDAY, OCT. 13, 1900.

The inaugural concert in Symphony hall next Monday evening will be a notable event. Eminent soloists, the Boston symphony orchestra and the Cecilia society will participate, with Mr Gericke as conductor.

SUNDAY HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. LVIII., NO. 106.

SUNDAY, OCT. 14, 1900.

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC.

Tomorrow Night's Big Event in Symphony Hall.

Beethoven's Masterpiece by Symphony Orchestra, Cecilia Chorus and Fine Soloists—Organ Opening—"Elijah" by Handel and Haydn Society—Notes.

TOMORROW evening, at the new Symphony Hall, corner of Huntington and Massachusetts avenues, there will be an audience as memorable as the event it will have gathered to celebrate. After 19 years, in which the Boston Symphony orchestra has made a large part of the musical history of America, this organization, unique both in its founding, its maintenance and its personnel, will at last occupy a home worthy of its reputation. In addition to this, a work which a leading musical writer of the day has aptly styled "the masterpiece of Beethoven's masterpieces," the solemn mass in D, will be performed for the first time in this country in its entirety by an augmented chorus of the Cecilia, the Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr. Franz Kneisel, solo violin, and Mr. Wallace Goodrich presiding at the organ, the entire performance to be under the direction of Conductor Wilhelm Gericke. The vocal solos in the mass will be sung by Mme. De Vere-Sapio, Miss Gertrude May Stein, Mr. Evan Williams and Mr. Joseph Baernstein. The programme will open with a chorale by Bach for chorus, organ and orchestra, which will be followed by an address by Mr. Owen Wister. Not only everybody of note in the musical world of Boston will be present, but a large number of visitors from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and even more distant cities, will be in attendance. Recalling the fact that since the dedication of the old Music Hall, 46 years ago, there has been no building erected in Boston of this magnitude and devoted almost entirely to music, it is easy to realize the importance of Monday evening's concert. There has been a very spirited demand for tickets, and, while there is every indication of a full house, a few good locations are still available, for there is really not an undesirable seat in the house.

SYMPHONY HALL ORGAN OPENING.

In including a well equipped organ as one of the features of the new Symphony Hall the new auditorium has been given an attraction which will be fully appreciated by the musical public. There is every reason to anticipate that the new organ will meet the severest demands that may be made upon it. The first recital on this instrument is fixed for the evening of Thursday, the 25th inst., when Mr. J. Wallace Goodrich will exhibit the possibilities of the new organ in a programme having for its selections the following compositions:

Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Pastorale. J. S. Bach
Chorale in B minor.....Cesar Franck
Symphonie Romane (new).....Ch.-M. Widor

Two Choralvorspiele, "Komm' Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist," "An Wasserflussen Babylon".....J. S. Bach
Fantasie in D-flat major, op. 101.....Camille Saint-Saens
"In Paradisum".....Th. Dubois

Tickets for this opening organ recital will go on sale at the Symphony Hall box office tomorrow morning.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick R. Comee left yesterday for New York. Mrs. Comee goes on to Baltimore this week for a visit with friends. Mr. Comee returns tomorrow for the opening of Symphony Hall and later on will join Mrs. Comee in Baltimore.

The rehearsals for the great mass with which Symphony Hall will be opened tomorrow night have been the most interesting events in the music world the past week. By courtesy of the management, special tickets were issued, whereby the singers could invite one guest each, and as the Cecilia chorus and their assisting friends are drawn from the best musical and social sets, this specially privileged private audience was a representative one. The white and gold of the balcony railings was carefully swathed in crash, but the beautiful chandeliers were fully in evidence, and the hall presented quite a gala appearance. Mr. Wallace H. Goodrich is to be at the organ.

The Symphony Hall organ, of which great things are expected, will be heard for the first time tomorrow night, when there will be, doubtless, one of the finest audiences ever gathered in Boston for the dedication of our beautiful new place of music. It is understood that Mr. Higginson will make an address. The first regular organ recital will be on the 25th, when Mr. Wallace Goodrich will play.

[16]

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, OCT. 14, 1900.

Symphony Hall Dedication Tomorrow Night.

Entertainments Announced for the Temple Lyceum Course.

Recitals by Celebrated Organists—Other Harmonic Happenings.

Tomorrow evening, at the new Symphony hall, there will be an audience as memorable as the event they have gathered to celebrate. After 19 years, in which the Boston Symphony orchestra has made a greater part of the musical history of America, this organization, unique both in its founding, its maintenance and its personnel, will at last occupy a home worthy of its reputation. In addition to this, a work which a leading musical writer of the day has aptly styled "the masterpiece of Beethoven's masterpieces," the solemn mass in D, will be performed by an augmented chorus of the Cecilia, the Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr Franz Kneisel, solo violin, and Mr Wallace Goodrich presiding at the organ, the entire performance to be under the direction of conductor Wilhelm Gericke.

The vocal solos in the mass will be sung by Mme De Vere-Sapio, Miss Gertrude May Stein, Mr Evan Williams and Mr Joseph Baernstein. The program will open with the chorale by Bach for chorus, organ and orchestra, which will be followed by an address by Mr Owen Wister.

Not only everybody of note in the musical world of Boston will be present, but a large number of visitors from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and even more distant cities. Recalling the fact that since the dedication of the old Music hall, 46 years ago, there has been no building erected in Boston of this magnitude and devoted almost entirely to music, it is easy to realize the importance of Monday evening's concert. There has been a very spirited demand for tickets, and while there is every indication of a full house, a few good locations are still available, for there is not an undesirable seat in the house.

—The musical world of Boston and other cities await with earnest expectation the opening concert in the Symphony hall tomorrow evening, and a very large and brilliant audience is assured. A splendid program by the orchestra has been made up, and the Cecilia, with an augmented chorus and noted solo performers, will also give valuable assistance. Mr J. Wallace Goodrich will preside at the organ.

SYMPHONY HALL ORGAN OPENING

Including a well-equipped organ as one of the features of Symphony hall, the new auditorium has been given an additional attraction, which will be fully appreciated by the musical public. The instrument has been planned and built with a view to meeting the many and various uses for which it will be needed in coming years, and it is gratifying to know that there is every reason to anticipate that the new organ will meet the severest demands that may be made upon it. The first recital of the instrument is fixed for the evening of Thursday, Oct 25, when Mr J. Wallace Goodrich will exhibit the possibilities of the new organ in a program having for its selections compositions by Bach, St Saens, Widor, Cesar Franck and Dubois. Tickets will go on sale at the Symphony hall box office tomorrow morning.

Boston Journal.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1900.

Tomorrow evening at the new Symphony Hall, corner of Huntington and Massachusetts Avenues, there will be an audience as memorable as the event they have gathered to celebrate. After 19 years, in whichc the Boston Symphony Orchestra has made a greater part of the musical history of America this organiza ion, unique both in its founding, its maintenance and its personnel, will at last occupy a home worthy of its reputation. In addition to this Beethoven's solemn mass in D will be performed by an augmented chorus of the Cecilia, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Franz Kneisel, solo violin, and Mr. Wallace Goodrich, organist. Mr. Gericke will conduct. Not only everybody of note in the musical world of Boston will be present, but a large number of visitors from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and even more distant cities. Recalling the fact that since the dedication of the old Music Hall, 46 years ago, there has been no building erected in Boston of this magnitude and devoted almost entirely to music, it is easy to realize the importance of next Monday evening's concert. There has been a very spirited demand for tickets, and while there is every indication of a full house, a few good seats are still for sale.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

Established 1813.

The Official Paper of the State.

The Official Paper of the City.

MONDAY MORNING, OCT. 15, 1900.

Tonight marks a new era in Boston's musical life, for tonight the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives an inaugural concert in the new Symphony Hall, Massachusetts and Huntington aves. The Cecilia Society will assist and these soloists will be heard: Mme. De Vere, Miss Stein, Mr. Miller and Mr. Baernstein. Mr. Gericke will be the conductor, Mr. Kneisel violin soloist and Mr. Goodrich, organist.

THE BEACON.

OCTOBER 13, 1900.

Apropos of the Symphony rehearsals, what a large number of disappointed music lovers are left out this year! One has only to go about among music students and other musical persons whose purses are not of the heaviest to hear deep lamentations over the high premiums paid and the comparatively few seats to be had for reasonable prices. What a pity it is that we cannot have a third performance of this admirable orchestra! But since this seems to be out of the question, why could not another good orchestra be formed, perhaps not quite so large, and of course we do not expect it to be quite so perfect? We all know that there are many fine musicians in this city who are not in the Boston Symphony orchestra, and who, under a good leader (he need not necessarily be imported), might gladden the ear even of critical Bostonians with the great works from great masters, giving an opportunity for those who now are longing in vain for such pleasure and benefit to steep their souls in sweet sounds. Who will be good enough to start this orchestra?

BOSTON POST,

The Representative Democratic Paper OF NEW ENGLAND.

SUNDAY MORNING, OCTOBER 14, 1900.
(Copyright, 1900, Post Publishing Company.)

Symphony Hall Inaugural Concert.

Tomorrow evening, at the new Symphony Hall, corner of Huntington and Massachusetts avenues, there will be an audience as memorable as the event it will gather to celebrate. After nineteen years, in which the Boston Symphony Orchestra has made a greater part of the musical history of America, this organization, unique both in its founding, its maintenance and its personnel, will at last occupy a home worthy of its reputation.

In addition to this, a work which a leading musical writer of the day has aptly styled "the master-piece of Beethoven's master-pieces," the Solemn Mass in D, will be performed by an augmented chorus of the Cecilia, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Franz Kneisel, solo violin, and Mr. Wallace Goodrich presiding at the organ, the entire performance to be under the direction of Conductor Wilhelm Gericke. The vocal solos in the mass will be sung by Mme. De Vere-Sapio, Gertrude May Stein, Evan Williams and Joseph Baernstein. The programme will open with the chorale of Bach for chorus, organ and orchestra, which will be followed by an address by Owen Wister.

Not only everybody of note in the musical world of Boston will be present, but a large number of visitors from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and even more distant cities. Recalling the fact that since the dedication of the old Music Hall, forty-six years ago, there has been no building erected in Boston of this magnitude and devoted almost entirely to music, it is easy to realize the importance of next Monday evening's concert. There has been a very spirited demand for tickets, and while there is every indication of a full house, a few good locations are still available, for there is surely not an undesirable seat in the house.

BOSTON HOME JOURNAL

A PAPER OF TO-DAY

Vol. 56. SATURDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1900. No. 41.

The first concert to be given in the new Symphony Hall will be that on Monday evening next, which performance will be under the direction of Mr. Wilhelm Gericke.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CVIII., NO. 107.

MONDAY, OCT. 15, 1900.

OPENING OF SYMPHONY HALL.

This evening the beautiful new Symphony Hall will be formally opened with an inaugural concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, assisted by the fine chorus of the Cecilia Society and a quartet of solo singers. This will be the most notable event of the present musical season. The audience will be representative of Boston society, as well as many distinguished parties from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. The work to be performed is the mass in D by Beethoven.

[17]

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, OCT. 14, 1900.

Symphony Hall Dedication Tomorrow Night.

Entertainments Announced for the Temple Lyceum Course.

Recitals by Celebrated Organists—Other Harmonic Happenings.

Tomorrow evening, at the new Symphony hall, there will be an audience as memorable as the event they have gathered to celebrate. After 19 years, in which the Boston Symphony orchestra has made a greater part of the musical history of America, this organization, unique both in its founding, its maintenance and its personnel, will at last occupy a home worthy of its reputation. In addition to this, a work which a leading musical writer of the day has aptly styled "the masterpiece of Beethoven's masterpieces," the solemn mass in D, will be performed by an augmented chorus of the Cecilia, the Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr Franz Kneisel, solo violin, and Mr Wallace Goodrich presiding at the organ, the entire performance to be under the direction of conductor Wilhelm Gericke.

The vocal solos in the mass will be sung by Mme De Vere-Sapio, Miss Gertrude May Stein, Mr Evan Williams and Mr Joseph Baernstein. The program will open with the chorale by Bach for chorus, organ and orchestra, which will be followed by an address by Mr Owen Wister.

Not only everybody of note in the musical world of Boston will be present, but a large number of visitors from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and even more distant cities. Recalling the fact that since the dedication of the old Music hall, 46 years ago, there has been no building erected in Boston of this magnitude and devoted almost entirely to music, it is easy to realize the importance of Monday evening's concert. There has been a very spirited demand for tickets, and while there is every indication of a full house, a few good locations are still available, for there is not an undesirable seat in the house.

—The musical world of Boston and other cities await with earnest expectation the opening concert in the Symphony hall tomorrow evening, and a very large and brilliant audience is assured. A splendid program by the orchestra has been made up, and the Cecilia, with an augmented chorus and noted solo performers, will also give valuable assistance. Mr J. Wallace Goodrich will preside at the organ.

SYMPHONY HALL ORGAN OPENING

Including a well-equipped organ as one of the features of Symphony hall, the new auditorium has been given an additional attraction, which will be fully appreciated by the musical public. The instrument has been planned and built with a view to meeting the many and various uses for which it will be needed in coming years, and it is gratifying to know that there is every reason to anticipate that the new organ will meet the severest demands that may be made upon it. The first recital of the instrument is fixed for the evening of Thursday, Oct 25, when Mr J. Wallace Goodrich will exhibit the possibilities of the new organ in a program having for its selections compositions by Bach, St Saens, Widor, Cæsar Franck and Dubois. Tickets will go on sale at the Symphony hall box office tomorrow morning.

Boston Journal.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1900.

Tomorrow evening at the new Symphony Hall, corner of Huntington and Massachusetts Avenues, there will be an audience as memorable as the event they have gathered to celebrate. After 19 years, in whichc the Boston Symphony Orchestra has made a greater part of the musical history of America, this organiza ion, unique both in its founding, its maintenance and its personnel, will at last occupy a home worthy of its reputation. In addition to this Beethoven's so emn mass in D will be performed by an augmented chorus of the Cecilia, the Bo ton Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Franz Kneisel, solo violin, and Mr. Wallace Goodrich, organist. Mr. Gericke will conduct. Not only everyb dy of no'e in the musical world of Boston will be present, but a large number of visitors from New York, Phil'adelphia, Baltimore, and even more distant cities. Recal ing the fact that since the dedication of the old Music Hall, 46 years ago, there has been no building erected in Boston of this magnitude and devoted almost entirely to music, it is easy to realize the importarce of next M nday evening's concert. There has been a very spirited demand for tickets, and while there is every indication of a full house, a few good seats are still for sale.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

Established 1813.

The Official Paper of the State.

The Official Paper of the City.

MONDAY MORNING, OCT. 15, 1900.

Tonight marks a new era in Boston's musical life, for tonight the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives an inaugural concert in the new Symphony Hall, Massachusetts and Huntington aves. The Cecilia Society will assist and these soloists will be heard: Mme. De Vere, Miss Stein, Mr. Miller and Mr. Baernstein. Mr. Gericke will be the conductor, Mr. Kneisel violin soloist and Mr. Goodrich, organist.

THE BEACON.

OCTOBER 13, 1900.

Apropos of the Symphony rehearsals, what a large number of disappointed music lovers are left out this year! One has only to go about among music students and other musical persons whose purses are not of the heaviest to hear deep lamentations over the high premiums paid and the comparatively few seats to be had for reasonable prices. What a pity it is that we cannot have a third performance of this admirable orchestra! But since this seems to be out of the question, why could not another good orchestra be formed, perhaps not quite so large, and of course we do not expect it to be quite so perfect? We all know that there are many fine musicians in this city who are not in the Boston Symphony orchestra, and who, under a good leader (he need not necessarily be imported), might gladden the ear even of critical Bostonians with the great works from great masters, giving an opportunity for those who now are longing in vain for such pleasure and benefit to steep their souls in sweet sounds. Who will be good enough to start this orchestra?

BOSTON POST,

The Representative Democratic Paper OF NEW ENGLAND.

SUNDAY MORNING, OCTOBER 14, 1900.
(Copyright, 1900, Post Publishing Company.)

Symphony Hall Inaugural Concert.

Tomorrow evening, at the new Symphony Hall, corner of Huntington and Massachusetts avenues, there will be an audience as memorable as the event it will gather to celebrate. After nineteen years, in which the Boston Symphony Orchestra has made a greater part of the musical history of America, this organization, unique both in its founding, its maintenance and its personnel, will at last occupy a home worthy of its reputation.

In addition to this, a work which a leading musical writer of the day has aptly styled "the master-piece of Beethoven's master-pieces," the Solemn Mass in D, will be performed by an augmented chorus of the Cecilia, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Franz Kneisel, solo violin, and Mr. Wallace Goodrich presiding at the organ, the entire performance to be under the direction of Conductor Wilhelm Gericke. The vocal solos in the mass will be sung by Mme. De Vere-Sapio, Gertrude May Stein, Evan Williams and Joseph Baernstein. The programme will open with the chorale of Bach for chorus, organ and orchestra, which will be followed by an address by Owen Wister.

Not only everybody of note in the musical world of Boston will be present, but a large number of visitors from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and even more distant cities. Recalling the fact that since the dedication of the old Music Hall, forty-six years ago, there has been no building erected in Boston of this magnitude and devoted almost entirely to music, it is easy to realize the importance of next Monday evening's concert. There has been a very spirited demand for tickets, and while there is every indication of a full house, a few good locations are still available, for there is really not an undesirable seat in the house.

BOSTON HOME JOURNAL

A PAPER OF TO-DAY

Vol. 56. SATURDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1900. No. 41.

The first concert to be given in the new Symphony Hall will be that on Monday evening next, which performance will be under the direction of Mr. Wilhelm Gericke

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CVIII., NO. 107.

MONDAY, OCT. 15, 1900.

OPENING OF SYMPHONY HALL.

This evening the beautiful new Symphony Hall will be formally opened with an inaugural concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, assisted by the fine chorus of the Cecilia Society and a quartet of solo singers. This will be the most notable event of the present musical season. The audience will be representative of Boston society, as well as many distinguished parties from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. The work to be performed is the mass in D by Beethoven.

[17]

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CVIII., NO. 100.

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 17, 1900.

MR. HIGGINSON'S WORK.

The address with which Mr. Henry L. Higginson opened Symphony Hall to the public was characteristic of the man in the modest exemption of himself from the responsibility of both making possible and giving to the people in and around Boston a fitting place in which to hear vocal and instrumental musical entertainments, and of supplying them with these of best possible quality. No doubt, the architects, the builders, and professional men of one kind or another have done good service, but the originator, both of the Symphony orchestra and Symphony Hall, without whom nothing would have been accomplished, but by whose direction everything has been made possible, is Mr. Higginson himself. Public-spirited men can find in a community such as ours a number of ways for the exercise of their inclinations; but it is rare, indeed, for an illustration to be given, such as has been presented in the experience of Mr. Higginson, of a private citizen not only succeeding through his efforts in giving to his city a world-wide reputation as a musical centre—a place in which music can best be studied and heard—but also in taking a foremost place in a variety of efforts looking toward public improvement and good citizenship. There are Bostonians whose financial resources far surpass those which Mr. Higginson has had at his command; there are many whose vocations or want of vocations have accorded to them far more time for the consideration of matters outside of their business; and yet there is no one in this city who can be compared with him when the test applied is unqualified devotion to the public wellbeing. The orchestra which, through Mr. Higginson's foresight and energy, has been firmly established, is to find in the Symphony Hall which he has created a centre which it can doubtless have as its abiding place for the next half-century. It has become a Boston institution, made so by the fact that, through the efforts of its founder, it is a feature in our civic life of which we are deservedly proud, and which, by the interest and desire it has created in the various great centres of population in this country, must influence others to endeavor to follow in Mr. Higginson's footsteps. Having established his orchestra, having secured for it a fitting building, Mr. Higginson's work in this direction has so far been completed that every loyal citizen of Boston has the right to congratulate him on his success, and should add to their congratulations warm thanks for his generous enterprise.

Symphony Hall's acoustic properties are all right. Hear, hear!

Mr. Henry L. Higginson seems to be entitled to the laurel wreath for graceful and inspiring reports.

The New York music critics all allow that Boston now has the most beautiful and altogether admirable music hall in the United States, and we suppose that settles it.

It was a field night Monday, but, in spite of all the attractions drawing out Boston patrons of music and drama, many well-known society people must be reckoned as not of the crowds. The country is yet too attractive for their return to the city, with its demands upon their time and tastes for pleasures. I was not present at the inaugural of Symphony Hall, but I understand that the fine flower of Boston preserved its reputation for inconspicuousness of attire, as there was only one society woman in the audience who ventured to wear evening dress. We have heard of one good man once saving a city, and the fame of this Boston dame, with her bare shoulders, may go down to posterity in like fashion. It is urged, however, that anything decollete will be simply impossible in the draughts of this symphonic temple. What is the affinity, think you, between currents of chill air and melodious sounds? There must be one; for old Music Hall was in more senses than one a death trap, and now here we have a $75,000 ventilation blowing the very hair off one's head! Heigho! It is wondered if Bostonians really are so peculiar as people who are not Bostonese say.

The tide of humanity flowed up Huntington avenue, instead of down, on this premiere, and it didn't seem natural to see the string of electric cars going in an opposite direction at the theatre hour. Extra car service from Park street station to Symphony Hall was all very fine, but there is a crying need of accommodation from the east as well as the north and west. Some cars should run up Tremont street round to the corner of Huntington and Massachusetts avenues, if it takes brand-new tracks to get them there. But, doubtless, the agreeable elevated railway company will now have the new music hall under its protecting wing, and on all concert and rehearsal nights and days swing an electric or two into line from all points of the compass. Our music loving public is not confined to Back Bay districts.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1900

Opening of Symphony Hall

The new Symphony Hall was formally opened last evening, the programme of exercises being as follows:

Choral, "Grant us to do with zeal".....Bach
A report by H. L. Higginson.
"The Bird of Passage," an Ode to Instrumental Music, by Owen Wister.
Missa Solennis in D major, opus 123...Beethoven

A most difficult occasion to write about! So much interest centred in the hall itself that one could not give undivided attention to the music nor the performance. For the hall itself means much; we Bostonians are wedded to it, for better or for worse, till death do us part; it will surely outlast most of those who listened to music in it last evening, and it is one of the prime fixed conditions of our hearing the larger forms of orchestral and choral music for the rest of our lives. The first set-to of chorus, orchestra and organ on the Bach choral was a nervous moment for all concerned; the choral itself, Bach's harmonizing of the melody "O Gott, du frommer Gott" (from the cantata "Es ist dir gesagt, Mensch, was gut ist"), was plainly chosen for the sake of its text in the cantata, significant as it is of the solemnity of the occasion. There could have been no fitter dedication of the hall to its high purpose.

Mr. Higginson's business report and Mr. Wister's ode were probably inevitable; a baptism, wedding, dedication, call it what you will, is, after all, a ceremony, and what is a ceremony without the due conventional forms? Such forms may not be the most delectable in the world, but few men, or associate bodies of men, have the originality to dispense with them. Enough for Mr. Higginson's share in the business that he talked sense and cut it short. Of Mr. Wister's ode I could form little definite idea. His charming, ingratiating personality was all in his favor; but, as Mr. Sabine says in his pamphlet on "Reverberation," a hall that is good for music is, propter hoc, not the best in the world for speaking; and it was exceedingly difficult to catch what Mr. Wister read. His introductory speech, in prose, was, like Mr. Higginson's, clear enough; but, when it came to the poetry, his clear, downright delivery changed, and it took a painful stress of the attention to understand him enough to form any idea of his poem. Moreover, with the Missa solennis in prospect, one is in no mood for anything else; it takes an exaggeration of good will to look upon it in any other light than as an interruption. But, as has been said, forms are forms, and must be gone through with; yet the most that can be reasonably asked of the passive participant is respectful toleration; no man need be required to smack his lips over them.

Then came the main dish of the feast: Beethoven's Missa solennis. But no, I am wrong; it was, for once, not the main dish; the Missa solennis may come, and the Missa solennis may go, but the hall is there forever. What Beethoven, Mr. Gericke, the solo singers, chorus, orchestra and organ might be doing or might have done for the great mass was for the nonce of less moment than what the hall was doing for us, the audience. And, difficult as all other items of the evening are to write about with sanity, this one chief item is the most difficult of all. It is not the untrustworthiness of first impressions that makes it a problem; for, in three hours' time, one got many, often conflicting, impressions. The chief difficulty is that, at this first public trial, the hall was put to not quite the use it was especially designed for. If anything could resign one to the name of Symphony Hall, it would be the singleness of purpose with which every item in the architecture of the place had been made to impinge upon this one point: making it as perfect a hall for symphony concerts as possible. This is worth thinking of.

Most of us remember how, when the project for building a new hall was first mooted, a strong desire was expressed in some quarters to have it a sort of combination of music hall and opera house. With what wisdom the promoters of the undertaking refused to comply with this desire need hardly be said; the combination is like that of oil with water, you spoil a good music hall to make a bad opera house, or vice versa. But, as Mr. Higginson told us last evening, the combination idea was not abandoned at once; it was thought of having a large orchestral hall and a smaller hall for chamber music under the same roof. But this, too, was given up, for lack of sufficient space. Soon everybody at all interested in the matter knew that the place was to be a music hall pure and simple, uncombined with anything else. But Messrs. McKim, Meade & White and Mr. Sabine carried their singleness of purpose still further than this; it can be seen now that their calculations kept but one object constantly in view: to adapting the hall to the use of the Symphony Orchestra, and to nothing else. This is shown by the stage and its encompassing sounding-board, being just large enough to contain the Symphony Orchestra, with hardly a square foot of space wasted. In its normal condition the orchestra will occupy the whole stage, up to the proscenium arch; that is, up to the line vertically under the eaves of the roof of the sounding-board. With a chorus, as last evening, five rows of seats have to be taken away, so that nearly all the strings and wood-wind are out in the hall, not on the stage proper; and this state of things was not the one contemplated in the fashioning of the architectural acoustics of the place. If the concert last evening was a test, it was not a crucial one.

Then, there was one wholly new item that had to be taken into account. It was the first time that we in Boston had heard a chorus and orchestra supported by a thoroughly fine organ. The old Great Organ was a poor machine to put to musical uses; the little box of whistles that succeeded it, worse than nothing at all. The organ in Symphony Hall seems about as perfect as an instrument of its sort can be; firm as a rock in tone, sufficiently brilliant without a touch of stridency, strong and upbuoying, but never overwhelming. And [illegible] was quite enough to heard before exceedingly difficult. The chorus and orchestra we knew, but how much of the effect was due to the organ, and how much to the hall?

I can give only my own experience. At times the effect was very brilliant indeed; at others, dead, dull, unsatisfying. After long, careful listening, it seemed to me that the dividing line between good and bad came somewhere between fortissimo and pianissimo, that the hall responded willingly, so to speak, to tones above a certain degree of dynamic force, but less willingly to softer ones; it seemed to take a certain force of sound to wake the hall up. But, when things sounded well, they sounded supremely well. I await the first symphony concert with impatience, for that will be the only real test.

The solo singers in the mass were Mme. Clementine De Vere, Miss Gertrude May Stein, Mr. Evan Williams, and Mr. Joseph S. Baernstein. Mr. Williams had a sad accident just before the concert began; he sprained his ankle, and it was true heroism on his part to sing at all.

The performance of the Missa solennis made a curious impression upon me. Countless beautiful effects that I had never suspected before stood out with delightful clearness; but, on the other hand, I missed nearly all the old, familiar ones. Surely never in this city has a choral performance been heard, in which such minute attention was paid to matters of light and shade, matters of delicate nuance. For this, all praise. But the music was not sung with the same security, with the same authoritativeness, as when the Mass was last given here by the Cecilia and the composer's expression-marks were more disregarded. One could not help suspecting that both chorus and solo singers had been drilled up to just the point of doing what Mr. Gericke asked of them without coming to grief, but not up to the point of doing it freely, fearlessly and securely. Nobody did come to grief, but the whole atmosphere of the performance was exceedingly nervous, almost timid. It was like listening to the quintet in the Meistersinger years ago, before singers had thoroughly mastered it, and the music seemed continually on the verge of going to pieces. The horizon seemed full of coal-heavers; and, though no storm came, you were all the time dreading one. Especially the "Crucifixus," that great wail and shriek of mortal anguish, passed by almost unnoticed. Ah, but there were things also that were wonderfully, beautifully done. When one considers the all but impossibility of the music, quartet and chorus covered themselves with glory. Still the general atmosphere of nervousness and insecurity is not to be denied. Call it a very ambitious transitional performance, a performance well on the road to the greatest things, but not yet quite at the goal. Rome was not built in a day, and the Missa solennis has probably not been given for the last time here; some years henge, when Mr. Gericke's teaching shall have had time to soak in, it may be given by the same forces with far more authority.

What shall I say of the work itself? In one sense the time is past for saying much about it; in another sense, the time has not yet come. To speak as much of my mind as I care to now, Beethoven's Missa solennis—like his later quartets and sonatas, like almost all of Sebastian Bach—is still Music of the Future. Few of us are "modern" enough for it yet; it stands ahead of us, not behind us; in a very real and important sense, it is nearer the goal toward which Wagner and Richard Strauss himself have been striving than anything they have written. And this ultra-modernness, this being ahead of the age, is complicated with a style that is in many respects already old. Robert Franz said of Bach that "he had a future before him, like Shakspeare;" it has also been said that no one can fully understand Bach who has not come to the recognition of his being intrinsically more modern than Richard Strauss. It seems to me that the same is true of Beethoven's great Missa solennis.

W. F. A.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CVIII., NO. 116.

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 24, 1900.

Overheard at Symphony Hall: Doesn't the stage, with the orchestra men ranged on it, make you think of the children's play theatre? I don't think it is a bit like a hall stage." "Hush! Irreverent creature!"

---

[18]

BOSTON SYMPHONY HALL.

Chorale by Bach and Beethoven Mass Performed at the Inaugural Concert.

BOSTON, October 15, 1900.

WITH the formal dedication of the new Symphony Hall, Boston has added another advance to its musical life, for years the pride of art in America.

The opening concert to-night attracted the leaders in the musical, social and educational circles of the Hub and everything connected with the affair was as perfect as generosity and good taste could make it. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with the Cecilia Society augmented by other singers, and the following soloists: Mme. Clementine De Vere, Gertrude May Stein, Evan Williams and Joseph S. Baernstein, presented the musical program. This included the great Beethoven Mass in D, for chorus, solo quartet, orchestra and organ, and a Bach chorale.

The Mass was probably never better sung in America. The conductor was, of course, Wilhelm Gericke, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The organ was played by J. Wallace Goodrich, and Franz Kneisel played the incidental violin solos.

A report by Colonel Higginson, the original supporter of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and one of the trustees of the new hall, was read by the author. When Colonel Higginson arose to address the audience he received an ovation. Colonel Higginson said in part:

"If it is a success, the credit and your thanks are due to four men—Mr. McKim, Mr. Norcross, Professor Sabine of Harvard University, and last, but not least, C. E. Cotting, who, with his wide experience, has watched and guided the construction and guarded our slender purse. Without his aid the hall would not have been ready to-night, and I rejoice for him that his task is fulfilled. Professor Sabine has studied thoroughly our questions of acoustics, has applied his knowledge to our problem and I think with success. Professor Cross of the Institute of Technology has given us the benefit of his counsel, and the help of these three gentlemen has been a pure labor of love.

"You see the handiwork of Mr. Norcross and of his excellent sub-contractors and assistants, but you have not seen their energy and patience in our behalf. As for Mr. McKim, he is here, but will not speak for himself, his partners and his office. Abandoning his pet ideas with absolute cheerfulness, he set himself to devise a plan not entirely to his liking, and even in the execution of this plan he has given up many hopes, wishes and fancies because the directors had no more money.

"Our capital is $500,000, of which $410,700 has been subscribed, and as this sum was far too small the directors have borrowed the remaining cost, which is about $340,000, making the total cost rising $750,000. They mortgaged the hall with reluctance, but had no other course, as the money was essential. The building has been leased by the directors for ten years to me, and I am to meet the costs of administration, taxes and all charges, and to pay to the stockholders the rest of the receipts.

"It is all as it should be. Certain citizen of Boston build a hall, without regard to return in money, and by this act care for the happiness, the convenience, the education of the inhabitants for twenty miles around this spot, and it is fitting in a republic that the citizens and not the Government in any form should do such work and bear such burdens. To the more fortunate people of our land belongs the privilege of providing the higher branches of education and art."

After Colonel Higginson delivered his address, Owen Wister read "The Bird of Passage," an ode to instrumental music.

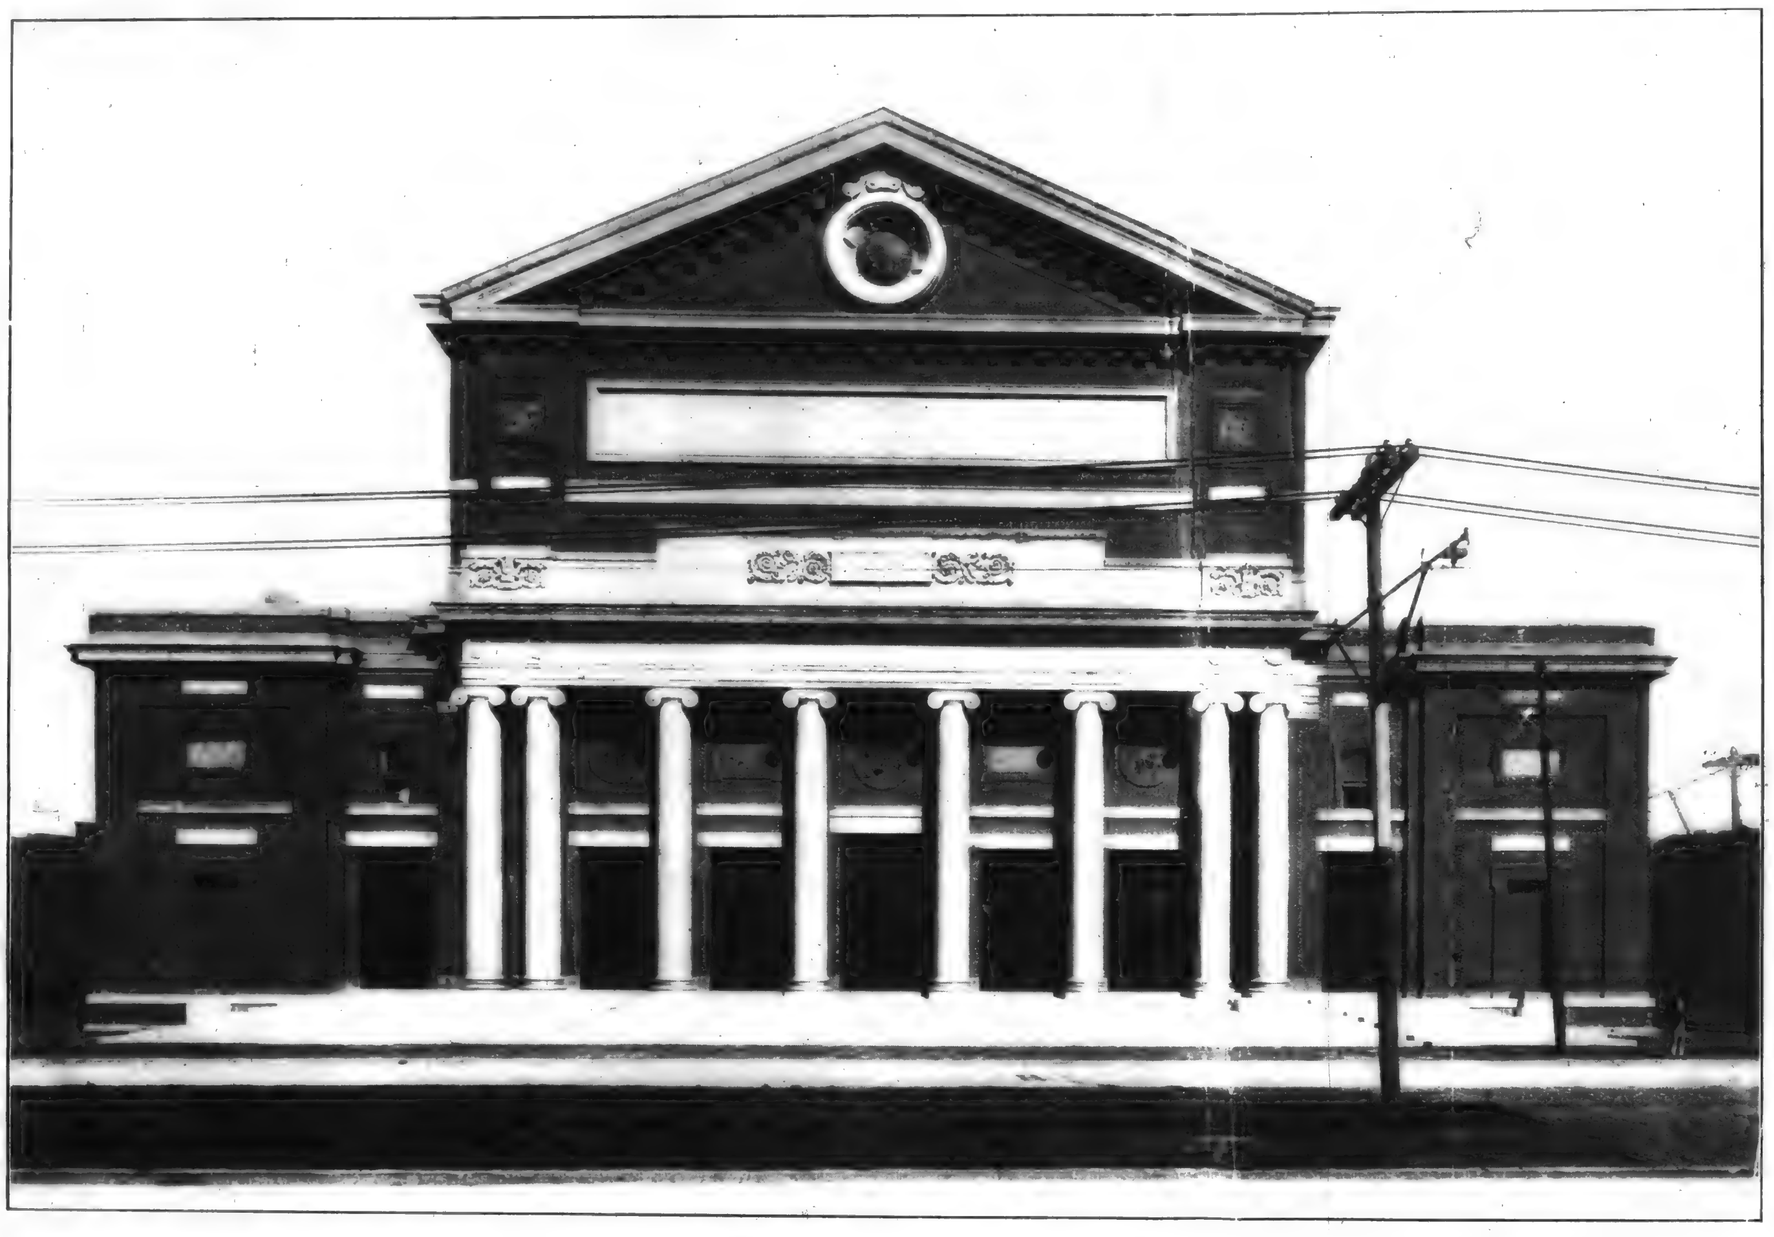
The following description of the hall is reprinted from THE MUSICAL COURIER of September 26 this year:

Friday evening the interior of the new Symphony Hall was lighted up and thrown open for inspection by the members of the press. The interest of the auditorium depends almost entirely upon its inherent architectural qualities, and not on its painted ornaments.

Its proportions differ only slightly from those of the old Music Hall. The scheme of color for the interio calculated wisely for artificial lighting, and it is compos of several tones of gray, running from cold to warm, wit much gilding, and, for the lower part of the wall, under th first balcony, a brilliant, solid red, in effect a crimson, with crimson plush tops for the balcony railings. The ceiling is heavily coffered, and its appearance is enriched by the perforations in many of the panels. The organ case is designed in harmony with and as an organic part of the architectural ensemble. The organ pipes are solidly gilded, and above them a gracefully designed grill connects them with the upper wall. In general arrangement the auditorium is distinctly planned for the Symphony Orchestra's use, and every detail is calculated for that purpose. The acoustics have been made the subject of very careful study by an expert, and there is no question as to the success attained. It is the first large auditorium in the country in which the problem of acoustics has been treated in a purely scientific way. It is also the first large building of this type made absolutely fireproof.

An interesting feature of the hall is the arrangement by which the auditorium is protected from outside noises by being completely surrounded by a system of wide corridors and foyers. The lighting is very successful and agreeable, the lamps being so placed as to provide plenty of light without shining in the eyes of the audience. The grouping of the incandescent lamps could not be improved upon, being as simple as possible. The seats are upholstered in sage green leather. Most of the gold is concentrated in the proscenium arch, the organ case, and the balustrades. The large surfaces of the upper walls, above the second balcony, are broken up by pilasters and panels, and seventeen niches are provided for statues. It is the intention to fill these niches with casts from the most appropriate and beautiful antique statues, such as the Belvedere Apollo. The heating and ventilation have been given the most careful attention, and a very unusual proportion of the expense of the building has been devoted to these purposes, with results which are confidently believed to be commensurate with the extraordinary cost and pains spent upon these important details. The system is thought to be as perfect as modern scientific resources can attain to.

The impression of one who enters the auditorium when



SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

The New Home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

[19]

lighted is greatly at variance with the sensations of observer who surveys the exterior. The history of the ilding, and of the original plans, would without doubt o far to explain some of the architectural peculiarities of the exterior. It is a matter of common knowledge that the architect's first plans were materially modified in conformity to the requirements of the budget.

At the same time, it is to be supposed that in a European capital some latitude might be conceded to a semi-public building in the matter of the regulations as to the setback, and if such a policy had obtained here, with reference to the Huntington avenue façade and portico, at the same time protecting the due rights of sidewalk traffic, a compromise might have been made, to the distinct advantage of the architecture. The aspect of the exterior, however, will be much influenced in a favorable sense by the completion of the new Horticultural Hall, across the street. That building has been designed by Mr. Wheelwright with special reference to the mutual relations between it and its neighbor, and in height, scale, style and material (red brick and limestone) it will harmonize with the Symphony Hall—perhaps the first conspicuous example of this kind of artistic co-operation that the history of the city affords.

The spacious corridors and foyers of the new Symphony Hall are convenient, capacious and generous, providing room enough to hold all the 2,569 people who can be seated in the auditorium. The facilities for getting in and out of the building are beyond reproach. All desirable modern conveniences in the way of parlors and waiting rooms for men and women, and ample space for promenading are provided. There is a really grand foyer on the second story, with a very lofty barrel vault ceiling, which will some day afford a superb opportunity for mural decoration.

When the auditorium is full of people and the members of the orchestra take their places on the stage the picture will be complete. No hall is meant to appear in the relative nudity of emptiness; it needs the warmth of life, the vibration, the color of humanity, to give the last touch. In decorative value, fancy the difference made by the massing of a hundred men in black costumes on the stage, with their white shirt fronts and their rows of mahogany hued string instruments.—Boston Transcript.

Has a Movable Keyboard.

Twenty-seven miles of electric wire and 3,492 pipes are used in the make up of the great organ in Symphony Hall, and the instrument is played from a movable console or keyboard. This console looks a little like an upright piano, and by its use the organist may sit directly under the conductor at the side of the platform, or if he chooses, down on the floor in the midst of the audience; for the console is connected with the organ itself by a hundred feet of flexible cable containing 372 wires.

Fixty-six stops sound the changes of the great and dignified instrument, and the pipes range in size from a big thing of 32 feet, weighing half a ton, down to a tiny reed three-quarters of an inch long and as thick as a lead pencil. The sound of the big pipe is such an extremely low bass that to the hearer it would not seem to be a musical tone at all. It is more like the whirr of a powerful dynamo, causing a buzzing in the ears and a perceptible trembling of the entire hall and everything in it. The tone has its value, however, and is known as C C C C to organ experts, but it is chiefly used to reinforce and give body and richness to higher tones, with which it will be used simultaneously. As the aperture through which the wind passes into this monster pipe is only a half inch crack, one may imagine what power there must be behind the air to produce such a result through so small an inlet.

The wind, without the assistance of which all the genius of the organist would avail nothing, comes up through big zinc pipes resembling those that usually carry the hot air from a furnace up through the house. The "wind room" is in the cellar, is about 15 feet square, and is an air-tight apartment, for notwithstanding the immense volume of air which the blower carries upstairs—2,000 cubic feet a minute—the only visible means for the admission of air to the room is a crevice of less than 2 inches under the door. The organ builder says that much of the air gets in through the walls, which are of cement and tile, and are constructed with the special object of being sound proof, in order that the buzzing of the electric motor that runs the blower may not be heard in the hall above. But the blower is only designed for ordinary playing. When the organist wants to "raise the roof" with his half ton pipes he touches a button that connects the motor to a series of huge bellows, which add a wind pressure just double that of the blower.

A number of newspaper men were given a chance to see and hear the organ Friday, impromptu recitals being given by J. Wallace Goodrich, the organist, and Everett M. Skinner, inventor of several of the attachments that make the instrument notable. Those who know all about organs say that the one in Symphony Hall combines all the dignity and majesty necessary for religious music, with an admirable flexibility and brilliancy for giving the lightest class of melodies.

Earl Gulick.

EARL GULICK starts his winter season with his voice sweeter and increased in volume, notwithstanding the unequaled record of success of last year ever achieved by this boy of twelve years. Earl Gulick has without doubt to-day an enviable record and a national reputation. He is booked with the best artists, having been only vocalist with the Kneisel Quartet in Toronto, with Clementine De Vere at an Albany drawing room, and festival appearances with Evan Williams, Van Yorx, Julian Walker, &c. He had to receive the musical criticism of censure or praise equally with such artists.

With what success he has done this his numerous books of press tributes and letters from famous people and musicians bespeak for him. He is now just twelve years of age, with a magnificent voice. He has a range of three octaves, from G below middle C to G above high C. He holds an immense repertory of German, Scotch, Italian, French and English songs from our best composers, as well as arias from many of the operas, but is at his best in his favorite work, oratorio. Physically or vocally Earl is never known to tire, he has such normally good health, physically and mentally, weighing 115 pounds, and a chest expansion of 3½ inches, 31 in repose and 34½ in expansion from his fine daily gymnasium training probably in great part as well as his voice cultivation.

Copyright, 1900, by Rockwood, N. Y.

EARL GULICK.

Earl is a student at Trinity School on West Ninety-first street, where he is a universal favorite and pride with rector, teachers and pupils. He has never missed a promotion in his school life, the professors studying with him on his return from trips on which he has private tutoring.

Nietzsche's Hymn.

The Berlin Wagner Society will produce this season Nietzsche's "Hymnus an das Leben." In one of his letters, dated January 2, 1875, to Malida von Meysenbug, he wrote: "I have just passed ten days' holiday with my mother and sister and feel myself quite refreshed. I left all thinking and musing behind me and made music. Many thousand notes have been put down and I am now quite ready with a work. The 'Hymnus to Friendship' is now to be arranged for two or four hands. Its form is: Prelude, March of Friends to the Temple of Friendship. Hymn, First Strophe, Intermezzo, as in sadly sweet recollection. Hymn, Second Strophe, Intermezzo, a prophecy of the future, a glance into the farthest distance. Departure, Song of Friends, Third Strophe, and conclusion. I am very content with it. The length of the whole music is fifteen minutes."

He adds: "Moreover, I have set in order and revised my youthful compositions. It seems to me very curious that immutability of character displays itself so in music. What a boy expresses thereby is so clearly the language of the fundamental character of all his being that the man wishes to make no change, except, of course, technical mistakes. If, according to Schopenhauer, will is a heritage from the father, intelligence from the mother, music as an expression of the will must also, according to my ideas, be a heritage from the father."

Six weeks later he writes to the same lady: "Since New Year's Day I have finished a new composition of some extent, a 'Hymn to Solitude,' in which I have glorified the terrible beauty of my whole grateful heart. I have already spoken to you of the 'Hymn to Friendship.'"

Where are all these "youthful compositions," and his symphonic work, "Meditation on Manfred," which he submitted to Von Bülow?

Nietzsche attributes his musical attempts to his will power; a proof that he was still under the influence of Schopenhauer and that he had no genius for music.

The Man's Alto in English Music

MOST of the facts about the "man's alto" voice are common property and generally known, but it may prove useful if I here bring them together in one paper. I must say, to begin with, that Hullah's remarks on the subject in his article, "Alto," in Grove's Dictionary of Music are to my view not particularly happy. The greater part of the article consists in the following statements: That in the sixteenth and in the early part of the seventeenth centuries the compass of this voice as written for was limited by the top and bottom lines of the five-line stave, with C on the middle line, which would give G for the highest used note; that Charles II., who came to the throne in 1660, desired to reproduce approximately in England the voices of evirati to which he had been accustomed abroad; that consequently the "third register" or falsetto part of the voice was brought into use, so that in the time of Pelham Humfrey and his successors the voice was written for at least a third higher than in the time of Tallis.

It is surprising that a musician who, like Hullah, had taken an active part in the pitch question, and had proposed a pitch of his own in the sixties, should have overlooked the historical fact that it was the church pitch and not the mode of writings for a voice which had changed by a third in the century between Tallis and the successors of Pelham Humfrey; the top line of the above mentioned stave meant in Tallis' time about the same note in pitch as the first leger line above did in Purcell's time. It is also surprising that Hullah, who was a practical vocalist, should gravely imagine generations of man-altos singing in only the two lower and makeshift registers of their voice, and omitting their falsetto or head register, which forms their distinguishing characteristic if not their sole raison d'être. It seems to be an admitted scientific fact that the compass of the human voice is in the same country quite uniform from generation to generation, and altogether the idea of the men alti suddenly developing and using a new register in order to please King Charles II. can hardly be entertained with any seriousness. The man's alto voice is also frequently called counter-tenor in this country.

The initial idea of counterpoint was that of a part laid above rather than below a canto fermo; and so a counter-tenor was the part laid over a tenor, between it and the discant or soprano, on the development of four-part harmony. The "Contra-tenore" of the Continent means another thing, or a low tenor, using the word "contra" in a different sense. The French call the alto part Haute-contre which terminology follows the same idea as the English name for the man's alto. Scientific writers appear to regard the whole voice as an artificial one, and in that sense a "falsetto." It is certain that even in the lowest register the chest notes are modified or veiled, in other words that some operation occurs in the throat by which the vocal cords giving chest notes are not allowed to vibrate to their full extent. The highest register is caused by some more decided limitation, or as it were pinching, of the vocal cords, so as to give an entirely new quality. The middle register, covering the "break," is caused by a compromise between the two modes of emission, and is, as everyone knows, difficult to manage. The distinction between a full and a falsetto voice seems to be common to men and animals. The man's alto voice is formed upon what is naturally a bass. The ordinary compass of a man's alto voice in this country is from middle G to C in the middle of the treble clef. The best notes are from B flat to B flat. The break is between middle C and the E above. This may be compared with the normal compass of the

THIS SPACE IS TO BE DEVOTED TO THE INSERTION OF PORTRAITS OF SUCCESSFUL
BOWMAN PUPILS
MISS AVIS H. BLEWETT.
E. M. BOWMAN. Piano and Theory Studio; Steinway Hall, New York.
Office Hour, September and October, 2 P. M.
Organist and Conductor Baptist Temple Choir, Brooklyn.

New-York Daily Tribune.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1900.

THE NEW SYMPHONY HALL IN BOSTON.

DEDICATORY EXERCISES LAST NIGHT—AN INTERESTING EXPERIMENT—BEETHOVEN'S MASS IN D PERFORMED.

[BY TELEGRAPH TO THE TRIBUNE.]

Boston, Oct. 15.—Symphony Hall, the new house of high class music in Boston, was opened to-night under circumstances that were most auspicious. Boston has shown high appreciation of the enterprise of Mr. Henry L. Higginson and his associates. It became joyous over the new hall when first it saw it. It applauded Mr. Higginson when he arose to make a few informal remarks, and almost broke into cheers at the suggestion of one individual whose enthusiasm made him forget Boston decorum. It listened with patience to a too long poem read as a prologue by Mr. Owen Wister, which was not so hard to do, considering the number of excellent thoughts, excellently expressed in it, despite the disadvantages under which it was delivered, as it was to forgive the unnecessary remarks which prefaced it, remarks that were not only unnecessary, but prosy.

And then Boston heard with evident enjoyment what was in many respects the most successful performance of Beethoven's solemn Mass in D that has ever been given in America. I am almost able to speak on the point with absolute certainty, for I have heard at least half of the performances. The work is one which offers such stupendous difficulties to the performing forces that it has remained a sealed book to the overwhelming mass of music lovers the world over.

Berlin heard it first in 1857, after Professor Stern had studied it four years with his famous Gesangverein. The records show that it was given by the Church Music Association in Steinway Hall, New-York, on May 2, 1872, but I do not like to dwell in speculation on what that performance may have been, knowing something of the accomplishments of the old society. Still, as history is made, this must be put down as the first American performance of the immortal work. In May, 1880, it had two performances at the fourth Cincinnati festival; in May, 1882, it was given also, under the direction of Theodore Thomas, as the Cincinnati performances had been, at the festival in the 7th Regiment Armory, New-York. In 1897 the Cecilia of Boston, the choir which, with some additions, sang to-night, sang the mass under the direction of Mr. B. J. Lang, and in 1898 it was again given at a Cincinnati festival. This is the Cis-Atlantic record of the work, and brief as it is, it is not without its memorable tribute to the seriousness of American musical culture.

To-night's performance was highly creditable to the Cecelia singers, who strove valiantly against its cruel difficulties and were buoyed up by an orchestral accompaniment that was genuinely brilliant. Especially was this the case in the "Benedictus," in which the composer's marvellous ascription of praise soared close to the gates of heaven on the wings of the violin solo played by Mr. Kneisel. The solo parts were in the hands of Mme. Clementine De Vere, Miss Gertrude May Stein, Evan Williams and Joseph Baernstein. A more capable quartet for the trying task could not have been brought together. Unhappily Mr. Williams wrenched his ankle dismounting from a streetcar in front of the hall and suffered a pain that showed itself in drawn and pallid features. Under the circumstances his work was creditable, but not the equal of that done by his colleagues. Mme. De Vere's work was as fine an exhibition of singing in the exalted style demanded by this music as I have ever heard. The exercises which preceded the mass would have been brief had not Mr. Wister's ode occupied so much time as to try the patience of the audience. Choir, orchestra and organ performed a choral by Bach and Mr. Henry L. Higginson made an address, at the end of which he introduced Mr. Wister, the poet of the occasion.

Mr. Higginson's report was a modest, matter of fact sort of statement, without any attempt at oratorical adornment. "The directors of this building have allowed me the honor and pleasure of welcoming you to your new music hall," he said, "and they ask you to call it henceforth Symphony Hall."

He then outlined the history of the movement of building the hall, deplored the fact that it had been found impracticable to include a smaller hall for chamber concerts, lectures, etc., within the walls; complimented the architect, builder and others concerned in the construction and made this statement touching the financial affairs of the Music Hall Association:

Our capital is $500,000, of which $410,700 has been subscribed, and as this sum was far too small the directors have borrowed the remaining cost, which is about $350,000, making the total cost $750,000. They mortgaged the hall with reluctance, but had no other course, as the money was essential. The building has been leased by the directors for ten years to me, who am to meet costs of administration, taxes and all charges and to pay to the stockholders the rest of the receipts.

Among other things he also said:

It had long been clear that our home of music in Boston must be moved, for the old Music Hall was faulty in ventilation, in convenience, in lack of a good organ, and to a certain degree in acoustics. Around the old hall, from the opening night on November 20, 1852, hang the happy memories of fifty years' triumphs—the concerts of the Musical Fund Society, the Handel and Haydn, the Harvard Musical Society, the Apollo, the Cecilia—of Sontag, Alboni, Carl Eckert, Bergman, Thomas, Zerrahn, Thalberg, Rubinstein, Von Bülow, Wieniawski, Ole Bull, Sarasate, Paderewski, Patti, Nilsson, Sembrich, Lehmann, Tertina and countless artists—of great organ recitals, as well as echoes of noble sermons and church services, of lectures, of great public meetings. Nor can any one forget the men who from public spirit built the old hall, with one gentleman at their head, whose life and means without stint were devoted to art—Mr. Charles C. Perkins. The old Music Hall had become a great temple for our city, which had made many generations happy and which it was sad to leave, but the long felt need of change, quickened in 1893 by the supposed certainty of a street through the hall, moved you to offer your money freely during a period of financial distress and thus to give to the city this new home. To me it was a vital moment, for without it the life of the orchestra would have ceased, and I have never said how deeply your sympathy and generosity touched me. It is all as it should be. Certain citizens of Boston build a hall without regard to return in money, and by this act care for the happiness, the convenience, the education of the inhabitants for twenty miles around this spot, and it is fitting in a republic that the citizens and not the Government in any form should do such work and bear such burdens. To the more fortunate people of our land belongs the privilege of providing the higher branches of education and of art.

For the musical students in the audience the question of greatest permanent interest involved by the exercises of the evening was that of the acoustical properties of the new hall. Performances of Beethoven's "Missa Solennis" are not of frequent occurrence anywhere in the world, but given the determination, the devotion, the money and the forces and they can be had. At the worst a poor performance can be atoned for by another and better one. But a music hall once built which proves to be unfit for music is seldom remedied and never made really fit. Hundreds of ears were therefore alert this evening to learn whether the greatest of the problems that the construction of a music hall involves had been solved in this instance. In a description of the hall published in The Tribune a fortnight ago I mentioned the fact that responsibility for the concert room's acoustics had been assumed by Mr. Wallace C. Sabine, assistant professor of physics at Harvard University. Ever since Mr. Sabine laid his formulas of proportions and materials before the architects of the hall (Messrs. McKim, Mead & White, of New-York) he has maintained that there was as little question about the desired outcome as there was in the minds of the architects about the appearance of the structure. In view of certain memorable failures, recently discussed in a letter to The Tribune from Paris, this attitude seemed very daring. M. Garnier, after studying all that he was able to study about the laws of sound, and examining in person scores of concert rooms and theatres famous for good acoustical properties, confessed his inability to formulate any law, and built the Paris Grand Opéra on chance so far as acoustics were concerned. He thought the results good, but they are far from satisfactory. The builders of the Trocadéro took not a step without scientific sanction, obtained from a long and painstaking series of experiments, and failed much more dismally than M. Garnier, though from experiments made last summer I should say that there are interesting lessons still to be learned from observation of phenomena in the hall of the Trocadéro. At the performance of M. Saint-Saëns's Exposition ode, "Le Feu Céleste," for instance, every syllable of the actor who read portions of Armand Sylvestre's poem could be heard with distinctness in the furthermost row of gallery seats, while the music of the voices and instruments was confused. These French examples of mystery surrounding the laws of sound made Mr. Sabine's claim that his determinations concerning architectural acoustics left remaining no element of doubt touching the excellence of the music hall yet to be built seem very venturesome, to say the least. His confidence, it may be said now, has been justified and rewarded, but in the absence of scientific investigation after the fact, pursued with the same care and thoroughness that marked the experiments from which he drew the laws which he laid down for architects and builders, the sceptic may not yet feel confounded.

Mr. Sabine's experiments were made in the true spirit of science. He seems to have the imperturbable patience and perseverance of the German scientific investigator. He worked three years at the instigation of the Corporation of Harvard University to learn that the lecture room of the Fogg Art Museum could be made serviceable, though not excellent, by placing felt on certain of its walls. If he can accomplish as good results in Sayles Hall of Brown University, or the hall of the Women's Musical Club in Grand Rapids, which are the most impossible music rooms that I have ever tested, he ought to do so at once; and if his formulas are as accurate as the new Symphony Hall seem to indicate that they are, they ought to be adopted by every builder of a public edifice designed for speech or song immediately. Mr. Sabine began by establishing the duration of audibility of what he calls residual sound, but which is popularly spoken of as reverberation, by means of an organ pipe, the action of which he could control electrically, and a chronograph. Then he determined the relative absorbing power of various substances—cushions, draperies, plaster on lath, plaster on tiles and brick, wood, open windows, men and women. He began with all the cushions of the Sanders Theatre in Cambridge, and noted scientifically all the steps by which he reduced a reverberation which originally endured 5.62 seconds to one of only 1.14 seconds' durability. He made experiments in Cambridge, Boston and New-York, in a dozen or more rooms of various proportions, shapes and materials, having established bases by investigations in the Constant Temperature Room of the Jefferson Physical Laboratory in Cambridge, which was built for investigations in heat, and is underground, in the middle of a large building, on separate foundations, with thick double walls of brick laid in cement, and having no windows and only a single door. By taking up the subject of reverberations he determined the coefficient of absorption and reflection of various kinds of wall surface, of furniture, draperies and an audience. He can tell you now, as the result of five years of work, the relative powers of absorption (of sound, of course) of a fiddler on the stage in Symphony Hall, and ten square metres of Sanders Theatre cushions, a cushioned chair or an open window. When he came to lay down the laws for Symphony Hall he took two famous music rooms for comparison and calculated that the duration of the residual sound, in seconds, was 2.30 in the Leipsic Gewandhaus, 2.44 in the old Boston Music Hall, and would be 2.31, just between the other two, in the new Symphony Hall.

It is use that tells of the fitness of a music hall for its purposes. It would have been interesting to make the proper experiment to learn whether or not Mr. Sabine's predictions have been fulfilled, but even had he tried the conditions would not all have been present. The hall was designed for the symphony concerts. To-night's concert was choral, and five rows of seats in the audience down were sacrified to the extended stage. But the effects were most gratifying, and it can safely be said that for its purposes Boston has the most beautiful, appropriate and admirable hall in the United States.

H. E. K.

SOCIAL ASPECT OF THE OPENING.

CHARACTER OF THE AUDIENCE—PEOPLE WHO WERE PRESENT.

[BY TELEGRAPH TO THE TRIBUNE.]

Boston, Oct. 15.—If one wished to tell who were present at the opening of the new music hall this evening he would have to transcribe a large portion of Boston's society blue book. The representatives of art, learning, business and society were out in force. Had it been a New-York affair it would doubtless have looked more brilliant, for the people of New-York take to gay raiment more generally and more quickly than the people of Boston. Nevertheless, it was a most brilliant audience for Boston. A larger number of dress coats is seldom seen, but the women preserved the general Jenny Wren kind of sobriety in color. During the symphony season evening gowns and clawhammer dress coats are seldom seen here, whereas they are the rule at the Philharmonic concerts and similar entertainments in New-York. But the list of patrons of the symphony concerts runs much deeper into the social list here than do the corresponding lists in New-York. Here the symphony concerts stand not only for themselves in the department of artistic entertainment, they also fill the place that opera does in New-York. But Boston has learned to affect a disregard for gala dress which would sadly interfere with New-York's enjoyment of anything which brings a few hundred people together. Boston begins hurrying out of its concert rooms ten minutes or so before the end of the programme is reached in order to catch suburban trains and streetcars. The unattractive appearance of the old music hall was calculated to encourage this unsocial behavior. It is among the dreams of some young social philosophers that the order of things may bring about changes in the attitude of Boston's people toward life. After they have come to admire their own appearance in the cheery surroundings in the cheery environment which Symphony Hall offers them, it is thought that they will have less desire to hurry from each other's presence. Then they may gradually learn to don festive attire and eventually offer restaurants inducements to keep their lights burning and doors open later than 11 o'clock at night. But perhaps these young people are merely dreamers whose experiences in New-York have made them forget the seriousness and solemnity of artistic enjoyment.

The audience which attended the opening exercises this evening was variously made up. Mr. H. L. Higginson, who is at once the lessee of the hall and the manager of the Symphony Orchestra, seems to have taken a peculiarly characteristic view of the occasion. Fuss and feathers are not to his taste, and he did not look upon the occasion as one for money making. Such a view, indeed, would be far away from any conceit that he has ever indulged in connection with his labors to advance music in Boston. He has leased the new hall from the corporate association that built it, assuming the burden of its maintenance free of cost to the stockholders for ten years. There could be no better guarantee that for a decade, at least, the hall will be preserved against ignoble uses. Mr. Higginson to-night showed his fellow stockholders in what spirit he conceived his trusteeship. All of them—and they number four hundred—were his guests. They formed one distinctive element in the audience, although they were not grouped together. Then there were his private guests, the guests of the architects, builders and others concerned with the construction and equipment of the hall, who were, again, indirectly his guests, since to him fell the cost of the elaborate function, and the general public whose members paid the usual price of admission. There was a fair representation from New-York. Mr. McKim, the designer of the hall, was on hand; so were Messrs. Kendall and De Gersdorff, from among his associates, also Stanford White and Mrs. White. Among the musicians were John K. Paine, Walter Damrosch, Frank Damrosch, George W. Chadwick, Arthur Foote, B. J. Lang and Harold Randolph, the last director of the Peabody Conservatory, in Baltimore. Among educators were Professors Charles W. Eliot, Wallace C. Sabine and E. W. Hooper, of Harvard, and Professor Cross, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Here and there scattered through the listeners were J. Montgomery Sears, Mrs. J. L. Gardner, Albert A. Pope, N. W. Blackman, C. A. Coffin, Robert Treat Paine, Frank L. Higginson, John C. Bancroft, W. C. Cabot, George L. Peabody, Elliot Hubbard, Jonathan Beebe, Mrs. S. L. Aspinwall, F. Gordon Dexter, Mrs. Lucy B. Lowell, Mr. and Mrs. Augustus Heminway, Mrs John C. Gray, Henry W. Swift, E. H. Baker, E. Pierson Beebe, Dr. and Mrs. E. F. Shattuck, Dr. E. H. Bradford, Dr. E. G. Cutter, Mrs. J. J. Storrow, Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Whitney, J. K. Lothrop, J. J. Putnam, Charles E. Cotting, Mrs. G. H. Shaw, T. Russel Sullivan, Dr. Mixter, R. W. Emmons, G. M. Low, Gordon M. Lane, Jefferson R. Coolidge, Mrs. F. L. Ames, the Misses Ames, Mrs. R. R. Perkins, E. B. Hagar, Channing Lilly, Henry T. Gidder, Miss Ethel Stockton, Mrs. L. C. Fenno, T. W. Lawson, Charles E. Sampson, W. P. Blake, George Maxwell, of New-York; Mrs. G. Putnam, Mrs. Owen J. Wister, of Philadelphia; Miss Cary, Mrs. Agassiz, Charles T. Head, C. S. Stoddard, Mr. and Mrs. Eben S. Draper, Allin Danforth, Mrs. Richard Cary, Mrs. John Lowell, Dr. F. G. Balch, Alexander Steinert, Henry R. Reid, Miss Reid, Frederick Emory, T. H. Cabot, Mrs. Mary L. Blake J. P. Stearns, Louis Cabot, Mrs. Charles Fairchild, William Lawrence, Dana Estes, Mrs. Ellen H. Weld, Francis Bullard, O. W. Minot, S. Lothrop Thorndike, E. D. Leavitt, R. M. Cushing, L. S. Tuckerman, R. W. Hopkins, J. Payson Clark, Dr. James B. Ayer, William C. Richardson, H. S. Drew, Elisha S. Converse, Ellen M. Heminway, Mrs. N. W. Rice, A. E. Pillsbury, Nathan Matthews, A. Shuman, Eben D. Jordan, C. P. Curtis, Clement S. Houghton, Henry Cabot Lodge, Charles R. Codman, George L. Perkins, Mrs. S. E. Peabody, Andrew C. Wheelwright, Mrs. Samuel Allen, E. N. Farnsworth, William Endicott, Dr. Paul Thorndike, Samuel Winslow, H. H. Hunnewell and Mrs. Thatcher Loring. There were many hundreds more equally eminent with these in the various walks of life, but this list must serve to indicate the character of the audience that participated in the beautiful and historic function.

Boston Transcript

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 19, 1900

FOR THE FIRST REHEARSAL

Rush for Seats at Symphony Hall by Admission Ticket Holders This Afternoon

Not many minutes before half-past one (when the doors of Symphony Hall were to be opened for the first Friday afternoon rehearsal within its walls) Mr. Comee stepped into the main lobby. Facing the stairways at each end stood two long double lines of people, much as they used to stand for rush seats in Music Hall. There were two hundred of them, mostly girls, who filled the high lobby with their chatter—the crowd as in other years, only smaller. Mr. Comee raised his hand for silence. "I suppose it is well understood," he said, "that there have been no more admission tickets sold than there are seats; that everyone can have a seat." A clapping of gloved hands was his response; he disappeared behind the swinging doors and a moment later put out his head. "All right!" he called in a sharp tone.

They all knew what it meant, and as fast as they could pass the ticket-taker in single file, picked up their skirts in one hand, reached out the other to the programme boy and dashed up the broad marble steps with a rustle of silk petticoats and shouts of laughter. There was no crowding—there was too much room for it; but it was a free-for-all race for the top, in which the swift and clender had a good chance, though farther back in the line, to outdistance the stout and puffy. But at the top they found that their race was of little use, for the few disdainful ones who had walked leisurely up, on the outside of the stairs, found as good seats as the first. They had sixteen doors of entrance to choose from, and when they had spread themselves over the gallery there was room for as many more, who came drifting in during the next hour.

There wer enoly five hundred and five admission tickets (equally the number of seats in the gallery) sold for this afternoon's rehearsal, as against nearly eight hundred for the rehearsals in Music Hall. That is why there were less people in line, and why so many of them said they would not stand so long there again. For the holders of reserved seats the Boston Elevated Railroad has made special car arrangements in the subway. Cars left the Park street station at 2.03, 2.08 and 2.13 this afternoon, and tomorrow evening will leave at 7.32, 7.38 and 7.42 P. M., running by way of Boylston street and Massachusetts avenue. At the close of the performance cars will be in charge of inspectors, to run by way of Massachusetts avenue at three minute intervals.

BALTIMORE MORNING HERALD is claimed

OCTOBER 19, 1900

FOR MUSIC LOVERS

Mr. J. B. Noel Wyatt's Generous Provision for Boston Symphony Concert Tickets

Mr. J. B. Noel Wyatt, the well-known Baltimore architect, has purchased 40 season tickets for the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra concerts, some of which will be disposed of at a reduced rate to music lovers.

Mr. Wyatt recently made a trip to Boston, and learned that Mr. H. L. Higginson had made provision to sell annually a large number of seats at 25 cents apiece to music lovers who could not afford to pay the higher price. Mr. Wyatt conceived the idea of doing the same thing on a somewhat smaller scale in Baltimore. He accordingly made the necessary arrangements and bought 40 seats.

Mr. P. R. Comee, of Boston, manager of the Symphony Orchestra, had a conference with Mr. Wyatt Wednesday, and gave his consent to the latter's plan. Mr. Wyatt will send half of the seats to an institution, where they will be distributed at each concert to the inmates. The remainder will be sent to another organization, which comes in contact with persons that are self-reliant, but are not able to pay the full price to hear the concerts. They will be given the opportunity of buying the tickets at a reduced rate. For obvious reasons Mr. Wyatt wishes to withhold the names of the two institutions. It is stated that Mr. Wyatt and Mr. Higginson are the only gentlemen in the United States who have been thoughtful enough to bring the Boston Symphony concerts within the reach of the music lover who cannot afford to pay the regular price.

The Evening Post.

New York, Tuesday, October 16, 1900.

BOSTON'S NEW MUSIC-HALL

DEDICATION OF THE HOME OF THE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

History of the Enterprise—Description of the Building—The First Concert—The Acoustic Problem Satisfactorily Solved—A Notable Gathering.

[Special Dispatch to The Evening Post.]

BOSTON, October 16.—Boston is preëminently a concert town. Opera has never flourished here as it does in New York, and Mr. Grau usually considers himself lucky if, after five successful months in New York, which may yield him a profit of $100,000, Boston endures his world-famed singers three weeks without depleting his pockets. But instrumental music is more highly esteemed than in New York. The twenty-four annual concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, founded in 1881 through the generosity of Mr. Henry Lee Higginson, are the great musical events of the season, more important than a Paderewski recital or a performance of "Siegfried"; and to have it announced in the papers that she paid the highest premium for her seats at the symphony concerts flatters the vanity of a Boston society woman as much as it does a New York society woman's to have it known that she owns one of the most expensive boxes at the Metropolitan Opera-house.

Last night Boston celebrated a musical event more important even than the regular symphony concerts—the inauguration of a new music-hall, the old one having been found wanting after nearly half a century's service. On November 20, 1852, the leading musical societies of the city—the Handel and Haydn, the Musical Educational Society, the Musical Fund Orchestra, the Germania Serenade Band, and Kreissmann's Liedertafel—took part in the dedication of the Music Hall. "Here was a hall," write John Dwight, swelled with local pride, "larger and finer than any in this country, or hardly any in the old world, destined thenceforth to be the theatre of oratorio, as well as other noble music. Its architecture, internally, was noble and attractive, although externally the building stood far back of the two streets, Winter and Tremont, nearly concealed from view, while sheltered from street noises, and required no architectural adornment—only plain, solid, fireproof, well-proportioned walls." The only thing un-Bostonian about the conception of the hall was that, according to the same chronicler, the first thought of the new hall had sprung from a feeling of Boston's lack of a suitable place for a singer like Jenny Lind. It had seats for 2,700 people, and was owned in joint stock largely held by a few munificent subscribers, including MM. Chickering, Upham, Apthorp, Curtis, Perkins. After a while, cunning speculators succeeded in getting hold of some of the stock, and the hall was desecrated occasionally, not only by frivolous musical entertainments, but even by dog and poultry shows.

It was not these, however, that gave the death-blow to the hall. About ten years ago an elevated-railway project threatened its destruction, and Mr. Higginson at once opened a subscription for a new hall. The railway project was not carried out, and the old music-hall remained the home of the Symphony Orchestra. A few years ago, however, the subscriptions were collected, and the building of the new hall was begun on June 12, 1899, the architect being Mr. Charles F. McKim of the New York firm of McKim, Mead & White. Mr. McKim intended to model the hall after the plan of a Greek theatre, but Mr. Gericke and other local authorities were unwilling, on acoustic grounds, to sanction an experiment which might turn out unsatisfactorily, so Mr. McKim reserved his plan for the Columbia University Academic Theatre, and built the Boston Hall on more conventional lines.

Internally, indeed, it bears considerable resemblance to the old hall, in the arrangement of the parquet, stage, and the two galleries. But everything is in better taste and more commodious. The chairs are comfortable, with plenty of knee and elbow room, and the ventilation seems to be good. The background of the stage is formed by an excellent organ, gilded, and gilt decorations prevail also in the auditorium. With the exception of the wooden floors laid directly on masonry and steel, the hall is built of brick, tile, steel, and plaster. According to the foreman, Mr. French, it cannot be burned, and thus the fear of fire which has hung over Boston for twenty years in the old hall is gone for ever. The statues that adorned the old hall have not been transferred to the new one, but there are niches in the walls above the galleries for such statuary as may be acquired.

Externally the new hall is an imposing structure in the North Italian style, the material used being hard brick, with stone trimmings, and on the Huntington Avenue front a portico with eight Doric columns. In the address which Mr. Higginson delivered after the first piece had been performed last evening, he remarked:

It was no easy matter to achieve the absolute needs of the hall without injury to its beauty and without undue expense. They sought diligently to place a second and smaller room for chamber-music or lectures within the space of the exterior walls, but found that such a plan would only result in a compromise, giving you two poorer halls. Therefore, they have built this hall, of which you will presently hear the quality.

If it is a success, the credit and your thanks are due to four men—Mr. McKim, Mr. Norcross, Professor Sabine of Harvard University, and last, but not least, Mr. C. E. Cotting, who with his wide experience has watched and guided the construction and guarded our slender purse. Without his aid the hall might not have been ready to-night, and I rejoice for him that his task is fulfilled. Professor Sabine has studied thoroughly our questions of acoustics, has applied his knowledge to our problem, and, I think, with success. Professor Cross of the Institute of Technology has also given us the benefit of his counsel, and the help of these three gentlemen has been a pure labor of love. You see the handiwork of Mr. Norcross and of his excellent sub-contractors and assistants, but you have not seen their energy and patience in our behalf. As for Mr. McKim, he is here, but will not speak for himself, his partners, and his office. Abandoning his pet idea with absolute cheerfulness, he set himself to devise a plan not entirely to his liking, and even in the execution of this plan he has given up many hopes, wishes, and fancies, because the directors had no more money.

Our capital is $500,000, of which $410,700 has been subscribed, and as this sum was far too small, the directors have borrowed the remaining cost, which is about $350,000, making the total cost rising $750,000. They mortgaged the hall with reluctance, but had no other course, as the money was essential. The building has been leased by the directors for ten years to me, who am to meet costs of administration, taxes, and all charges, and to pay to the stockholders the rest of the receipts. Let me add that the beauty of the hall has been won entirely by Mr. McKim, and I hope that it pleases you.

The new home of the Symphony Orchestra has been called Symphony Hall, evidently as an afterthought, for on the official stationery the words "New Music" (Hall) are cancelled and Symphony substituted. The site of Symphony Hall is well chosen at the junction of Huntington and Massachusetts Avenues, where it is as convenient to Cambridge and other adjacent cities as to Boston, and also far from the madding crowds of central Boston. It is a central point, too, for the trolleys, which, however, are inaudible in the auditorium. The site was bought in 1893, at about half the price per foot paid for the opposite lot, where the Horticultural Hall is to stand.

The seating capacity of the new hall is a trifle less than that of the old one—2,569 against 2,700. That every seat was taken last night need not be stated, and the gathering was one of the most notable ones ever seen in the Hub. When Mr. Gericke appeared on the stage, he was received with the most cordial applause, but a greater ovation was reserved for Mr. Higginson. The spectators even got on their feet while applauding—an almost unprecedented honor, but one well deserved by this munificent patron of music, who has made Boston what it is to-day, the equal of the great German capitals as regards concert music.

To Bach most appropriately fell the honor of being heard first in Symphony Hall, for he is the fountain-head of modern music. His stately choral "Grant us to do with zeal" was performed impressively. Then Mr. Higginson made the address already quoted from. He was followed by Mr. Owen Wister, whom every magazine reader knows as a writer of entertaining Western stories, full of charming local color, but concerning whom few know that he is also a writer of songs. He read an ode to instrumental music, "The Bird of Passage," and then came the Beethoven Missa Solemnis, which took up the rest of the programme. I do not think this programme was at all happily chosen. The great question concerning which not only the thousands in the hall, but tens of thousands not in it, were on the tiptoe of expectation was, "Is the hall satisfactory acoustically?" To determine this there should have been a number of short compositions by writers of different methods—say Mozart, Schubert, and Wagner. Beethoven is not at his best as a writer for the human voice, and his great mass, moreover, was written at a time when he was entirely deaf, and when he had become utterly reckless in the use of human voices as mere instruments. He should have been represented on this occasion by one of his symphonies, or not at all. The soloists—Mmes. Clementine de Vere, Gertrude May Stein, MM. Evan Williams, and J. S. Baernstein—the Cecelia Society (reinforced by other singers), and Mr. Gericke, with the Symphony orchestra, gave, indeed, an altogether admirable performance of the mass, with few flaws, yet there were passages where it was difficult to decide whether a slight lack of cleanness and precision was due to imperfect execution of almost impossible music, or to acoustic defects. On the whole, however, the effect of the music was so good that it does not seem rash to say that the hall is—what very few concert halls are—a success acoustically. Mr. Higginson and Mr. Wister were not always intelligible, but that may have been due to the fact that they are not trained speakers.

It must be remembered, too, that, as the late John Dwight wrote, "the walls of a hall, like those of a violin, must ripen and grow musical by frequent and continuous response to musical vibrations; they must outgrow their crude condition, and become gradually, attuned, acclimated to harmony." I remember that when the Metropolitan Opera-house in New York was inaugurated, I felt constrained to write so disparagingly about its acoustics as to bring the architect's wrath down on me in the shape of an indignant epistle. Yet to-day the Metropolitan is, for its size, not a bad auditorium for the purposes for which it was built. The Boston Symphony Hall has the advantage of starting out well, and it would not be surprising, therefore, if mellowing time made it a Stradivarius among halls.

H. T. F.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CVIII., NO. 112.

SATURDAY, OCT. 20, 1900.

The audience at the performance of the Beethoven mass Monday night did not realize that one of the singers had crossed the Atlantic ocean just to take part in the work, arriving only the day previous, and leaving for London on the following day's steamer. But Mme. Clementine de Vere-Sapio having promised Mr. Gericke last spring that she would sing on this occasion, kept her word, at considerable cost of time and money. Her hurried trip over, if not the good faith of this favorite vocalist, deserved some thanks, but I hear they were not forthcoming from the expected source.

TREAT FOR HIS SINGERS.

Manager Chamberlyn of the Columbia Theatre to Give the Use of a Symphony Ticket.

At the auction sale of reserved seats for the Symphony orchestra rehearsals, held in September, there was much spirited bidding for the first seat offered for sale. The number of the seat, which was issued for the 24 rehearsals, was "A—1." After a sharp competition, the ticket was secured by Mr. Frank Herrick, who paid $292 for his purchase.

At that time Mr. Herrick refused to divulge the name of the party for whom he secured the seat, and not until yesterday was the holder of the ticket known. It is Mr. A. H. Chamberlyn, the manager of the Columbia Theatre, who intends to donate it, for the different concerts, to members of the organizations under his control that are playing at the Columbia. Yesterday afternoon Miss Adele Ritchie, who is appearing in the title role of "The Cadet Girl," attended the rehearsal.

Mr. Chamberlyn intends to permit his principal feminine artists to use the seat, and occasionally to have it used by one of the chorus contingent. To impartially award the seat to one of his lesser artists he has determined to give it as a reward of merit to the girl who, during a certain period previous to a rehearsal, has been particularly excellent in her vocal efforts.

A condition of the sale was that the ticket should be returned to Mr. Herrick at the close of the series of rehearsals, as Mr. Herrick desires to retain it as a souvenir.

BOSTON POST,

The Representative Democratic Paper OF NEW ENGLAND.

Cars of the Boston Elevated Railway Company will leave Park street station for Symphony Hall for this Saturday evening's performance at 7:32, 7:38 and 7:42, running via Boylston street and Massachusetts avenue, and at the close of performances extra cars will be in charge of inspectors, and will be run at intervals of about three minutes to Park street station via Massachusetts avenue and Boylston street.

+ + + +

Boston Journal.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1900.

The program of the Symphony Concert, this evening at Symphony Hall, will include the overture to "Euryanthe," Weber; Handel's concerto for organ No. 4, in D minor (first time in Boston); ballet movement and entr'acte from "Rosamonde;" Beethoven's 5th Symphony. Mr. J. W. Goodrich will be the organist.

The program for the first Symphony Concert this evening at Symphony Hall is as follows: Overture to "Euryanthe," Weber; concerto for organ in D minor, Handel; ballet-movement and entr'acte, Schubert; Symphony No. 5, Beethoven.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CVIII., NO. 111.

FRIDAY, OCT. 19, 1900.

There is one objection, if not more, to far away Symphony Hall, for the rehearsal girl. She's going to miss her refreshment of ice cream sodas, the dropping in to gossip around the crowded counter, and ruin her appetite for dinner by nibbling caramels. It is a far cry from these fountains of sweets to Massachusetts avenue, that's a fact.

[2]

Boston Daily Globe.
SATURDAY, OCT. 20, 1900.

THE REHEARSAL GIRL.

She Goes to the Symphony in the Same Old Way.

There Are Three of Her and One is Said to be the Most Picturesque.

Those Apollos Don't Glitter Any More—A Word About Etiquette Also.

The Symphony rehearsal girl is a distinct Boston institution, of whom it is as true as of Cleopatra of old that time cannot wither nor custom stale her infinite variety. Yet whether she goes to concerts in barnlike Music hall or spends an extra carfare getting up to the new building on the Back Bay wastes, she herself does not change. Like Tennyson's brook, she goes on forever.

Of course this is not to say that the rehearsal girl is so much sui generis as to admit of absolutely no differentiation. There are really three, if not more distinct variations of the type, and each one is as individual and as interesting as if she were the only one. There is in the first place the Conservatory student, who loves music as she loves nothing else in all the world and who is quite unconscious of time and of all other human limitations when a symphony is to be heard or an exquisite overture to be enjoyed.

This girl often denies herself the ordinary comforts of life for the sake of saving the quarter a week necessary to the purchase of her rehearsal ticket, and she thinks it no sacrifice at all. "Is not music," she will say, "the greatest thing in the world?"

Then there is the girl who is being educated all along the line, and who goes to the concerts as she would go to anything else her mother thinks good for her. She very seldom has to join the crowd at the "rush." Mama or grandma or auntie has seen to the matter of her seats, and she, with her friend, another fortunate Bostonienne, takes the concerts as they take everything else in life, easily and with well-regulated emotion.

The Most Picturesque.

The third rehearsal girl, and the one who is really most interesting as well as most picturesque, is the regular matinee girl, who doesn't know much at all about music but who thinks the "rush" is a jolly lark, and who likes immensely to be one of the vast, well dressed throng which is wont to stroll down the street after the concert, carrying in daintily gloved hands the dull brown book which proclaims that one is "in it." For this girl the hot chocolate after the concert was really one of its chief attractions, and now that she will not be seen of men so much as she was wont to be in the old hall, it's a grave question whether she will continue to lend comfort and support to the famous Boston institution.

Then since there are no steps in the new hall, the matinee maid cannot for her quarter get the nearby view of Timothee and the other favorites which she was wont to enjoy. She will sigh long and long for the good old days of the steps. Ever since the concerts began the privileges of the steps have been open to her. With her best friend she was wont to take her place early and there munch her choice in chocolates while waiting for the concert to begin. When the Symphony men came on to their places she and her companion could talk as much as they liked about the good looking ones.

The Day the Steps Went.

But there came a fatal day during the reign of Mr Paur when the fiat went forth that the steps should be no longer used for seats, and then the matinee girl told mama she hardly cared to go any more. Up in the balcony, among those music cranks, it was "just stupid," she argued, and of course she couldn't stand—that was quite out of the question.

But this cloud blew by, as most clouds do, and for some years now the step girl has had her rights. Naturally, she will have them no more, since in the new building there are no steps.

Yet in truth there seemed to be no question yesterday of disgruntlement, even among these more aristocratic "rushers." One and all the rehearsal girls arrived early—some as early as 12 o'clock, and with sublime patience they stood about in the front vestibule, chatting merrily and doing their best to beguile the time that intervened before the doors were thrown open to them. In the old hall the girls used to sit on the floor while awaiting the fateful moment, but here the floor is marble—too terribly cold to make a comfortable resting place. So all stood up for the hour or more, and all looked as cheerful as fatigue would permit.

The Rush.

About quarter past one there was a universal straightening of backs and strengthening of limbs. The time was now almost spent, and the wary old stager girded herself metaphorically for the fray she knew was at hand.

Half past one! The "rush" is on! And it was a rush, too; the wildest kind of a scramble to secure in the new hall the seats grown dear and familiar in the old. Elbows were now called into requisition, and on the principle that all is fair in love, war and a symphony fracas, the girl in the blue cloth gown stepped on the toes of her intimate friend in green and grabbed almost out of that friend's very clutch the seat for which both were striving. Verily the young person from Beacon st spoke truly when she said that the "rush" is not a school of etiquette.

But it's all in the game, and nobody bears malice up there in the second gallery. Girls who formerly have not known each other at all talk together during the long hours of waiting, and they do say that many a pretty student romance may be dated from a day when some youth with long legs and athletic powers yielded his good seat to a delicate-looking music student who had been left without any.

quaintance can never occur in the new hall, however, for only 505 tickets are sold at the cheap rates, and for these there are just 505 seats up there with the Apollo Belvidere. The "standees" are now things of the past. Men and women can no longer have a place to stand on the floor sandwiched side by side with absolutely no support but their enthusiasm. The regular subscribers approve of the new rule.

The Happy Regular.

The regular subscriber, by the by, was in the happiest possible frame of mind yesterday. One lady remarked that it all made her feel a good deal as if she were in church, but since she liked to go to church she didn't know that it mattered. Ordinarily the remarks of the subscriber took the form of little gurgles of delight. "So nice," "Perfectly charming," "In exquisite taste," were a few of these appreciative murmurs.

The dowagers, though, were in a frenzy of excitement over the necessity of learning how to find their way about in the vast structure, and all of these pounced, as soon as they reached the hall, upon the veteran chief usher, who for some 30 or 40 years has ministered at Music hall to the necessities of flustered Bostonians.

In due time, however, all were seated, and promptly at an hour which was probably 2.30, though ocular proof of this fact was made impossible because of the absence of the well-known clock, Mr Gericke walked out upon the stage, and was greeted by an immediate lull of voices and the usual conservative handclap. He bowed, turned about, and the first rehearsal in Symphony hall was begun.

Whereupon all three classes of rehearsal girls, as well as the regular subscribers, leaned back and imbibed for some two hours the atmosphere of the place and the excellent program which had been provided. Only the Apollo Belvidere felt a change and longed in vain for the "old familiar faces" that used so often to be turned in his direction—when he lived in the old hall directly over the clock.

Boston Sunday Globe.
SUNDAY, OCT. 21, 1900.

Opening of the Symphony Orchestra Season.

At last the Boston symphony orchestra has a "home" befitting the dignity of our superb organization, and last week's rehearsal and concert seemed specially attractive to the thousands of patrons because of the architectural and musical harmony existing between the house and the performance; each result achieved by the toil and brain work of experts in the required branches of endeavor. A beautiful house and a magnificent orchestra was a combination long desired, and now that it is assured, the 20th season of the symphony concerts will mark an important era in the musical history of Boston. Nearly every one is familiar by this time with the descriptions of the house, but the acoustic properties, not being visible, affairs remained in doubt until actual tests were made, and so far the new building appears to be all that need be desired either for choral, orchestra or solo work, having given great satisfaction under every condition. Perhaps the pleasure to the eye made the music sound better to the ear, but certainly no concerts by the orchestra have seemed more enjoyable than those of last week in the Symphony hall.

The first program was as follows: Overture to Weber's "Euryanthe," concerto for organ (arranged) by Handel, ballet movement and entr'acte from Schubert's "Rosamunde" and Beethoven's fifth symphony. Mr J. Wallace Goodrich was the solo organist.

The overture to "Euryanthe" opened brilliantly, perhaps a happy augury for a brilliant season, and the dramatic episodes following were given with what might be called "gusto," as if to emphasize the fact that the orchestra was really at home for this and many seasons to come. The tender passages by the first violins, the contrast of martial and poetic themes, the lively rhythms of the other strings and the finale, which finally dies away in pianissimo, were each played with beautiful effect, showing that the orchestra was, as ever before, as nearly perfect in performance as one could hope to hear.

The Handel concerto for organ, an incomplete score, gave the well-known organist, Mr J. W. Goodrich, a favorable opportunity for showing the qualities of the upper registers of the new instrument without testing the heavier pipes to a fortissimo extent. The voices of the instrument are very sweet, and the changes in combinations produced no harsh tonalities in drawling notes; everything was clear, crisp and true to pitch. Although Mr Goodrich had not become thoroughly familiar with the new organ his touch was admirable, his phrasing and accents as artistic and expressive as ever, and his whole performance, both as executant and improvisor, was most enjoyable. His work was of a simple nature, probably from choice, and at his concert this week his varied program will enable him to demonstrate further capabilities of the instrument and better show his abilities as a performer.

In the "Rosamunde" music the joyous work of the orchestra was typical of the Schubert subject, and the dainty, tripping measures were brought out with charming effect. The great fifth symphony by Beethoven was played grandly, its dignity and sonority being preserved throughout—excepting when that exquisite little trio in the third movement called for the staccato and pizzicati measures. Here the orchestra, and audience too, fairly reveled in the quaint melodies, which were bewitchingly played. The hall was filled as full as the law allows, and Mr Gericke, Mr Goodrich and prominent members of the orchestra were each the recipient of hearty welcomes.

Mme Schuman-Heink will be the soloist at the concerts this week, and the program will be as follows: Overture, "Roman Carnival," Berlioz; aria from Mozart's "Titus;" suite, "Esclarmonde," Massenet; song, "Die Allmacht," Schubert; Dvorak's "New World" symphony.

—Mme Clementine de Vere, who went over to Europe in the summer to sing in English opera, promised Mr Gericke she would sing the soprano part in the program arranged for the opening of the Symphony hall last Monday evening, and in order to keep her promise she came over on a German steamer, arriving in New York the previous Friday, and came direct to Boston. She rehearsed here Saturday and Sunday and sang, as promised, on Monday evening. On Wednesday she sailed again for England.

The dates for the Boston Symphony orchestra concerts in New York are Nov 8, Dec 13, Jan 17, Feb 21, March 21, at 8.15, and on Saturday afternoons, Nov 10, Dec 15, Jan 19, Feb 23, March 23, at 2.30.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.
SUNDAY MORNING, OCTOBER 21, 1900.

SYMPHONY OPENS

Large and Fashionable Audience Present Last Evening.

NO STAND-UPS ALLOWED.

Intermission for Promenading Evidently Much Enjoyed.

GOOD PROGRAMME PRESENTED.

The twentieth season of the Symphony Orchestra concerts opened last evening in Symphony Hall, and the event was characterized by several innovations.

There was an unusually large audience present, the immense auditorium being completely filled, but there were no "stand-ups," the new rule forbidding the sale of admissions without seats being in force.

It was noticeable that there was a greater preponderance of evening costumes than was customary in the old Music Hall. This display of fashionable raiment was confined chiefly to the gentlemen, but many of the ladies were in gay attire.

One of the innovations was an intermission in the middle of the programme, and this interval was improved by the members of the audience for promenading, such as was the fad during the season of grand opera at the Boston Theatre.

The spacious corridors and lobbies offered superior facilities for walking about, and the brief respite from the heavy music was very generally indulged in and apparently much enjoyed. Indeed, with the exclusion of "admission" listeners, and the high prices demanded for seats, the Symphonies have become ultra social gatherings where one may see and be seen.

An opportunity was also offered for hearing Boston's pet musical organization in its new home and judging to better advantage than on last Monday evening of the acoustic properties of the place. There was not the slightest difficulty in hearing at all parts of the hall, but there seemed to be less body to the sound. However, it was thought that this may have been due somewhat to the character of the selections.

The placing of the members of the orchestra is practically the same as in the old hall, although the key board of the big organ, which was placed near Mr. Gericke's desk, gave a peculiar appearance to the stage. Mr. Gericke was warmly welcomed on his first appearance, but he stepped to his place and rapped his men to order with as much nonchalance as though he had been giving concerts in the hall all his life.

The programme was a varied and pleasing one, beginning with Weber's overture to "Euryanthe," which served as an animated opening. Then came Handel's concerto for the organ, No. 4, played for the first time in this city. It was also said to be the first time an organist has figured as a soloist at these concerts, and it was for the double purpose of furnishing a pleasing novelty to the programme as well as testing the new and magnificent instrument.

J. Wallace Goodrich was the organist, and he added to his already high reputation as a musician. Unfortunately the selection, while eminently pleasing, was not of a character to display the qualities of the instrument to the highest advantage. The best movement was the Larghetto, which was admirably rendered.

Following the concerto came the ballet movement and entr'acte from Schubert's "Rosamunde," and here the graceful touch of Mr. Gericke was most prominent. Both numbers were beautifully given and elicited the heartiest applause. Beethoven's familiar fifth Symphony closed the interesting programme.

At the rehearsal and concert of the coming week, Mme. Schumann-Heink will be the soloist.

[22]

SUNDAY HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. OVIII., NO. 113.

SUNDAY, OCT. 21, 1900.

A COMPLETE SUCCESS.

Symphony Hall Used for a Symphony Concert.

Acoustic Qualities Could Not Be Improved on.

Mrs. Jack Gardner Sits in the Famous $560 Seat

With Her is Mr. George Proctor, the Pianist.

Last Night's Music Cost Her the Sum of $47.66 2-3.

THE 20th season of the Boston Symphony concerts opened last evening in Symphony Hall, with this programme:

Overture, "Euryanthe".....Weber
Concerto for organ, No. 4, in D minor..Handel
Ballet movement and entr'acte, "Rosamunde".....Schubert
Symphony in C minor.....Beethoven

The soloist was Mr. J. Wallace Goodrich.

The organ concerto was given for the first time in Boston. It is a placidly pleasing bit of antiquity, but, with all due respect to its writers, scarcely worth reviving at a Symphony concert. As it was scarcely adapted to any very effective display of the scope and qualities of a modern organ, such as the new instrument in the new hall, it is difficult to understand why it should have been brought from obscurity, especially with a third movement tacked to it, which was transcribed from a work in which the organ had no part.

Mr. Goodrich played it neatly, with a clean and firm touch, and quite interestingly; but beyond this it afforded him little opportunity to display his skill or musicianship. In other words, considering the doctoring the score has undergone from different hands and the mixing up of what is really Handel's and what is somebody else's, it would seem that it might have been better to select a work in which so much fitting in "in the spirit of the composer" was not considered necessary. For the rest, Mr. Goodrich was heartily applauded and as heartily recalled.

The wholly favorable impression made by the acoustic qualities of the hall on the opening night was re-enforced last evening. Everything is heard with the most perfect distinctness, the contrasting timbres of the different instruments stand out clearly, and at no time, even in the heaviest fortissimos, is there any cloudiness of tone. Again are those who have achieved this fortunate result to be congratulated on the great success that has attended their efforts.

Those who have in their care the ventilation of the hall have not as yet obtained full control over their charge. On the whole, the temperature of the auditorium is kept at an excellent point; but suddenly, and without warning, there are changes from an agreeable warmth to draughts that make one shiver with chills. This, however, will probably be better regulated when there is greater familiarity with the working of the ventilating machinery.

There was a large and brilliant audience, and Mr. Gericke was received with great cordiality when he came first to the conductor's stand. The orchestral selections have been given so often by the orchestra, and its methods and those of its conductor are so familiar in the presentation of these works, that it would be superfluous to deal with the subject again in detail. It will suffice to state that the players were up to their best standard throughout, and that Mr. Gericke's readings were again distinguished by their discreet conservatism and the purity of taste he brought to bear on them.

The programme for the next concert is: Overture, "The Roman Carnival," Berlioz; aria from "Titus," Mozart; suite, "Esclarmonde," Massenet, first time; song, "Die Allmacht," Schubert; symphony, "From the New World," Dvorak. The soloist will be Mme. Schumann-Heink.

MRS. JACK GARDNER THERE.

As Was Expected, It Was She Who Bought the $560 Seat.

Almost 3000 pairs of eyes, including those of practically every man in the Symphony orchestra itself, were directed searchingly at a certain place in the hall. And the point in mention was not upon the stage, either. Instead—and this remarkable locality attracted pretty nearly as much attention as Conductor Wilhelm Gericke himself during the early part of the evening—it was in a section of the first balcony on the right-hand side, near the front of the house, the two left-hand aisle seats, facing the stage, which are just off the first aisle toward the rear of the house.

Now these seats are remarkable in several ways. In the first place, they [illegible] enough to occupy them. In the second place, they are extremely conspicuous, and those who sit in them cannot help being seen by pretty nearly everybody in the hall. In the third place, when these seats were sold at public auction a few weeks ago, they brought premiums of just $560 apiece—a fact which meant that all records of symphony sales, and there were some very stiff records, incidentally, were everlastingly broken, and a fact which, too, was telegraphed, cabled and printed from London to San Francisco, and from Montreal to New Orleans.

It was generally considered that $560, plus $12 (the latter being the price of a seat in the first place, before the premium was added), was a very snug price to pay for 24 concerts, even when given by the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Naturally, therefore, a great deal of curiosity has existed as to who would occupy them on the evening of the first regular concert, which was last night. And so people looked, in order that they might find out. Dame Rumor had meddled most outrageously in the affair, despite the efforts taken to insure secrecy. Manager Ellis intimated that he was blessed if he knew who would sit there. Assistant Manager Comee was likewise densely ignorant. Mr. Mudgett didn't know, either. Mr. Connelly, the ticket broker who bought them, knew, but he wouldn't tell. The dame went right on, and kept whispering that it would be Mrs. "Jack" Gardner who would be found there.

Dame Rumor was right. Mrs. Gardner was there, escorted by Mr. George Proctor, the pianist. And so the good people who make up a Symphony audience—and who seem curious, just like other people—stared and appeared eminently satisfied with things.

Mrs. Gardner paid $47.66⅔ to hear that concert last evening. She has paid that amount to hear every other concert in the series during the year. A great many people go "rush" at the afternoon rehearsals and pay 25 cents apiece per concert. That is, Mrs. Gardner pays over 190 times what the "rush" people pay per concert, or 190 people could go "rush" for what Mrs. Gardner pays.

There were people at the concert last evening who said they hoped that Mrs. Gardner was getting her money's worth. In the mean time, the chief wonderment seems to be as to whether the record as it now stands will ever be broken.

A FEAT IN ACOUSTICS.

How Symphony Hall Was Made a Perfect Success.

The superior sounding properties of Symphony Hall, while in a measure indebted to the model offered in the music hall or Gewandhaus at Leipzic, are more particularly due to the application of principles which have been developed to a fine degree by Prof. W. C. Sabine, the assistant professor of physics of Harvard University. He has doubtless made a closer study of acoustics than any one else, and his work is recognized throughout the scientific world. The experiments have been mostly carried on at night, when all was as still as it ever is; but even the sound of the rain on the roof, the whirr of the night wind and the pound of the freight train laboring on a distant grade have interfered with the work. The experiments have been, perhaps, chiefly concerned with determining in various rooms and halls the resonance of sounds, or "residual sound," and the methods of correcting it. This has involved a close study of the power of absorption of the various materials used in the floors, walls and ceiling, the furnishings and the audience—even to the nature of the clothing. Then, of course, the proportions have to be considered with regard to the deflection of sound, and in the new hall all these have been left to the decision of Prof. Sabine. Every surface has been considered with regard to the sound travel, to avoid echoes and confused reflection of the sound waves.

Auditoriums, unlike crochet and some other work, cannot well be undone and done over again, and, while a model may offer some conditions which may be regarded, change in modern construction to comply with fireproof requirements, difference in the seating capacity and ventilation, all combine to make the question both difficult and interesting.

Music halls, as contrasted with theatres, offer a peculiar distinction, in that resonance in a degree is desired in the former, while in the theatre the chief object is to attain clearness and loudness alone. A Symphony recital would not sound well in an ordinary theatre. So the problem considered for speakers and musicians is quite distinct. In the question of acoustics, loudness, interference, resonance and reverberation have to be chiefly regarded.

Prof. Sabine's experiments are described in a series of papers in the American Architect and Building News. Much of the exposition is exceedingly interesting to the ordinary reader, while some of the matter is necessarily strictly scientific.

The simplest proposition in acoustics is that of an open plain, bare ground, and a single auditor. The sound spreads out in a hemisphere, diminishing proportionally as it diminishes in size. A large audience will absorb the sound, at least the lower edge of it, which is the part to be considered on a plain. The simplest improvement comes with the raising of the speaker, the seats, or erecting a wall behind the speaker—as in the Greek Theatre. Finally, comes the roof, which not only intensifies but equalizes the sound, and with it the consideration of material, sounding boards, etc. One of the chief objects is to get the waves; travelling by different paths, that is to different walls, to come together. The condensation, or crest, should fall in with the condensation, and, correspondingly, the rarefaction, or depression, with its like. Otherwise there is confusion and comparative silence or deadness, very much the condition of choppy water waves in a swimming tank. By such confusion occur the "bad" places of a room or auditorium. A case of the sort is illustrated by Prof. Sabine in a room where an organ-pipe gave out a fundamental treble C, accompanied by several overtones, the strongest of which was in this case an octave above. Each of the notes of the whole complex sound had its own interference system, so that one got various effects at various parts of the room.

"Practically almost every sound of the voice in speech or song," he explains, "and of instrumental music, even single part music, so-called, is more or less complex and, therefore, subject to this distortion."

Resonance he contrasts with the above, in the altering the total amount of sound in a room—as distinct from distorting the nice adjustment of the relative intensities of sounds in speech and music. This makes it necessary to adjust [illegible] it is to be heard. This general phenomenon of resonance, he interestingly points out, occurs in gross mechanics—as the vibration of a bridge to a properly timed tread, or the rolling of a boat in certain seas. Architects have to consider two kinds of resonance—of the air and of the walls—the effects being altogether different.

Reverberation is the sound many times reflected, and so continuous as to defy one to distinguish separate tones, while an echo is described as short and sharp enough to be distinguished. An incidental example of of this, sometimes described as a flutter, is found in the foyer of Symphony Hall. There one can hear the sound of his own voice during the extraordinarily long period of 12 seconds, as it bounds thousands and thousands of times in the domed ceiling.

The Fogg Art Museum offered an example of reverberation, and the experiments were made primarily to overcome this. It was found that in parts of the hall a speaker's voice was heard several seconds after he had spoken. It was obvious that something must be done to correct this, as no one, even an attentive student, can listen successfully to a fusillade of syllables repeated against the successive ones to which he wants to direct his entire attention.

The question was to test the efficiency of various absorbents, to shorten this "residual sound." It may be explained that sound is absorbed either in space or in some material. In the latter case science has it that it is converted into heat. Cushions were brought in from Sanders Theatre, installment after installment, and the duration of sound in the auditorium carefully measured. Finally all of the 436 seats were filled. The cushions proved to be strong absorbents, having decreased the time of reverberation from about 5½ to a little over two seconds. More cushions were brought in by installments, and then these were removed, and chenille was draped about the room, with opportunities for comparing results. The chenille was re-inforced by oriental rugs, etc., and even the absorbing power of a man or a woman, by comparison with the effects of Sanders Theatre cushions, was found. This "substitution method," as it was called, did very well on the standard of some given material, whose absorbing power was known, when applied to furniture or anything else that might be moveable. The test of the absorbing power of walls brought special difficulties.

Prof. Sabine had made for his use by Mr. George S. Hutchins an ingenious device for accurate work. It combined an organ pipe of the gemshorn stop, an octave above middle C, with the wind supply from a water sealed and noiseless double tank. An electro-pneumatic valve, such as is used in some large church organs, was devised so that the experimenter could operate from any part of a room. The current which operated the pipe simultaneously operated a chronograph. With this Prof. Sabine recorded measurements as fine as half a second, as directed by a delicate sense of hearing.

One gets some idea of the amount of work done, from the number of readings taken. For instance, each determination was the mean of about 20 observations which had to show indications of being very accurate, in many respects too fine to discuss. Three types of chronographs and three kinds of valves connecting the organ pipe and wind chest were used in the development of the experiments.

Early in the work, the following important conclusions were reached: That the duration of audibility of the residual sound is nearly the same in all parts of an auditorium, and is also nearly independent of the position of the source; that the efficiency of an absorbent in reducing the duration of the residual sound is, under ordinary circumstances, independent of its position. The following serves as an instance of the fineness of the test required in adopting a standard: Prof. Sabine observed, from some recent experiments, that cushions placed with one edge pushed against the backs of the settees gave results sufficiently inconsistent to suggest that, perhaps, their absorbing power depended not merely on the amount present, but on the area of the surface exposed. The absorbing power of cushions, when touching edge to edge, was found less than when separated. By the closeness of previous work, the important fact was discovered that the measurements of the cushions should be, not in running metres of cushion, but in square metres of exposed surface.

Next came the determination of a cushion that might be standard. This was found in that known as the "elastic felt," which was convenient because common. But that was not all. While not necessary to distinguish between the absorption of the energy of sound by transformation into heat and its transmission into outside space, it remained that the former was, in the experiments, the special province of the cushions, while the latter was one of the windows. Because of the obvious convenience of rising cushions, Prof. Sabine made his tests with these, but reduced the results to terms of "open window," first having determined, on an ideal night, free from wind or other noises, that the absorbing power of open windows is proportional to the area. In fine, the total absorbing power of walls, ceiling, floor, windows and chairs was reduced to terms of "open window."

Prof. Sabine shows not only that the duration of residual sound in one room is inversely proportional to the absorbing power of the bounding walls and contained material, but in any room. One of the most interesting experiments was that regarding the rate of decay. The lecture room of the Boston Public Library offered an excellent subject for this work. The reverberation there was a little over 5½ seconds. Four pipes with electrical attachment were used.

Series of trials were made so as to begin with a different pipe, and variously combining the four. It is assumed the average intensities, at the sounding, of one, two, three and four whistles is proportional as numbered. The results showed that the differences were proportional to the logarithm of the initial intensity—that is, the average intensity dies away logarithmetically. This and other deductions opened the way to the analysis of the coefficient of absorption and the considerations necessary.

To determine the amount of sound absorbed by a person, a test was made of the resonance in the Fogg Art Museum before and also immediately after an audience left, and was first found to be about one-third of a metre of open window. Other experiments proved that it was nearer one-half a metre of open window. Prof. Sabine's experiments go so fine as to deduct the space on the seat occupied by a person in determining the total absorption—which was .0077 of a metre of open window. Failure at the outset to designate the dress and sex of the persons in the audience made it necessary for Prof. Sabine to throw away about 3000 observations. Averaging three women to seven men, the following is given as the absorbing power of an audience: Per square metre, .94; per person, .44; isolated woman, .54; isolated man, .38.

Various kinds of seats show varying powers of absorption. Chairs of bent wood are rated at .0082; upholstered single seats, .28; hair cushions per seat, .21; elastic felt cushions per seat, .30.

In the following table the values are per square metre, except in the case of plants, where the coefficient is per cubic metre:

Oil paintings, including frames	.23
House plants	.11
Carpet rugs	.20
Oriental rugs, extra heavy	.29
Cheese cloth	.019
Cretonne	.15
Shella curtains	.23
Hair felt, 2.5 cm. thick, 8 cm. from wall	.78
Cork, 2-5 cm. thick, loose on floor	.16
Linoleum, loose on floor	.12

Prof. Sabine, while refuting the "mysticism" that is invested in the statement made on general principle that, in the matter of the acoustic properties of halls, a "copy cannot be a copy, or a model a model," points out the different requirements which made it impossible to copy the Gewandhaus at Leipsic, in the case of Symphony Hall, in difference of construction, audience, etc.

The following is given showing the dimensions of the two, and also old Music Hall:

	Length.	Breadth.	Height.	Volume
Leipzig Gewandhaus	124	62	52	407,000
Old Music Hall	129	77	60	857,000
Symphony Hall	130	75	59	*634,000

*Height measured on average of sloping floor. Includes extension of 9 feet above second gallery and 5400 cubic feet volume of stage.

The following table gives the estimated relative absorbing power of the halls and contents:

	Leipzig Gewandhaus.	Old Music Hall.	Symphony Hall.
Plaster on lath	73	100	84
Plaster on tile	0	0	46
Glass	0.4	1.5	0.6
Wood	14	47	38
Drapery	15	0.6	0
Audience	687	1052	1185
Orchestra	36	38	38
Totals	810	1239	1292

"In other words," observes Prof. Sabine, "the new hall, although having a seating capacity for over 1000 more than the Gewandhaus and nearly 200 more than the old hall, indicates a reverberation between the two, and nearer that of the Gewandhaus. The three halls are of nearly the same length on the floor; but in the old hall and in the Gewandhaus the platform for the orchestra is out in the hall and the galleries extend along both sides of it; while in the new hall, the orchestra is not out in the main body of the room and for this reason is slightly father from the rear of the hall; but this is more than compensated for in respect to loudness by the orchestra being in a comewhat contracted stage recess, from the side walls of which the reflection is better because they are nearer and not occupied by an audience. Also it may be noted that the new hall is not so high as the old and not so broad, which opens up the question of loudness."

Some in the enormous audience at the dedication of Symphony Hall Monday night, where the whole social tone seemed to be one of felicitation and congratulation, were: Maj. and Mrs. Henry L. Higginson, who had with them Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Higginson; Mr. F. L. Higginson, who was with his daughter, Mrs. Philip Sears, and Mr. Sears; the Rt. Rev. Bishop Lawrence and Mrs. Lawrence, Prof. and Mrs. Charles Sargent and Miss Sargent, the Hon. Solomon Lincoln, Mrs. Alfred Roosevelt and Miss Elfrida Roosevelt, just home from Europe; Mrs. John J. Borland, Mr. and Mrs. Larz Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. F. R. Sears, Jr., Mrs. S. D. Warren and Miss Warren, Mr. and Mrs. Francis H. Peabody and Mr. Arthur Beebe and Mr. Pierson Beebe. Mrs. John L. Gardner had in her party, which occupied a row of front seats on the first balcony, Mrs. R. M. Appleton, Miss Fanny Mason, Miss Lena Little, Mr. Clayton Johns, Mr. Howard Cushing, Mr. Gebhard and Mr. Proctor. Mrs. Gardner was in heavy black, the bodice much embroidered, a black Normandie bow on her hair and a string of diamonds about her throat. Mrs. F. Gordon Dexter, near by, looked distinguished in violet with black lace bolero. Mrs. Gericke was another woman who was much in evidence and looked exceedingly well in a gown of jet and steel embroidered lace over white, and there were bands of chinchilla which gave a Frenchy effect.

Among hundreds of others were Mr. and Mrs. R. D. Evans and Miss Belle Hunt, Mr. and Mrs. Henry M. Whitney and the Misses Whitney, Dr. and Mrs. Hall Curtis, Mr. Gaugengigl, Mr. Eben D. Jordan and Miss Dorothy Jordan, Mr. William P. Blake and Miss Blake, Gen. Charles G. Loring, Prof. James M. Pierce of Harvard, the Hon. Nathan Matthews, Dr. and Mrs. Maurice Richardson, Mr. and Mrs. Carteret Fenno, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Wheelwright, Col. Livermore, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Parkman, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Storrow and Miss Storrow, Mr. Louis Dabney, Mrs. F. L. Ames with Mr. Oliver Ames and Miss Mary Ames, Dr. Sturgis Bigelow, Mr. and Mrs. William Hooper, Mr. and Mrs. John C. Gray, Dr. John Homans, 2d, the Hon. Richard Olney, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Minot, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Clement, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Richmond, Mrs. S. B. Field, Miss Lillian Shattuck, Mr. and Mrs. Otis Kimball and Miss Kimball, President and Mrs. Eliot, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Foote, the Rev. Dr. Donald of Trinity, Mr. and Mrs. Robert M. Cushing, the Edward Codmans, Louis Cabots, Arthur Careys, Charles Heads, Eliot Hubbards, Augustus Hemenways, Charles Cottings and Charles P. Curtises; Mr. Dennie Boardman, Mr. Frederic Amory, Mr. James R. Poor, Mr. and Mrs. Mortimer Mason, Mr. and Mrs. J. Montgomery Sears, Mrs. J. W. Kenney and Miss May Kenney, Mr. and Mrs. Franz Zerrahn, Prof. John K. Paine, Dr. Frederick Shattuck, Miss Mixter, Mr. Grant Walker, Mr. John P. Lyman, Mr. and Mrs. William Caleb Loring, Mr. and Mrs. Lang and Miss Lang, Miss Anna Lyman, Mr. Henry T. Kidder, Mr. Laurence Minot, Mr. and Mrs. John W. Wheelright, Mr. and Mrs. Quincy Shaw, Mr. [illegible] Mr. and Mrs. William H. Lyon, Mrs. Arthur Cheney, Mr. and Mrs. Burlingame Hill, Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Coolidge, Jr., Franklin Haven, Jr., Mrs. Charles Faulkner and Miss Faulkner, Mr. G. A. Damon, Miss Ethel Damon, Mr. Eugene Greenleaf, Mr. Harry Burnett and Dr. John Tilden.

Mme. De Vere, the leading soloist, looked dignified and handsome in black lace heavily done in silver. Miss Stein wore a gown of ashes of roses tint with much white lace. The immense audience including so many women made a gay and brilliant scene, and in the 15 minutes intermission it was like a huge crush reception, the buzz of voices being something wonderful to listen to. We can't refrain from commenting upon the pluck of Mr. Evan Williams, the New York tenor, for he was suffering terrible pain all the evening. He sprained his ankle when getting out of a car at the hall, and at the end of his song, when his voice never rang out more superbly, he had to be carried off the stage almost in a faint.

It was an inspiring sight as well as a picturesque one to see the crowd of smartly gowned women surging in to the new Symphony Hall Friday afternoon for the first rehearsal. Although a large number of the season ticket people are yet out of town and many familiar faces were missed, which will be seen later on, there were enough of the society element to give the first rehearsal a fine send off in that respect. Some of those noted in their season seats were Mr. and Mrs. Charles P. Curtis, Mrs. Henry L. Higginson, Mrs. Montgomery Sears, Mrs. Gericke, Mrs. William Hooper, Mrs. R. C. Hooper, Mrs. Boylston Beal, Mrs. S. V. R. Crosby, Mrs. Hall Curtis, Mr. Randolph Grew, Mr. E. D. Jordan, Dr. Bigelow, Mr. Robert G. Shaw, Miss Parkman, Mrs. John Lowell, Miss Katherine Fay, Mrs. William Fay, Mrs. F. R. Sears, Jr., Miss Eleanor Sears, Mrs. Agassiz, Mrs. Wirt Dexter and Miss Katherine Dexter, Mrs. Arthur Cheney, Mr. Charles Sturgis, Mr. John Lyman, Mr. and Mrs. Elliot Pratt, Mr. James P. Stearns, Miss Stearns, Mrs. John L. Gardner, Mrs. J. W. Kenney, Miss Kenney, Mrs. Neal Rantoul, Mr. and Mrs. Zerrahn, Mrs. George J. Putnam, Mr. and Mrs. William B. Merrill, Mrs. John B. Osborn, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph H. White of Brookline, Mr. J. Foster White, Mrs. Garrison, Miss Garrison, Miss Constance Morse, Mrs. Eugene R. Shippen, with her father Col. Blount of Washington, Mrs. Charles Marsh, Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Stearns, Mr. and Mrs. W. Vail Kellen, Mrs. Caleb Bradlee, Mrs. H. G. Dickinson, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Denison, Mrs. David Noyes, Mrs. Nathan Matthews, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Woodworth, Mrs. F. R. Comee and Mr. William Bassett. A new feature of the rehearsals and concerts and a welcome one is the intermission of 10 minutes after the first half of the programme. This allows a grateful opportunity for chatting as well as a change of position and a bit of fresh air in the broad corridors. A greater part of the audience Friday afternoon and last evening availed themselves of the opportunity.

THE cooler weather of the past week caused still more barred doors and windows on the Back Bay to be thrown open, so that now it is rare to find a house closed. With the exception, therefore, of the hunting set, smart society may be said to have returned to town. There is a deal of going back and forth, however, among the fashionable crowd, to Virginia Hot Springs, taking in New York on the route for a day or two in the shops and at the plays, and a number more are at the mountains for the October ozone. At the opening of Symphony Hall, Monday night, one might easily have thought it was midwinter, so numerously was the modish world represented, as well as the musical. It was a very large occasion in every way, and one which it was a pleasure and an honor to be associated with. Mr. Frohman's players at the Hollis have been drawing houses which also might mark the height of the gay season, and greetings were heard on all sides from those who had not met before since the summer. The first Symphony rehearsal Friday afternoon and the first concert last night were like great fashionable crushes, and inaugurated the musical season in brilliant style. The announcement will be found in our columns of the dates of the two Paul Revere Hall assemblies, which are the smartest subscription dances of the winter and the first which have been definitely arranged, and with them comes the sure prediction of a season gayer than for several years. The young mothers who are bringing out their daughters—and their names are almost legion—are up to their eyes in preparation for the great event, and it takes a clear head to keep the dates of the numerous entertainments on the tapis from conflicting. Surely, we are passing through days of preparation, and very bustling ones they are.

There are to be 10 concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, at which are to be among the soloists Mrs. Georg Henschel, Miss Freda Hiemens, Mr. C. M. Loeffler, Mr. T. Adamowski, Mr. Otto Roth and Mr. A. Schroeder.

[23]

BOSTON DAILY JOURNAL
OCTOBER 21, 1900.

FIRST SYMPHONY.

Also the First Orchestral Concert in the New Symphony Hall—A Program of Most Respectable Conservatism—A Word About the Concerto by Handel.

The first concert of the 20th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given last evening in Symphony Hall. Mr. Gericke conducted, and Mr. J. Wallace Goodrich was the organist. The program was as follows:

Overture to "Euryanthe".....Weber
Concerto for organ, No. 4, in D minor, Op. 7.....Handel
(First time in Boston.)
I. Adagio (D minor).
II. Allegro (D major)
III. Larghetto e Piano (F major).
IV. Allegro (D minor).
Ballet-Movement and Entr'acte from "Rosamunde".....Schubert
Symphony No. 5.....Beethoven

This concert was one of indisputable respectability. The rank of each composer represented has been determined, so far as this generation is concerned, and even the most timid hearers did not hesitate to applaud. There were no little known or disreputable composers; no immoral Frenchman with too lively rhythm or too sensuous phrase; no reckless Russian with thick boots and vodka-heated breath to shock sensitive grammarians and lovers of the conventional.

The symphony itself well deserved the honor of a performance at this first concert; but the performance of the first two movements was without special depth or brilliance and without illuminating imagination. Why, oh why, the overture to "Euryanthe" on such an occasion and in the year 1900? Are we also to hear this season "Oberon" and "Der Freischütz"?

It is a pleasure to add, however, that doubt as to the acoustic properties of the hall was dispelled. Solo instruments were heard with delightful distinctness; the bite of the strings was more decided than in the old hall, and the ensemble was effective without muddiness or echo.

It is to be regretted that an organ concerto by Handel was chosen for the display of the organ. The purpose was defeated by the very choice. Either Guilmant's symphony for organ and orchestra, which Mr. Theodore Thomas did not disdain to conduct at a concert of the Chicago Orchestra in 1898, or Rheinberger's concerto for organ, strings and horns, which Mr. Goodrich played at the Worcester Festival of 1898, would have given more pleasure to organist, audience—and organ-builder. The conductor might answer: "I wished a consistently classical program; therefore I chose a concerto by Handel, for I knew of no others." And here is the reply: "But why not postpone the display of the organ until you see fit to put a modern organ work by the side of other modern compositions?"

* * *

There have been brave attempts to galvanize the organ concertos of Handel into the semblance of life, but no matter how cunning the skill of the doctors, and how strengthening the nourishment, the corpses remain corpses. As August Ritter well said: "The organist that Handel really was, is known through the great choruses of his oratorios, not through his so-called organ-concertos." The pieces that have come down to us are mere sketches, and did we not know this, as well as the character of the English organs of his period, we might well wonder at the praise awarded him by skilled contemporaries, as Mattheson, who boldly said: "No one equals Handel as an organist, except, perhaps, Bach of Leipzig." We are also told that when Handel played "concertos" at his oratorio concerts, he used written compositions only because he was not in the vein; otherwise he improvised, and he frequently took a phrase of a choral movement for the theme.

In the present instance Mr. Goodrich chose the adaptation of Guilmant for the basis of his operations, "filled out gaps in the orchestra with parts written for orchestral instruments," and transcribed for organ the third movement of Handel's concerto grosso No. 12 to take the place of the missing third movement of the organ concerto. I wonder what Handel, if he were on the earth, would say to all this. Would he shake his wig and stamp and snort and swear? Would he recognize the work as his own? Might he not rage at the thought of his assumed loss of power, brio, masculinity? Is it too much to say: "No, no; this is pretty enough, but it is not Handel."

Mr. Goodrich played with neatness and repose, and he was liberally applauded.

Mr. Gericke was warmly greeted when he walked toward the conductor's stand.

Philip Hale.

THE following orchestral pieces are announced as "novelties," and will be given this season by the Symphony Orchestra under Mr. Gericke, although possibly one or two may disappear in rehearsal to make room for something that may be deemed more desirable.

Suite from Massenet's "Esclarmonde." This suite was played in Boston for the first time March 2, 1892, at a concert given for the benefit of the members of the orchestra. The opera itself was produced at the Opéra-Comique, May 14, 1889. The suite was played at a Colonne concert Oct. 18, 1891.

Goldmark's scherzo, op. 45, was played at Chicago in 1894.

Röntgen's Ballad on a Norwegian folk-song. Röntgen is a pianist who was born at Leipzig in 1855. In 1878 he settled at Amsterdam as teacher in the music school. Chicago heard this piece in 1898.

Cowen's "Idyllic" symphony. This is the sixth in E, which was produced at a Richter concert in London, May 31, 1897. At the same concert Gabrilowitsch, the pianist, made his first appearance in England.

Nicodé's Symphonic Variations is by no means a new piece. It was played at Chicago in 1892.

Converse, F. S., Ballade (Ms.). I understand that this is one of three pieces suggested by John Keats's "Endy-

Rabl is a young composer, whose quartet (op. 1) for piano, clarinet, violin and 'cello won a prize in 1898.

Tschaikowsky, "Manfred" symphony in four scenes: "Manfred wandering amid the Alpine Heights;" scherzo—"The spirit of the Alps;" "A picture of the simple but prosperous life of the mountaineers;" "The subterranean Palace of Arimane: with death of Manfred." This symphony was begun in 1884. Tschaikowsky said to Kashkin: "'Manfred' cost me a whole year of my life." It was performed at New York Dec. 4, 1886, and in Chicago in 1898.

Tschaikowsky, suite No. 2, op. 53, dates back to '82 or '83.

Dohnányi, piano concerto (Ms.). This is the concerto that won the prize at Vienna, March 28, 1899, in a competition where Mr. Gericke was one of the judges.

Brüll: Overture to "Macbeth."

Saint-Saëns, symphony No. 3, with organ and piano, was first performed at a Philharmonic concert at London in June, 1885. It was played in New York, Feb. 19, 1887, and in Chicago in 1891.

Van der Stucken: "William Ratcliffe," symphonic prologue. I note a performance at Cincinnati early in 1893, but my impression is that it was not the first.

Glazounoff, suite "Raymonde." These are excerpts from a ballet, one of the latest works of this brilliant composer.

Bruckner, symphony in D minor, No. 3. This is the symphony dedicated to Wagner. It was performed at Vienna Dec. 16, 1877, and again in 1891 and 1892. It was also played at a Lamoureux concert in Paris.

Smetana: Symphonic poems "Sarka" and "Aus böhmischen Fluren und Hainen." They were written in 1875 and are Nos. 2 and 3 of the cycle "Mein Vaterland."

Liszt: Symphonic poem "Hunnenschlacht," suggested by Kaulbach's painting.

Brockway, Howard A. Suite. Mr. Brockway was born in Brooklyn in 1870. He studied in Berlin (1890-1895) with Barth and O. B. Boise.

Weingartner, Felix: Symphony in G major. This work of the celebrated conductor was first performed at Cologne, Nov. 22, 1898. It was played in this country for the first time Nov. 18, 1899, at Cincinnati, under Mr. Van der Stucken.

* * *

A Baltimorean visited recently the new Symphony Hall, and he was particularly struck by the opportunity given students and others to hear the Symphony Concerts for 25 cents. After he had returned to his city, he wrote Mr. Comee and asked whether similar arrangements might be made in Baltimore when the orchestra gave concerts there.

The result was that this gentleman, Mr. J. B. Noel Wyatt, subscribed $200 to a certain number of seats, which he will distribute to members of a school for the blind and others. He allows his name to be mentioned simply that others may be incited to follow his example.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.
The Official Paper of the State.
The Official Paper of the City.
MONDAY MORNING, OCT. 22, 1900.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

On Saturday the Symphony Orchestra formally entered into its new abode, and the organ also received its proper dedication. All doubts about the acoustics of the new hall were set at rest by the first number of the symphonic programme, the overture to "Euryanthe." The tone-color of each instrument stood out with greater clearness than was ever the case in the old Music Hall, and a slight reverberation at the fortissimo passages was the only touch of blurring that even the hyper-critical could discover. Prof. Sabine and his co-workers have achieved a triumph in architectural acoustics in Symphony Hall.

The opening number was typical of the entire programme; here were no frenzied Slavs, no dissonant latter-day Germans, no recent French or Italian consecutive-fifthists, but all purled along in a correctly classical manner from the first notes of "Euryanthe" to the final cadence of the Fifth Symphony.

The wind instruments were the centre of interest on this occasion; the first was the ventilator system, which worked a trifle better than at the first concert given in the hall; this time there were no sportive zephyrs playing down the spinal columns of the auditors, but a pure atmosphere was furnished in more reasonable quantities.

The second instrument was the Organ. Mr. J. Wallace Goodrich played the fourth Handelian concerto upon this in a masterly manner, and proved the instrument excellent both in solo work and in combination with the orchestra. The concerto was the only novelty upon the programme,—a novelty about 150 years old. As is often the case with a performance of Bach or Handel, there was considerable extraneous matter imported into the score, so that Goodrich and Handel alternated with Guilmant. The retouching process was, in this case, of an especially bold character, Mr. Goodrich interpolating an entire movement from the Concerto Grosso, No. 12, which he had skilfully transcribed for the organ. This interpolation had the character of the well-known "Ombra mai fu," (the famous Largo), and its tranquility assimilated well with the rest of the work, giving an excellent foil to the two allegros between which it was sandwiched.

The work was, however, rather dignified than extremely interesting; it was a promise of better things to come; we may now hope to hear St. Saens's great symphony with piano and organ, the Guilmant symphony, and many other combinations of organ with orchestra. Mr. Goodrich played the work in a masterly fashion and was recalled with much heartiness. Schubert's Ballet in G major, from "Rosamunde," was proof positive of the perfection of the hall in the matter of "pianissimi;" its daintiest passages were clear as crystal and audible in every corner.

After the entr-acte, from the same drama, and just before the symphony, there came a commendable innovation in the shape of ten minutes of intermission, during which many of the audience promenaded the foyer. There is something more than a mere fashionable parade in this custom; it enables the auditor to come to the chief work of the programme, generally the heaviest of the concert, with renewed zest and more perfect attention. We feel sure that the intermission will prove a very practical boon in the heavy programmes where the abstruse progressions of Brahms or the intricate orchestration of Berlioz, or Richard Strauss, follow upon each other's heels.

There is but little to write of a programme such as this concert presented; after Schubert came Beethoven in the shape of his best-known symphony,—the fifth. It received a good and broad performance. Yet we often long to hear more emphasis laid upon the struggle between the chief figure (in the bass) and the sweet melody of the subordinate theme in the first movement. Such contention between dissimilar themes is one of the characteristics of Beethoven and might be made more of in the performance, without running the risk of exaggeration.

It is interesting to remember that the majestic character of the chief figure was an afterthought of Beethoven's; in his note-book, as deciphered by Nottebohm, we find the first sketch of this figure worked out, in Presto, with a chattering playful style that contains not an inkling of what it afterwards grew into. It is an instance of the working out of a simple idea into something "rich and strange" by that capacity for taking pains which has been cited as the chief attribute of genius.

There is no need of cataloguing the points of excellence; the power of the contrabasses in the trio of the scherzo, the entrance of the trombones (their first appearance in symphony) the heroic finale, much more exalted than the finale to the "Heroic" symphony,—all these points are familiar to every Boston concert-goer. The interest of the occasion was, for once, extraneous to the programme, and consisted in studying the effect of the hall, the union of the organ with the orchestra, and the welcoming back of our orchestra, which found visible expression in the binding of a nosegay upon every musician's desk.

Louis C. Elson.

Boston Transcript
SATURDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1900.

The Symphony rehearsals do draw out the pretty girls of Boston and its suburbs, and they have never looked more comely than at yesterday's opening rally. To be sure their faces were fresher than they are later in the season when the wear and tear of teas and dances are at their height, and this was in their favor. Still there were not present the stunning things in toggery that will obtain when the transition season in fashions is past and settled modes of attire are adopted. Yesterday, however, had an advance touch of winter's chill in the air, and in consequence there was a distinct odor of camphor in the hall due to the hasty pulling out of furs from their hiding place to get their first airing and wearing of the season. This pervasive odor will give way in the course of a month or two to the one of violets that associates itself with Symphony rehearsals as much as does the odor of decorum and good behavior. Still, yesterday afforded a study in bodices for the eyes of those who knew aught of women and gowns. In the upper balcony there was a riot of color from the variety of red flannel shirt waists displayed—did you observe that? Then, reaching the first balcony the bodice question took on another phase; here it revealed itself in a series of delicately colored silks with lace adornments. Which motif was repeated on the floor with the supplementary appearance of various lace waists, which helped the harmony along. Interspersed among these three varieties, on the three planes, were a generous number of white cotton waists. And these didn't destroy the harmony of the general appearance of the audience whether one looked it over from the standpoint of an artist or that of the philosophizer.

Rehearsal Ticket Mystery Solved

At the auction sale of reserved seats for the Symphony rehearsals, Frank Herrick paid $292 for "A, 1," the first seat sold. Since then there has been considerable interest manifested in the identity of the party for whom Mr. Herrick obtained the seat, but not until yesterday afternoon was the name of the holder of the ticket disclosed. Miss Adele Ritchie of "The Cadet Girl" company occupied the seat by courtesy of A. H. Chamberlyn, manager of the Columbia, who is said to have paid Mr. Herrick $500 for the use of the seat for the twenty-four rehearsals. Mr. Chamberlyn intends to have the seat used by members of such of his companies as are playing at the Columbia this season. Of course, it is his intention first to permit the principal actresses of his organizations to avail themselves of the opportunity to attend the rehearsals, but he has no idea of slighting the chorus girls.

A condition which Mr. Chamberlyn was forced to make when he purchased the seat from Mr. Herrick was that one ticket should revert to the latter at the end of the rehearsal series. Mr. Herrick wishes to hold it as a souvenir on account of the price which it brought and the fact that it was the first seat sold for the new hall.

[24]

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1900

Symphony Hall: Boston Symphony Orchestra

The programme of the first symphony concert, Mr. Wilhelm Gericke conductor, given in Symphony Hall on Saturday evening, was:

Weber: Overture to "Euryanthe."
Handel: Concerto for Organ, in D minor, opus 7, No. 4.
Schubert: Two Ballet Movements from "Rosamunde."
Beethoven: Symphony No. 5, in C minor, opus 67.
Mr. J. Wallace Goodrich was the organist.

An excellent programme under the circumstances; that is, for the first symphony concert given in the new hall. All the orchestral numbers were not only familiar, but have been frequently played here by the Symphony Orchestra; so one could give almost undivided attention to the effect of the music in the hall—for the nonce, the most interesting question. By the way, the "Euryanthe" overture seems to be a prime favorite for opening occasions. I now forget what the first thing played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Mr. Henschel, was in 1881; but the symphony concerts of the Harvard Musical Association began with the "Euryanthe" overture in 1865, it was chosen for the opening piece when the concerts moved from the old Music Hall to the Boston Museum in 1882, and now it has opened the present symphony concerts in Symphony Hall.

In speaking of the effect of the music last Saturday evening, I can of course judge of that effect only as heard from where I sat in the first balcony. There are few music halls in the world where the effect is equally good in every part of the auditorium; the old hall of the Conservatoire in Paris was the only one I ever heard of of which this was true. So it is quite likely that the effect I got on Saturday evening was by no means the same as that got by other listeners, in other parts of the hall. But I must own that, to me, the first impression was disappointing. Judging from what I noted at the opening concert last Monday, when the acoustical conditions intended by the architects were not entirely fulfilled, I had formed rather high expectations of what the musical effect would be when the orchestra was in its proper position, well within the walls of the sounding-board. But no; the opening measures of the "Euryanthe" sounded terribly tame. Everything was clean-cut and distinct, the tone was beautifully smooth, and, so to speak, highly polished; but it had no life, there was nothing commanding and compelling about it. One effect in the overture was very curious: in the famous passage for muted violins, the strings did not sound as if they had mutes on; the tone of the undamped strings had already been so smooth, that the sordini produced little contrast. When the 'celli and basses began the fugato, it seemed to me as if I had never before heard basses play so accurately, smoothly, and with such unanimity of phrasing; the same impression came back with redoubled force in some passages in the C minor symphony. Per contra, there was a figure in the first violins in the "Rosamunde" music which often came to the ear so blurred that it was impossible to tell whether it was a group of three notes or of two.

In the Handel concerto, the composition being new and scored in an unusual way, the effect seemed better; before the concerto was over, I had almost come to the conclusion that the acoustics of the hall were superb. But the symphony sounded like the "Euryanthe" overture.

After all, there was one general impression so predominant over all others that I am not inclined to set much store by any that I received. This dominant impression was that the effect was absolutely new, quite unlike any that I had ever heard from an orchestra before; it was so new, indeed, as to be disorienting, one could not feel in the least at home. I seemed to have got into some new musical country, never visited before, where old habits of listening needed reforming; it was like being in new lodgings, where, putting out your hand instinctively to the old-accustomed place for the tongs, you are surprised to find that you have picked up the feather-duster. In such conditions, things intrinsically unimportant in themselves suddenly seem to assume quite a disproportionate importance; in trying to get my bearings in the unaccustomed musical effect, I think what bothered me most was that there was no clock on the front balcony railing; it somehow seemed as if, had a clock been there, things would have sounded more natural. This utter newness must be taken into account, as modifying the results of all attempts to form definite judgments.

Still it was impossible not to try to form such judgments; impossible not to compare the new hall with the old. Heaven knows I was no great lover of the old Music Hall; it always seemed too large for everything save the most brilliant modern orchestration; classical scoring never came into its rights there, and the heavier and richer it was, the less effect it made. A Haydn symphony sounded more nearly as it ought to than Beethoven's C minor. The orchestral tone was vague and breezy; there were no sharp contours, you heard everything as if through a haze. But, though the tone lacked edge, it had life and fulness; there was nothing mean in it. Now, in Symphony Hall, it is just the opposite. To be sure, you get the same impression of over-largeness; that was inevitable. But all else is different. There is great distinctness of definition, you hear everything with astonishing clearness; the tone is beautifully smooth and, as I have said, highly polished, it even has something of a cutting edge, a certain brilliancy; of the old haze nothing remains. But the tone has no body, no fulness; it is not searching; it is thin and ineffectual. Moreover, the hall itself seems perfectly dead to it, it does not awake to the orchestra's call and vibrate with it. Things that should sound heroic and awakening, seem merely polite and irreproachable. The music had an expurgated sound, as if all the indiscreet vowels were represented by [illegible].

The first symphony made you think of Beethoven as in impeccable evening dress, with his head fresh from the hands of the court hair-dresser, every movement and pose Brummellianly elegant. One wondered how the Paris Conservatoire ever could have found the symphony shocking!

So much for first-night impressions—all of which are subject to future revision.

As for the performance by the orchestra, it seemed perfection itself throughout. Beethoven's C minor was, in particular, played as one (too often hopelessly) prays to hear it played; tempi, nuances, accents, all were delightfully right.

The one novelty, Handel's organ concerto, was a novelty worth hearing. Yes, Mr. Runciman was quite right when he said that Handel was the only one of the whole lot who always wrote, as he lived, and lived, as he wrote, in the grand manner; Louis XIV. was not in it with him! What robust elegance, what courtly grandeur, what a glimpse given into the very depths of the human soul, and nothing but sweetness and light found there; and, upon the whole, what graceful, facile juggling with cannon balls! Of Mr. Goodrich's revision of Guilmant's completed version of the concerto there may be two opinions; nay, one and the same person may hold both. As set forth in the programme books, Mr. Goodrich confines the organ part strictly and solely to solo work; he makes it nothing but a concertante part. What additions to the orchestral parts were necessary he gives to added orchestral instruments. In doing this he doubtless follows the musical "Satz" (harmony and voice-leading) of Guilmant's additions to the organ part. Against this principle—as a principle—I have nothing to urge; in general, I am quite in sympathy with it. Mr. Goodrich's trumpets sound splendidly; the effect is thoroughly Handelian. Concerning some actual changes in Handel's instrumentation—made by Guilmant, or Mr. Goodrich, or Mr. Gericke? —I am more in doubt. In the first Adagio, Handel has marked the first 'cello part to be doubled by the first bassoon, the second 'cello part to be doubled by the second bassoon, throughout; against the bass he has written "Contrabasso e Ripieno"—which seems to indicate that the two 'cello parts above mentioned belong to the "concertino," and that some 'celli ripieni are to play with the double basses on the bass. As played last Saturday, the two 'cello parts were played by all the 'celli, without bassoons; the bass was played only by the double basses and one bassoon. I cannot quite grasp the intention of this, unless it was to sentimentalize the effect of the original version; this certainly was the result.

But to return to Mr. Goodrich's confining the organ part strictly to solo work. This has two good results—it makes perfectly clear to the listener what is solo and what is not, and makes a welcome contrast of coloring between the orchestral passages and those for the organ; a contrast which would not exist if the filling-out of the orchestral score were done on the organ. So far, good. But there is one drawback. As in every concerto, the orchestra plays the tutti's; and these should be given, as a rule, with greater force of tone than the solo passages. But, when the solo instrument is an organ, there are only two ways of bringing this effect about. Either the organ part must be played invariably on the softer stops, or else the orchestral tuttis must be scored for full Wagnerian orchestra. No Handelian orchestration, even with Mr. Goodrich's added trumpets and kettle-drums, could produce anything like a fortissimo effect, when contrasted with a solo part played on the stronger stops of an organ. Again, no Handelian orchestral passage, scored for "Nibelungen" orchestra, would be anything like Handel. Mr. Goodrich was fain to accept the other alternative, and use only the softer stops; which gave the organ part a rather timid monotony. Had the filling-out of the orchestral score been done on the organ, he might have used the full organ in the tuttis, and so obtained more variety—not of contrast between organ and orchestra, but between the soft and strong stops of the organ itself. As for myself, I surely do not know which way is best; each one has its advantages and drawbacks. I should like to hear the concerto done the other way now, so as to see.

Mr. Goodrich played the solo part like a master, admirably in every respect. He almost tempted me to like an organ! He well earned the hearty applause and recall the audience gave him.

The next programme is: Berlioz, overture, "Le Carnaval romain"; Mozart, aria from "Titus"; Massenet, suite from "Esclarmonde"; Schubert, song, "Die Allmacht"; Dvorak, symphony No. 5, in E minor, "From the New World," opus 95. Mme. Schumann-Heink will be the singer.

W. F. A.

The [illegible] Press

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1900.

NEW SYMPHONY HALL AT BOSTON

Famous Orchestra Gives Its Inaugural Concert in the Recently Completed Building.

"Within that circle where the arts had long
Sat like a crown of stars since ancient day,
One space there was of empty night,
One vacant chair remained for song.
While all the rest was light;
Yet ever down the pathless way
The wild bird fled along,
Restless, ethereal, perverse, and fond Until at length Cremona raised a master wand."

—Owen Wister.

Special Despatch to "The Press."

Boston, Mass., Oct. 15.—Boston's magnificent new Symphony Hall was dedicated to-night. The occasion will be memorable in the history of music in Boston. At last the Boston Symphony Orchestra has a fitting home. The orchestra itself has been for some years a Boston institution—one that identified and distinguished the city. The acoustics of the new hall proved to be all that could be desired.

In certain ways this society may be said to be unique. In the eighteenth century princes of Europe maintained orchestras for their own pleasure, and in the last half of this century the late Charles Lamoureux supported largely at his own expense the superb orchestra that he conducted; but it was reserved for Mr. Henry L. Higginson, a citizen of Boston, to see to it that the people of his town might have an opportunity of hearing at a reasonable price the best music performed by the best orchestra that money and experience could bring together and establish.

These societies took part to-night: The Handel and Haydn, the Musical Educational Society, the Musical Fund Orchestra, the Germania Serenade Band and Kreissmann's Liedertafel. Mr. G. J. Webb was the chief conductor. Among the orchestral selections were the overtures to "The Magic Flute" and "Oberon" and the andante of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. There were choruses from the "Messiah," the "Mount of Olives" and "St. Paul," and there was a star, a star of the first magnitude, a blazing star, for Albani sang arias from "Norma," "La Fille du Regiment" and "Cenerantola," and she took part in a trio with Sangiovanni and Rovere from the "Barber of Seville."

To-night the program included a choral by Bach, an address by Mr. Higginson, a poem by Mr. Owen Wister, of Philadelphia, and the stupendous mass of Beethoven, the Missa Solemnis in D. Mr. Wilhelm Gericke conducted.

The chorus was made up of the augmented chorus of the Cecilia and others. The solo singers were Clementine Devere, Gertrude May Stein, Evan Williams, Joseph S. Baernstein, Mr. J. Wallace Goodrich was the organist and the violin solo in the "Benedictus" was played by Mr. Franz Kneisel.

CHEERS FOR HIGGINSON.

When Mr. Higginson came forward to speak he was greeted warmly. Mr. Higginson placed the credit of the building on four men—Mr. McKim, Prof. Sabine, who gave his work; Mr. Norcross, the builder, and Mr. C. E. Cutting. He said the total cost of the building was $750,000, of which, $350,000 was borrowed.

Mr. Higginson then introduced Owen Wister, of Philadelphia, the author of well-known short stories, and a musician himself, as the poet of the occasion. Mr. Wister's ode is called "The Bird of Passage, an Ode to the Instrumental Music." The ode, a selection from which precedes this telegram, keeps close to the classical form, with a strong romantic tone. It deals with the special side of human life to which instrumental music can alone give adequate expression.

The great audience which packed the new Symphony Hall to-night was a fashionable, even a distinguished, audience, numbering all the best known society people, the prominent musicians and the college professors from Cambridge, Brookline and Boston. Mr. McKim, the designer of the hall, was on hand; so were Messrs. Kendall and De Gerstorff, from among his associates. Also Stanford White and Mrs. White. Among educators present were Profs. Charles W. Eliot, Wallace C. Sabine and E. W. Hooper, of Harvard, and Prof. Cross, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Mrs. Owen J. Wister and Mrs. G. Putnam, of Philadelphia, were present.

THE ITEM.
OCTOBER 18, 190[illegible]

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA

No Longer Wanted in Philadelphia.

OUR NEW ORCHESTRA

It Will Far Surpass the Overrated Boston One.

It is gratifying to be able to chronicle the fact that advance sales of tickets for the Boston Symphony Concerts have been smaller than usual.

I think its reign in Philadelphia is about over.

Did I hear you ask why?

Because Philadelphia now has its own Symphony Orchestra, and Philadelphians are naturaly determined to stand by their home organization.

I have heard it stated a number of times that many of the best musicians have become dissatisfied with the Boston Symphony syndicate, and have left it, and their places have been filled by men of commonplace ability, at cheaper salaries.

Paur, who left the Boston syndicate, to take a position in New York, was not a first-class leader, and his successor, Gericke, is inferior to Paur.

He is what you might call an average second-class leader, and, like most second-class leaders, conspicuous for his prejudices.

Scan his selections, if you want to see this assertion sustained.

What a contrast between Gericke and Fritz Scheel, the leader of Philadelphia's new Symphony Orchestra!

Fitz Scheel is a composer of skill and intelligence, a thorough musician, and a first-class leader.

Any attempt to compare him with Gericke, makes the latter sink into greater insignificance.

Perhaps it is not fair to do so, as poor Gericke will not stand the comparison.

Scheel is a man who possesses what Goethe calls "the elective attraction" that captures everyone.

It is with leaders as with men; a leader in the full sense of the word, such as Scheel is, leads and controls, getting out of his men the most brilliant work at all times.

Thus the Symphony Concerts to be given by the Symphony Orchestra of Philadelphia, will be in all respects superior to those given by the Symphony Orchestra, of Boston.

Another important point which has hurt the sale of tickets for the Boston Symphony Concerts, is Gericke's opposition to American composers.

Americans are now resolute in their determination to demand recognition for American composers, believing that the time has come when they should receive equal recognition with foreign composers.

This is right.

We have many composers of fine talent.

It is nothing more than right that we should encourage them.

Herr Gericke, with the assurance characteristic of his inferiority as a leader, evidently thinks that Americans cannot write music, and that only those compositions branded "Made in Germany," are worthy of consideration.

This is foolish prejudice.

On the contrary, Fritz Scheel candidly admits that American composers have not only written a great deal of original, characteristic and beautiful music, but they are also making extraordinary strides forward, with a possibility of giving the world a large proportion of the music of the future.

If the Boston Symphony is wise, it will stay away from this city, as it is sure to suffer by comparison with the Philadelphia Symphony, with its eighty-five musicians, nearly all of whom are soloists.

The Item advises those who wish to hear the best concerts, to patronize the home orchestra, and to ignore the Boston syndicate, which is unable to make enough money in Boston to own a building, and is compelled to make speculative trips to raise cash.

It is to be regretted that Bostonians do not see the weak points in their orchestra and its management, and that they are not shrewd enough to realize that in competing against Philadelphia's formidable Symphony Orchestra, with its great leader, and superb array of able musicians, it is inviting disaster and failure.

It is safe to predict that this season's competition will be conclusive, and that the Boston Symphony will not again venture outside of the melancholy gray surroundings of their poorly-constructed music hall in an efforts to invade Philadelphia.

The success of the Boston Symphony concerts here has been principally because there has been no competition.

Now we have a first-class Orchestra of our own.

Go away; Boston Orchestra, we do not want you any longer!

RITER FITZGERALD.

---

[25]

The [illegible] Press

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1900.

OPENING OF THE SYMPHONY HALL

Success of the First Concert in the New Auditorium at Boston.

MELODY'S FITTING ABODE

Acoustics of the Hall Free from Defects—Owen Wister's Poem—Perfect Interpretation of the Music of the Great Masters.

On the morning of October the 16th there awoke twenty-five hundred and odd happy people who all their lives will be able to say to the rest of the world, "Too bad you weren't in Boston at the inaugural concert at the New Smyphony Hall, on October the 15th! It was an occasion never to be forgotten!"

They are right. Everything conspired to make this opening concert cheerful, spirited and impressive. As a mere commercial detail, every ticket had been sold days before; also all the tickets for twenty-four symphony concerts and twenty-four public rehearsals were bought on the first day of the public sale, a fortnight ago. Then the weather was good, after a doubtful day, stars came out and such a string of carriages poured along Commonwealth Avenue as you see in Philadelphia of an assembly night. The Symphony Hall is rather far out of town, at the corner of Massachusetts and Huntingdon Avenues. The neighborhood is not very ripe-looking at present, but this will soon be bettered, when on one corner the fine Horticultural Building presents a surface of solid gray stone, instead of its present cavernous cellars and confused scaffolding. Another corner is to be occupied by the new Art Museum.

The clear tone of the auditorium of the Symphony Hall, with its quiet tinted walls and adequate but unobtrusive lighting, is relieved only by the gilding on the railings of two galleries, on the great organ, at the back of the stage. This organ is effectively set in a square frame of heavy gold work. The whole effect is dignified and agreeable in the extreme. There are no salient beauties, but at the end of a long evening you are neither wearied with physical discomforts nor worn out with eye distracting decorations.

It was early when we reached the hall. The people were arriving slowly; the suburbanites naturally came first. As almost every one in Boston is a suburbanite till November or December, the audience assembled betimes. The stage was already occupied by the orchestra and The Cecelia, a mixed chorus, which has been giving concerts under its present director, Mr. Lang, ever since its foundation in 1877. Soon the people were coming in faster, and the names were interesting and suggestive. Whitneys, Lathrops, Winthrops, Emersons, Longfellows, Hemingways, Cabots. Here sat the famous Mrs. John L. Gardner, with a party of musicians. Here Mr. Higginson himself started among the crowd. There were many faces familiar to Philadelphians. Mr. Clayton Johns, whose charming songs we all know; Mr. and Mrs. Walter Damrosch, Mr. and Mrs Frank Damrosch and a sprinkling of our own fellow-townspeople, who had come because this occasion had two points of special interest to Philadelphia. It was the housewarming of the orchestra that has done so much for our musical life, and the prologue to the concert was to be read by its author, our citizen, Mr. Owen Wister. Miss Irwin was there, the Dean of Radcliffe, Mrs. Edward Toland, Miss Anna Hallowell, Mr and Mrs. Harry Markoe, Miss Caldwell Mr. and Mrs. Rossmaesler, from Germantown, besides a number of the Wister family.

READY FOR THE CHORALE.

By 8 o'clock the hall was tight packed (with the exception of the aisles, as no "standeers" were allowed), and a great burst of applause greeted Gericke, as he took his place at the desk and tapped for the chorus to rise, and then voices and orchestra swelled forth in the noble chorale of Bach:—

Grant us to do with zeal Our portion whatsoever;
May we obey Thy law, To duty faithless never;
And may we steadfast be, Our help in Thee alone.
When we our task fulfil, Oh, grant it be be well done.

It was a thrilling moment, for not till then, when the seats were filled could the acoustics of the hall be properly tested. The sound came forth full and clear, free from echoes or vibrations, and in a great measure its fitting abode, yet not without due blending. Everybody clapped furiously with pleasure and relief, but the applause was redoubled when, from the wings, Mr. Higginson came forward, to read his report. Clapping seemed inadequate, and by common impulse that whole great audience rose to their feet to give honor and thanks to the man to whose generosity and ability they owed their orchestra, and, in a great measure, its fitting abode. It was one of those rare moments when the least emotional eyes fill with unbidden tears of pleasure. Mr. Higginson, after completing his report, introduced Mr. [illegible] how the first conception of the inaugural poem had been something which should touch upon the growth of music in Boston, and its influence upon the country at large. This idea gave way before a wider view of the significance of such an occasion, which seemed the local recognition of the place now held by music in the world, and he read:—

"The Bird of Passage: An Ode to Instrumental Music."

MEANING OF THE POEM.

In this poem he touched upon the mission of music in unfolding those unspeakable feelings of the human heart, not to be expressed in concrete form, whether lyric or plastic, hidden from the world till music came to take her place among the sister arts, carrying us on and up to a belief in our own noblest dreams.

The music of the past he likens to a bird of passage, now here, now there, giving an occasional wild, sweet cry, but untamed, intangible.

This poem is full of beautiful lines, rising at times to a high pitch of lyric intensity. Where each verse is the natural outcome of its predecessor, it is hard to quote satisfactorily, but some passages can even stand the test of isolation as shown by the following as well as by the stanza "The Press" quoted on Tuesday:—

"From oldest time
The human heart has throbbed,
Full of great angels, breathing messages sublime,
Whereat it laughed and sobbed.
And some it understood and forthwith spoke
In divers tongues, or shaped in stone,
Or told in colors with a stroke;
But some
Made it to shudder only or to kneel
Smitten to ecstasy; still it was dumb,
It could not yet intone,
It could but feel
These raptures and despairs that deep within it broke.

Over the weaving flow,
The ebb and flood
Of the heart's unfathomed mood
"Music! with a wild sweet cry,
Untaught beneath the sky
Like winged petrel dids't thou come, and go.

The sculptured god, the tale of Troy remain,
The priestess by her tripod in the dawn—
But delphic nightingale, where is thy strain?
That is forever gone.
And where is thine, that melted Tuscan groves,
Till amorous branches were together blown,
While silken boys and girls kissed out their loves
Until the night was flown?
The heart's deep ocean waves began to roll
Forth from Cremona's violin,
The wild bird trembled, listened, stopped,
And then, with folded wings, deep in those waves she dropped.
Who shall say
Why she remained long while a wandering bird,
What secret cause gave her delay,
By what deep law her coming was deferred
Until our later day?"

THE INTERPRETATION OF THE MUSIC.

When the poem came to a close, amidst every token of appreciation, we had yet to hear the serious musical part of the program, the great Beethoven "Missa Solemis" in D. The unusual difficulty of this mass prevents its being often surg, and, judging by the criticisms of performances in the past, such a rendering as the "Cecelia" gave is almost unparalleled. The London "Athenaeum" says of it (March 19, 1870): "The attempt to conquer its difficulties was a gallant one. * * * A quartet of principal voices made fewer mistakes than usual!" Another critic, speaking of Theodore Thomas' rendering it at the New York musical festival in 1882, says that they sang quite a number of measures before any confusion occurred.

Of the present performance a critic must be a trifle captious to discover much to carp at, in chorus, orchestra or organ. The solo singers, Mme. Clementine De Vere, Miss Gertrude May Stein. Mr. Evan Williams and Mr. Joseph S. Baernstein were less satisfactory. Neither contralto, tenor nor bass seemed quite up to the mark, and the soprano, Mme. De Vere, sang with considerable uncertainty, as if not sufficiently familiar with her part, and once or twice there was quite perceptible—"confusion." On the other hand, "The Cecelia," though not numerically large (two hundred members and about fifty guests) was true to the pitch, even in tone, clear in declamation, accurate in attack, and gave the shading with an amount of delicacy and warmth not often met with in amateur choruses. Some three years ago Mr. Lang trained them to sing this mass in its entirety, so they were able to give it with only fourteen rehearsals.

In parts the mass is nobly and richly beautiful. According to some musicians it is so completely the music of the future that we are scarcely yet able to fully comprehend it. According to others it is Beethoven not quite at his best; rather perhaps the Beethoven of "Fidelio" than of the Fifth Smyphony, yet always interesting and uplifting, and breathing here and there of his best inspiration, as in parts of the exquisite "Kyrie," where the soprano sings with violin obligato. This obligato, by the way, was played by Mr. Franz Kneisel in a way to make us wish we might hear him oftener, locally, as a soloist. Mme. De Vere's singing made the writer wish for the steady even tones of Mme. Marie Kunkel-Zimmerman.

OUT INTO THE STREET.

And then the concert was over, and people clapped and talked, and the evening had been brilliant, stirring, yes, and touching, too. Then we came out into the balmy night—and pandemonium, for, in spite of three separate entrances, wide streets, and many policemen, in a jiffy, the carriages were hopelessly jammed, everybody was mixed up with everybody else, head-on collisions between rival pairs of horses were frequent and alarming. In the midst of so [illegible] scene of cheap recalled the comment of a witty Philadelphian, who was getting pneumonia, instead of his carriage, one rainy night at Broad and two pins for clean streets, wholesome water or pure city government, but if anyone will put up a Mayor who could arrange that six carriages could drive up to the Academy of Music without making a block I'd vote for him—several times."

MARY MOSS.

[26]

countries, where the men selected for this work can receive the proper training. Secondly, The pecuniary remuneration should be commensurate with the requirements of the situation, so that the men will not only consider it worth while to put forth their best efforts, but will also stay in the army bands after they have learned to play their instruments.

Only in this way can our army bands serve as an inspiration to our solders, and arouse in the people the sentiment of patriotism and national pride that martial music presented in the right way never fails to inspire.

TWO MINOR MASTERS.

THE recent deaths of Heinrich Von Herzogenberg and Zdenko Fibich recall to us the term, minor masters. Both these men were admirable musicians, both had escaped the period when their work could be described as imitative and both fell sho of greatness in their achievements. Of the two Zdenko Fibich, the Bohemian, was the more original, and being seven years younger than the Styrian composer, bid fair to accomplish more.

Herzogenberg was born at Graz June 10, 1843. After his pupilage at the Vienna Conservatory was at an end—he was under Otto Dessoff, a sound musician and conductor of the Frankfort opera—Herzogenberg returned to Graz and began composing. His early work was too much influenced by Wagner, notably his "Odysseus" Symphony, op. 16, and his dramatic cantata, "Columbus," op. 11. The composer married Elizabeth Stockhausen, the pianist, and went to live in Leipsic in 1872. There, with Volkland, Spitta and Von Holstein, the Bach Society was formed, and Von Herzogenberg became, not only an active worker, but turned his studies Bach-ward and his Wagnerism was greatly modified. He followed Volkland as conductor of the society and later went to Berlin to assist Kiel at the Hochschule. In 1890 he was elected to the Academy, and at the death of his wife went for consolation to Italy. His music is dignified, and, influenced by Bach and Brahms in middle life, he naturally turned to choral writing. Herzogenberg may be heard at his best in his setting of Psalm XCIV. for double choir, orchestra, four solo singers and organ. He composed two odes, a Requiem Mass—this is a sterling work—and songs. Three violin sonatas played in public by Joachim are interesting and there is also a quintet for piano and wind instruments, a quartet for strings and two symphonies, op. 50 and 70. Refined, beautifully finished and always interesting, the music of Heinrich Von Herzogenberg might with profit be given here.

The death of Zdenko Fibich was announced in the newspapers last Thursday. He died at Prague the day previous. He was born at Seborschitz, Bohemia, December 21, 1850. A pupil of Vincenz Lachner in 1865 at the Leipsic Conservatory, Fibich was dramaturgist of the Bohemian National Theatre, Prague, at the time of his death. Ill health had long haunted him, yet he was a fairly prolific composer. He belonged to the younger group of Czech composers who followed in the footsteps of Smetana. His quartet for piano and strings has been admired in England and he is said to have composed some interesting and extremely characteristic music for piano. In 1876 he was appointed second conductor of the National Theatre, Prague, and in 1898 director of the Russian choir. He wrote several successful operas, saturated with the national spirit. They were produced at Prague and are "Bukowina," "Blanik," "The Bride of Messina," "The Storm," "Hedy" and "Sarka"—this last in 1898. He has also left four symphonic poems, several overtures, two symphonies, two string quartets, songs, a choral ballad, sundry choruses and a method for piano. Fibich is another composer who should be exploited in New York.

Music in Boston.

SYMPHONY HERBERT SOUSA.

Persons and Things

WHILE the Monday, October 15, performance constituted the dedicatory ceremonies of New Symphony Hall in Boston, the true inauguration may be put down for Friday and Saturday last, when the first Public Rehearsal and the First Concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra respectively took place in the new temple, as such places are now denominated. It was a wise stroke not to call the hall a Music Hall, as that term is now applied, both in Europe and here, to places where the song with the dance flourishes. The song flourishes or is also to flourish in this new Symphony Hall, but no dance will desecrate its serious and solemn colorless inclosure, which is not only severe, but puritanically austere in countenance and outline.

The building has been described, but it must be visited to learn of its cheerlessness and to feel the stern effect of architectural angularity. It has all the aspect and atmosphere of a religious establishment, and no matter if Beethoven's name is carved out of the proscenium arch and a copy of the Apollo Belvedere is fixed in one of the cold niches at the other end of the hall, it still feels like an armory or a prayer house, where ritual is considered paganism.

It is understood that the Mr. Cotting on whose land the new hall is built, and who was also a director in the old Music Hall, had much to say regarding the structural scheme, and that for certain unfathomable reasons his tasteless orders interfered with the architect's domain. Probably the financial conditions entering upon it were at the bottom of this influence, but whatever it was, the hall, as a new hall of music, falls short of artistic and also modern consistency, and is discordant instead of harmonious in its relation to its practical destiny.

The papers of Boston and Mr. Higginson in his speech on Monday night speak in praise of the acoustics and of the discovery of Wallace C. Sabine, of Harvard, who acted as expert in the construction, but we do not accept all that is said except what Mr. Sabine himself utters particularly, as the acoustics on Saturday night were by no means satisfactory. The wisest remark on the subject is in last Sunday's Journal, which says: "If Mr. Sabine has mastered the secrets of acoustic construction * * * then not only is fame his, but also fortune."

Sound is not music, but is merely one of music's utilizations. A voice or tone may sound scientifically correct at a given time in a given hall and may be measured and its formula fixed and established chronometrically or chronographically or in any chronoform, but that sound or combination of sounds is not music. Music does not repeat itself; music is the moment, because music is art and art cannot be measured beforehand, and to measure music after the event, if that could be accomplished, would apply solely to that music which is gone and not to that music which is to come; the music we are awaiting, the music we want. From the days of Pythagoras all kinds of experiments in acoustics have been facing the physicists and agitated the laboratories, but no clew has been discovered for such a science as can foretell with usual and necessary scientific accuracy how music will sound, and why not? Because if music could always sound as we before its issue could predict by formula X + N = Y, why then it would no longer be music.

The best was probably done that could have been done, but there is no evidence that chance could not have done as well if not better, particularly when the ordinary rules of the architect did better with the Academies of Music of both New York and Philadelphia, with the huge Chicago Auditorium and even with Carnegie Hall here and in Pittsburg.

It may probably have been due to the unsatisfactory acoustics that the new organ also disappointed, although the coarse swell organ could not be excused on this ground. It is strange that our American pipe organ manufacturers cannot secure the facile, delicate and musically refined qualities of the European pipe organ when we beat the world with our pianos and reed organs. The 32 foot stops instead of giving a tone of thunder growl and the diapasons are hard and unsympathetic. While we are far ahead with our mechanical stops and combinations our musical qualities in pipe organ building are still coarse and unattractive.

The Program.

The first concert had to submit to insisting emergencies for its structure and the program was therefore as follows:

Weber—Overture, Euryanthe.
Händel—D minor, op. 7, Organ Concerto.
Schubert—Ballet Music and Entr'acte, "Rosamunde."
Beethoven—C minor Symphony.

Wallace Goodrich was the organist.

The orchestra was in militant spirit and played with unusual brilliancy and dash. The performance of the symphony was a triumph of orchestral virtuosity and it seemed as if each man, from Mr. Gericke down to the tympanist, felt the force of the work.

There is really very little to be said nowadays of this superb organization, which outdoes any other orchestra America has ever had and which jeopards the traditional reputations of European bodies. Quality of tone, balance and equality; individual and collective temperament, brilliancy of tone, infallibility of pitch, rhythm, musical intelligence, power and a consciousness of the artistic value of the pursuit—are the elements of this orchestra. It is now at its climax, and it will require a steady aim and an inspiring environment to hold it in its place. Mr. Gericke has a serious task ahead of him.

Business.

By a curious concatenation of events on this mundane sphere, as some poets call the place, no orchestra can be conducted without that much maligned article called money. Mr. Higginson, a Boston banker, was the man who was willing to step into the empty breach and fill it with money, and had the necessary philanthropic courage to run the risk of its return in time; it must be returning rapidly now, and he is not only to be thanked for the great good he has done, the inestimable benefits he has conferred, but also to be congratulated upon the financial success his undertaking is now reaping.

A faint idea only obtains regarding the enormous business done by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but the auction sale of its seats for the season gives a basis of an estimate, and only a basis, because the true figures are inaccessible, as Mr. Higginson, like other business men, refuses to furnish the exact or even approximate statistics. The two seats that brought $1,144 at auction were not supposed to have been legitimate, but even so, they were expressions of enthusiasm. Enough, however, has been seen by us on sheets of the plans of the house, marked during the progress of the sale, to illustrate outlines of the healthy commercialism of the en erprise, which, happily for Boston and other places, is conducted on strict business principles.

There are 2,500 and sixty odd seats in the hall; say for the two performances 5,000 seats virtually disposed of. From the figured sheets of the plan we average these seats at $40 a season, making a business of $200,000 and more for it. Now then come the regular Cambridge and the Providence concerts, and we have nearly, if not more than, $300,000. The tours to New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia and Baltimore run the income up to another $100,000 more or less; not much less. A Boston expert puts the business of the orchestra down at $500,000—about one-half of the Foreign opera business at the Metropolitan Opera House.

At the lowest estimate Mr. Higginson's profit must be at least 10 per cent. of this and he will therefore find himself very readily reimbursed for the outlay, the incidental annoyance and the risk, from which he has now obtained immunity. All this illustrates that music can be made successful without Governmental subvention or subsidy if it is managed like a coal mine is or a railroad or an oil company or a clothing factory or a cotton mill or a piano business. We wish to call special attention of impracticable musical folk to this important feature of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—its correct and modernized business organization, which is the true basis of its success and which makes it impossible for the orchestra to play for nothing—just as it is impossible for THE MUSICAL COURIER to advertise people for nothing and exist. The Boston Symphony Orchestra despite its art, despite its Nikisch, its Paur and its Gericke could not endure one month without equipoised, scientific business management, its success depending absolutely upon this and this alone, as is proved in the case of Mr. Higginson, and therefore the orchestra could not play without money to indorse it, as the money is the first ingredient of its existence. And so it is with THE MUSICAL COURIER, the only other musical counterpart of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and so it should be with every other musical institution and individual living and working in music. Money for music; no money, no music. Then only can music flourish. The program of next Saturday's concert is not novel, but interesting. Mr. Gericke is not a novelist:

INTERIOR OF THE NEW SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.

The Roman Carnival—Berlioz.
Suite, Esclarmonde—Massenet.
New World Symphony—Dvorák.

Madam Schumann-Heink will try to sing Mozart's "Titus" aria, which she has never yet sung successfully in New York, and "Die Allmacht," a song that will also tax her vocal defects to the utmost.

A Prospectus.

We reproduce from Philip Hale's Sunday musical review in the Boston Journal the following:

The following orchestral pieces are announced as "novelties," and will be given this season by the Symphony Orchestra under Mr. Gericke, although possibly one or two may disappear in rehearsal to make room for something that may be deemed more desirable.

Suite from Massenet's "Esclarmonde." This suite was played in Boston for the first time March 2, 1892, at a concert given for the benefit of the members of the orchestra. The opera itself was produced at the Opéra-Comique, May 14, 1889. The suite was played at a Colonne concert October 18, 1891.

Goldmark's scherzo, op. 45, was played at Chicago in 1894.

Röntgen's Ballad on a Norwegian folk-song. Röntgen is a pianist who was born at Leipsic in 1855. In 1878 he settled at Amsterdam as teacher in the music school. Chicago heard this piece in 1896.

Cowen's "Idyllic" symphony. This is the sixth in E, which was produced at a Richter concert in London, May 31, 1897. At the same concert Gabrilowitsch, the pianist, made his first appearance in England.

Nicodé's Symphonic Variations is by no means a new piece. It was played at Chicago in 1892.

Converse, F. S., Ballade (MS.). I understand that this is one of three pieces suggested by John Keats' "Endymion."

Rabl, symphony in D minor. Walther Rabl is a young composer, whose quartet (op. 1) for piano, clarinet, violin and 'cello won a prize in 1898.

Tschaikowsky, "Manfred" symphony, in four scenes: "Manfred wandering amid the Alpine heights;" scherzo, "The spirit of the Alps;" "A picture of the simple but prosperous Life of the Mountaineers;" "The subterranean palace of Arimane, with death of Manfred." This symphony was begun in 1884. Tschaikowsky said to Kashkin: "'Manfred' cost me a whole year of my life." It was performed at New York December 4, 1886, and in Chicago in 1898.

Tschaikowsky, Suite No. 2, op. 53, dates back to 1882 or 1883.

Dohnányi, piano concerto (MS.). This is the concerto that won the prize at Vienna March 28, 1899, in a competition where Mr. Gericke was one of the judges.

Brüll, Overture to "Macbeth."

Saint-Saëns, symphony No. 3, with organ and piano, was first performed at a Philharmonic concert at London in June, 1885. It was played in New York, February 19, 1887, and in Chicago in 1891.

Van der Stucken, "William Ratcliffe," symphonic prologue. I note a performance at Cincinnati early in 1890, but my impression is that it was not the first.

Glazounoff, suite "Raymonde." These are excerpts from a ballet, one of the latest works of this brilliant composer.

Bruckner, Symphony in D minor, No. 3. This is the symphony dedicated to Wagner. It was performed at Vienna December 16, 1877, and again in 1891 and 1892. It was also played at a Lamoureux concert in Paris.

Smetana: Symphonic poems "Sarka" and "Aus böhmischen Fluren und Hainen." They were written in 1875, and are Nos. 2 and 3 of the cycle "Mein Vaterland."

Liszt: Symphonic poem "Hunnenschlacht," suggested by Kaulbach's painting.

Brockway, Howard A.: Suite. Mr. Brockway was born in Brooklyn in 1870. He studied in Berlin (1890-1895) with Barth and O. B. Boise.

Weingartner, Felix: Symphony in G major. This work of the celebrated conductor was first performed at Cologne, November 22, 1898. It was played in this country for the first time November 18, 1899, at Cincinnati, under Mr. Van der Stucken.

Mr. Hale in his list involuntarily exposes the fact that these novelties are merely Boston novelties, like those in the Department Stores, easily duplicated in the old stocks on hand in New York, Chicago or Cincinnati; or it is even within the range of possibility that Mr. Hale is a volunteer for his information. For instance, the Roman Carnival and the Esclarmonde Suite were for years on the Seidl Brighton Beach summer resort programs, but they are not claimed as novelties, although they are on the next week's, the second concert of the season.

Van der Stucken's "Ratcliffe" was performed here in New York last season, but it is good enough to remain a novelty until it is heard again. Bruckner's Symphony was played here, but it is doubtful if any complete indexed table can be found anywhere by means of which these works can be traced in their performance. This paper has been languishing for its own index which could, at a glance, prove any such statistics as Mr. Hale is fond of collaborating, but the work of producing two MUSICAL COURIERS a week and printing such an extensive paper has kept our hands full, and made indexing a fond hope of future fulfillment. If some one were to index this paper for 1,000 weeks past he or she could make a small fortune with such a work—invaluable in its way.

Sousa and Herbert.

Those old rivals in the tone world, Sousa and Herbert, were occupying the same field in Boston recently. The week before last Sousa and his band were playing at the Merchants and Manufacturers 20th Century Exposition Mechanics Hall, and last week Herbert and the Pittsburg Symphony Orchestra played there, and this week, following a demand unexampled in its force, Sousa again played at double the former price, receiving the great sum of $13,000 for the week's engagement. Both Sousa and Herbert have been favorites in Boston, but Sousa draws more money, which is no disparagement to Herbert, who might have done as well had he continued his identification with band music. Mr. Sousa may follow Herbert in the orchestral field, and then we might see how the artistic rivalry develops on the new grounds of competition.

During Herbert's popular work in Boston he received the following telegrams in reference to the Pittsburg Symphony season, From the leading

Musical Courier Oct 24

ANOTHER VIEW OF THE INTERIOR.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

The sale of course tickets to the Boston Symphony Concerts in Brooklyn was opened last night (Tuesday) at the Art Building on Montague street. The sale will be continued at the office of the Brooklyn Institute, 502 Fulton street, and at Chandler's, 439 Fulton street. Students with the proper credentials will have the privilege again of purchasing tickets at a considerable reduction for these superb concerts. Dohnányi, the Hungarian pianist, will be the soloist at the first concert, Friday evening, Nov. 9.

The concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are given at the Academy of Music, a building no longer worthy of this incomparable organization from Boston To-day the Brooklyn Academy of Music may be rented for any purpose, and "fake" vaudeville shows, "codfish" balls and blaspheming evangelists have preceded and followed a symphony orchestra concert. Such incongruities in one building shock the artistic sense. But neither the Orchestra nor the Brooklyn Institute is to blame for the lack of a suitable hall in the borough.

The responsibility rests with the wealthy people of Brooklyn, who could, by uniting their efforts, put up a new building with a hall set apart for first-class concerts and recitals. Witness what Boston, a city with half the population of Brooklyn, has accomplished in this respect. Of course, in Brooklyn one must constantly be reminded that the proximity of New York (Borough of Manhattan) is the cause of the "dead slow" conditions existing in Brooklyn. But the fact of the great population remains. At least one-tenth of this population (1,200,000) is composed of well to do, even rich, people, who could raise Brooklyn to a higher plane of artistic excellence and civic independence.

* * *

Dohnanyi Expected This Week.

Ernest Von Dohnányi, the Hungarian composer-pianist, sailed from Queenstown last week, and will arrive here about the 25th. He will make his reappearance in Boston on November 2, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, after which he will make a tour with the orchestra, playing in Providence, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Brooklyn, and in New York city on November 8. On the afternoon of November 14 and 17 he will give the first two piano recitals of the season in Mendelssohn Hall.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. OVIII., NO. 117.

THURSDAY, OCT. 25, 1900.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Next Saturday morning, at 8 o'clock, at Sever's University book store in Harvard Square, Cambridge, the season tickets for the 10 concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra in Sanders Theatre, will be offered for sale.

As is very generally known, these concerts are on the same plane as the Boston performances. The unprecedented sale of tickets for both the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening series in Boston, at which every seat in the house for each series was sold for the season, makes the Cambridge concerts available for patrons who were unable to secure seats for the Boston concerts.

The list of soloists already engaged includes Mrs. Georg Henschel, Miss Gertrude May Stein, Miss Freda Siemens, Messrs. C. M. Loeffler, T. Adamowski, Otto Roth and Alwin Schroeder. As is the custom, a few seats at these concerts have been reserved for the officials of Harvard College and their friends.

Boston Daily Globe.

THURSDAY, OCT. 25, 1900.

Next Saturday morning at 8 o'clock at Sever's university bookstore in Harvard sq, Cambridge, the season tickets for the 10 concerts by the Boston symphony orchestra in Sanders theater will be offered for sale. These concerts are on the same high plane as the Boston performances. The unprecedented sale of tickets for both the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening series in Boston, at which every seat in the house for each series was sold for the season, makes the Cambridge concerts available for patrons who were unable to secure seats for the Boston concerts. The list of soloists already engaged includes Mrs Georg Henschel, Miss Gertrude May Stein, Miss Freda Siemens, C. M. Loeffler, T. Adamowski, Otto Roth and Alwin Schroeder. As is the custom, a few seats at these concerts have been reserved for the officials of Harvard college and their friends.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

Established 1813.

The Official Paper of the State.

The Official Paper of the City.

FRIDAY MORNING, OCT. 26, 1900.

MUSICAL MATTERS.

The first recital given upon the new organ in Symphony Hall was given last night by J. W. Goodrich.

The selection of Mr. Goodrich for the opening recital was a wise one, as he is recognized as one of the leading organists of the present day.

The programe was well selected and contrasted, and presented different schools of organ composition, from Bach to Widor, who represents the modern school. The influence of Mr. Goodrich's French teaching (being a pupil of Widor's), was shown in the masterly rendition of the Bach Toccata and Fugue.

The strictness of the German school, which makes the works of Bach so mechanical and uninteresting was nowhere present, but the changes in registration and the nuances made the number intelligible even to non-musical auditors.

The chorale in B minor by Cesar Franck, was the most enjoyable work both from the point of intricate and rich harmony and registration.

In contrast to the two Bach chorals, "Aus Wasserflussen Babylon" and "Komm, Geist," Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger etaoin bz Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist," was the brilliant Saint-Saens' "Fantasie."

In this, many of the finer solo stops of the organ were brought out. In some of the solo pedal passages, a few of the lower pedal notes did not speak distinctly, thus spoiling the effect of an otherwise perfect performance.

Two other works of the modern French school were played "In Paradisum" and "Flat Lux," by Dubois. These differ from the Widor compositions in that Widor demands more intellectuality, while in the works of Dubois technique and brilliant execution are the main points.

Boston Daily Globe.

SATURDAY, OCT. 27, 1900.

The celebrated contralto, Mme Schumann-Heink, will be the soloist at the symphony concert this evening. She will sing selections by Mozart and Schubert. The orchestral numbers will include the overture to "La Carnaval," Berlioz; orchestral suite, "Esclarmonde," Massenet, and Dvorak's "New World" symphony.

Boston Journal.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1900.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give ten concerts in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, Thursday evenings, Nov. 1, 22, Dec. 6, 27, Jan. 10, 31, Feb. 14, March 14, April 11, May 2. Mrs. Henschel, Miss Freda Siemens, Messrs. Loeffler, Adamowski, Roth, Schroeder will be among the soloists. Seats will go on sale this morning at the University Bookstore at 8 o'clock.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. OVIII., NO. 118.

FRIDAY, OCT. 26, 1900.

MR. GOODRICH'S RECITAL.

New Organ in Symphony Hall Is Heard by the Musical Public for the First Time.

Last evening Mr. J. Wallace Goodrich gave an organ recital in Symphony Hall, it being the first occasion on which the new instrument has been heard in a concert devoted wholly to organ music. The programme was:

Toccata and Fugue, in D minor.....J. S. Bach
Pastorale.....J. S. Bach
Symphonie Romaine, op. 73.....C. M. Widor
Two Choralvorspiele.....J. S. Bach
Fantasie, in D flat, op. 101.....C. Saint-Saens
In Paradisum.....Theodore Dubois
Flat Lux.....Theodore Dubois

Organ concerts are not among the more enlivening and varied of musical entertainments, and it cannot be justly said that this one was any exception to the rule. Ten or 15 minutes of the organ, even under the most favorable circumstances, are about as much as the ordinary, well seasoned musical palate can be safely called upon to stand without experiencing a rapidly growing feeling of satiety. The professional organ player may possibly submit to a larger dose without having a disposition to sleep come upon him, owing to his having acquired a taste for that sort of thing, but others must inevitably be more or less bored by "the generous excess of too much." In brief, the organ is not an instrument for the concert room. Its place is in the church, where its majesty makes itself duly felt, while as a solo instrument elsewhere it is belittled, cabined, cribbed and confined, as it were—a leviathan, puffing and snorting in shallow water.

Mr. Goodrich selected a rather stiff programme for the recital. The Widor symphonie, labored, dull and heavy, saying little that was worth saying, and singularly and drearily monotonous in color and effect, might easily have been spared in favor of something more interesting, not to say genial. With a vivid and painful recollection of this and of the composer's Gothic Symphony, one is inclined to ask if Widor has ever written an ambitious work that is interesting for any suggestion of spontaneous beauty in effect, or genial in any sense. Mr. Goodrich played this exacting programme through with smooth and precise technique and easy fluency and freedom. His style seems a little hard and stiff—or perhaps it would be better to say overdeliberately severe—suggesting, perhaps, a leaning too steadily in the direction of mere pedagogy. Then, too, his sense of rhythm is sometimes insecure, as was illustrated in the Bach toccata and fugue, the last named movement suffering somewhat owing to lack of the necessary rhythmical emphasis, especially in the giving out of the subject. Nor was the opening of the toccata free from a like error. However, Mr. Goodrich's technique may be warmly praised for its clearness, its flexibility and its precision, and it must be added that his playing was cordially applauded by the audience, which, after his performance of the Widor piece, made quite an enthusiastic demonstration of hearty approval. But, Mr Goodrich, if you should give another organ recital, do not feel it obligatory to play so long a programme, and, in all sincerity be it said, one with so large a proportion of dulness in it. The best use to which an organ can be put in the concert room as a solo instrument is to make it enjoyable to the many, without any feeling that it is necessary to make it educational as well. It is simply a question of giving pleasure to or of wearying an audience.

[28]

M. Musical Courier Oct 24

ANOTHER VIEW OF THE INTERIOR.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CVIII., NO. 117.

THURSDAY, OCT. 25, 1900.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Next Saturday morning, at 8 o'clock, at Sever's University book store in Harvard Square, Cambridge, the season tickets for the 10 concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra in Sanders Theatre, will be offered for sale.

As is very generally known, these concerts are on the same plane as the Boston performances. The unprecedented sale of tickets for both the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening series in Boston, at which every seat in the house for each series was sold for the season, makes the Cambridge concerts available for patrons who were unable to secure seats for the Boston concerts.

The list of soloists already engaged includes Mrs. Georg Henschel, Miss Gertrude May Stein, Miss Freda Siemens, Messrs. C. M. Loeffler, T. Adamowski, Otto Roth and Alwin Schroeder. As is the custom, a few seats at these concerts have been reserved for the officials of Harvard College and their friends.

Boston Daily Globe.

THURSDAY, OCT. 25, 1900.

Next Saturday morning at 8 o'clock at Sever's university bookstore in Harvard sq., Cambridge, the season tickets for the 10 concerts by the Boston symphony orchestra in Sanders theater will be offered for sale. These concerts are on the same high plane as the Boston performances. The unprecedented sale of tickets for both the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening series in Boston, at which every seat in the house for each series was sold for the season, makes the Cambridge concerts available for patrons who were unable to secure seats for the Boston concerts. The list of soloists already engaged includes Mrs Georg Henschel, Miss Gertrude May Stein, Miss Freda Siemens, C. M. Loeffler, T. Adamowski, Otto Roth and Alwin Schroeder. As is the custom, a few seats at these concerts have been reserved for the officials of Harvard college and their friends.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

Established 1813.

The Official Paper of the State.

The Official Paper of the City.

FRIDAY MORNING, OCT. 26, 1900.

MUSICAL MATTERS.

The first recital given upon the new organ in Symphony Hall was given last night by J. W. Goodrich.

The selection of Mr. Goodrich for the opening recital was a wise one, as he is recognized as one of the leading organists of the present day.

The programe was well selected and contrasted, and presented different schools of organ composition, from Bach to Widor, who represents the modern school. The influence of Mr. Goodrich's French teaching (being a pupil of Widor's), was shown in the masterly rendition of the Bach Toccata and Fugue.

The strictness of the German school, which makes the works of Bach so mechanical and uninteresting was nowhere present, but the changes in registration and the nuances made the number intelligible even to non-musical auditors.

The chorale in B minor by Cesar Franck, was the most enjoyable work both from the point of intricate and rich harmony and registration.

In contrast to the two Bach chorals, "Au Wasserflussen Babylon" and "Komm', Geist," Gott, Schopfer, Heiligeretaoin hz Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist," was the brilliant Saint-Saens' "Fantasie."

In this, many of the finer solo stops of the organ were brought out. In some of the solo pedal passages, a few of the lower pedal notes did not speak distinctly, thus spoiling the effect of an otherwise perfect performance.

Two other works of the modern French school were played "In Paradisum" and "Flat Lux," by Dubois. These differ from the Widor compositions in that Widor demands more intellectuality, while in the works of Dubois technique and brilliant execution are the main points.

Boston Journal.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1900.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give ten concerts in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, Thursday evenings, Nov. 1, 22, Dec. 6, 27, Jan. 10, 31, Feb. 14, March 14, April 11, May 2. Mrs. Henschel, Miss Freda Siemens, Messrs. Loeffler, Adamowski, Roth, Schroeder will be among the soloists. Seats will go on sale this morning at the University Bookstore at 8 o'clock.

Boston Daily Globe.

SATURDAY, OCT. 27, 1900.

The celebrated contralto, Mme Schumann-Heink, will be the soloist at the symphony concert this evening. She will sing selections by Mozart and Schubert. The orchestral numbers will include the overture to "La Carnaval," Berlioz; orchestral suite, "Esclarmonde," Massenet, and Dvorak's "New World" symphony.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

The sale of course tickets to the Boston Symphony Concerts in Brooklyn was opened last night (Tuesday) at the Art Building on Montague street. The sale will be continued at the office of the Brooklyn Institute, 502 Fulton street, and at Chandler's, 430 Fulton street. Students with the proper credentials will have the privilege again of purchasing tickets at a considerable reduction for these superb concerts. Dohnányi, the Hungarian pianist, will be the soloist at the first concert, Friday evening, Nov. 9.

The concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are given at the Academy of Music, a building no longer worthy of this incomparable organization from Boston. To-day the Brooklyn Academy of Music may be rented for any purpose, and "fake" vaudeville shows, "codfish" balls and blaspheming evangelists have preceded and followed a symphony orchestra concert. Such incongruities in one building shock the artistic sense. But neither the Orchestra nor the Brooklyn Institute is to blame for the lack of a suitable hall in the borough.

The responsibility rests with the wealthy people of Brooklyn, who could, by uniting their efforts, put up a new building with a hall set apart for first-class concerts and recitals. Witness what Boston, a city with half the population of Brooklyn, has accomplished in this respect. Of course, in Brooklyn one must constantly be reminded that the proximity of New York (Borough of Manhattan) is the cause of the "dead slow" conditions existing in Brooklyn. But the fact of the great population remains. At least one-tenth of this population (1,200,000) is composed of well to do, even rich, people, who could raise Brooklyn to a higher plane of artistic excellence and civic independence.

* * *

Dohnanyi Expected This Week.

Ernest Von Dohnányi, the Hungarian composer-pianist, sailed from Queenstown last week, and will arrive here about the 25th. He will make his reappearance in Boston on November 2, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, after which he will make a tour with the orchestra, playing in Providence, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Brooklyn, and in New York city on November 8. On the afternoon of November 14 and 17 he will give the first two piano recitals of the season in Mendelssohn Hall.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CVIII., NO. 118.

FRIDAY, OCT. 26, 1900.

MR. GOODRICH'S RECITAL.

New Organ in Symphony Hall Is Heard by the Musical Public for the First Time.

Last evening Mr. J. Wallace Goodrich gave an organ recital in Symphony Hall, it being the first occasion on which the new instrument has been heard in a concert devoted wholly to organ music. The programme was:

Toccata and Fugue, in D minor.....J. S. Bach
Pastorale.....J. S. Bach
Symphonie Romaine, op. 73.....C. M. Widor
Two Choralvorspiele.....J. S. Bach
Fantasie, in D flat, op. 101.....C. Saint-Saens
In Paradisum.....Theodore Dubois
Flat Lux.....Theodore Dubois

Organ concerts are not among the more enlivening and varied of musical entertainments, and it cannot be justly said that this one was any exception to the rule. Ten or 15 minutes of the organ, even under the most favorable circumstances, are about as much as the ordinary, well seasoned musical palate can be safely called upon to stand without experiencing a rapidly growing feeling of satiety. The professional organ player may possibly submit to a larger dose without having a disposition to sleep come upon him, owing to his having acquired a taste for that sort of thing, but others must inevitably be more or less bored by "the generous excess of too much." In brief, the organ is not an instrument for the concert room. Its place is in the church, where its majesty makes itself duly felt, while as a solo instrument elsewhere it is belittled, cabined, cribbed and confined, as it were—a leviathan, puffing and snorting in shallow water.

Mr. Goodrich selected a rather stiff programme for the recital. The Widor symphonie, labored, dull and heavy, saying little that was worth saying, and singularly and drearily monotonous in color and effect, might easily have been spared in favor of something more interesting, not to say genial. With a vivid and painful recollection of this and of the composer's Gothic Symphony, one is inclined to ask if Widor has ever written an ambitious work that is interesting for any suggestion of spontaneous beauty in effect, or genial in any sense. Mr. Goodrich played this exacting programme through with smooth and precise technique and easy fluency and freedom. His style seems a little hard and stiff—or perhaps it would be better to say overdeliberately severe—suggesting, perhaps, a leaning too steadily in the direction of mere pedagogy. Then, too, his sense of rhythm is sometimes insecure, as was illustrated in the Bach toccata and fugue, the last named movement suffering somewhat owing to lack of the necessary rhythmical emphasis, especially in the giving out of the subject. Nor was the opening of the toccata free from a like error. However, Mr. Goodrich's technique may be warmly praised for its clearness, its flexibility and its precision, and it must be added that his playing was cordially applauded by the audience, which, after his performance of the Widor piece, made quite an enthusiastic demonstration of hearty approval. But, Mr Goodrich, if you should give another organ recital, do not feel it obligatory to play so long a programme, and, in all sincerity be it said, one with so large a proportion of dulness in it. The best use to which an organ can be put in the concert room as a solo instrument is to make it enjoyable to the many, without any feeling that it is necessary to make it educational as well. It is simply a question of giving pleasure to or of wearying an audience.

[28]

Boston Journal.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 26, 1900.

WALLACE GOODRICH.

First Organ Recital in Symphony Hall—Novelties by Cesar Franck and Charles Marie Widor—Is the Organ a Concert-Instrument?

(By Philip Hale.)

Mr. J. Wallace Goodrich gave last evening the first organ recital in Symphony Hall. There was a large and applausive audience. The program was as follows: Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach—the one known to pianists through Tausig's transcription; Bach's Pastorale (first movement, in F) and two choral preludes, "Komm, Gott, Schöpfer," and "An Wasserflüssen Babylon;" Chorale in B minor, César Franck; Widor's Symphonie Romane" on the plain-song melody "Haec Dies, exultemus;" Saint-Saëns's Fantasie in D flat, op. 101; and Dubois's "In Paradisum," and "Fiat Lux."

This program was of greater interest to musicians than to the general public, which has been accustomed to Handel's "Largo," the "Angel's Serenade" and the overture to "William Tell." Mr. Goodrich had the courage of his convictions. He does not believe that the organ should be a foolish imitation of an orchestra, for he knows that the genius of the instrument is wholly opposed to such imitation. Nor does he believe in attempts at thunder-storms or in the pathos of a bleating Vox Humana. I honor him for this respect shown an abused instrument; but he might have maintained this attitude and nevertheless arranged a more entertaining program of legitimate organ music. If he had put the pieces by Dubois between those by Franck and Widor, the tone of the whole concert would not have been so drab. As the program was selected and arranged, a feeling of boredom, reprehensible no doubt, but nevertheless real, straightened the breasts of many.

And the more I hear of the organ in concert-rooms, the more do I find it out of place in such halls. The organ is an instrument for the church and for church service. In its true home it is an aid to ritualistic worship and to individual contemplation of the great mysteries of life, sin, redemption and death. It needs the assistance of vault and aisle, stained glass, the sight of the altar or pulpit, and all the hallowed associations of the consecrated building.

Two pieces played last evening were new even to many organ students; the pieces by Franck and Widor. The chorale by the former is an eminently thoughtful composition, in which, as in certain choral works by Franck, mysticism, enwraps contrapuntal art. The "Symphonie Romane" by Widor is a more ambitious work, but, to me at least, it is for the most part labored and dry.

Mr. Goodrich played with ample display of technic, musical intelligence, and pleasing physical repose. I regret to say that I was disappointed in his reading of the Toccata and Fugue. This work, which shows the influence of Buxtehude—a composer too much neglected by organists of today—is intensely dramatic. Surely the Toccata admits of much more tonal variety than was given last night. Nor were all the legitimate points made effectively by the organist. There was a lack of spirit; nor was there sufficient courtesy shown the element of surprise. The Fugue was played clearly enough, but here again there was not the thought of a steadily rolling, ever increasing mass of tone, and the stormy close was played with incongruous deliberation.

Boston Transcript

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 26, 1900

Symphony Hall: Mr. Goodrich's Recital

Mr. J. Wallace Goodrich gave the opening organ recital in Symphony Hall last evening, the programme being:

Bach: Toccata and Fugue in D minor.
Pastorale in F major.
César Franck: Choral in B minor.
Widor: Symphonie romane, opus 73.
Bach: Two Choralvorspiele:
a. "An Wasserflüssen Babylon."
b. "Komm', Gott, Schöpfer, Heiliger Geist."
Saint-Saëns: Fantaisie in D-flat major, opus 101.
Théodore Dubois: "In Paradisium."
"Fiat lux."

It was a curious, and by no means uninteresting, contrast to have a programme made up of nothing but old Sebastian Bach and the newest French organ school. Unless the Italians have written more organ music than I think they have, this programme represents the two opposite poles of reputable organ writing.

It was good to hear the D minor Toccata once more in its original shape; in Tausig's pianoforte transcription it has fallen wellnigh into concert hackdom. Last evening it suggested two things: First, how essentially an organ-work it is, and what a task Tausig had in arranging it for the pianoforte; then, how admirably, all things considered, Tausig had performed that task. Mr. Goodrich played it with due dignity and clearness, with fine distinctness of rhythm. Since the time when I used to hear it frequently on the organ, a whole school of Bach-playing may be said to have passed away, and a new school sprung up. It used to be played on the full organ throughout, a plan which had only convention to excuse it, for certain items in the composition were shown in rather a serio-comic light; the opening mordent, for instance, sounded, for all the world, like a pig being led to slaughter. Still, this is the way I had been accustomed to hear the Toccata played, and it takes some time to get over old habits and associations; and last evening Mr. Goodrich's unquestionably better method could not but strike me as strange; I could not feel myself at home in the composition. There is absolutely no reason why effects of light and shade should not be made in a work of this sort, no reason why the organ should continually roar. Intricate polyphonic passages on the full organ are terribly liable to sound muddled, with only the medium stops drawn, such passages become clear at once. Only in one place did it seem to me that Mr. Goodrich rather overdid the light-and-shade business: in that series of arpeggj on the tonic and diminished 7th; that continual alternation between mezzo-forte and piano spoils—to my ear—the continuous climax of the passage. But the ever-beautiful Pastorale was played ideally.

Before the two Choralvorspiele one can only bow down in adoration; here, if anywhere, Bach shows the poetic side of his genius. It is not often that one hears anything so exactly right as Mr. Goodrich's playing of them. Had he only played a trio-sonata also! But programmes had best not be eternal, and even Bach ought not to have too large a share in one.

The French pieces made a very curious impression upon me, unaccustomed as I am to hearing that sort of thing. Of course, I can give only first impressions; but these were, for once, exceedingly strong. It seemed to me that, of the four composers represented, César Franck stood definitely in one class, and Widor, Saint-Saëns and Dubois just as definitely in another. To hear the Franck Choral for the first time was, in particular, an almost tragic experience. It was like seeing your first tuft of white hair in the looking-glass, like having a young man offer you his seat for the first time in a street car: a memento senescere.

Heaven knows I am not head-over-ears in love with the organ; neither am I inclined to be an old fogy in music. I have worked myself up to hearty sympathy with most modern points of view in orchestral, choral, and chamber composition; it cost a hard struggle, but I have got there, and find the game worth the candle. I am not in the least off with my old loves, but am nevertheless well on with the new; from Palestrina to Richard Strauss, I have a warm place in my heart for them all. But I had looked upon the organ as one last refuge for the old calm grandeur, the old sunny "Heiterkeit"; rather a desert home, if you will, arid, rough, full of gritty alkali and bristling with cactus and aloes, but still a safe refuge where the wicked would cease from troubling and the weary be forever at rest. And now comes César Franck and wipes out my quietist dream! It was quite terrible listening to that Choral of his. Doubly so because you felt in your bones that here was every inch a man who had something of weight to say, and meant every note of it. What are the cunning knavish tricks of Widor, the polite inanities of Saint-Saëns, the rouge and curling-tongs of Dubois, compared to that grim earnestness of passion? You feel these trivial things to be mere huckstering in the Temple; not in any way admirable, but still hurting the Temple not a whit. But Franck mounts the pulpit and, in the fulness of his great heart, preaches a new creed; that is something serious and of real import. Well, I may come to this, too, in time; I should be loath to find my power of growth past praying for. But I must say that, last evening, that Choral fairly made me shiver.

Compared with this deep earnestness, Widor stood forth like an accomplished showman, talking up the advantages of fitting out an old Gregorian tune with modern tailoring. Diabolically clever, a musician to his finger-tips, often entertaining; but so little convincing that one wonders if he believes in all that himself. The Saint-Saëns piece seemed as near to Nothing-at-all as a salon piece need be.

But Théodore Dubois fairly makes you stare. Does this learned gentlemen keep a few dozen fancy titles for pieces in a hat and draw one out at random whenever he has finished an organ-composition? Or did Gounod really give the measure of the French idea of things celestial, when he wrote that ineffable "Jerusalem Coelestis" in his "Mors et Vita?" But, leaving aside all such speculations, I should like to ask one question of the initiated: In what does Dubois's "Paradisium" excell old Lefebure-Wély's "Cloches du Monastère"—save perhaps in being more modern in style? As for that opéra-bouffe selection he calls "Fiat Lux," ah, begone, dull care; we 'll dance, and sing, and show our—sense of the grandeurs of Creation!

Lucky that all these things were presented to us by an organist like Mr. Goodrich, one who is at home in the school, and has the technique and musicianship to do its works full justice. His playing throughout the evening was such that even I could find it admirable, he never left me in doubt about his intention. There was a gratifyingly large and enthusiastic audience; Mr. Goodrich was more than once called out.

W. F. A.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1900

WILL HEAR MUSIC IN CAMBRIDGE

Demand for Tickets for Cambridge Symphony Concerts Unusually Great Because of High Prices at Boston Symphony Hall

A great many suburban people who have listened to the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Music Hall for years were frightened away from Symphony Hall this season by the high prices which ran through the sale. These people have no intention of giving up their music entirely; they will simply be content with less of it, and will now have their symphony concerts on Thursday evenings at Sanders Theatre, Cambridge.

When the sale of season tickets opened at Sever's Book Store, Harvard square, this morning, the demand was greater than in any former year. Before eleven o'clock, when the sale opened, a large crowd of music lovers had formed on the sidewalk outside, and all the morning there was a steady pressure on the ticket office which kept the man in charge extremely busy. There were more people than ever from the towns about Cambridge buying seats. The Newtons, Allston, Brookline, Dorchester, Roxbury, Arlington and Winchester have comparatively easy connections with Harvard square by the street cars.

The concerts will open on Thursday evening next, and the other dates will be Thursdays, Nov. 22, Dec. 6, Dec. 27, Jan. 10, 31, Feb. 14, March 14, April 11, and May 2. The following-named soloists have been announced: Miss Gertrude May Stein, Mrs. Georg Henschel, Miss Freda Siemens, C. M. Loeffler, T. Adamowski, Otto Roth and Alwin Schroeder.

BOSTON POST,

The Representative Democratic Paper OF NEW ENGLAND.

SUNDAY MORNING, OCTOBER 28, 1900.

SECOND SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The second concert of the Symphony Orchestra was given last evening in Symphony Hall. The orchestral selections included Berlioz's overture "Roman Carnival," suite by Massenet "Esclarmonde," and Dvorak's symphony "From the New World," op. 95. The "Esclarmonde" overture was heard for the first time at these concerts, and made a favorable impression. The symphony has a special interest from its having been written by the composer while a resident of New York on so-called Negro melodies. The performance of the orchestra was fully up to the usual high standard.

Musical Matters.

The first Symphony concert of the present season in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, will be Thursday evening, Nov. 1.

Edwin Klahre pianist, will play the Schumann carnival entire, also well-known selections by Beethoven, Chopin, Rubinstein and Liszt, at his recital in Steinert Hall.

Ernst von Dohnanyi, the Hungarian pianist, will be the soloist at the rehearsal and concert of the Symphony Orchestra this coming week. He will perform his own concerto for pianoforte and orchestra in E minor for the first time in Boston.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, OCT. 28, 1900.

SECOND SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The program for the second symphony rehearsal and concert introduced the great contralto Mme Schumann-Heink as the soloist, her selections being a recitative and rondo from Mozart's "Titus" and the Schubert song, "Die Allmacht." The orchestral numbers comprised the "Roman Carnival" overture by Berlioz, the orchestra suite from Massenet's "Esclarmond" and Antonin Dvorak's "New World" symphony. Mme Schumann-Heink fame as an opera singer is pretty well known and of course her contributions were the features in an excellent program. She is an artist in every sense of the word and her concert work enables her to show that she is equally effective in either field and does not need theatric surroundings to enhance the quality of her chosen endeavor.

Many who remember her as Fricka in "Die Walkure" and Ortrud in "Lohengrin" may not know that she also achieved a great success as Katisha in the German version of "The Mikado"—very dissimilar types of character, but each perfect. And now as a concert soloist she has added another triumph in America, for her work at the symphonies was almost flawless, despite the fact that she has not entirely recovered from her recent illness. Possible Mozart intended the "Titus" excerpt to be given more flowingly; but even allowing this to be the case, the wonderful emotional power of the artist, the rich, vibrant tones and the beautiful quality and flexibility of a remarkable voice left nothing to cavil at, and she fairly "carried the house," so grand was the interpretation. In the Schubert "Die Allmacht" the tonal coloring appeared to change, and the great aria was sung with a religious sentiment and fervor which appealed to every ear. The German song probably was specially suited to her temperament, for Mme Schumann sang as if she loved the music. Her interpretations were masterly, and there are few contraltos of the day who are to be ranked equal to this great singer. A feature of her singing was the octave spans given in perfect pitch, a very difficult art in heavy voices. She was rapturously applauded and recalled many times to the stage.

The Berlioz "Carnival" went admirably, the variety of rhythms and subjects being brought out with splendid effect. The strings are to be specially commended for the smoothness with which the rapid ascending and descending scales in the introduction finale were played. The orchestral suite arranged from "Esclarmonde" is an interesting composition full of quaint orchestration and with some rather startling fortissimo passages. There is a beautiful musical idea in the second movement, dreamy and vague, which received a splendid interpretation, and in the third movement the monotonous accompaniment was given with a precision that was most praiseworthy. The percussion adjuncts in the first part seemed at times to lack in promptness, but there was no fault to be found with the vigor of the instrumentalists. The "New World" symphony by Dvorak, which closed the concert, does not wear well, and although its performance was good enough the composition sounded trivial in the main. There appears to be more of the Scot suggested in the themes and orchestration than of the southern plantation.

The celebrated pianist, Ernst Dohnanyi, will be the soloist at this week's concerts, when the following program will be offered: Mozart, overture "Magic Flute;" Dohnanyi, concerto for pianoforte in E minor, first time; Goldmark, scherzo in A major, first time, and Shumann's second symphony.

Boston Journal.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1900.

"ESCLARMONDE."

A Suite From Massenet's Pornographic Opera Performed for the First Time at a Regular Symphony Concert—Schumann-Heink.

(By Philip Hale.)

The program of the second concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Gericke, conductor, was as follows:

Overture, "The Roman Carnival".....Berlioz
Recitative, "Jetzt, Vitellia!" and Rondo, "Nie soll mit Rosen," from "Titus,".....Mozart
"Esclarmonde," Orchestra Suite.....Massenet
(First time at these concerts.)
I. Invocation.
II. The Magic Isle.
III. Hymen.
IV. In the Forest.
(a) Pastoral.
(b) Hunt.
Song, "Die Allmacht".....Schubert
(The accompaniment scored for Orchestra by Louis V. Saar.)
Symphony No. 5, in E minor.....Dvorák

The "Esclarmonde" suite was played about eight years ago at a concert for the benefit of the Symphony Orchestra, under Mr. Nikisch, and I believe Mr. Paderewski played on that occasion. The opera from which this music in part is taken—in part, for Massenet developed certain scenes for concert use—is of an erotic-mystical nature, in which Miss Sibyl Sanderson made her début in Paris as the heroine, a female Lohengrin, who loves a knight, but insists in the most rapturous moment that he shall not see her face nor know her name; and it was said at the time of the production that the composer added two instruments to the orchestra, the Sanderson at one end of the scale and the sarussophone at the other.

The sensuousness of certain pages of this music provoked comment even in Paris. Now sensuousness is the chief characteristic of Massenet when he is at his best. Sensuousness is his strength, or his weakness, as you may be pleased to regard it. His adoring friend, de Soloniére, not only admits this; he boasts that the "parfum yonique" dominates all the work of this composer, and he then dilates on this agreeable subject and uses extraordinary language, which I dare not translate from fear of the Watch and Ward Society.

You find this sensuousness, or better, this carnal feeling permeating "Eve," "Esclarmonde," "Thais," which rank first among the pornographic works of the ingenious composer, the "passionnel," to quote again from Mr. de Soleniére. But in nearly all of Massenet's compositions there is a whiff of the perfume named above.

Of course this sensuousness is made more prominent in the operatic works through text and scenic circumstance. Take, for instance, "Hymen" in the suite. In the concert hall, with the title as a guide to the feeling and the mood, this music seems extremely passionate, yea, erotic, and it is the strongest movement of the suite. But where does this same movement come in the opera? Immediately after the fall of the curtain upon the lovers embracing underneath consenting and approving trees. (Compare with this a superb chapter in Zola's "Fault of the Abbé Modret") Mr. Apthorp says modestly "They disappear beneath the blossoms, while the orchestra expresses the sentiments that thrill them." In the theatre this music is unmistakable, and it is another note to Matthew Arnold's statement that France is given up to worship of the goddess Lubricity.

The suite is interesting without the aid of any too curious gloss. The "Evocation" is a pompous thing with volcanoes of brass and storms of pulsatile instruments, but the purely musical ideas are of little importance, and the movement might be justly called musical campaign oratory—a mighty front, sonorous speech, eagle and bugle in the same sentence. But the second movement is exquisite in harmonic, melodic orchestral thought, and most successful in the establishment of a decided mood. The last movement is made up of a "Pastorale" and "The Hunt." Of these, the former is the more distinguished, and the rustic melody was played delightfully by Mr. Longy. If the "Evocation" suggested at times Meyerbeer and Wagner, rewritten for French use, and if "The Magic Isle" awakened the thought of Berlioz, there was plenty of Massenet in the suite, and the individuality of Massenet is as marked as that of Gounod.

* * *

Mrs. Schumann-Heink sang an aria from Mozart's "Titus" and Schubert's "Die Allmucht," with the accompaniment scored for orchestra by Mr. Saar of New York. She was heard to greater advantage in the aria than in the song. The aria itself is still fresh and calls for a display of varied emotions. The singer had an intelligent conception of the character of the music and she was often successful in exposition. At times she sang well, so far as technic was concerned, and then she would relapse into vocal Germanisms so dear to singers of her race, forcing gutteral tones, sliding up in attack, etc. She spoiled Schubert's song by an extravagant use of the downward and upward portamento, so that a phrase became a slobber and a smear. For this she was rewarded with most hearty applause. Mr. Selmer played effectively the clarinet obbligato to Mozart's aria.

* * *

The concert opened with a remarkably good performance of Berlioz's brilliant overture and closed with Dvorák's Congo-Indian-New York-American symphony, in which are some pretty tunes, gorgeous instrumentation, as well as much that is distinctly meritricious.

* * *

I have received the following letter:

Randolph, Mass.

Mr. Hale:

Through you may I say—"No tickets for standees" may give satisfaction to some of the seat-holders at Symphony Hall on Friday afternoons, but there are others. The absence of faces which have been familiar at the concerts for a decade at least made many homesick to see them again. The writer holds a very fine seat in the parquet, but because he is able to do so is not disturbed when the lobby is filled with young, happy girls and young men who love the music and can only hear it that way. The Hall is a delight to eye and ear. After the draughts are adjusted, no one can find a flaw, but if one has to feel sorry at the time for the hundreds who are hungry for at least. The doors at the entrance give ample chance for people to pass into their seats without using the side doors, if they happen to be crowded. Don't initiate the Hall with a policy of selfishness. "Narrow minds are very exclusive—but it requires broad minds and sympathies to be inclusive."

TICKET HOLDER.

* * *

Some one, who neglected to sign her name, asked me last week, "Why did you not speak more at length about the pieces played at the Symphony concert Saturday?"

Because, fair madam, there was only one new piece played. The Journal is a newspaper, not a musical magazine. Do you wish at this late day a column of pretty or historical or educational talk about Beethoven's Symphony in C minor, with a discussion as to whether Fate knocks at the door in the first measures, or an inquiry as to the way the symphony might sound if it were to be re-orchestrated by, say—Richard Strauss or Mr. DeKoven? Or do you wish entertaining statements of fact concerning the appearance of subsidiary themes, codas and the characteristics of the oboe and bassoon?

No, there are some things taken for granted, accepted, ticketed for many generations, and one of them is the 5th Symphony. And neither the "Euryanthe" overture nor the ballet-music from "Rosamunde" requires over a sentence in the year 1900, unless there be some singularity in the performance.

Madam, the program to which you refer was a stupid one, and eminently unfit, with the exception of the symphony, for the first orchestral concert in the new hall. Now on Oct. 20, Mr. Theodore Thomas and his orchestra gave a concert in Chicago. Oblige me by looking at his program: "Jubilee Overture," Weber; Symphonic variations for orchestra and organ by Georg Schumann (first time); Hungarian Dances (first set), Brahms; "Death and Transfiguration," R. Strauss; overture, "The Flying Dutchman," Wagner; Suite du ballet, "La Belle au Bois Dormant," Tschaikowsky (first time); Symphonic poem, "Mazeppa," Liszt. Last night Mr. Thomas brought out as novelties a Romantic Overture by Thuille and D'Indy's "Wallenstein's Camp." But Thomas is a skillful and catholic maker of programs.

* * *

"Tschaikowsky," by Rosa Newmarch, published by John Lane, New York, is a book of value to the student and of entertainment to the general reader. The author modestly says that she offers her work in the absence of "anything more complete and authoritative." She bases the biographical portion on a volume of personal reminiscences by Kashkin, and she has made selections from Tschaikowsky's collected writings and diary of a tour abroad in 1888. The life is a study of an extremely gifted, sensitive, morbid, lovable man. There was a mystery in his life, and perhaps it is better for us not to know the precise nature of it. Was it connected with his hasty and tragic marriage? He wrote in 1877 to a friend: "Like the old woman in Goburnov's tale, I am sound in one spot while I ache in another. On the whole I am robust; but as regards my soul, there is a wound there that will never heal. I think I am 'homme fini.' * * * What has been can never be again. Something is broken in me; my wings are cut and I shall never fly very high again." Yet think of the work accomplished between that date and that of his death in 1893.

Besides many interesting details concerning the origin and performance of his compositions, there are pages that gratify curiosity concerning his daily life, as the account of his days and nights in a little village to which he retired, and where he would spend months without going to town. How he breakfasted at eight, dined at one simply, the dinner was of two courses; how he walked, no matter how foul the weather. "After tea, he went back to his work until supper was served at 8 o'clock. After supper the servant put a bottle of wine on the table, and was told that he was free until the next morning." Then there was four-hand piano playing, or Kashkin read aloud from Russian authors; or "the composer would write up his diary, of which he possessed many bound volumes, the contents of which were never revealed even to his closest friends. * * * Once he told Kashkin he was spending the evening quite alone at his country house. As his eye fell upon the volumes of his diary he was assailed by a sudden terror lest he might die with no friends at hand, and that some one should pry into these life-secrets. Under the influence of this feeling he immediately ordered his fire to be lit, and burnt every volume before he went to bed." He had little idea of the value of money, and he spoilt all the peasant children by giving them coppers. At 50, his sight began to be affected, and he could no longer read with comfort, but he clung to the solitude of his life near Klin, sat by the fire, and consoled himself with a game of patience. Did he kill himself? I cannot help thinking that he did. He had often meditated suicide in earlier years.

When asked "What are your musical ideals?" he replied, "My ideal is to become a good composer," a sensible answer.

Tschaikowsky spoke of Bach's great choral works as "real classical bores," and Handel he found intolerable. He venerated Beethoven and loved Mozart. He had little sympathy for Chopin, but was influenced by Schumann. He had a warm regard for Rossini and Bellini. He could not endure the music of Brahms, and Mrs. Newmarch well says: "The Brahms cult has immolated too many rising talents as it is; for even those who have the most genuine admiration for the splendid qualities of the master cannot deny that his disciples form the dullest school in ex-ly the orchestration of Berlioz, but put him in the second category of composers, with "a preponderance of fiery poetical imagination over absolute musical creative power." For Saint-Saëns he had a high respect. Wagner did not sway him, and he disliked his "personal vanity and chauvinistic tactics." He thought that Wagner was a symphonist "manqué."

The diary shows Tschaikowsky in most amiable light, although he was never restrained from expressing frankly his opinions wherever he went or whatever the company. His own account of meeting Brahms and Grieg is delightful for honesty and skill in character-drawing.

Strange to say, there is no mention of the fact that Tschaikowsky visited the United States in 1891. There is a list of his compositions; there is a portrait as well as a musical autograph; but, alas, there is no index. The spelling "Tschaikovsky" is adopted; but why not "Chaikovsky"?

* * *

SUNDAY HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. LVIII., NO. 120.

SUNDAY, OCT. 28, 1900.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Massenet's "Esclarmonde" Is Heard in Symphony Hall.

Changes Made by the Composer in Preparing It for Orchestra Purposes—Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" Pleases as Much as Ever—Dohnanyi Sings Next Week.

The programme for the second of this season's concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra in Symphony Hall last evening was:

Overture, "The Roman Carnival".....Berlioz
Recitative and rondo from "Titus".....Mozart
Orchestral suite, "Esclarmonde".....Massenet
Song, "Die Allmacht".....Schubert
Symphony, "From the New World".....Dvorak

The soloist was Madame Schumann-Heink.

The Massenet suite was, on this occasion, heard for the first time at these concerts. The opera was produced in Paris 11 years ago, and Miss Sybil Sanderson made a furor in the title part, chiefly by the vigor with which she emitted and sustained an altissimo G. In arranging the music for orchestra alone, Massenet, as it appears, did not confine himself to rescoring themes from the opera, but enlarged and developed them ambitiously, for concert purposes.

There are four movements, the first a sturdy and massive "Invocation," instrumented with much imposing pompousness; the second depicts the frolics of spirits in a magic isle, and is full of dainty charm in its brilliant and always graceful, piquant and prettily effective orchestration. The themes are, perhaps, conventional, even empty, but the treatment and delicacy of tone color are exceedingly interesting. The third movement, entitled "Hymen," has all of the sensuous, even sensual thrill which the composer of "Tristan and Isolde" exploited with such fiery passionateness in the more amorous scenes of his music dramas, and may be fairly considered a clever example of Frenchified Wagner. The finale is called "In the Forest," and opens with a tender and flowing pastoral, which merges into vigorous hunting music, which culminates in a tremendous and stirring coda.

The most attractive features of the suite are the splendor, the variety and the clean-cut brilliancy of its tone color. Taken altogether, it is perhaps the best example of Massenet's mastery of modern orchestral resources and of his skill in a serious direction that has been heard here. Musically considered, it is not of much value, and shows but little of individuality in either style or invention; and it may be considered, on the whole, as an interesting evidence of decided skill in the large treatment of small subjects; as dazzling insignificance and majestic emptiness, but it holds the attention on a first hearing by the richness, and, at times, the splendor of its instrumental effects.

That it would improve on a more familiar acquaintance is not quite certain. It was beautifully read and played, especially the scene in the magic isle, which is very exacting on the wood wind, and in which that element in the noble orchestra acquitted itself at its very best—which means as near perfection as it is possible to attain.

The always delightful Berlioz overture has never had a more animated, effective and satisfying interpretation here than was accorded it on this occasion at the hands of Mr. Gericke and his players, and the performance richly deserved the stirring round of applause that rewarded it. There is nothing new to be said of the Dvorak symphony, even of the composer's keen appreciation of the "Scotch snap," so frequently and enthusiastically discussed of Mr. Krehbiel.

The Mozart aria, which has not been sung here in many years, sounded wonderfully fresh. The noble recitative is among the best of the fine efforts in kind of which the composer gave so many examples, and it was a genuine pleasure to listen to the lovely rondo again. Mme. Heink declaimed the recitative with impressive breadth of style and dramatic emphasis, and there were dignity and large artistic sentiment in her interpretation of the rondo. Vocally, there were technical shortcomings and something overmuch of an upward scoop of the voice, but the effort, as a whole, was strikingly sincere, thoughtful and musicianly in spirit, and fairly won the stormy applause and the two vigorous recalls that it received.

The Schubret song was massively and imposingly declaimed, but the interpretation would have gained had it been marked by a larger simplicity instead of the elaborate overloading of sugary expressiveness to which it was subjected. Here again the artist carried her audience with her, and was rewarded with its heartiest plaudits and several as demonstrative recalls. By the way, it would be interesting to know why the text of the Mozart aria was printed in the programme book in German, when the artist sang it in the Italian to which it was composed.

The programme for the next concert is: Overture, "The Magic Flute," Mozart; concerto for the pianoforte, Dohnanyi (first time); Scherzo in A major, op. 45, Goldmark (first time), and symphony, No. 2, Schumann. The soloist is to be Mr. Ernest Dohnanyi.

At the first Symphony concert, Saturday night a week ago, the musicians' stands were each decorated with a big flower, with two large blooms on those where two men sat. Mr. Gericke's stand had a cluster of variegated chrysanthemums tied with white satin ribbons. With the exception of the formal opening of the hall, it was the largest audience which has been gathered there, and, with the flower-decked platform, the perfect system of lighting, the rich coloring and the well-dressed crowd, the scene was brilliant in the extreme. Some of those whom we noted in their season seats were Mme. Agassiz, with her daughter, Mrs. Henry L. Higginson; Mr. Higginson, Mrs. Henry M. Whitney and her daughters, Mr. and Mrs. Leverett Tuckerman, Mr. and Mrs. Robert M. Cushing, Miss Saltonstall, Mr. John P. Lyman, Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Cummings, Mrs. John L. Gardner, Mr. George Proctor, Mr. and Mrs. Charles K. Cummings, Mr. and Mrs. Apthorp, Mr. and Mrs. Gardner Bullard, Mr. and Mrs. J. Montgomery Sears, Mr. Eugene Greenleaf, Mr. Robert Anderson, Mr. S. L. Thorndike, Mr. and Mrs. Lang, Mrs. Gericke, Dr. Wilbur Parker, Miss Littlehale, Mr. and Mrs. John McLennan, Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Estabrook, Dr. and Mrs. William T. Councilman, Miss Lena Little, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Foote, Mrs. S. B. Field, Mr. and Mrs. William J. Winch, Mrs. F. R. Comee, Mr. Homer Norris, Miss Aagot Lunde, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Cotton, Mr. T. C. Cummings and Miss Cummings, Mr. and Mrs. George J. Putnam, Mrs. Silsbee, Mrs. A. A. Hasserick, Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Farnsworth, Mr. Winthrop Coffin, Mr. J. Foster White, Herr Carl Armbruster, Miss Anna Miller Wood and Mr. William R. Hallett and Miss Hallett.

The second Symphony rehearsal Friday afternoon was a larger crush than the first, naturally, as so many more people are back in town. Mme. Schumann-Heink also was an additional attraction. Her reception was exceedingly cordial, and she was recalled again and again after her two appearances. She is a noble-looking woman, and was particularly well gowned in a Vienna costume of pale green, embroidered muslin, much of the skirt and bodice done with insertions and runnings of narrow black velvet. Her London toque was of silver spangled tulle, with white plumes. On the corsage was worn the jewel which the Queen gave her after her singing at Windsor this summer. Last night the prima donna wore a gorgeous gown of yellow satin heavily done in silver, the long train falling from the shoulder. It was a costume which Mme. Schumann-Heink had worn at the Berlin court, when she last appeared there. She was again in superb voice, and captivated every one anew. It is interesting in this connection to know that Mme. Schumann-Heink has eight children, and that the youngest, just 2 years old and born in America, is named George Washington! They are all in Germany, in care of the two grandmothers. Some of the season ticket holders in their seats whom we had not noticed on the previous Friday were Mr. and Mrs. William A. Burnham, Mr. Francis Bartlett, Mrs. Henry C. Weston, the venerable Mrs. John Lowell, Mrs. Whitman and Mrs. Bell, who have seats together in the balcony; Dr. and Mrs. Hall Curtis and Mrs. R. C. Heaton, J. Templeman Coolidge, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. George Nickerson, Mrs. Albert Nickerson, Mr. C. F. Sprague, who was with Mr. Franz Zerrahn, Mrs. Larz Anderson, Mrs. Seth Sprague and Miss Mary Hooper, Mr. Edward Jackson, Mrs. James Blake, Mrs. Roger Allen, Mr. and Mrs. Lyman Greenleaf, Mr. and Mrs. George B. Inches, Mr. Gaugengigl, Mrs. John H. Rice, the Rev. Fr. Bodfish, Mrs. William P. Graves, Mrs. Henry S. Howe and Miss Susan Howe, Mrs. W. W. Swan, Mr. Edward Jackson, Mrs. J. B. Forsyth, Mrs. Montgomery Sears and Mr. Charles Sturgis.

Tea was served after the rehearsal in Mr. Gericke's room, which is a beautiful apartment in which a grand piano has a conspicuous place, and where a number of the members of the orchestra met Mme. Schumann-Heink informally.

...Daily Advertiser
Established 1813.
The Official Paper of the State.
The Official Paper of the City.

MONDAY MORNING, OCT. 29, 1900.

The second symphony concert in the Cave of the Winds began with great joviality by presenting Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" overture in the most brilliant manner imaginable. The rich tone-coloring of this work lost very little in the magnificent hall. Spite of the fact that we have considered the acoustical excellence of the edifice settled, one point may still be borne in mind; the finest general result yet achieved in Symphony Hall (an almost flawless effect) was won at the Handel and Haydn concert. Now at that concert the orchestra was brought well forward, and even some of the choristers were placed well to the front.

It is just possible that an extension of the stage a trifle further into the hall and a corresponding advance of the orchestra might hit upon a nodal point that would increase the power of the tones. At all events, a careful watching of different concerts and a comparison of their results may lead to still better resonance.

The English horn had a field night of it, for it appeared prominently in almost every number; its work in the Berlioz overture and in the Dvorak symphony calls for hearty commendation; it rang out beautifully, and its tone-color of dreamy melancholy was exquisitely preserved. Madame Schumann-Heink was the soloist, and all traces of her recent cold have disappeared.

We did not think her especially fortunate in her choice of numbers. The Mozart's aria from "Titus"—"Non piu di fiori"—is worthy music, but has been crowded aside by many better works, even from the same pen, and there seems no very valid reason for its resuscitation. Mme. Schumann-Heink sang it with broad and noble expression, only giving a pinched tone in the higher pianissimo passages. There is more of "bel canto" in the aria than suits to a highly dramatic singer of the Teutonic school.

Schubert's "Die Allmacht" was on this occasion swelled out to orchestral proportions, the accompaniment being discreetly scored by Mr. Louis V. Saar. In its majestic portions the singer was great, but less so in the tender contrast. If she desired to give Schubert with orchestral support we would have preferred "Aufenthalt" as better suited to her intensely dramatic vein. But both numbers won a triumph with the audience and a series of enthusiastic recalls followed each.

It was interesting to follow the clarinet obbligato, which was excellently played by Mr. A. Selmer. The part was originally written for Mozart's favorite instrument, the basset-horn. Although the basset-horn is spoken of as a tenor clarinet, it had a tone-quality quite its own; its sharp bends gave to it a peculiarly funereal character in the deeper register, and even in its upper notes it had the nasal quality of grief. Mozart used it more frequently, and more graphically, than any other classical composer; passages in the Requiem, the Masonic Funeral music, and in this air of sorrow, show how well he appreciated the instrument; Mendelssohn combined it with clarinet (proving that he did not consider the tone-colors the same), and the grandfather of our great pianist, Carl Baermann, was a skilful performer upon the instrument. It might be worth the while of some good clarinettist to study this instrument and give back to the modern concert-room the exact effects intended by some of the old writers.

The novelty of the concert was the "Esclarmonde" Suite, evolved by Massenet from his opera of the same name. It must be confessed that the Suite is far less boring than the opera, which is lengthy beyond compare. The reviewer has a vivid recollection of going to hear this work in company with the composer, and recalls his remarks about the employment of the Sarussophone instead of the contrabassoon. "It requires less powerful lungs to blow it; it is surer in intonation; and it is approximately the same tone-color as the contrabassoon," said he. The opera succeeded as much on account of Sybil Sanderson and her "Tour d'Eiffel note," (as the Parisians called her G in altissimo,) as for any musical reason. The writer has an ecstatic letter from Massenet as to the manner in which this American beauty led the work to triumph. Massenet out-Goldmarks Goldmark in his sensuous effects; at times he becomes erotic in a reprehensible degree, and the "Hymen" number used to call up blushes when it was played in connection with the opera, in Paris. The Tristan and Isolde of the Boulevards left very little to the imagination. The picture of the Magic Isle was a dainty bit of musical confectionery which was sure to win applause, and deserved it,—in its way.

The motto of almost every modern French composer is, —"When in doubt, play Oboe"; and this Massenet does most charmingly in the Pastorale of the fourth movement; and lucky is the composer who has M. Longy to play his oboe passages; they were very effective on this occasion. The hunting scene, which ended the Suite, was an excellent example of figure development. We believe the game that they hunted was a "leit-motif," and they chased it through all the 24 keys without bagging it. The Suite was interesting both in its ideas, its development, and above all in its orchestration. Why not add one of Massenet's less per-fervid Suites to the programmes, and some day give his daintily idyllic "Dimanche au Village"?

The concert ended with Dvorak's American Symphony. There is little to say, at this late day, about this work. The first and last movements do not seem to wear as well as the rest of the symphony. One can distort Shakespeare into —"Oh Sambo! Sambo! How art thou Dvorakized!"—for this negro certainly dwells by the poet's sea-coast in Bohemia, and has undergone a sea-change from his plantation existence. It was a worthy thing of Dvorak, while dwelling among us, to show what might be evolved from our own music, but we might not to forget that Mr. G. W. Chadwick had done something of this sort in symphony long before the Bohemian

The slow melancholy of the [illegible] movement is as exquisite as ever, and is the finest touch of the symphony. Those who say that this is not a true picture of the plantation should hear the plaintive sorrow of "Oh, Death!" as sung by the Georgia darkey (a field-hand version of Schubert's "Tod und das Maedchen," it might be called) or "I was called by de Lightin'" as the Carolina plantations have it.

The Scherzo is not so graphic, but its melodic march is none the less effective.

In the finale we get more of classical development than of graphic character; the hands are of Esau, but the voice is of Jacob; the figures may be ours, but the treatment is not. But, all said and done, we ought to hear this symphony with some regularity as we have at least a part ownership in it. At the same time a couple of Chadwick movements are also deserving of recurring performance if we are intent upon the study of the evolution of our themes and native thoughts.

Louis C. Elson.

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1900

THE APPLAUDING AT ORATORIOS

We are destined to have every phase of every performance at the new Symphony Hall thoroughly canvassed before we are allowed to settle down and enjoy in good comfortable fashion the feasts the managers prepare. The last topic to come up for discussion by some serious-minded folk (not to the Boston manner born, surely) is the applause offered to the performers at the giving of an oratorio. The complaint made is based upon a line of reasoning which represents an oratorio as a religious work, frequently or usually sung on Sunday, and therefore not to be interrupted by the profane hand-clapping of admiring listeners to whom its artistic setting is the main question.

It is thought by the correspondent whose complaining is before us, that the ears of the singers, as well as those of some of the thoughtful listeners, must be rasped by this handclapping. This may be true of a few of the listeners, but we fail to be able to believe that the performers think applause misplaced—ever! They are not fond of singing a whole evening through to a mass of unresponsiveness and when in a huge audience it is of course impossible to see by the expression of faces that their work is appreciated, there is nothing left by way of communicating the fact that admiration and sympathy have been stirred but to clap the hands—a conventional traditional way of showing favor. Perhaps some day when all sorts of wireless means of communication are universal a more subtle means will be hit upon for conveying the good-will of an audience, but up to date hand-clapping is the best as well as the only medium known to us.

Puritan Boston has always applauded its oratorios, and doubtless Boston always will. The old Puritans of the English Commonwealth who abolished theatres applauded preaching by pounding with sword and musket on the ground. Because an oratorio is a religious work is no reason for hushed restraint of natural expression of delight in it. Its religiousness is a part of its artistic beauty, often no doubt the main part, and the majority of those who love and admire oratorios and appreciate the opportunity whenever it occurs to hear one will not second such an accusation as that loud and ready applause at frequent intervals is destructive to the high religious sentiment that is beneath the keenest artistic perception of the beauties in this form of musical composition.

A TREAT FOR ALL

To the Editor of the Transcript:

In listening to the delightful strains of the Symphony Orchestra on Friday afternoon, the harmony of which was constantly marred by the coughing of numberless people in the audience, it occurred to me to suggest to the owners of season tickets that it would be such a kindly and courteous act to loan our tickets on days of troublesome coughing to some friend who would esteem it such a happy opportunity (and who has not such friends?), thereby giving a musical treat, not only to our immediate friends, but to the whole audience as well.

A. B. C.

HOW IT WOULD BE IN EUROPE

To the Editor of the Transcript:

With the ample cloakrooms provided at Symphony Hall it seems quite unnecessary and a pity that the good effect of the balconies should be marred, as they were at the rehearsal yesterday, by having garments thrown over them. Of course, in Europe it would be prohibited. It seems to me the evil should be nipped in the bud.

DEVOTED

Journal WHERE MELODY REIGNS.

GREAT ORGAN IN THE NEW SYMPHONY HALL.

The pipes fill the space at the back of the stage and by means of the portable keyboard with long cable attachment, seen on the front of the stage, the organist may sit anywhere within 100 feet of the instrument.

[3]

...Hall: Boston Symphony Orchestra

At the second symphony concert, in Symphony Hall last Saturday evening, the programme was as follows:

Berlioz: Overture, "Le Carnaval romain," opus 9.
Mozart: Recitative, "Ecco il punto," and Rondo, "Non piu di fiori," from "La Clemenza di Tito."
Massenet: "Esclarmonde," Orchestral Suite. (First time at these concerts.)
Schubert: Song, "Die Allmacht," opus 79, No. 2. (The accompaniment scored by Louis V. Saar.)
Dvorak: Symphony No. 5, in E minor, "From the New World," opus 95.

Mme. Schumann-Heink was the singer.

The Berlioz overture was, unluckily, not for me; I got to the hall in time to be shut out. The Elevated Railway sometimes offers problems that are not to be solved in a jiffy.

Massenet's "Esclarmonde" suite was played here some years ago under Mr. Nikisch, at an extra concert for the benefit of the orchestra. But not a note of it remained in my memory, and it was all new to me last evening, save the "Hyménée" movement, which I had heard played separately under Colonne at Aix-les-Bains. The suite is brilliantly written, entertaining music; one even finds, now and then, a moment of vivid picturesqueness in it. It seemed, though, last evening, as if it must be so wedded, heart and soul, to the stage as to suffer nightly from divorce. The most genuine thing in it seems to be the "Hyménée;" here you feel that the composer takes himself seriously. The rest is mere cleverness. The suite was beautifully played, only the "Hyménée" did not make quite the effect I had expected of it; Colonne took it more realistically, and made more of the persistent rhythm in the accompaniment.

Dvorak's "Spillville" symphony wears better and better; it holds its own more firmly than either the first, in D major, or the second, in D minor. To be sure, Dvorak never wrote another phrase to compare with the opening ten measures of his D major symphony; but one phrase does not make a symphony, and this "From the New World" holds itself generally on a higher plane than the two others, in point of thematic material, development and poetry of conception. It was splendedly played and produced a very beautiful effect.

Mozart's "Non piu di fiori" came back as an old, all-but forgotten, friend. It seems an age since it was last sung here. I had forgotten so much of it that it came as a thorough surprise to find in the closing rondo the prototype of the last movements of Beethoven's "Ah! perfido," and Mendelssohn's "Infelice!" It stands on the dividing line between Mozart's academic showpieces and his great arias, inclining, however, more to the latter than to the former. Mme. Schumann-Heink sang it in many ways admirably. The little display of staccato coloratura toward the end was rather naif-sounding; but, like several of her countrymen and countrywomen, Mme. Schumann-Heink is led into good melodic phrasing by sheer force of temperament, and has a native artistic feeling that more than once covers up deficiences in technique. Mr. Selmer played the obligato excellently well; what was undeniably lacking in the effect was due to the best register of the bassett-horn being represented by a comparatively weak and ineffective register of the clarinet; and the part was written for bassett-horn.

Whether or not Mr. Saar made the mistake of his life in scoring the accompaniment to Schubert's "Allmacht" depends upon his past and future efforts; but that he made a great mistake is clear enough. He has so pulled Schubert's simple accompaniment to pieces as to make a good deal of the song hardly recognizable. Worst of all, his accompaniment kills the voice-part; you could not tell whether Mme. Schumann-Heink sang it well or ill; it surely made no effect. The singer was warmly received, and heartily applauded after both her selections.

The next programme is: Mozart, overture to "Die Zauber flöte;" Dohnanyi, concerto for pianoforte, in E minor (first time in Boston); Goldmark, Scherzo in A major, opus 45 (first time in Boston); Schumann, Symphony No. 2, in C major, opus 61. Mr. Ernst von Dohnanyi will be the pianist.

W. F. A.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CVIII, NO. 121.

MONDAY, OCT. 29, 1900.

LITTLE GIRLS LACHRYMOSE.

Box Office People Said They Stood for Speculators.

Distressing Scene at Symphony Hall This Morning — But the Ticket Seller Was Sure He Made No Mistake, and Explained Why He Always Had to Be Suspicious.

When the box office at Symphony Hall was opened at 8:30 this morning for the weekly distribution of "rush" seat tickets for the Friday rehearsals of the Symphony orchestra, the line of expectant buyers extended along Massachusetts avenue and around the corner of Huntington avenue, nearly as far as the Children's Hospital. The crowd hugged the walls of the building, and waited patiently in the mist and rain. Each person was permitted to buy no more than four tickets, at 25 cents each, so as to prevent the house being gobbled up by speculators. Under this arrangement the tickets for the first rehearsal last week were all disposed of long before the lower end of the line reached the box office. Two hundred persons were turned away, but when some of these were offered tickets by speculators on the sidewalk at prices that were liberal advances over the original, there was a good deal of disgust.

This morning the sale had no sooner begun than the monotony of the long wait was relieved for those in line by a flutter of excitement caused by two girls, looking to be about 16 years old, who came bursting out of the hall entrance, rubbing their eyes and sobbing hysterically. The crowd gave instant attention, and the weeping maidens had ample opportunity to pour their troubles into sympathetic ears. One of them, who appeared a trifle more wrought up than the other, related her tale of woe, between hiccoughs, something after this fashion:

"I-am-just-about-frozen-to-death-ooh-ooh-ooh - and-I've- been-waiting-here-in-the-c-c-c-old - and-rain-for-hours-at-the-head-of-the-line-and-now-they-won't-sell me-the-tickets-oohohhh!"

The other girl contented herself with sticking her fists into her eyes and giving vent to more moderate expressions of disappointment.

Then a woman of maturer years came along. She evidently belonged to the same party, but she wasn't quite so excited. Somehow she seemed to be taking her disappointment with considerable philosophy. When some one asked her what the matter was, she replied:

"Why, they turned away the first six people in line and wouldn't sell us tickets. I don't know why, but they said we represented speculators."

"The idea!" exclaimed a little woman in a gray hat with a red feather. "The idea! How can they tell who's a speculator and who isn't? I should like to know what right they've got to refuse to sell a ticket just because they suspect anything like that. I declare, it's an outrage."

"Well," sputtered another, "I don't blame 'em a bit. If they're in line for the speculators, they ought to be turned away. I don't believe the office would refuse to sell tickets unless they had good reason to suspect a person. I haven't got any sympathy for those people at all."

One of the men in line, as he came up toward the ticket window, inquired the cause of the commotion.

"Well," replied the head usher, with emphasis, "last week we caught speculators selling these tickets at $1 and $1.50 apiece, and we propose to put a stop to it if possible. We are not going to let the tickets get into their hands any more if we can help it."

"What!" exclaimed the inquirer; "are those girls and women at the head of the line in the interest of speculators?"

The head usher smiled the smile of a man of the world, and looked at his questioner as if he pitied him for his gullelessness. Then he answered sadly and as if he were really touched with sorrow by the contemplation that such a state of affairs could exist.

"That's just it. We've had the best of reasons for believing that the speculators have been engaging young girls to come here early in the morning and stand in line, so as to be on hand when the office opens and buy tickets which are afterward resold, and we propose to stop it if possible."

"Don't you thing it might not always be wise to be so suspicious?" inquired a tender-hearted little lady in a gray Alpine hat, with a drab ribbon.

The ticket seller laughed. It was a polite laugh, but it sounded like the laugh of a man who is very sure that he never makes a mistake oftener than once in a thousand times in reading human nature.

"That's just about the average," he said. "We always have to be suspicious."

And Manager Fred Comee, who stood by, smiled, too, and explained suavely that they had to be constantly on the lookout for the tricks of the sidewalk gentry, in the effort to protect bona fide patrons.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1900.

BOSTON, October 28, 1900.

The program of the second concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Gericke, conductor, was as follows:

Overture, The Roman Carnival.....Berlioz
Recitative, Jetzt, Vitellia! and Rondo, Nie soll mit Rosen, from Titus.....Mozart
Orchestra Suite, Esclarmonde.....Massenet
(First time at these concerts.)
Song, Die Allmacht.....Schubert
(The accompaniment scored for orchestra by Louis V. Saar.)
Symphony No. 5, in E minor.....Dvorák

The "Esclarmonde" Suite was played about eight years ago at a concert for the benefit of the Symphony Orchestra, under Mr. Nikisch, and I believe Mr. Paderewski played on that occasion. The opera from which this music in part is taken—in part, for Massenet developed certain scenes for concert use—is of an erotic-mystical nature, in which Miss Sibyl Sanderson made her début in Paris as the heroine, a female Lohengrin, who loves a knight, but insists in the most rapturous moment that he shall not see her face nor know her name, and it was said at the time of the production that the composer added two instruments to the orchestra, the Sanderson at one end of the scale and the sarussophone at the other.

The sensuousness of certain pages of this music provoked comment even in Paris. Now sensuousness is the chief characteristic of Massenet when he is at his best. Sensuousness is his strength, or his weakness, as you may be pleased to regard it. His adoring friend, De Solonière, not only admits this; he boasts that the "parfum yonique" dominates all the work of this composer, and then he dilates on this agreeable subject and uses extraordinary language, which I dare not translate from fear of the Watch and Ward Society.

You find this sensuousness, or better, this carnal feeling permeating "Eve," "Esclarmonde," "Thais," which rank first among the pornographic works of the ingenious composer, the "passionnel," to quote again from Mr. De Solenière. But in nearly all of Massenet's compositions there is a whiff of the perfume named above.

Of course this sensuousness is made more prominent in the operatic works through text and scenic circumstance. Take, for instance, "Hymen" in the suite. In the concert hall, with the title as a guide to the feeling and the mood, this music seems extremely passionate, yea, erotic, and it is the strongest movement of the suite. But where does this same movement come in the opera? Immediately after the fall of the curtain upon the lovers embracing underneath consenting and approving trees. (Compare with this a superb chapter in Zola's "Fault of the Abbé Modret.") Mr. Apthorp says modestly: "They disappear beneath the blossoms, while the orchestra expresses the sentiments that thrill them." In the theatre this music is unmistakable, and it is another note to Matthew Arnold's statement that France is given up to worship of the goddess Lubricity.

The suite is interesting without the aid of any too curious gloss. The "Evocation" is a pompous thing, with volcanoes of brass and storms of pulsatile instruments, but the purely musical ideas are of little importance, and the movement might be justly called musical campaign oratory—a mighty front, sonorous speech, eagle and bugle in the same sentence. But the second movement is exquisite in harmonic, melodic orchestral thought, and most successful in the establishment of a decided mood. The last movement is made up of a "Pastorale" and "The Hunt." Of these the former is the more distinguished, and the rustic melody was played delightfully by Mr. Longy. If the "Evocation" suggested at times Meyerbeer and Wagner, rewritten for French use, and if "The Magic Isle" awakened the thought of Berlioz, there was plenty of Massenet in the suite, and the individuality of Massenet is as marked as that of Gounod.

Mrs. Schumann-Heink sang an aria from Mozart's "Titus" and Schubert's "Die Allmacht," with the accompaniment scored for orchestra by Mr. Saar, of New York. She was heard to greater advantage in the aria than in the song. The aria itself is still fresh and calls for a display of varied emotions. The singer had an intelligent conception of the character of the music and she was often successful in exposition. At times she sang well, so far as technic was concerned, and then she would relapse into vocal Germanisms so dear to singers of her race, forcing gutteral tones, sliding up in attack, &c. She spoiled Schubert's song by an extravagant use of the downward and upward portamento, so that a phrase became a slobber and a smear. For this she was rewarded with most hearty applause. Mr. Selmer played effectively the clarinet obligato to Mozart's aria.

The concert opened with a remarkably good performance of Berlioz's brilliant overture and closed with Dvorák's Congo-Indian-New York-American Symphony, in which are some pretty tunes, gorgeous instrumentation, as well as much that is distinctly meretricious.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Carnegie Hall, New York.

Programs.

THURSDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 8.

Overture, The Roman Carnival, op. 9.....Berlioz
Concerto for piano, in E minor.....Dohnányi
Scherzo, in A major, op. 45.....Carl Goldmark
(First time.)
Symphony No. 5, in E minor, From the New World, op. 95.....Dvorák
Soloist, Ernst Dohnányi.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 10.

Overture to Euryanthe.....Weber
Aria, Traum König.....Raff
Suite, Esclarmonde.....Massenet
Adriane's Aria, from Rienzi.....Wagner
Symphony No. 5, C minor, op. 67.....Beethoven
Soloist, Gertrude May Stein.

There will always be an intermission of ten minutes before the symphony. The soloists this season will be Aus der Ohe, Dohnányi, Godowsky, Kneisel, Loeffler and Hugo Becker.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CVIII, NO. 125.

FRIDAY, NOV. 2, 1900.

THE SYMPHONY IN CAMBRIDGE.

The first of the Cambridge concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra was given in Sanders Theatre last evening. A large audience was in attendance. The programme opened with the overture, "The Roman Carnival," op. 9. The second number was the aria, "Traum Konig," following which was rendered an orchestral suite, "Esclarmonde." The next rendition was Adriane's aria, from "Rienzi." The closing selection was the popular Symphony No. 5, in C minor, op. 67. Miss Gertrude May Stein was well received as the soloist of the evening. The next concert will be given on Nov. 22.

Boston Journal.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1900.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play at the Yale bicentennial celebration, which will begin Oct. 29, 1901. There will be another opportunity for Brahms's dreary "Academic" overture.

Boston Transcript

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 1900

The first of the Cambridge concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given in Sanders Theatre last evening, before a large audience. Miss Gertrude May Stein was the soloist. The next concert will be given Nov. 22.

"This Country, with its Institutions, Belongs to the People who Inhabit It."

BOSTON EVENING RECORD.

Symphony hall is handsome, but not so pretty that it has to be kept in a glass cage or opened only to kid glove shows, apparently. I notice that the republican club will receive its election returns there, in the usual cloud of smoke, no doubt.

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1900

Symphony Hall: Boston Symphony Orchestra

At the second symphony concert, in Symphony Hall last Saturday evening, the programme was as follows:

Berlioz: Overture, "Le Carnaval romain," opus 9.
Mozart: Recitative, "Ecco il punto," and Rondo, "Non più di fiori," from "La Clemenza di Tito."
Massenet: "Esclarmonde," Orchestral Suite. (First time at these concerts.)
Schubert: Song, "Die Allmacht," opus 79, No. 2. (The accompaniment scored by Louis V. Saar.)
Dvorak: Symphony No. 5, in E minor, "From the New World," opus 95.

Mme. Schumann-Heink was the singer.

The Berlioz overture was, unluckily, not for me; I got to the hall in time to be shut out. The Elevated Railway sometimes offers problems that are not to be solved in a jiffy.

Massenet's "Esclarmonde" suite was played here some years ago under Mr. Nikisch, at an extra concert for the benefit of the orchestra. But not a note of it remained in my memory, and it was all new to me last evening, save the "Hyménée movement, which I had heard played separately under Colonne at Aix-les-Bains. The suite is brilliantly written, entertaining music; one even finds, now and then, a moment of vivid picturesqueness in it. It seemed, though, last evening, as if it must be so wedded, heart and soul, to the stage as to suffer nightly from divorce. The most genuine thing in it seems to be the "Hyménée;" here you feel that the composer takes himself seriously. The rest is mere cleverness. The suite was beautifully played, only the "Hyménée" did not make quite the effect I had expected of it; Colonne took it more realistically, and made more of the persistent rhythm in the accompaniment.

Dvorak's "Spillville" symphony wears better and better; it holds its own more firmly than either the first, in D major, or the second, in D minor. To be sure, Dvorak never wrote another phrase to compare with the opening ten measures of his D major symphony; but one phrase does not make a symphony, and this "From the New World" holds itself generally on a higher plane than the two others, in point of thematic material, development and poetry of conception. It was splendedly played and produced a very beautiful effect.

Mozart's "Non più di fiori" came back as an old, all-but forgotten, friend. It seems an age since it was last sung here. I had gorgotten so much of it that it came as a thorough surprise to find in the closing rondo the prototype of the last movements of Beethoven's "Ah! perfido," and Mendelssohn's "Infelice!" It stands on the dividing line between Mozart's academic showpieces and his great arias, inclining, however, more to the latter than to the former. Mme. Schumann-Heink sang it in many ways admirably. The little display of staccato coloratura toward the end was rather naif-sounding; but, like several of her countrymen and countrywomen, Mme. Schumann-Heink is led into good melodic phrasing by sheer force of temperament, and has a native artistic feeling that more than once covers up deficiences in technique. Mr. Selmer played the obbligato excellently well; what was undeniably lacking in the effect was due to the best register of the bassett-horn being represented by a comparatively weak and ineffective register of the clarinet; and the part was written for bassett-horn.

Whether or not Mr. Saar made the mistake of his life in scoring the accompaniment to Schubert's "Allmacht" depends upon his past and future efforts; but that he made a great mistake is clear enough. He has so pulled Schubert's simple accompaniment to pieces as to make a good deal of the song hardly recognizable. Worst of all, his accompaniment kills the voice-part; you could not tell whether Mme. Schumann-Heink sang it well or ill; it surely made no effect. The singer was warmly received, and heartily applauded after both her selections.

The next programme is: Mozart, overture to "Die Zauber flöte;" Dohnanyi, concerto for pianoforte, in E minor (first time in Boston); Goldmark, Scherzo in A major, opus 45 (first time in Boston); Schumann, symphony No. 2, in C major, opus 61. Mr. Ernst von Dohnanyi will be the pianist.

W. F. A.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CVIII., NO. 121.

MONDAY, OCT. 29, 1900.

LITTLE GIRLS LACHRYMOSE.

Box Office People Said They Stood for Speculators.

Distressing Scene at Symphony Hall This Morning — But the Ticket Seller Was Sure He Made No Mistake, and Explained Why He Always Had to Be Suspicious.

When the box office at Symphony Hall was opened at 8:30 this morning for the weekly distribution of "rush" seat tickets for the Friday rehearsals of the Symphony orchestra, the line of expectant buyers extended along Massachusetts avenue and around the corner of Huntington avenue, nearly as far as the Children's Hospital. The crowd hugged the walls of the building, and waited patiently in the mist and rain. Each person was permitted to buy no more than four tickets, at 25 cents each, so as to prevent the house being gobbled up by speculators. Under this arrangement the tickets for the first rehearsal last week were all disposed of long before the lower end of the line reached the box office. Two hundred persons were turned away, but when some of these were offered tickets by speculators on the sidewalk at prices that were liberal advances over the original, there was a good deal of disgust.

This morning the sale had no sooner begun than the monotony of the long wait was relieved for those in line by a flutter of excitement caused by two girls, looking to be about 16 years old, who came bursting out of the hall entrance, rubbing their eyes and sobbing hysterically. The crowd gave instant attention, and the weeping maidens had ample opportunity to pour their troubles into sympathetic ears. One of them, who appeared a trifle more wrought up than the other, related her tale of woe, between hiccoughs, something after this fashion:

"I-am-just-about-frozen-to-death-oohooh-ooh - and-I've-been-waiting-here-in-the-c-c-c-old - and-rain-for-hours-at-the-head-of-the-line-and-now-they-won't-sell me-the-tickets-oohohh!"

The other girl contented herself with sticking her fists into her eyes and giving vent to more moderate expressions of disappointment.

Then a woman of maturer years came along. She evidently belonged to the same party, but she wasn't quite so excited. Somehow she seemed to be taking her disappointment with considerable philosophy. When some one asked her what the matter was, she replied:

"Why, they turned away the first six people in line and wouldn't sell us tickets. I don't know why, but they said we represented speculators."

"The idea!" exclaimed a little woman in a gray hat with a red feather. "The idea! How can they tell who's a speculator and who isn't? I should like to know what right they've got to refuse to sell a ticket just because they suspect anything like that. I declare, it's an outrage."

"Well," sputtered another, "I don't blame 'em a bit. If they're in line for the speculators, they ought to be turned away. I don't believe the office would refuse to sell tickets unless they had good reason to suspect a person. I haven't got any sympathy for those people at all."

One of the men in line, as he came up toward the ticket window, inquired the cause of the commotion.

"Well," replied the head usher, with emphasis, "last week we caught speculators selling these tickets at $1 and $1.50 apiece, and we propose to put a stop to it if possible. We are not going to let the tickets get into their hands any more if we can help it."

"What!" exclaimed the inquirer; "are those girls and women at the head of the line in the interest of speculators?"

The head usher smiled the smile of a man of the world, and looked at his questioner as if he pitied him for his guilelessness. Then he answered sadly and as if he were really touched with sorrow by the contemplation that such a state of affairs could exist.

"That's just it. We've had the best of reasons for believing that the speculators have been engaging young girls to come here early in the morning and stand in line, so as to be on hand when the office opens and buy tickets which are afterward resold, and we propose to stop it if possible."

"Don't you thing it might not always be wise to be so suspicious?" inquired a tender-hearted little lady in a gray Alpine hat, with a drab ribbon.

The ticket seller laughed. It was a polite laugh, but it sounded like the laugh of a man who is very sure that he never makes a mistake oftener than once in a thousand times in reading human nature.

"That's just about the average," he said. "We always have to be suspicious."

And Manager Fred Comee, who stood by, smiled, too, and explained suavely that they had to be constantly on the lookout for the tricks of the sidewalk gentry, in the effort to protect bona fide patrons.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1900.

BOSTON, October 28, 1900.

The program of the second concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Gericke, conductor, was as follows:

Overture, The Roman Carnival.....Berlioz
Recitative, Jetzt, Vitellia! and Rondo, Nie soll mit Rosen, from Titus.....Mozart
Orchestra Suite, Esclarmonde.....Massenet
(First time at these concerts.)
Song, Die Allmacht.....Schubert
(The accompaniment scored for orchestra by Louis V. Saar.)
Symphony No. 5, in E minor.....Dvorák

The "Esclarmonde" Suite was played about eight years ago at a concert for the benefit of the Symphony Orchestra, under Mr. Nikisch, and I believe Mr. Paderewski played on that occasion. The opera from which this music in part is taken—in part, for Massenet developed certain scenes for concert use—is of an erotic-mystical nature, in which Miss Sibyl Sanderson made her début in Paris as the heroine, a female Lohengrin, who loves a knight, but insists in the most rapturous moment that he shall not see her face nor know her name, and it was said at the time of the production that the composer added two instruments to the orchestra, the Sanderson at one end of the scale and the sarussophone at the other.

The sensuousness of certain pages of this music provoked comment even in Paris. Now sensuousness is the chief characteristic of Massenet when he is at his best. Sensuousness is his strength, or his weakness, as you may be pleased to regard it. His adoring friend, De Solonière, not only admits this; he boasts that the "parfum yonique" dominates all the work of this composer, and then he dilates on this agreeable subject and uses extraordinary language, which I dare not translate from fear of the Watch and Ward Society.

You find this sensuousness, or better, this carnal feeling permeating "Eve," "Esclarmonde," "Thais," which rank first among the pornographic works of the ingenious composer, the "passionnel," to quote again from Mr. De Solenière. But in nearly all of Massenet's compositions there is a whiff of the perfume named above.

Of course this sensuousness is made more prominent in the operatic works through text and scenic circumstance. Take, for instance, "Hymen" in the suite. In the concert hall, with the title as a guide to the feeling and the mood, this music seems extremely passionate, yea, erotic, and it is the strongest movement of the suite. But where does this same movement come in the opera? Immediately after the fall of the curtain upon the lovers embracing underneath consenting and approving trees. (Compare with this a superb chapter in Zola's "Fault of the Abbé Modret.") Mr. Apthorp says modestly: "They disappear beneath the blossoms, while the orchestra expresses the sentiments that thrill them." In the theatre this music is unmistakable, and it is another note to Matthew Arnold's statement that France is given up to worship of the goddess Lubricity.

The suite is interesting without the aid of any too curious gloss. The "Evocation" is a pompous thing, with volcanoes of brass and storms of pulsatile instruments, but the purely musical ideas are of little importance, and the movement might be justly called musical campaign oratory—a mighty front, sonorous speech, eagle and bugle in the same sentence. But the second movement is exquisite in harmonic, melodic orchestral thought, and most successful in the establishment of a decided mood. The last movement is made up of a "Pastorale" and "The Hunt." Of these the former is the more distinguished, and the rustic melody was played delightfully by Mr. Longy. If the "Evocation" suggested at times Meyerbeer and Wagner, rewritten for French use, and if "The Magic Isle" awakened the thought of Berlioz, there was plenty of Massenet in the suite, and the individuality of Massenet is as marked as that of Gounod.

Mrs. Schumann-Heink sang an aria from Mozart's "Titus" and Schubert's "Die Allmacht," with the accompaniment scored for orchestra by Mr. Saar, of New York. She was heard to greater advantage in the aria than in the song. The aria itself is still fresh and calls for a display of varied emotions. The singer had an intelligent conception of the character of the music and she was often successful in exposition. At times she sang well, so far as technic was concerned, and then she would relapse into vocal Germanisms so dear to singers of her race, forcing gutteral tones, sliding up in attack, &c. She spoiled Schubert's song by an extravagant use of the downward and upward portamento, so that a phrase became a slobber and a smear. For this she was rewarded with most hearty applause. Mr. Selmer played effectively the clarinet obligato to Mozart's aria.

The concert opened with a remarkably good performance of Berlioz's brilliant overture and closed with Dvorák's Congo-Indian-New York-American Symphony, in which are some pretty tunes, gorgeous instrumentation, as well as much that is distinctly meretricious.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Carnegie Hall, New York.

Programs.

THURSDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 8.

Overture, The Roman Carnival, op. 9.....Berlioz
Concerto for piano, in E minor.....Dohnányi
Scherzo, in A major, op. 45.....Carl Goldmark
(First time.)
Symphony No. 5, in E minor, From the New World, op. 95.....Dvorák

Soloist, Ernst Dohnányi.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 10.

Overture to Euryanthe.....Weber
Aria, Traum König.....Raff
Suite, Esclarmonde.....Massenet
Adriane's Aria, from Rienzi.....Wagner
Symphony No. 5, C minor, op. 67.....Beethoven

Soloist, Gertrude May Stein.

There will always be an intermission of ten minutes before the symphony. The soloists this season will be Aus der Ohe, Dohnányi, Godowsky, Kneisel, Loeffler and Hugo Becker.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CVIII., NO. 125.

FRIDAY, NOV. 2, 1900.

THE SYMPHONY IN CAMBRIDGE.

The first of the Cambridge concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra was given in Sanders Theatre last evening. A large audience was in attendance. The programme opened with the overture, "The Roman Carnival," op. 9. The second number was the aria, "Traum Konig," following which was rendered an orchestral suite, "Esclarmonde." The next rendition was Adriane's aria, from "Rienzi." The closing selection was the popular Symphony No. 5, in C minor, op. 67. Miss Gertrude May Stein was well received as the soloist of the evening. The next concert will be given on Nov. 22.

Boston Journal.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1900.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play at the Yale bicentennial celebration, which will begin Oct. 20, 1901. There will be another opportunity for Brahms's dreary "Academic" overture.

Boston Transcript

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 1900

The first of the Cambridge concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given in Sanders Theatre last evening, before a large audience. Miss Gertrude May Stein was the soloist. The next concert will be given Nov. 22.

"This Country, with its Institutions, Belongs to the People who Inhabit It."

BOSTON EVENING RECORD.

Symphony hall is handsome, but not so pretty that it has to be kept in a glass cage or opened only to kid glove shows apparently. I notice that the republican club will receive its election returns there, in the usual cloud of smoke, no doubt.

* * * * *

Boston Journal.
SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1900.

DOHNANYI.

The Hungarian Pianist Plays His Prize Concerto for the First Time in Boston — Mr. Armbruster's Lecture on Schubert.

(By Philip Hale.)

The program of the third Symphony Concert in Symphony Hall last night, Mr. Gericke conductor, was as follows:

Overture to "The Magic Flute,".....Mozart
Concerto for piano, in E minor, Op. 5.....
..... Dohnányi
(First time in Boston.)
Scherzo in A major, Op. 45.....Goldmark
(First time in Boston.)
Symphony No. 2, in C major.....Schumann

I am sorry to say that Mr. Apthorp by a statement in the program-book obliges me to made a digression concerning Mozart's overture to "The Magic Flute." Mr. Apthorp says that the first performance of the opera in the United States was "in Italian, in New York on November 21, 1859." This statement is incorrect. The first performance in the United States was in English, at the Park Theatre, New York, on April 17, 1833, with Mrs. Austin as Pamina, Mrs. Wallack as the Queen of Night, Jones as Tamino, Horn as Sarastro, and Placide as Papageno. A critic of the time characterized the opera as "noble," and Mr. Horn as "a chaste and correct musician," although "unhappily his voice has got a crack from which it will never recover." The critic added that the music of Sarastro was written "for the middle bass or for a firm baritone (!), and to sing it with even a good tenor is to rob it of that rich mellowness of effect so captivating to the senses, and so impressive." (Horn's voice, according to tradition, was always a poor one, but the compass was generous, so that he sang baritone as well as tenor parts.) He also mentioned the fact that the said Horn introduced a song, and he shrewdly suspected the singer as the composer of it. The overture pleased: "a universal favorite and m st spi.i.ed composition."

Mr. Dohnányi's concerto took the prize offered by Bösendorfer (a piano firm) in 1898, when 72 concertos were submitted to the jury—Messrs. Epstein, Gericke, Grünfeld, Leschetitzki and Rosenthal. Mr. Dohnányi's concerto received 706 votes, Mr. Brandts-Buys's 607, Mr. Eduard Behm's, 598. The work was first played March 28, 1899, by the composer at Vienna. He played it at a Richter concert in London, Oct. 23, 1899, and at a Philharmonic concert in Berlin, under Nikisch, Feb. 12, 1900.

Prize compositions are generally viewed with suspicion, and there is just reason for this view. The composer, young or old, girds up his loins and proposes deliberately to astonish. He tells everything he knows without regard to space or time; he keeps the dear public constantly in view; and in the finale he sees his apotheosis, he sees himself ascending to the sky, laurel-crowned, while applauding thousands gape at the ascension. This concerto of Mr. Dohnányi, for instance, is a manufactured, swollen, bombastic thing. The introduction is merely a reminiscence of a mood of Brahms and it awakens anticipation of—more Brahms. Occasionally in the work there are flashes of well-cultivated talent; but as a whole, how preposterous, how windy, how meretricious is this concerto that takes 43 minutes in actual performance, without the count of breathing spells! The themes are for the most part of short breath, the development is chippy; the orchestration is muddy, or inconsequential, or laboriously ineffective; and the concerto as a whole is a frank appeal to the crowd. Mr. Dohnányi played with speed, force and general abandon. I can understand how by popular vote —706 out of 1911 votes—he obtained the prize; for the crowd is always easily convinced by speed, noise, the use of pulsatile instruments when the attention might otherwise flag, and assurance. So last night there was frenetic applause, in which the orchestra joined to such a degree that I feared for their work in the succeeding piece.

Goldmark's scherzo need not detain us. It is intrinsically cheap, and the main ideas are borrowed from Mendelssohn, who did it all much better in his own genteel way. Still it might serve at a popular concert.

Mr. Gericke should look to the attack of the wood-wind. Last night, as the week before in the "Esclarmonde" suite, the attack of this portion of the orchestra was ragged.

* * *

THE new organ in Symphony Hall has been dedicated, "inaugurated," "opened," although there were no formal ceremonies, as poem, address, or line of organists, each engaged for the same night to display different characteristics of the instrument. Mr. Goodrich was the first to give a recital; and he made up an eminently dignified program, which was perhaps caviare to the general. Mr. Clarence Eddy followed and paid, with one exception, not the slightest respect to the nobler nature of the organ; at the same time he undoubtedly pleased many who wish to hear on the organ anything or everything except music that truly becomes it.

Now some who attended one or both of these recitals may have remembered the "inauguration" of the Great Organ in Music Hall the evening of Nov. 2, 1863, "in the presence"—I quote from a pamphlet published in 1865 by Ticknor & Fields—"of an audience which, for distinction, beauty and fashion, has seldom if ever been matched in our country, so remarkable for its popular gatherings." The exercises began with an original ode written by Mrs. Fields and recited by Charlotte Cushman. The organ was opened by Friedrich Walcker, son of the builder, E. Fr. Walcker; John K. Paine, organist of the West Church, played Bach's toccata in F and trio sonata in E flat; Eugene Thayer, organist of the Arlington Street Church, played Bach's fugue in G [illegible] W. Morgan, of Grace Church, New York, played chorale by Handel; B. J. Lang, organist of the Old South, played Mendelssohn's sonata in A; Dr. Tuckerman, organist of St. Paul's, chose transcriptions from Palestrina and Purcell; and John H. Willcox, organist of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, played Lefébure-Wely's offertory in G. The audience flocked toward the stage after the concert: "They seemed a crowd of worshipers going up to a cathedral; and the bronze Beethoven, looking down benignly in the very focus of all that architectural beauty, seemed like the idol of their homage."

A writer in the Boston Journal spoke of the occasion as "a successful consummation of long-continued, patient, persevering effort to give an Imperial instrument to Republican America"—and yet there were no cries from anti-imperialists. The same writer spoke of the excellence of the instrument: "in all that is most desirable to give language to musical sounds—to express the passions of men, joy, hope, anger, despair—to exhibit the war of the elements, lightnings, thunderings, the driving of the storm, the moan of the sea, the voices of the forest and the field, the songs of birds, the chirping of crickets, the humming of insects—to lead humble worshipers nearer to the Great Father of us all—in all these it stands alone, unsurpassed, unequaled, pre-eminent." Yes, that organ in Music Hall was indeed a big thing.

Critics from New York were present and the representative of the Tribune said: "There it will stand perfect and complete—a memorial of triumphant success—so long as time shall spare the walls within which it has been consecrated." You know the fate of that organ. It was spurned at last by the owners of the hall; it was sold in 1834 to a music-school; it was forgotten in a grave-yard until 1897 when it was sold for $1500 to Mr. E. F. Searles.

How proud Boston was of that organ in the sixties! It believed the words of a writer in Harper's: "The organ stands in Boston, but it belongs to the country." Did not Dr. Holmes himself deign to describe it? It was one of the wonders of the world. When Artemus Ward called on the editors of the Atlantic Monthly to assure them "theirs was a high and holy mission, they seemed quite gratified, and asked me if I had seen the Grate Orgin"; and he added: "Mr. Reveer, whose tavern I stop at, informed me that it (the organ) can be distinctly heard through a smoked glass in his native town in New Hampshire any clear day."

Surely there is no comparison architecturally between the sombre grandeur of the old and the fresh smugness of the new; and were not the colossal caryatids to be preferred to the exposed cable, which my friend Mr. Apthorp described in conversation as "the umbilical cord between the console and the organ"?

* * *

If the new organ would only awaken an interest in legitimate organ music! Alas, there are organists, and Mr. Eddy is among them, who are anxious to exhibit a solo stop, a flute, an oboe, a clarinet, to imitate human voices in song, to show how many pieces written for orchestra, or violin, or piano, or voices can be transcribed for the organ. They would have the organ merely a mimetic instrument. Only the other day an excellent organist in this city rejoiced because he had found a combination of stops that resembled in effect a harp.

Now Plutarch tells this story of Agesilaus: "An other time beinge desired to heare a man that naturally counterfeated the nightingales voice: he would not heare him, saying, I have oftentimes heard the nightingale it selfe."

There is legitimate music for the organ that is not necessarily dull or depressing. There is music for it that is among the noblest musical creations of man. And the great and fundamental characteristics of the instrument do not include the mimetic faculty. The organ stands alone in impressive grandeur. Why degrade and debase it through a desire for applause from those who might easily be comforted, sustained, uplifted by noble music nobly played?

* * *

SUNDAY HERALD.
PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. LVIII., NO. 127.
SUNDAY, NOV. 4, 1900.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Ernst Von Dohnanyi Plays a Concerto of His Own.

His Playing Is Magnificently Vigorous, but the Composition Is Rather Disappointing — Goldmark's Scherzo and Selections from Mozart and Schumann.

The programme for the third concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra in Symphony Hall last evening was:

Overture, "The Magic Flute".....Mozart
Concerto for pianoforte in E minor, op. 5.....E. Dohnanyi
Scherzo in A major, op. 45.....Goldmark
Symphony No. 2, in C major.....Schumann

The soloist was Mr. Ernst von Dohnanyi, and he played his own concerto, which on this occasion had its first concert performance in Boston. It is a very long work, taking close upon three-quarters of an hour in performance, and though in that space of time it should naturally say very much, it is exceedingly difficult on a first hearing to comprehend exactly what it really does say. There is no lack of fire, of massive orchestration, of rhapsodic frenzy, and of pretentious effort; there is enough and to spare of technical knowledge; but there is little that charms by its grace or tenderness, and much that on one hearing is greatly like laboriously-manufactured music in which there is not even a simulation of inspiration, and which tires rather than edifies.

The work is wholly modern, and is fairly divided between the solo instrument and the orchestra; in other words, the former does not predominate after old-fashioned methods, but not infrequently pounds and storms furiously to come into prominence through the instrumental din. Yes, the piano part is immensely difficult; but it appears to be nothing else. The orchestration is skilful, but this also appears to be nothing else. A closer familiarity with the work may possibly reverse or greatly modify this impression after a first hearing; but the first hearing was none the less disappointing, not to say wearying.

For the artist's performance of his work there is nothing but admiration. It is true that there was overmuch of thumping, but that was imperatively demanded; and, over and beyond this, there was no end of dazzlingly brilliant technique and a vigorous endurance that was quite exciting. The audience was manifestly delighted with the concerto, for it applauded with tremendous energy, and recalled the composer-soloist frenziedly again and again. Perhaps, however, it was not the concerto, after all, but the stirring vigor, the dash and, in the climax of the finale, the overwhelming display of technique that characterized the playing of Mr. Dohnanyi which was the cause of such a furious display of enthusiasm.

The Goldmark scherzo was likewise a novelty. It is bright and pleasing, but much of it seems to have been said by Mendelssohn long ago, while there is no special originality in it anywhere. The orchestration is, of course, charming. It always is with Goldmark, but the strongly marked individuality that colors the composer's other music appears to be missing here. In this, as in the other performances of the evening, Mr. Gericke and his orchestra were fully at their best.

There will be no rehearsal and concert this week. The programme for the next concert is Symphony No. 5, Haydn; concert for violin, Dvorak; ballad or a Norwegian folk song, Roentgen; overture, "Tannhauser," Wagner. Mr. T. Adamowski is to be the soloist.

There was a tremendous crush at the Symphony rehearsal Friday afternoon, the young soloist Dohnanyi being an especial attraction. He was called out five times after his masterful performance of his own concerto. Some of those whom we noted in the crowd of well-dressed women were Mrs. Oliver Ames and her sister-in-law, Miss Mary Ames, Mrs. Gardner, Mrs. R. M. Appleton, Mrs. Boylston Beal, Mrs. Fiske Warren, Mrs. William Hooper, Mrs. R. C. Hooper, Miss Hetty Sargent, Mrs. James H. Blake, Mrs. William Endicott, Jr., Mrs. Charles Sprague, Miss Nina Sargent, Mrs. R. M. Field, Mrs. Frank Lawrence, Mrs. Albert Nickerson, Mrs. T. B. Gannett, Mrs. Gericke, Mrs. Bradlee, Miss Alice Sargent, Mrs. H. H. A. Beach and hundreds more. There will be no rehearsal or concert this week, as the orchestra is leaving tonight for Philadelphia, where they will appear on Monday and Wednesday. They will be in Baltimore on Tuesday, and in New York and Brooklyn Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Mr. T. Adamowski will be the soloist at the next rehearsal and concert here on the 16th and 17th.

There was a brilliant audience at Sanders Theatre on Thursday evening and much enthusiasm for the first of the 10 concerts to be given by the Symphony orchestra during the winter. Some of the university set there were Mrs. Charles W. Eliot, Prof. and Mrs. George H. Palmer, Prof. and Mrs. J. K. Paine, Prof. and Mrs. Sedgwick, the Rev. and Mrs. Edward Hale, Miss Aagot Lunde, Mr. and Mrs. Charles S. Dennison, Mr. and Mrs. Chamberlain, Prof. and Mrs. Charles H. Moore, Prof. James M. Pierce, Prof. Albert Bushnell Hart, Miss Riddle, Prof. and Mrs. Fiske, Miss Coues, Mr. and Mrs. Hersey B. Goodwin, Dr. S. Driver, Miss Driver, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. White, Prof. Whitney, Prof. Ames, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Astor Carey, Mr. Horace P. Chandler, Prof. Dunbar, Mr. and Mrs. T. B. Gannett, Mr. and Mrs. Walter I. Badger, Mr. Arthur Gilman, Prof. W. W. Nolen, Mrs. Justin Winsor, Mr. Manning Emery and Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Dankmar Stein was the soloist, and she looked attractive in a white embroidered crepe done in pearl embroidery. A choux of blue and pink velvet was the only bit of color. Miss Stein was heartily recalled three times after each of her numbers.

"From all accounts," says the New York Tribune, "Symphony Hall, the new habitat of the Boston Symphony orchestra, leaves nothing to be desired. Architecturally, the building is dignified. The auditorium is spacious and comfortable, and its acoustic properties are excellent. The many friends of the orchestra rejoice that it now has a home in keeping with its artistic deserts."

Boston Sunday Globe.
SUNDAY, NOV. 4, 1900.

Dohnanyi Soloist at Third Symphony Concert.

Mr Ernst von Dohnanyi was the soloist at the third symphony rehearsal and concert last week. Mr Gericke's program included two numbers new to Boston, Dohnanyi's pianoforte concerto in E minor and Karl Goldmark's A major scherzo. The other selections were the overture to Mozart's "Magic Flute" and Schumann's second symphony. Young Dohnanyi's playing was one of the surprises last season and although he did not appear until about every concert patron had been surfeited with piano music, good, bad and indifferent, the artist at once made a lasting impression and gave indications that he was one of the most interesting pianists who have come to America. His reappearance last week evidenced that he is destined to achieve an enduring success by reason of his merit as a composer as well as ability as a performer, for in each branch of his profession he shows qualifications of a high grade. The Dohnanyi concerto, which he introduced here, was awarded first prize two years ago in a competition offered by a Vienna piano maker, and Mr Gericke was one of the judges who examined the works submitted. Before the competition closed Mr Gericke was obliged to come to America and he saw only the first movement of the Dohnanyi concerto, but the work was so good that Mr Gericke left a letter on his departure addressed to the other judges, stating as his opinion that Mr Dohnanyi's composition was far ahead of all the others, in which opinion his associates concurred.

The concerto demonstrates that he has individuality in musical ideas, and characteristic methods of expressing them. The composition is vigorous in its thematic material, difficult fortissimo passages, many of them in double octaves, are very frequent, and the arabesques for the solo instruments are beautiful in design, and, in his treatment of them, thoroughly delightful. He evidently comprehends the relations between the orchestra and piano, for his sonorous effects are secured without sacrificing the single instrument, while working up the more emphatic part of the score. He evidently is an admirer of Brahms, but Dohnanyi has much to say that is original, as his lighter compositions show, and in his larger work his powers are shown more clearly than before. He has more than the pretty gift of melody, for he is endowed with the gifts of a composer of the higher rank, a skilled creator and interpreter.

It is difficult to make more than passing mention upon a work of this importance when judgment is formed upon a single hearing. It is in three movements, the solo instrument is introduced with considerable regularity of intervals, and, although the orchestral score is elaborate, the balance of piano work is splendidly observed. Different instruments are "given a chance," notably the horns and string basses in the second movement, and the woodwinds in the first, and in the third part are cadenzas for the piano. The work closes with rustling passages in octaves played fortissimo. The concerto is very interesting, and, at times, exceedingly difficult. The interpretation was masterly, and the sincerity and unaffected earnestness with which Dohnanyi played characterized him as an artist sure to command the respect of all true lovers of the highest forms of musical expression. He was rapturously applauded and recalled to the stage a half-dozen times.

The Goldmark scherzo, given for the first time here, was played beautifully, the wonderful team work of the string contingent showing forth brilliantly. The themes for the various combinations of instruments were also given in a faultless manner. The "Magic Flute" overture was played charmingly and the familiar Schumann symphony received a sympathetic interpretation.

The next concerts will be given Nov 16 and 17, with Mr T. Adamowski as soloist. Three novelties are announced: Haydn's fifth symphony, Dvorak's violin concerto and a ballad on a Norwegian folk song by Jul. Rœntgen. The overture to Wagner's "Tannhauser" will complete the program.

[33]

ADVERTISER
Established 1813.
The Official Paper of the State.
The Official Paper of the City.
MONDAY MORNING, NOV. 5, 1900.

The concert of Saturday presented what Roosevelt might have called a "strenuous" programme, for there was combat in the concerto, battle in the unplayful Scherzo, and any amount of strife in the Schumann finale. The concert began, however, merrily enough, with the "Magic Flute" overture and the most chattering and jovial fughetta in existence.

To borrow a fugal subject is no more a plagiarism than to preach from the text that previous sermons have been delivered upon. It is, therefore, not in a derogatory sense that we state that the subject of the chief theme of the "Magic Flute" overture is very closely akin to that of Mozart's favorite fugue in the "Well-tempered Clavichord," Book II, No. 7. It is in the same key, of the same length, and of the same general structure as the Bach theme; but what a diversity of treatment! Bach evolves three canons, Mozart the utmost geniality, out of it. We are glad to find Mr. Gericke avoiding the extremely rapid tempo that many Viennese conductors give to this overture; it certainly gains by a more moderate tempo since the auditor can follow the four voices more clearly without taking too much on faith.

After this came Dohnanyi, the great, who made such a wonderful impression last season by his piano performances. He received a calm and reserved Boston welcome, which he proceeded to thaw into the most fervid enthusiasm. He had brought his concerto with him. A concerto composed by a pianist is always sure to put the solo instrument well in the foreground, as witness the two by Chopin, the two by Liszt, and the five by Rubinstein. This concerto (in E minor) showed this tendency in an amount of preluding at the very beginning, a great amount of cadenza work, and a terrific degree of technical display.

But the composer did not seem to fear the orchestra; on the contrary, he scored with a heavy hand, so that at times the piano had to be used with titanic force to make headway against the torrent of orchestration. The first movement was almost continuously in the ultra-heroic vein, sometimes with no very visible reason. One felt like inquiring (like the Frenchman with his—"Ce sonate, que me veut-il?")—"What is the trouble?" It all seemed an agitated Rhapsody, filled to the brim with double octaves, trills, and heavy chords.

The Andantino made some amends and began with some direct beauty. A tender and mournful horn melody, supported by pizzicato contra-basses began the movement as if there were going to be some pensive charm to the work, but very soon the agitation crept in here also.

In the Finale the bravura work was laid on with a trowel; very extensive cadenzas appeared and a degree of tumult that might be presented by "fffffffff sempre"! And then there came a species of hymn of Thanksgiving (possibly that the piano was still hanging together) and an extended close.

On a first hearing we cannot say that we like the concerto; the pace is far too furious both in technical difficulties, in power of tone, and in rhapsodical ideas. But it displays the young pianist in a most astounding manner as a veritable king of the keyboard; and he is so young yet that the very highest hopes may be built upon his future. The applause at the end of the phenomenal work was little short of frenzy, and, as an exhibition of technique the work deserved it. When Mr. Dohnanyi grows older we are sure of some great piano concertos, for even this bit of musical Nihilism is not without its touches of genius.

The Goldmark Scherzo, heard here for the first time, was a proof of the fact that a Scherzo need not be playful, (for it had a great deal of menacing trombone-work) and that any shape can be used in this movement; in this case it came nearer to Sonata-allegro than to the regulation "Scherzo-with-Trio" form. There is no very valid reason why the movement should not have been called a "Concert-overture", although it is rather short for the modern type of this. It had not much to say for itself, being neither very novel nor very interesting.

The concert ended with Schumann's C major symphony. Probably all of our readers know how autobiographical Schumann's music is, and of his dividing his own character into two beings (not a la Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, however,) which he called "Florestan" and "Eusebius" The first was a radical, an impetuous reformer; the second a tender and poetic dreamer. One finds much more of Florestan than of Eubseblus in the C major symphony; it is earnest, combative, full of struggle. It begins with a martial signal which throws down the gauntlet in the very first measures, and in the finale this call of defiance is again heard. But it ends with a tender song of Praise that placed Mr. Dohnanyi's final Paeans at a disadvantage.

It was fine work for the violins to display themselves, and in the Scherzo the brilliancy of this department of our orchestra shone forth with remarkable lustre. The kettledrummer had his opportunity at the cadence of the finale, which he did not abuse. The manifold syncopations (Schumann was the greatest syncopationist of them all!) were attacked with power and decision, and, all in all, the symphony was the most enjoyable music of the entire programme.

Louis C. Elson.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.
SUNDAY MORNING, NOVEMBER 4, 1900.
(Copyright, 1900, Post Publishing Company.)

THIRD SYMPHONY CONCERT.

At the third concert last evening in Symphony Hall, Mr. Ernst Von Dohnanyi, the Hungarian pianist, made his first appearance this season in the dual role of composer and pianist, as he performed his own concerto in E miner for the first time in Boston. The work is laid out on a broad scale like the concertos of Tschaikowski and Brahms, without having the length of those of the latter composer. Dohnanyi's concerto is in three movements, the last two giving the most pleasing impression at a first hearing. In fact, it is impossible to speak absolutely of such a work without frequent hearings, yet it may be said that it is extremely meritorious for a young composer, while also there is a feeling that if Dohnanyi was twenty years older he would have written it very differently than at present, especially as to the instrumentation, which seems the weakest part of the work. The last movement has a very spirited and showy ending and "caught" the audience completely. Mr. Dohnanyi was repeatedly recalled and both composition and performer seemed to have made a great impression. The other numbers of the programme were Mozart's "Magic Flute" overture, Goldmark's "Scherzo," op. 45 (first time in Boston), and Schumann's Symphony, No. 2, in C. The playing of the orchestra, as usual, left nothing to be desired as to excellence. There will be no rehearsal and concerto this coming week.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra give two concerts in Carnegie Hall, New York, on Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon of this coming week. Ernst von Dohnanyi will be the soloist at the first, and Miss Gertrude May Stein will be the soloist at the second concert.

The first Symphony concert of the season in Cambridge was given last Thursday evening in Sanders Theatre. Miss Gertrude May Stein was the soloist.

BOSTON POST, 5
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

The Symphony Orchestra is in Philadelphia this week, and will give concerts there tonight and Wednesday. They play also in Baltimore, New York and Brooklyn this week. On this account there will be no rehearsal or concert here this week, but there will be concerts the 16th and 17th with the usual rehearsals. T. Adamowski will be the soloist. There was a tremendous crowd at last Friday's rehearsal, probably because there will be none this week.

Symphony Hall: Boston Symphony Orchestra

The third Symphony concert was given in Symphony Hall last Saturday evening, the programme being as follows:

Mozart: Overture to "Die Zauberflöte."
Dohnanyi: Concerto for Pianoforte, in E minor, opus 5.
(First time in Boston.)
Goldmark: Scherzo in A major, opus 45.
(First time in Boston.)
Schumann: Symphony No. 2, in C major, opus 61.
Mr. Ernst von Dohnanyi was the pianist.

Two novelties on one evening! but, somehow, they did not seem too much; there was no difficulty in listening to them.

The "Zauberflöte" overture was admirably played; perhaps not quite so fast as usual, but there was so much life and accent in the playing that the composition did not seem to drag, while every detail stood out in beautiful clearness. No doubt the new hall itself was for much in the good effect; things sound wonderfully distinct there.

The Schumann C-major symphony is one of Mr. Gericke's palpable hits. When he conducted it two years ago it made an impression such as it had hardly made before, and now the reading is quite as fine as then. It is one of those scores that need very careful management, something almost like "doctoring," if the full effect is to be brought out. No mere playing of the notes, no matter how soulfully, will do; the conductor has to step in and make up for Schumann's defective orchestral technique, getting at the desired effect as best he can. Beethoven's ninth symphony hardly presents a more difficult problem. Indeed, the two cases are very similar; Beethoven, fully master of the orchestral technique of his day, had to develop a new one, to produce all the new effects he had in his mind; and, being stone deaf, he would now and then make a miscalculation. His deafness thus placed him in much the same position as Schumann, who, from sheer ignorance and lack of routine, did not quite know how to produce all the effects he wanted. In both cases the conductor has to help the composer not a little. And Mr. Gericke helps Schumann so well that the C-major symphony sounds almost like a masterpiece of scoring. Especially fine is his way of working up the great finale; as he plays it, the movement has not a hole in it, all is continuous and ever-growing in effect. One wishes that Mr. Saint-Saëns could hear his performance of this movement; would he then still think that an audience "only showed its good taste in remaining cold?"

Mr. Ernst von Dohnanyi's new pianoforte concerto is one of the most interesting compositions by a young man that have yet been heard here. That the young composer has not quite come to himself is clear enough; few composers of his youth do, it takes time and experience—both of music and of life—for a composer to find out his own originality. Very young men do not commune directly with their art; they begin by communing with it through the medium of some great predecessor, and see it with his eyes. And one did not need to hear many measures of this concerto last Saturday evening to see that Mr. von Dohnanyi looked at music through the Brahms medium. There is probably no real plagiarism; but the identity of mood between the opening of this concerto and the opening of Brahms's C-minor symphony is striking; and, the farther you get on, the more of Brahms do you find in it. Not more of Brahms, perhaps, than you find of Haydn in Beethoven's earlier works; but still a great deal.

No doubt the academic critic can find a good deal to take exception to in the concerto; the thing is tremendously overdeveloped, too long by half; at times the composer seems to lose his way, not to know just whither he is going. As a technical consideration, the pianoforte plays too unimportant a part in it; it is really an orchestral composition with pianoforte obbligato, neither does the pianoforte always add anything to what the orchestra has to say. But this is natural enough, as musical feeling goes nowadays; I predicted long ago that the concerto for solo instrument and orchestra would, one day, meet its death by the absorption of the solo instrument. Here the pianoforte still shows the top of its head above water; but that is all.

Still, with all its youthful exuberances, gibbosities, and redundancies, this concerto of Mr. von Dohnanyi's shows genuine life, vigor and talent, even something of profundity of thought and emotion. The thing is not merely skin-deep; even though it reflect Brahms more than anything else, you feel that the composer's experience of Brahms has been a deep one. He really has something to say about it.

His playing of it—of what there was to play—was a grand exhibition of virtuosity, strength and endurance. There were moments of true soulfulness, of poetic imaginativeness and charm. Upon the whole, the performance showed greater maturity than the composition. The pianist was very warmly applauded and recalled; he has scored a genuine success.

Goldmark's affection for Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony is almost touching; for a man of sixty and odd to keep so warm a place in his heart for the work of a youth of twenty-four is unusual. It looks almost like an infatuation, like a fixed idea. In his overture "Im Frühling," opus 36, Goldmark already showed that he could not get the "Italian" symphony out of his head; and in this Scherzo in A major, opus 45, we find the obsession cropping up again. Apparently he cannot get rid of it. The thing is cheerful; pleasant, well-written music; but where, oh where is the composer of the "Sakuntala"? Indeed this Scherzo—which is really no Scherzo at all, but a concert piece in a stunted sonata form—lacks about all the qualities with which Goldmark won his fine reputation; it is a sort of thing that anyone might have written.

The next programme—for Friday afternoon, Nov. 16, and Saturday evening, Nov. 17, there being no concert nor rehearsal this week—is: Haydn, symphony No. 5, in D major (first time at these concerts); Dvorak, concerto for violin (first time in Boston); Roentgen, ballad on a Norwegian song (first time in Boston); Wagner, overture to "Tannhäuser." Mr. Timothée [illegible] the solo violinist.

[34]

THE MUSICAL AGE.
CONDUCTED BY HENRY EDWARD KREHBIEL.
NEW YORK, NOVEMBER 1, 1900.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

THIS fine organization will be heard at Carnegie Hall on Nov. 8th. The matinées will hereafter take place on Saturday instead of Wednesday afternoons following the Thursday evening concerts. Gericke will conduct as usual. At the first concert Dohnanyi will play his Vienna prize concerto, and the principal orchestral feature will be Dvorak's Symphony No. 5 in E minor, entitled, "From the New World."

PUBLIC LEDGER
AND DAILY TRANSCRIPT.
Philadelphia, Tuesday, Nov. 6, 1900.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Opening of Their Sixteenth Season in Philadelphia.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its sixteenth season in Philadelphia last night at the Academy of Music. There was little or no difference in the personnel of the orchestra from that of last season; they played under the direction of Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, and played neither better nor worse than they have averaged under his baton for the past two seasons.

What is true with regard to the composition of the orchestra is also largely true of those who composed the audience; familiar faces were everywhere; so it was on all hands very much like a meeting of old friends, very much valued friends, as no doubt every one present would say of those whose playing has so often charmed them.

Mr. Ernst Dohnanyi was the soloist, and the following programme was played:

Karl Maria von Weber,
Overture to "Euryanthe"
Ernst von Dohnanyi,
Concerto for Pianoforte in E minor, Op. 5.
Franz Schubert.
Ballet-Movement and Entr-acte from "Rosamunde"
Antonin Dvorak,
Symphony No. 5, in E minor, "From the New World," Op. 95.

Mr. Dohnanyi was heard here as late as last March with the Boston Orchestra in Beethoven's concerto in G major. It was his first appearance in Philadelphia, and his virile touch, his masterly technique, the variety of expression which he infused into his playing and a multitude of other good points stamped him at once as a player of exceptional attainments. Mr. Dohnanyi did nothing last night as an executant to lessen the opinion then formed of him, but he appeared in the dual role of a composer and the interpreter of his own work, and it is in his character of composer that the audience was chiefly interested.

His concerto shows that in the matter of technical knowledge and its relation to modern orchestration he is both ingenious and apt. The piano parts and the orchestral parts are evenly balanced and the movements are written with a dash and virility of purpose that are characteristic of the composer. The opening is particularly promising. Yet the promise in this case can hardly be said to have been fairly fulfilled. The main theme has a way of slipping away and losing itself, and before it is gathered up again much that seems purposeless, much that is noisy, fills out a considerable period, so considerable as to induce a feeling of weariness. If not an immediate success, as an augury for the future Mr. Dohnanyi's first concerto promises exceedingly well. The present one would be better worth listening to if compressed into two-thirds of its present volume.

The rest of the concert calls for little comment. Weber's overture to Euryanthe and Dvorak's "New World" symphony are pretty well known, and the more one hears the latter the more one wonders where the cotton belt comes in and why the composer might not as well have drawn his inspiration from the highlands of Scotland or the atmosphere of Bayreuth. The only light touch to what must be characterized as a somewhat heavy programme was the ballet music and entr'acte from Schubert's "Rosamunde," delightfully and felicitously played by the orchestra.

To-morrow the series of Wednesday evening concerts begins, when Miss Gertrude May Stein will be the soloist. She will sing Raff's aria, "Traum Konig," and Adriano's aria from "Rienzi." The symphony will be Schumann's No. 2 in C major.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.
The Official Paper of the State.
The Official Paper of the City.

MONDAY MORNING, NOV. 5, 1900.

The concert of Saturday presented what Roosevelt might have called a "strenuous" programme, for there was combat in the concerto, battle in the unplayful Scherzo, and any amount of strife in the Schumann finale. The concert began, however, merrily enough, with the "Magic Flute" overture and the most chattering and jovial fughetta in existence.

To borrow a fugal subject is no more a plagiarism than to preach from the text that previous sermons have been delivered upon. It is, therefore, not in a derogatory sense that we state that the subject of the chief theme of the "Magic Flute" overture is very closely akin to that of Mozart's favorite fugue in the "Well-tempered Clavichord," Book II, No. 7. It is in the same key, of the same length, and of the same general structure as the Bach theme; but what a diversity of treatment! Bach evolves three canons, Mozart the utmost geniality, out of it. We are glad to find Mr. Gericke avoiding the extremely rapid tempo that many Viennese conductors give to this overture; it certainly gains by a more moderate tempo since the auditor can follow the four voices more clearly without taking too much on faith.

After this came Dohnanyi, the great, who made such a wonderful impression last season by his piano performances. He received a calm and reserved Boston welcome, which he proceeded to thaw into the most fervid enthusiasm. He had brought his concerto with him. A concerto composed by a pianist is always sure to put the solo instrument well in the foreground, as witness the two by Chopin, the two by Liszt, and the five by Rubinstein. This concerto (in E minor) showed this tendency in an amount of preluding at the very beginning, a great amount of cadenza work, and a terrific degree of technical display.

But the composer did not seem to fear the orchestra; on the contrary, he scored with a heavy hand, so that at times the piano had to be used with titanic force to make headway against the torrent of orchestration. The first movement was almost continuously in the ultra-heroic vein, sometimes with no very visible reason. One felt like inquiring (like the Frenchman with his--"Ce sonate, que me veut-il?")--"What is the trouble?" It all seemed an agitated Rhapsody, filled to the brim with double octaves, trills, and heavy chords.

The Andantino made some amends and began with some direct beauty. A tender and mournful horn melody, supported by pizzicato contra-basses began the movement as if there were going to be some pensive charm to the work, but very soon the agitation crept in here also.

In the Finale the bravura work was laid on with a trowel; very extensive cadenzas appeared and a degree of tumult that might be presented by "fffffffff sempre"! And then there came a species of hymn of Thanksgiving (possibly that the piano was still hanging together) and an extended close.

On a first hearing we cannot say that we like the concerto; the pace is far too furious both in technical difficulties, in power of tone, and in rhapsodical ideas. But it displays the young pianist in a most astounding manner as a veritable king of the keyboard; and he is so young yet that the very highest hopes may be built upon his future. The applause at the end of the phenomenal work was little short of frenzy, and, as an exhibition of technique the work deserved it. When Mr. Dohnanyi grows older we are sure of some great piano concertos, for even this bit of musical Nihilism is not without its touches of genius.

The Goldmark Scherzo, heard here for the first time, was a proof of the fact that a Scherzo need not be playful, (for it had a great deal of menacing trombone-work) and that any shape can be used in this movement; in this case it came nearer to Sonata-allegro than to the regulation "Scherzo-with-Trio" form. There is no very valid reason why the movement should not have been called a "Concert-overture", although it is rather short for the modern type of this. It had not much to say for itself, being neither very novel nor very interesting.

The concert ended with Schumann's C major symphony. Probably all of our readers know how autobiographical Schumann's music is, and of his dividing his own character into two beings (not a la Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, however,) which he called "Florestan" and "Eusebius" The first was a radical, an impetuous reformer; the second a tender and poetic dreamer. One finds much more of Florestan than of Eubsebius in the C major symphony; it is earnest, combative, full of struggle. It begins with a martial signal which throws down the gauntlet in the very first measures, and in the finale this call of defiance is again heard. But it ends with a tender song of Praise that placed Mr. Dohnanyi's final Paeans at a disadvantage.

It was fine work for the violins to display themselves, and in the Scherzo the brilliancy of this department of our orchestra shone forth with remarkable lustre. The kettledrummer had his opportunity at the cadence of the finale, which he did not abuse. The manifold syncopations (Schumann was the greatest syncopationist of them all!) were attacked with power and decision, and, all in all, the symphony was the most enjoyable music of the entire programme.

Louis C. Elson.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

SUNDAY MORNING, NOVEMBER 4, 1900.
(Copyright, 1900, Post Publishing Company.)

THIRD SYMPHONY CONCERT.

At the third concert last evening in Symphony Hall, Mr. Ernst Von Dohnanyi, the Hungarian pianist, made his first appearance this season in the dual role of composer and pianist, as he performed his own concerto in E miner for the first time in Boston. The work is laid out on a broad scale like the concertos of Tschaikowski and Brahms, without having the length of those of the latter composer. Dohnanyi's concerto is in three movements, the last two giving the most pleasing impression at a first hearing. In fact, it is impossible to speak absolutely of such a work without frequent hearings, yet it may be said that it is extremely meritorious for a young composer, while also there is a feeling that if Dohnanyi was twenty years older he would have written it very differently than at present, especially as to the instrumentation, which seems the weakest part of the work. The last movement has a very spirited and showy ending and "caught" the audience completely. Mr. Dohnanyi was repeatedly recalled and both composition and performer seemed to have made a great impression. The other numbers of the programme were Mozart's "Magic Flute" overture, Goldmark's "Scherzo," op. 45 (first time in Boston), and Schumann's Symphony, No. 2, in C. The playing of the orchestra, as usual, left nothing to be desired as to excellence. There will be no rehearsal and concerto this coming week.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra give two concerts in Carnegie Hall, New York, on Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon of this coming week. Ernst von Dohnanyi will be the soloist at the first, and Miss Gertrude May Stein will be the soloist at the second concert.

The first Symphony concert of the season in Cambridge was given last Thursday evening in Sanders Theatre. Miss Gertrude May Stein was the soloist.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

The Symphony Orchestra is in Philadelphia this week, and will give concerts there tonight and Wednesday. They play also in Baltimore, New York and Brooklyn this week. On this account there will be no rehearsal or concert here this week, but there will be concerts the 16th and 17th with the usual rehearsals. T. Adamowski will be the soloist. There was a tremendous crowd at last Friday's rehearsal, probably because there will be none this week.

Symphony Hall: Boston Symphony Orchestra

The third Symphony concert was given in Symphony Hall last Saturday evening, the programme being as follows:

Mozart: Overture to "Die Zauberflöte."
Dohnanyi: Concerto for Pianoforte, in E minor, opus 5.
(First time in Boston.)
Goldmark: Scherzo in A major, opus 45.
(First time in Boston.)
Schumann: Symphony No. 2, in C major, opus 61.
Mr. Ernst von Dohnanyi was the pianist.

Two novelties on one evening! but, somehow, they did not seem too much; there was no difficulty in listening to them.

The "Zauberflöte" overture was admirably played; perhaps not quite so fast as usual, but there was so much life and accent in the playing that the composition did not seem to drag, while every detail stood out in beautiful clearness. No doubt the new hall itself was for much in the good effect; things sound wonderfully distinct there.

The Schumann C-major symphony is one of Mr. Gericke's palpable hits. When he conducted it two years ago it made an impression such as it had hardly made before, and now the reading is quite as fine as then. It is one of those scores that need very careful management, something almost like "doctoring," if the full effect is to be brought out. No mere playing of the notes, no matter how soulfully, will do; the conductor has to step in and make up for Schumann's defective orchestral technique, getting at the desired effect as best he can. Beethoven's ninth symphony hardly presents a more difficult problem. Indeed, the two cases are very similar: Beethoven, fully master of the orchestral technique of his day, had to develop a new one, to produce all the new effects he had in his mind; and, being stone deaf, he would now and then make a miscalculation. His deafness thus placed him in much the same position as Schumann, who, from sheer ignorance and lack of routine, did not quite know how to produce all the effects he wanted. In both cases the conductor has to help the composer not a little. And Mr. Gericke helps Schumann so well that the C-major symphony sounds almost like a masterpiece of scoring. Especially fine is his way of working up the great finale; as he plays it, the movement has not a hole in it, all is continuous and ever-growing in effect. One wishes that Mr. Saint-Saëns could hear his performance of this movement; would he then still think that an audience "only showed its good taste in remaining cold?"

Mr. Ernst von Dohnanyi's new pianoforte concerto is one of the most interesting compositions by a young man that have yet been heard here. That the young composer has not quite come to himself is clear enough; few composers of his youth do, it takes time and experience—both of music and of life—for a composer to find out his own originality. Very young men do not commune directly with their art; they begin by communing with it through the medium of some great predecessor, and see it with his eyes. And one did not need to hear many measures of this concerto last Saturday evening to see that Mr. von Dohnanyi looked at music through the Brahms medium. There is probably no real plagiarism; but the identity of mood between the opening of this concerto and the opening of Brahms's C-minor symphony is striking; and, the farther you get on, the more of Brahms do you find in it. Not more of Brahms, perhaps, than you find of Haydn in Beethoven's earlier works; but still a great deal.

No doubt the academic critic can find a good deal to take exception to in the concerto; the thing is tremendously overdeveloped, too long by half; at times the composer seems to lose his way, not to know just whither he is going. As a technical consideration, the pianoforte plays too unimportant a part in it; it is really an orchestral composition with pianoforte obbligato, neither does the pianoforte always add anything to what the orchestra has to say. But this is natural enough, as musical feeling goes nowadays; I predicted long ago that the concerto for solo instrument and orchestra would, one day, meet its death by the absorption of the solo instrument. Here the pianoforte still shows the top of its head above water; but that is all.

Still, with all its youthful exuberances, gibbosities, and redundancies, this concerto of Mr. von Dohnanyi's shows genuine life, vigor and talent, even something of profundity of thought and emotion. The thing is not merely skin-deep; even though it reflect Brahms more than anything else, you feel that the composer's experience of Brahms has been a deep one. He really has something to say about it.

His playing of it—of what there was to play—was a grand exhibition of virtuosity, strength and endurance. There were moments of true soulfulness, of poetic imaginativeness and charm. Upon the whole, the performance showed greater maturity than the composition. The pianist was very warmly applauded and recalled; he has scored a genuine success.

Goldmark's affection for Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony is almost touching; for a man of sixty and odd to keep so warm a place in his heart for the work of a youth of twenty-four is unusual. It looks almost like an infatuation, like a fixed idea. In his overture "Im Frühling," opus 36, Goldmark already showed that he could not get the "Italian" symphony out of his head; and in this Scherzo in A major, opus 45, we find the obsession cropping up again. Apparently he cannot get rid of it. The thing is cheerful, pleasant, well-written music; but where, oh where is the composer of the "Sakuntala"? Indeed this Scherzo—which is really no Scherzo at all, but a concert piece in a stunted sonata form—lacks about all the qualities with which Goldmark won his fine reputation; it is a sort of thing that anyone might have written.

The next programme—for Friday afternoon, Nov. 16, and Saturday evening, Nov. 17, there being no concert nor rehearsal this week—is: Haydn, symphony No. 5, in D major (first time at these concerts); Dvorak, concerto for violin (first time in Boston); Roentgen, ballad on a Norwegian song (first time in Boston); Wagner, overture to "Tannhauser." Mr. Timothée Adamowski will be the solo violinist.

[34]

THE MUSICAL AGE.

CONDUCTED BY HARRY EDWARD FREUND

NEW YORK, NOVEMBER 1, 1900.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

THIS fine organization will be heard at Carnegie Hall on Nov. 8th. The matinées will hereafter take place on Saturday instead of Wednesday afternoons following the Thursday evening concerts. Gericke will conduct as usual. At the first concert Dohnanyi will play his Vienna prize concerto, and the principal orchestral feature will be Dvorak's Symphony No. 5 in E minor, entitled, "From the New World."

PUBLIC LEDGER
AND DAILY TRANSCRIPT.

Philadelphia, Tuesday, Nov. 6, 1900.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Opening of Their Sixteenth Season in Philadelphia.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its sixteenth season in Philadelphia last night at the Academy of Music. There was little or no difference in the personnel of the orchestra from that of last season; they played under the direction of Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, and played neither better nor worse than they have averaged under his baton for the past two seasons.

What is true with regard to the composition of the orchestra is also largely true of those who composed the audience; familiar faces were everywhere; so it was on all hands very much like a meeting of old friends, very much valued friends, as no doubt every one present would say of those whose playing has so often charmed them.

Mr. Ernst Dohnanyi was the soloist, and the following programme was played:

Karl Maria von Weber,
Overture to "Euryanthe"
Ernst von Dohnanyi,
Concerts for Pianoforte in E minor, Op. 5.
Franz Schubert.
Ballet-Movement and Entr-acte from "Rosamunde"
Antonin Dvorak,
Symphony No. 5, in E minor, "From the New World," Op. 95.

Mr. Dohnanyi was heard here as late as last March with the Boston Orchestra in Beethoven's concerto in G major. It was his first appearance in Philadelphia, and his virile touch, his masterly technique, the variety of expression which he infused into his playing and a multitude of other good points stamped him at once as a player of exceptional attainments. Mr. Dohnanyi did nothing last night as an executant to lessen the opinion then formed of him, but he appeared in the dual role of a composer and the interpreter of his own work, and it is in his character of composer that the audience was chiefly interested.

His concerto shows that in the matter of technical knowledge and its relation to modern orchestration he is both ingenious and apt. The piano parts and the orchestral parts are evenly balanced and the movements are written with a dash and virility of purpose that are characteristic of the composer. The opening is particularly promising. Yet the promise in this case can hardly be said to have been fairly fulfilled. The main theme has a way of slipping away and losing itself, and before it is gathered up again much that seems purposeless, much that is noisy, fills out a considerable period, so considerable as to induce a feeling of weariness. If not an immediate success, as an augury for the future Mr. Dohnanyi's first concerto promises exceedingly well. The present one would be better worth listening to if compressed into two-thirds of its present volume.

The rest of the concert calls for little comment. Weber's overture to Euryanthe and Dvorak's "New World" symphony are pretty well known, and the more one hears the latter the more one wonders where the cotton belt comes in and why the composer might not as well have drawn his inspiration from the highlands of Scotland or the atmosphere of Bayreuth. The only light touch to what must be characterized as a somewhat heavy programme was the ballet music and entr'acte from Schubert's "Rosamunde," delightfully and felicitously played by the orchestra.

To-morrow the series of Wednesday evening concerts begins, when Miss Gertrude May Stein will be the soloist. She will sing Raff's aria, "Traum Konig," and Adriano's aria from "Rienzi." The symphony will be Schumann's No. 2 in C major.

The North American
Daily Advertiser
and United States Gazette

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 1900

VOL. CXXX No. 41

VON DOHNANYI MAKES HIS DEBUT IN PHILADELPHIA

Pianist-Composer Heard With the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Academy.

MUSIC SEASON OPENED

Director Gericke and Musicians Given a Hearty Reception. Second Concert Wednesday.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra may be said to have formally opened the local musical season with last night's concert at the Academy of Music. To lend the occasion an additional promise of interest, Mr. Ernest Von Dohnanyi was noted in the programme for a first performance here of his pianoforte concerto in E minor, op. 5. The numbers allotted the orchestra were the Weber "Euryanthe," overture; ballet movement and entr'acte from Schubert's "Rosamunde," and the Dvorak symphony, No 5, in E minor, "From the New World," op. 95.

The welcome to Mr. Gericke and the musicians under his direction was one calculated to arouse that which goes to awaken the best of response, a response that reached its climax of absorption and interest in the second movement of the symphony. In the instance of this movement, as in the opening one, the beauty of finish in detail and the admirable espouse resulting in that rare quality of spontaneity, went to make the performance a notable one. While the young composer, like death, chooses all seasons as his own, the beginning of the musical one is the time which assures him the safest welcome. At this early period of musical activities, when neither tempers nor receptive faculties are inclined to inflammation from exacting demands. There is a warmth less simulated than sometimes comes later.

To pronounce upon the outcome of Mr. Von Dohnanyi's future as a composer would from this single evidence of his talent be unjust, and, aside from this, his musical and musicianly performance of the concerto atoned in no small measure for the impression which it left. As might be expected, the work is marked by the enthusiasm and the exuberance of youth and an intention to make the orchestra as continuously as possible in evidence—a trait not dissociated from the two first named.

The thematic material is in no case strikingly original, and in the general working out of his subject matter he is all too frequently prone to weaken, rather than strengthen his ideas, by a lack of balance between the solo instruments and the ponderous tone masses that he allots the orchestra. A Tschaikowsky may allow himself such a privilege, but a Tschaikowsky would choose other methods in accomplishing his results than Mr. Dohnanyi, of whose admiration of the great Russian one is not left long in ignorance. It is an ambitious work, one full of enthusiasm, the achievement of a musical writer of poetic temperament and of study.

But the thematic material first of all, quite aside from any incoherence and extravagance possibly to be eliminated by years and experience, is scarcely reassuring. The orchestral support under Mr. Gericke was thoroughly sympathetic.

At the close of the concerto Mr. Von Dohnanyi was recalled three times by the audience, a tribute, perhaps, equally to his accomplishments as a pianist, and the pompously effective climax in the finale.

The second evening concert by the Boston Orchestra, which will take place at the Academy of Music, is announced for Wednesday evening, with Miss Gertrude May Stein as soloist.

WILLIAM ARMSTRONG.

The Philadelphia Press

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 1900.

PHILADELPHIA.

DVORAK AND DOHNANYI.

The "New World" Symphony and a Very "New" Concerto in Contrast.

"How heavily these youngsters score nowadays," Wagner once remarked with the easy air of the conservative whose hand was always evenly laid on the orchestral choirs. How heavily, indeed, particularly when the composer is the hero of what might be called the modern hammer-klavier school and writes a concerto for the piano after his own heart and to suit his own muscle and his own amazing technique, which strains neither at gnats nor camels, but takes them all at a rush and with a fury that is equal to all things, even to sheer noise for the sake of it. In view of the interpretation of the Dohnanyi concerto in E minor, his Opus 5, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the composer-executant at the Academy of Music last evening, it was well that Mr. Gericke gave the beautiful symphony No. 5, in E minor, "From the New World," by Dvorak, since it had a tranquilizing effect, restored one to a balanced appreciation of this great orchestra's virtuosity and left the reassuring impression of intelligible utterance as well as high artistic intent on the part of the composer, and of the splendid interpretative skill of the band and its leader.

By contrast, as it were, Dvorak seemed faint-hearted when Dohnanyi's impetuosity of utterance for the solo instrument and orchestra was brought out, for the young composer's work bourgeons with constant effort at stunning rather than at attracting by a sweet reasonableness. Possessing amazing technical skill, with great powers of endurance, able to hammer out a heavy-footed phrase with titanic power and then turn a graceful thought with crisp nonchalance, Dohnanyi has written a concerto, for himself largely, which has entirely too much to say and says it at times with a thickness of utterance which, if it bespeaks the very crowding of effects clear in themselves, at the same time suggests the muddy vigor of a brook in flood. The concerto lasts fully forty-five minutes and, beginning adagio maestoso, has a tendency to the pompous to the very end, with a marked lack of contrasts. Technical difficulties abound, for the solo instrument particularly, and the work must be viewed as a tour de force to exploit Dohnanyi's own methods at the pianoforte. There is no question that it does this and that the composer captures his audience, but there is the "still small voice" in art that after all must be recognized before the higher levels of achievement are reached.

Aside from the symphony and concerto, the orchestra gave agreeable readings of Weber's "Euryanthe" overture and Schubert's "Rosamunde" music. The wait of ten minutes before the symphony is an innovation that should be persisted in. Too often the Boston Symphony programs have been gone through with on the quick-lunch plan, in a manner calculated to give musical indigestion to the most case-hardened. On Wednesday evening the first concert of the second series is given, with the following program: Overture, "The Roman Carnival;" Berlioz's aria, "Traum Koenig," Raff; "Esclarmonde," orchestra suite, Massenet; Adriane's aria from "Rienzi," Wagner; Symphony No. 2, in C major, Schumann; soloist, Miss Gertrude May Stein.

The Times

PHILADELPHIA, NOVEMBER 6, 1900.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

The Boston Orchestra Opens the Season With Dohnanyi as Soloist.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under William Gericke, gave the first concert of its sixteenth season here at the Academy of Music last night, with the usual brilliant audience. The principal feature of the programme was a new piano concerto by Ernst Dohnanyi, the Hungarian pianist, who himself played the solo part. It is a prize composition written for a competition in Vienna only the year before last. It is very long, and very modern, in the disregard of symmetrical proportion, in a frequent vagueness and naturally in certain obvious reminiscences, not so much in subject as in the orchestral treatment. But it has what is not characteristic of much very modern work, a fine poetic imagination and an unfailing fervor. It is a pianist's composition, in which the exploitation of the instrument is a conscious factor. The piano is always dominant, but while treated as a solo instrument, it is always in union with the orchestra, so that its effect is not separate from the ensemble. The long first movement was full of interest and charm. It is followed by a lovely andantino that is exceedingly graceful in the development of its theme and admirable in instrumentation, and the final movement, that develops into a tremendous climax, was played by Dohnanyi with such splendid power and clear cut brilliancy that it possibly made a greater impression than its intrinsic musical value wholly justified. But the work is entirely interesting and beautiful. It is too late to complain now that concertos are not written after the old forms. It is much if they are written with the artistic feeling and elevation that this young Hungarian displays and that give value to his extraordinary technical invention and skill. The concerto, with the lovely "Euryanthe" overture preceding and the two movements from Schubert's "Rosamunde" following it, really made a satisfying concert, and after all this Dvorak's E minor symphony seemed more than ever long. It is the symphony called "From the New World," with which concert-goers should be reasonably familiar, and it need not be said that it was admirably played. The orchestra will give the opening concert of the second series to-morrow afternoon. The symphony will be Schumann's in C major, and Miss Stein will be the soloist.

THE RECORD

Nos. 917 and 919 Chestnut Street.

Philadelphia, November 6, 1900.

Dohnanyi's Playing of His Own Concerto.

The young Hungarian pianist, Ernst von Dohnanyi, scored a great popular hit at the initial Boston Symphony Orchestra concert of the season at the Academy of Music, last evening, playing his own Concerto in E minor in brilliant style. Perhaps his youthfulness increased his artistic impression; although, despite a tendency to touch the keys too hard, he must be acknowledged an admirable executionist. The Concerto called for some noisy work at times, the solo part being unwisely written against a loud orchestra. The work is not notable for any significant musical contents, but is clever in instrumentation, pretentious in effects and showy in technique, ending with a most theatric finale. The andantino ending the choral episode in the third movement were its most enjoyable feats of writing, and it was sweetly melodious, by transitions, throughout. Dohnanyi's young wife, wedded just ere he left Europe, sat in one of the boxes.

---

6 Nov 7

Baltimore American.

FIRST CONCERT BY THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA.

A New Concerto by Mr. Ernst von Dohnanyi Played by the Young Composer.

Whenever there is a fall election in town the Boston Symphony Orchestra manages to hit the date for its opening concert. Last night, the beginning of its sixteenth season in Baltimore, was no exception. Away from "the tumult and the shouting," safely housed in Music Hall, a fine audience assembled to enjoy one of the inimitable performances Mr. Gericke gives us once a month. Except the bursting of one firecracker, there was no sound to disturb the quiet of the big hall. The concert was opened with the overture to Mozart's "Magic Flute," the greatest overture of that sweet and smooth composer.

The novelty on the program was a concerto for piano in E minor (opus 5), by Mr. Ernst von Dohnanyi, the young Hungarian pianist, who made such a fine impression in one concert here last season, and the soloist was the composer himself. Mr. Dohnanyi is a young man of great promise, and it was natural to expect to find evidences of youth and merit in his concerts, and the expectation was realized. The first movement abounds in themes, but they are not developed at length, the composer having a tendency to hasten on to exhibit his technique and speed, which are brilliant and amazing. One is constantly looking for some thoughts which he thinks should be embodied in a work of this kind, but his desire remains unsatisfied. There is music in its way, but it does not go deep enough. The work is modern, however, and there is much in it to admire. Mr. Dohnanyi has constructed a real concerto. The piano part is not predominant. In fact, one is tempted to say the orchestral part is the better. It is not at least a mere accompaniment, as in other works of this kind.

The second movement is the best, the orchestra being superior here to the piano, but the same tendency is observed, viz., to rush on into technical difficulties, which are overcome with great dash and success.

It is in the third movement, however, that the composer gives himself the fullest swing. He sets severe tasks before himself, which he accomplished with wonderful speed, playing against a full orchestra, and surprises his hearers by his amazing cleverness and brilliancy in execution. As a digital performance the closing movement is exceedingly striking, but as music that touches the emotional part of the hearer it is not satisfying. The Hungarian fire and dash with which it was done was stirring.

The concert is a prize work, of whose merits Mr. Gericke was one of the judges, and, considering Mr. Dohnanyi's youth, it is highly creditable.

Schubert's ballet movement and entre' acte from "Rosamunde" was soothing and sweet after the dynamics of Mr. Dohnanyi, and it was played in a soft and refined manner, just suited to its character.

Mr. Gericke reserved his best for the last—Beethoven's immortal Fifth Symphony. It is late in time to attempt to say anything new of this great production. The older it becomes the more majestic and satisfying it is to the hearer, especially when it is interpreted by Mr. Gericke's band. The symphony was played with a breadth and dignity that were inspiring. The sweep and vastness of the great, slow movement were brought out in a profoundly impressive manner. The attendance was very large.

The Kneisel quartet will give a concert this afternoon at three o'clock sharp in the main hall of the Peabody Institute.

THE SU

BALTIMORE, WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1900

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT

Thoroughly Enjoyable Performance Begins Season Of 1900-1901.

The annual period of artistic conquest which the Boston Symphony Orchestra engages in has recommenced, and beautifully and most auspiciously with the first of this season's series of fine concerts given last night at Music Hall. The time has long since passed when the tournees of the Boston Orchestra were less than triumphal, and this, the first concert of the year, continues its great traditions and splendid achievements.

The unusual character of the musical performance reflects itself in the audience in many different ways. Music has been adopted (fortunately or unfortunately) by fashion, and it is the mode to enjoy the symphony concerts. However, fashionable patronage in this particular case interferes in no way with the serious enjoyment of the musical amateur and his more critical professional brother. As features of local musical life these concerts have become indispensible, and the distinguished audiences which they attract shows their general appreciation. The program was as follows:

Mozart.....Overture to "The Magic Flute"
Ernst von Dohnanyi,
Concerto for Pianoforte in E minor, Op. 5 (First time).
Schubert,
Ballet-Movement and Entr'acte from Rosamunde"
Betthoven.....Symphony No. 5, in C minor, Op. 67

The Fifth Symphony of Beethoven has been especially adopted in Baltimore because it has been heard in this city more frequently than any other Beethoven symphony. This familiarity nevertheless increases its popularity.

The hearer is thereby enabled to stand off and view the colossal proportions of the marvelous movement without getting lost in the details which always engage the attention of the unfamiliar hearer.

The symbolism of the great work has been so frequently discussed that unanimity as to its real significance has long since ceased to exist. Like all the works of art, it can have no absolute significance, and it must therefore mean one thing to one hearer and something quite different to another.

Mr. Gericki's reading of the symphony was conservative in the extreme, but if he did not raise the hearer to a great pitch of enthusiasm, he at least convinced by his dignity and sincerity. As an instrument for the expression of the director's ideas the orchestra was almost perfect.

Comparison was inevitably challenged with a performance of the Fifth Symphony by the Theodore Thomas Orchestra several years ago. This is usually spoken of as one of the greatest musical entertainments of recent years, and the playing of the symphony was the most memorable part of the concert. Comparisons are always difficult and generally unfair, but in some way or other the concert of a few years ago aroused greater enthusiasm.

The piano concerto of the soloist Dohnanyi was awaited with some interest. This young artist appeared with the Boston organization last year, and had made an unmistakably pleasant impression. He proved himself to be, on that occasion, a most engaging and accomplished pianist. He had made a reputation in Europe, and especially in England, as an interpreter of his own concerto, but he discreetly packed his own work away out of sight during his first brief concert tour in America. Last night, however, it was unpacked and shaken out before a Baltimore audience.

Its texture is wonderfully fine, although the material is somewhat motley. For such a young artist, the performance of his own composition under such favorable circumstances is unusual. But, in the words of a popular entertainer, "He makes his own music; let him use it." Unquestionably the work made a favorable impression, and the generous applause was not undeserved.

Reckless enthusiasm like Dohnanyi's could only be found in a young artist, but in spite of the noise and bluster there is an undercurrent of fine musical sentiment. The composition is rather descriptive than definite, because the ideas are frequently merely suggested and not clearly worked out. It is much too long and there are great lapses, but there are also some exquisite moments.

The concerto was a prize composition and the one of 72 similar works which gained the most votes. The hardiest imagination falters at the thought of 72 piano concertos being presented to five helpless judges. The acres of scrawled manuscripts and the miles and miles of peggios through which they had to plunge must arouse sympathy. However, Dahnanyi bore off the palm; but whether his work has permanent value or not cannot be determined by one hearing.

A number of new faces were visible in the orchestra, but the character of tone and technique were about the same as in former years. Possibly the wood-wind is less secure than usual.

The next concert will be given on December 11.

[35]

THE EVENING TELEGRAPH.
CHARLES E. WARBURTON,
FOUNDER.
TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 1900.

First Boston Symphony Orchestra Concert of the Season.

A fairly full house welcomed the Boston Orchestra at the Academy of Music last evening, on the occasion of the opening concert of the first series to be given this season. The present is the sixteenth season in this city, the twentieth in the history of the Orchestra, and the second year of its performance under Mr. Wilhelm Gericke's direction. The programme on the whole was not up to the level of interest expected from a concert organization declared in its own home to be "the finest symphony orchestra in the world." The minor numbers were the most attractive and could only be considered as compensating for the somewhat tedious character of the concerto and the symphony which constituted the pieces de resistance, an arrangement in reverse order of what is usually regarded as a good programme.

The special feature of the occasion was the introduction of Mr. Ernst von Dohnanyi as a composer and piano-forte soloist. Mr. Dohnanyi, who made his first debut here last season, is still in appearance in the first flush of youth, and that the Boston Symphony Orchestra should honor him as a composer by making his concerto the leading feature of its first concert this season and accompanying him in his renditon of the work, is an honor which will give the young musician a very high standing in the artistic world. As a pianist Mr. Dohnanyi demonstrated last evening his full mastery of the instrument. His command of the keyboard must be very nearly perfect, and it is difficult to believe that the force of technical accomplishment can further go. In his liquid runs and rippling trills he suggests the playing of Joseffy, and his manner at the piano further calls to mind the sympathetic sway and swing of the elder master's performance.

Mr. Dohnanyi's contribution to the programme was a concerto for the piano-forte in E minor, marked as Op. 5, and given here for the first time. It is a brilliant work, marked by strong passages, showing high ambitions, and dashing, not to say overbold, courage on the part of the youthful composer. He attempts to achieve very grand effects, and it is to be said that he fairly justifies his ambitions in his piano score, the third movement of the concerto, really a magnificent composition of massive proportions. The whole effect of the concerto is rather dry, and its length makes it a little patience-trying, as concertos are very apt to be; but it was more than redeemed by the grand sweep of the final movement, which carried it to a triumphant conclusion amid the overwhelming plaudits of the enthusiastic audience. Mr. Dohnanyi was recalled again and again, and the great assembly of the best people of Philadelphia's musical circles accepted him as a composer of great promise and as a performer very near to the highest rank.

The one altogether delightful number of the programme was from Von Weber's overture from "Euryanthe," a charmingly melodious composition imbued with the sweet spiritual characteristics of Von Weber's highest inspirations, and at the same time discovering a breadth, scope, and variety of resource greater than is usually found in his works. That it was perfectly rendered, its last qualities of refinement and delicacy beautifully brought out, is a comment taken to be granted. The same may be said with regard to the rendition of Franz Schubert's Ballet Movement and Entre'acte, from "Rosamunde," though the work itself proved something of a disappointment. The ballet music is pretty and vivacious, but trifling, and lacking in that quality of singing melody which is the one characteristic for which Schubert is especially distinguished. The concluding number was the Symphony "From the New World," by Antonin Dvorak, a work which has been often heard here and often commented on—so often, indeed, that in a concert programme of the very highest character it is beginning to have something the savor of a back number.

ERNEST VON DOHNANYI
The pianist who appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night.

The Evening Bulletin
Published Daily, except Sunday, at No. 606 CHESTNUT STREET, Philadelphia, by Tuesday, November 6, 1900.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Opening of the Musical Season by Mr. Gericke's Famous Band.

The musical season of 1900-01 was formally opened last night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy, and from now until April next event will follow event, culminating naturally in the season of grand opera, which is to commence shortly before Christmas.

Last night the house seemed to be filled with the customary crowd of well-dressed, intellectual-looking people which has marked these concerts for years past. While the concerts have assumed the shape of "functions" and society has set the stamp of its approval on them, they nevertheless attract those who are first artistic (or wish to be so considered), and, indeed, stand for much that represents the culture of the city.

When Mr. Gericke appeared he received a hearty welcome in spite of the fact that the program he had prepared was not particularly enticing. Weber's overture to Euryanthe was the first number, and it was given with much spirit, although the work might well be relegated to the kindly oblivion which the opera itself has earned. Schubert's ballet music and entr'acte from his opera of "Rosamunde" was undoubtedly the gem of the program. The ballet music might easily have suggested to Berlioz his "dance of the sylphs." It has the dreamy character, the delicate, lace-like quality of the later work and its rendition was nothing short of exquisite. The boldness and virility of the entr'acte served to emphasize the tender beauty of the other.

Although Dvorak's symphony "From the New World" has been heard repeatedly here, it cannot be said that it improves on acquaintance. It certainly lacks the inspiration which marks, for instance, his third symphony. The "New World" symphony was written in 1893, a short time after the Bohemian composer reached New York to take charge of a musical conservatory there. He had not found the atmosphere of America, and was scarcely able to do justice to the theme he had selected. It may be true enough that the only national music to which we can lay claim is the negro melody, but the themes he introduced can only be regarded as plantation songs, interpreted by a Slavic tongue, and therefore somewhat difficult to recognize. Nor is the rustic pipe exactly the instrument best fitted to announce a darky melody, and it is safe to suppose that if the talented composer had not deemed it necessary to saw out by main force a tribute to his new home so soon after reaching these shores he would have written something at once more characteristic and more worthy of his theme. The largo is undoubtedly a lovely bit of writing, but in the other movements one misses the fiery czardas which so often gave him inspiration in his other compositions.

When the soloist of the evening, Mr. Dohnanyi, appeared here in March last he was hailed as a great pianist. He was simple, direct and sincere in his methods; he did not pose, and exhibited none of the objectionable attributes of the would-be virtuoso. Last night he played, for the first time, a concerto of his own composition, and he was not altogether well advised in so doing. There have been great composers at twenty-three, but the number is not large, and it would have been better had Dohnanyi written his concerto and put it away for a few years and then when experience, study and mere length of life had brought him knowledge, perception and increased technical skill, he might safely have polished up his youthful effort and would doubtless have more reason to congratulate himself than he has to-day. As a matter of fact, the work is too long, because of the lack of something to express, too incoherent and too noisy. The composer naturally had not a great deal to say, but could not stop when he had said it. Yet the work is far from lacking merit. There are passages of genuine power, flashes of genius which speak of fruition yet to come. The influence of Beethoven is evident, although the work is more modern than classical, and if the artist-composer will decide to interpret to-day and compose after awhile there need be no fear that his ultimate success as a creator will equal his undoubted success as an executant.

The next concert will take place on Wednesday, when Schumann's second symphony, together with a suite by Massenet, will be given and Miss Gertrude Stein will sing.

Philadelphia Inquirer
TUESDAY - - - NOVEMBER 6, 1900

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

It Begins Its Sixteenth Local Season at the Academy of Music Last Evening

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. William Gericke, opened its sixteenth local season at the Academy of Music last evening in the presence of the large and brilliant audience which the concerts of this great organization never fail to attract. There were four numbers on the program and of these the most noteworthy if not the most enjoyable was a concerto for the pianoforte by Ernst von Dohnanyi, which had not before been performed in this city.

It proved to be an interesting and beautiful work, written in the manner of Rubinstein, a little too long drawn out, perhaps, but full of good ideas ingeniously, felicitously and effectively expressed and showing very considerable skill in the handling alike of the orchestra and of the obligato instrument. It is too important and elaborate a composition to admit of its being fairly judged on a first hearing, but it leaves a distinctly agreeable impression, and probably most of those who heard it last night would be glad of an opportunity at an appropriately removed period of hearing it again.

It was played to perfection by the composer. Dohnanyi, as those know who heard him last season, is both a brilliant performer and a consummate artist. He has plenty of power, but that is far from being the beginning and end of his equipment. He plays also with admirable delicacy and refinement, evoking a lovely quality of tone and interpreting the musical idea and sentiment with the utmost sincerity and eloquence. He was deservedly much applauded and a number of inconsiderate people, who apparently did not realize the arduous character of the task which he had just performed, the concerto being long and extremely difficult, wanted him to play again. This imposition of Mr. Gerickes' strict rule against allowing encores spared him.

The other numbers on the program were Weber's Euryanthe overture, the ballet music from Schubert's "Rosamunde" and Dvorak's poetic and romantic symphony entitled "From the New World," with its wild, weird melodies and its striking suggestion of the melancholy sentiment which broods over the Western prairies. It and the other selections were beautifully played with that refinement of manner, that justice of balance, that clarity of phrasing, and exquisite finish of detail which constantly distinguish the work of Mr. Gericke's players. If anything, all the well-known excellences of the orchestra were more than ever conspicuously displayed. Certainly it was never heard to better advantage.

It will give a second concert at the Academy to-morrow evening, when the program will comprise Berlioz's overture, "Carnival Romain Massenets Esclaronde" suite and Schumann's second symphony, and when Miss May Gertrude Stein will be the soloist.

Vol 3

THE MUSIC TRADE REVIEW

BOSTON'S LATEST TRIBUTE TO MUSIC.

ONE of the most brilliant affairs ever witnessed in Boston was the opening of the new Symphony Hall, October 15. The occasion will be one of the landmarks in musical history, and will surely be spoken of long and often. The hall itself is beautiful and refined to a degree and lovers of the great classic rejoiced to see that the medallion that formed the center of the framing of the stage was dedicated to Beethoven. The coloring is warm and genial, the aisles are broad, the seats are comfortable, and all seats are good; the acoustics seem to be all that acoustics should be, in short the hall is an admirable and fitting home for one of the world's greatest orchestras, the Boston Symphony. The splendid organ is also an equipmentof rare value.

The program included a choral by Bach, an address by Mr. Higginson, a poem by Owen Wister, and the Missa Solemnis in D of Beethoven. Gericke conducted. The solo singers were Clementine de Vere, Gertrude May Stein, Evan Williams, Joseph S. Baernstein. J. Wallace Goodrich was the organist, and the violin solo in the "Benedictus" was played by Kneisel.

The performance was admirable, taking into consideration the unwarrantable difficulty with which the Beethoven mass abounds. It is nothing new or original to say and to insist that Beethoven could not or did not write for the voice notwithstanding the great and imposing beauty of this work which lies in the masterful handling of the instruments, the thrilling climaxes, the beautiful melodies, and the nobility of thought throughout. Gericke was masterly in his control which brought out the finest nuances and the broadest effects. Wister's poem would have been at a better advantage printed as souvenir of the occasion, but it was deadly dull as it was.

The audience consisted of the brains, culture, talent and society of Boston. Seldom is such an aggregation of eminent people seen. The hall and the orchestra are regarded generally as a living monument to Henry L. Higginson, and his example should emulate others to act in the same direction.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1900.

The statement that the Boston Symphony Orchestra is worthy of a more exclusive hall than the auditorium of the Academy of Music should be accepted by the men interested in the broad and public spirited sense in which it was written. No one individual was blamed for the lack of a suitable hall, and there also was nothing unpardonable in urging the wealthy residents to unite in some effort to arouse in Brooklyn a greater pride and a more generous support in local enterprises. As for some of you musicians and managers in Brooklyn, do think on the Talmage theme, "Cheerfulness," and do not in the future take yourselves so seriously. Brooklyn is a mighty good place, but it is not the centre of this universe.

◉ ▲ ◉

Following its concert in Manhattan, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the first concert in Brooklyn this season at the Academy of Music, Friday evening, November 9. Dohnányi will be the soloist. This will be the program:

Overture, The Roman Carnival, op. 9.....Berlioz
Concerto for piano, in E minor (first time).....Dohnányi
Ballet Movement and Entr'acte, from Rosamunde.....Schubert
Symphony No. 5, in E minor, From the New World, op. 95..Dvorák

◉ ▲ ◉

ERNST VON DOHNANYI had a narrow escape of it before leaving Hungary for the United States. The day previous to his departure he was surprised to learn that he might be summoned for military service. You may judge of his consternation! By the evening matters had cleared sufficiently for the Hungarian pianist to rush around to the residence of his fiancée, explain matters, rush for a marriage permit, wire for a cabin on the Campania, get married and sail for America. The whole business was conducted at such a breathless tempo that Madame Von Dohnanyi—a good looking, musical girl of Budapest—naively remarked: "Why, it was all so sudden that when I woke up I was in New York." Young Von Dohnanyi is a man of actions, piano and otherwise.

* * *

Baltimorean's Gift to Poor Students.

J. B. NOEL WYATT, a well-known Baltimore architect, has recently purchased forty season tickets for the series of concerts to be given in Baltimore by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with a view of disposing of them at much reduced rates to students of music who cannot afford to pay the regular prices. The tickets are to be distributed through two musical institutions. This is a worthy act of kindliness in line with the annual custom of H. L. Higginson, of Boston, who performed a similar service to the students of music in that city.—Philadelphia Record.

Ernst von Dohnanyi.

Ernst Von Doh... is to be the soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at their first evening concert in this city on Thursday evening next. On Monday and Tuesday he plays with the orchestra in Baltimore and Philadelphia; on Friday evening he will be the soloist with the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society. In these different cities he will play his own concerto. Seats are now on sale at Schuberth's music store for his two recitals which are to be given in Mendelssohn Hall on Wednesday and Saturday afternoons, November 14 and 17.

DOHNANYI.

By Floersheim and Hale.

THE first performance of Ernst von Dohnanyi's Concerto for piano was the event last Saturday night at the Boston Symphony concert in Boston. Music criticism must necessarily be of very uncertain quantity when two authorities like Otto Floersheim and Philip Hale can take such diametrically opposite views on the same thing on a first performance each, as the following parallel columns will show:

Otto Floersheim in "The Musical Courier," March 14, 1900.

BERLIN, February 13, 1900.

The first appearance here of Ernst von Dohnányi was doubly interesting, because he created lately quite a furore in England and through the fact that he played his own piano concerto, which won for him the Vienna Boesendorfer prize, in close competition with the Böhm concerto, of which I spoke at length before.

Now that I have heard Dohnányi's work I am, for once, ready to agree with the vox populii. The first E minor movement of this work, which received the prize, for as such it was intended as a concerto in one movement, is as full of ideas as an egg is full of meat. They are not all of equal importance, but they are new, and never commonplace. The solo instrument is treated with consummate virtuosity, and what struck me most favorably is the fact that Dohnányi really found a way out of the old fashioned piano technic of the Beethoven trill and scale kind, nor is his the Liszt brilliant, but frequently empty, passage work, nor yet the habnebuechene technic, with some almost insurmountable difficulties, of the Brahms piano concertos, but he really wrote something pianistically new, which is legitimate and at the same time highly effective.

The treatment of the orchestra also shows rare skill and an excellent sense of color. Where piano solo work is concerned, the band never drowns the soloist, and yet the accompaniment is not sparingly scored. Where the orchestra has something to say for itself the instrumentation often waxes very brilliant. In its present shape the first movement, however, is a trifle too long. The two subsequently written movements are in much more concise form. The andantino in A minor is the weaker of the two and becomes more interesting only when the ...gs in unison take up the ...ipal theme transposed to ...e major, and the piano weaves all around it a brilliant counterpoint.

The final vivace moves in sprightly waltz rhythms and is pianistically very effective. Toward the close a choral theme, which plays also an important part in the first movement, is brought in again and helps to bring the work to a logical ending. For the concerto of a composer twenty-two years of age I consider it one of the most promising and most talented efforts I have ever encountered. The mastery over the technical resources of composition is remarkable in one so young.

Equally pleased I was with Dohnányi as a pianist. That he is musical to the tips of his fingers you may easily imagine from what I say above. His touch is a very crisp one, and so rich in dynamic variety that through these two qualities alone it becomes delightful. The technic is one of the most reliable I ever heard and exceedingly brilliant, without being showy or ostentatious. Dohnányi scored immediate success and recognition, both as a composer and a pianist, with last night's fashionable audience.

Philip Hale in "Boston Sunday Journal," November 4, 1900.

Mr. Dohnányi's concerto took the prize offered by Bösendorfer (a piano firm) in 1898, when seventy-two concertos were submitted to the jury—Messrs. Epstein, Gericke, Grünfeld, Leschetizky and Rosenthal. Mr. Dohnányi's concerto received 706 votes, Mr. Brandts-Buys', 607; Eduard Behm's, 598. The work was first played March 28, 1899, by the composer at Vienna. He played it at a Richter concert in London October 23, 1899, and at a Philharmonic concert in Berlin, under Nikisch, February 12, 1900.

Prize compositions are generally viewed with suspicion, and there is just reason for this view. The composer, young or old, girds up his loins and proposes deliberately to astonish. He tells everything he knows without regard to space or time; he keeps the dear public constantly in view; and in the finale he sees his apotheosis, he sees himself ascending to the sky, laurel-crowned, while applauding thousands gape at the ascension. This concerto of Mr. Dohnányi, for instance, is a manufactured, swollen, bombastic thing. The introduction is merely a reminiscence of a mood of Brahms, and it awakens anticipation of—more Brahms. Occasionally in the work there are flashes of well cultivated talent; but as a whole, how preposterous, how windy, how meretricious is this concerto that takes forty-three minutes in actual performance, without the count of breathing spells! The themes are for the most part of short breath, the development is chippy; the orchestration is muddy, or inconsequential, or laboriously ineffective, and the concerto as a whole is a frank appeal to the crowd. Mr. Dohnányi played with speed, force and general abandon. I can understand how by popular vote —706 out of 1,911 votes—he obtained the prize; for the crowd is always easily convinced by speed, noise, the use of pulsatile instruments when the attention might otherwise flag, and assurance. So last night there was frenetic applause, in which the orchestra joined to ... gree that I feared for their work in the succeeding piece.

The same concerto will be played here to-morrow night. It will be difficult for THE MUSICAL COURIER to anticipate the performance, but the editor of this paper went to Boston to hear the work, and its performance there obliges us to state that we agree with Mr. Floersheim's views, and yet there will be others who will agree with Mr. Hale.

By the way, Mr. Hale has resigned the editorship of the Boston Musical Record.

Old Boston Music Hall.

HAD a record been taken of the sound effects produced within the walls of old Music Hall during the forty-eight years of its existence, a repertory of the world's best music might be recalled. In striking contrast might also be heard the curious cries and exclamations aroused at baby shows, the cackling of poultry, the barking of many dogs and the cheers that go with wrestling and sparring contests. Men unnumbered have held forth in political conventions assembled, "Pointing with pride to the past," and "Viewing the future with alarm," and nominations have been seconded amid rip-roaring applause.

The hall has had its tragedies. It is remembered how one man lost his life while attempting to enter one of the upper windows against the will of the faction in control at the time of the Democratic convention in 1896. The death of one woman is directly traced to overwork at the hospital fair held in 1873, and many have caught severe colds and worse from the draught that ever blew in through the old side doors leading to the corridors.

But Music Hall has had its little comedies, too. For instance, the audience at a concert given many years ago was amused when Sauret, the violinist, in bowing his appreciation of the applause sent up after his excellent performance, fell over backward and was lost to view behind the raised platform on which he had been standing when last seen.

There was some unexpected amusement again when Madame Rudersdorff began singing one piece while the accompanying pianist proceeded with another. Only last season the Saturday evening symphony gathering was moved to smile when the attendant, who had come on to take Mr. Schueker's harp away, picked up some money from the floor and gave it to the nearest first violin—money that everybody but the attendant knew Mr. Adamowski had dropped from his pocket as he reached for his handkerchief. Music Hall has gone the way that all things go that have outlived their usefulness, and is now being ripped and remodelled to meet the demands of the hour. No sentiment is allowed.

* * *

In the cause of Music Hall's coming into being may be found an example of the uses of abuses, for at that time Boston people were very much alive to the abuse of the enthusiasm over Jennie Lind, which led to the Fitchburg station concert in October, 1850, that bonnet crushing, woman fainting, man protesting event made possible by the oversold condition of the hall. Musical interest ran high. One man had paid $650 for a choice of seats at one of her concerts, and others managed to get in for $5. With a growing interest in orchestral and choral music, it was granted that a new hall was needed.

To Dr. J. Baxter Upham is accredited the honor of having been the one to whom the success of promoting the enterprise was due. The idea was first suggested by him to the Musical Fund Society, an organization which was devoted to giving concerts for the mutual benefit of the members. For some reason, however, the society did not see fit to take hold of the proposition. The idea was warmly received some time later when put before the Harvard Musical Association. It was talked over at a dinner, and inside of sixty days the $100,000 stock was subscribed for the building. Among the names of prominent shareholders are found those of Charles C. Perkins, who presented the hall with the statue of Beethoven; R. E. Apthorp, J. B. Upham, George Derby and J. S. Dwight. The Hon. C. P. Curtis was the first president of the board of directors.

George Snell was the architect. The plan was that it should be "grand in its proportions, chaste and noble in style." Whatever may now be said as to the degree of success in reaching this mark, it can be surmised that it was something fine in its day from the following enthusiastic description which appeared at the time of the hall's completion, November, 1852:

"It is truly superb, vast and magnificent in design and completely successful in execution, exhibiting genius in the mechanical conception and great practical skill in the mechanical details. It is 65 feet in height (15 feet higher than the Metropolitan Hall, New York), its length is 130 feet, its width 78 feet, and it is perfectly harmonious in its proportion. It has two tiers of light galleries on the sides, with room for only three rows of seats, with two galleries on the end more spacious. On the opposite end is a space for a large orchestra and an organ, which is entirely hidden from the audience behind elegant lattice-work.

"The seats are stuffed, with backs and arm rests, and covered with blue and white moreen, each seat being numbered on the top of the back by the insertion of a piece of ivory with a black figure. The interior is brilliantly lighted by a flood of gas from above and around the cornices, and the effect upon the audience is really remarkable. The hall has three very spacious entrances, with wide corridors around it, with side doors at short distances from each other, so that it could be emptied of 2,500 people in three minutes. It is beautifully frescoed, with panel work in gilt frames. The ceiling is superb and the ventilation perfect."

* * *

Before Music Hall's day there were, of course, other halls, the Odeon, Melodeon, Meonian, Boylston, Tremont Temple (two or three generations of temples ago), Old Boston Theatre and the illustrious Faneuil Hall.

Associated with these several halls is a story of progress in musical work which may be said to have begun early in the century. At the time of the beginning Boston was what John S. Dwight called a "musical wilderness." What singing there was in any volume arose from church choirs and old-time singing schools, which were nourished by prosaic Puritanic psalm tunes. The Philo-Harmonic Orchestra appeared as one of the first organizations of its kind. The concerts were few and irregular, however. As for pianos about town, Mr. Dwight says there could not have been over fifty, if that many, in the entire population of 6,000 families in Boston at that time.

Gottlieb Graupner was Boston's first teacher of any account. He was very well liked, and he appears to have gone along on the principle of spreading music about him, that those who heard might do likewise.

In 1815 the Handel and Haydn Society came into being. It was practically organized from the Park street choir. When three years old the society gave "The Messiah," with a chorus of 100, of which ten were women. The orchestra included twelve pieces. In the next few years the Philo-Harmonic, Musical Institute of Boston, Boston Academy of Music, Brigade Band, Philharmonic, Musical Fund and Harvard Musical societies were formed. Harvard had also its Pierian Sodality.

There were many chamber concerts in those days, and not a few in halls. Beethoven's Fifth Symphony was first given in Boston in 1840. A decline in interest for the higher class of music seems to have set in shortly after that, Moore's melodies and old Scotch and English ballads having the popular preference among the societies. The classic music was again uppermost, however, and the various organizations presented programs of Beethoven, Mozart, Haydn and Mendelssohn. To George J. Webb is accredited much influence for the return to the higher class of music. In 1847 a troupe of Italian opera singers made their appearance, presenting, among other pieces, Verdi's "Ernani." Among the members of this troupe were Signora Todesco, Signors Perelli, Vita, Mme. Rainieri, Severi, F. Badiali, Mme. Truffli, Benedetti, Beneventono, Rosi, the Labordes, Dubreul and Salvi.

The Germania Orchestra, by its visit in 1850, exerted a strong influence upon the local societies, and the next year the Mendelssohn Quintet was organized of the following musicians: Aug. Fries, first violin; Rziha, second violin; Lehman and Thomas Ryan, violas; Wulf Fries, 'cello. There were many other organizations of greater or smaller sort, and by 1852 Boston was glad enough to have its new hall.

* * *

The announcement of the musical festival with which the hall would be opened was accompanied by the statement that the proceeds of the concert would be devoted to furnishing the hall with a suitable organ, which was, eventually, the great organ, pitilessly known since as "Jumbo." The Handel and Hayden, Musical Education, Musical Fund, Germania Serenade Band and the German Liedertafel societies contributed to the festival. Mme. Marietta Alboni, Sig. Sangiovanni, Sig. Rovero and Sig. Arditi were the chief artists of the occasion.

The Musical Fund Society gave "Zauberflote" overture, by Mozart; Weber's overture to "Oberon," and Beethoven's Andante from the Fifth Symphony.

The Handel and Haydn Society gave the "Hallelujah Chorus" from "The Mount of Olives," and, united with the Musical Education Society, gave the "Hallelujah Chorus" from "The Messiah" and "The Heavens Are Telling," from "The Creation."

The Germania Serenade Band gave "Gruss an der Vaterland," composed for the orchestra by Wittman.

Madame Alboni rendered two German songs, "Nachtlied," by Lenz, and "Der Jager Abschied," by Mendelssohn; "Canzone," from "La Fille du Regiment"; "Ciascum lo Dice," Donizetti, and Rondo Finale from "Cenerentola," and "Non Piu Mesta," by Rossini, were also on the program. A trio consisting of Madame Alboni, Sig. Sangiovanni and Sig. Rovero gave Rossini's "Ah Quel Calpa" from "Il Barbiere." The conductor of the festival was G. J. Webb; the organist, F. F. Mueller.

* * *

The Boston Herald of November 22, 1852, has the following account of the festival concert:

"The new Music Hall was opened on Saturday evening for the first time, to an immense audience, assembled to participate in the great musical festival that had been prepared for the opening night. The hall exceeds the expectations of everyone who has seen it. It is a grand and sumptuous affair. We have had nothing like it in Boston, and it may be long before we shall have another hall of equal extent, magnificence and beauty.

"The festival concert was in every respect a triumphant one, and gave unbounded satisfaction to as large and as fashionable an audience as was ever gathered within the walls of a concert room. The choruses by the Händel and Haydn and Musical Education societies were very effective, and the grand "Hallelujah Chorus" swelled through the spacious hall in uninterrupted grandeur. Alboni appeared to the greatest advantage. Her voice filled the hall completely and she gave unmingled satisfaction and delight. Mr. Arthurson and Sangiovanni were apologized for, on the ground of indisposition, and their absence caused some change on the program."

The first concert of the Germania Musical Society was given on the next Saturday evening, for which occasion the following was the program: Mme. Elise Sledenburg, prima soprano, from the Court Theatre of the Grand Duke of Schwerin, "first appearance in America"; Mme. Caroline Brandt, pianist, "first appearance in Boston;" Emanuel Klein, tenor, "from the Academy of Music, Amsterdam," "first appearance in America;" Alfred Jaell, pianist.

* * *

The following thirty years leading up to the organization of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1882 by H. L. Higginson, is full of most interesting musical events, in which Music Hall played the important part which was expected of it. Large and small societies contributed to the progress, and especially stimulating was the addition to the local artists of many from Germany. Even to those who came but to pass on, the local interest was much influenced. Many, too, went to Germany to study.

Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, known as "The Choral Symphony," was first given in Boston by the Handel and Haydn Society and the Germania Orchestra in 1853. The following year the former organization secured the services of Carl Zerrahn as conductor. He held that position for forty-one consecutive years, no doubt the longest period of service of the kind recorded by any musical conductor.

The Beethoven Festival, in 1856, at the dedication of Crawford's statue of Beethoven, presented by Mr. Perkins, was a notable event. Three instrumental movements of the Ninth Symphony were given, the soprano scena and aria from "Fidelio," by Mrs. J. H. Long; "Quartet in Canon," by Mrs. Wentworth, Mrs. Howard, Messrs. Low and Wetherbee; violin concerto, August Fries, and the "Hallelujah Chorus" from "The Mount of Olives." The donator played the piano part in "The Praise of Harmony." In May, 1857, the Handel and Haydn Society held a three days' festival after the manner of those given in Birmingham, England. In the early sixties the Mendelssohn Quintet Club was formed. At that time, Mr. Dwight observes, such music as "Mrs. McDonald, with Variations," had fallen into disuse. In 1861, at the outbreak of the Rebellion, a patriotic concert was given in which Dellinger's "Te Deum" and "The Hymn of Praise" were rendered. The jubilee concert of January 1, 1863, was a remarkable occasion. The proclamation of General Saxton to the freedmen of South Carolina was read by J. Quincy, Jr.; R. W. Emerson read a poem, and Dr. Holmes' "Army Hymn' was sung by Mr. Kreissman. The Philharmonic Orchestra, led by Mr. Zerrahn, with a chorus in charge of Mr. Lang, gave the overture from "Egmont," and solo and chorus from "The Hymn of Praise." The chorus from Mendelssohn's "Elijah," the "Hallelujah Chorus" from "The Messiah," and the overture from "William Tell" were also given.

* * *

The dedication of the great organ, November 2, 1863, with an ode by Charlotte Cushman, was a memorable event in Music Hall history. Selections from Bach, Händel, Palestrina, Mendelssohn, Lefebvre and Wely were given by the well-known organists J. K. Paine, G. W. Morgan, B. J. Lang, S. P. Tuckerman, Eugene Thayer and J. H. Wilcox. Madame Frohock is the only woman who performed in public upon the great organ. Madame Frohock is now a resident of Malden. At the time of its construction the Music Hall organ was regarded as one of the largest in the world. It had four manuals and pedals, with a command of eighty-nine registers, 5,474 pipes and 332 foot stops. A hall has been provided for it at Methuen, where its voice may be heard after its long rest since its removal in 1883 at the quarters hard by the graveyard adjoining the New England Conservatory of Music.

In 1865-66 the Guillmette troupe, composed of local talent, presented quite a number of operas in Music Hall, among them being "Don Pasquale," "Lucia de Lammermoor" and Mendelssohn s "Son and Stranger." At one time and another many propositions were suggested to make the hall more adaptable for presenting opera and drama, but none were ever found acceptable. The removal of the large organ was intended to give more room on the platform, and also increase the seating capacity of the auditorium, but the latter was decreased more by a changing in the system of seats than the additional room increased.

There was a great chorus by the children of the Boston public schools at the close of the war, conducted by Julius Eichberg, who at that time had charge of the school singing. It was an inspiring event, especially so to an ex-Confederate soldier, who arose from his seat behind the great clock and made a short speech that was well applauded. Mr. Eichberg's hymn, "To Thee, My Country," was given.

In May, 1865, a week's festival was held, with a chorus of from 500 to 700 voices and about 100 instruments. Among the pieces given were Nicolai's "Festival Overture," with chorus; Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," and "The Creation," "Israel in Egypt" and "Elijah," and Schubert's Symphony in C. Among those who took part were Madame Parepa-Rosa, Miss Houston, Adelaide Phillips Miss Cary, Mrs. Kempton, Fredereci Himmer, Van Zandt, Brainerd, George Simpson, James Whitney, M. W. Whitney, J. F. Winch, J. F. Rudolphsen, Alide Topp and Carl Rosa.

In 1866 the Harvard Musical Association began a series of concerts that continued along until 1881. Some were given in the Boston Museum. In 1868 concerts were begun by the old Oratorio Society and the Orpheus Musical Society, and two years later the coming of Theodore Thomas and his excellent company "sharpened the musical perception" by his delightful program.

In 1871 the Apollo Club organized, and in 1873 the Boylston Club. In 1874 grand memorial services to the City of Boston were held. The Passion Music by Bach was given, under Mr. Lang's direction. In 1877 the Cecelia Club came into existence. In 1885 the first presentation of "Damnation of Faust" occurred in Music Hall. Another notable musical event about this time was the concert given by the Commandery of Massachusetts, Loyal Legion, to Gen. Charles Devens. In the same year the promenade concerts began. In them, in the language of a contemporaneous musical journal, "Meyerbeer and Suppé quietly succeeded Brahms and Dvorák." The presentation of "Robin Hood" by the Bostonians September 20, 1890, under the management of Tom Carl, W. H. Macdonald and H. C. Barnabee, was one of the prominent events of a period so near the present that it seems hardly to have become history. In the cast were Edwin Hoff, Mr. Barnabee, Mr. Macdonald, Eugene Cowles, George Frothingham, Peter Lang, Jessie Bartlett Davis, Greas Reals, Josephine Bartlett and Marie Stone. The following year Wagner's "Parsifal" was given, a number of the singers coming from Bayreuth.

Among the many musical artists of prominence who appeared before Boston audiences, most, if not all, at the Music Hall, are recalled Ole Bull, Paul Julien, Rubinstein, Hans von Bülow, the only Patti, and the "Queenly" Tietjens, Krebs, Camilla Urso, Teresa Carreño, Mario, Grisi, Nilsson, Mme. Tietjens, Edith Wynn, Mme. Patey, Cummings, Santley, Miss Thornby, Miss Kellogg, Miss Juch, Wilhelmj, Thalberg, Mrs. Eliot, Mrs. J. H. Long, Mrs. Mozart, Mrs. Hill, Miss Twitchell, C. R. Adams, Leach, Dr. Guilmette, Mesdames Alboni, La Grange, Johannsen, Fermes, Mme. Bertucca Mardzek, Vestvali, Salvini, Morelli, Clara Doria, P. H. Powers, J. Trenkle, Hugo Leonard, Heller, Ernst Perabo, Anna Mehlig and Mme. Arabella Stoddard.

* * *

The Boston Symphony Orchestra in the eighteen years that it has been in existence has, indeed, reached an enviable position of excellence, with many assertion that it is the very best in the world. Among those who say so is Carl Zerrahn, and it is a pleasant and significant compliment, coming from one who has been so long a conductor and a close student of the chief orchestras of the world.

Georg Henschel was the first conductor of the Symphony Orchestra, holding that position three years. William Gericke, who has been its leader the past two years, followed Mr. Henschel for five years. Arthur Nikisch and Emil Paur filled the intervening period for three and five years respectively.

The first program given by the Symphony Orchestra, in 1882, consisted of Brahms' "Tragic" overture; Grieg's Concerto for piano in A minor; Beethoven's Symphony in C, op. 21; piano solos by W. H. Sherwood; "Warum," Schumann, and Scherzo in C sharp minor, Chopin.

Among the eminent soloists who have appeared before Symphony audiences may be mentioned Mmes. Materna, Annie Louise Cary, Sembrich, Melba and Ternina; Ben Davies, the great tenor; Paderewski, Vladimir de Pachmann, Henri Marteau, Ysaye, César Thomson, Emil Sauret, Camilla Urso, Joseffy, Campanari, the 'cellist, and Dohnányi.

* * *

With the early history of Music Hall are prominently associated Theodore Parker and Wendell Phillips. The former preached the first Sunday the hall was open to the Twenty-eighth Congregational Society, having moved there from the Melodeon Hall, where he previously held forth. With the account of the opening concert given in the hall the preceding evening appeared on the succeeding Monday morning in the Herald a brief abstract of Mr. Parker's sermon, as follows:

"Yesterday afternoon the Rev. Theodore Parker preached his first sermon in the hall. Every seat on the floor, in the galleries and the orchestra was occupied.

"Mr. Parker preached from the text, 'I know in whom I have believed.' He said that, as this was the first morning of their assembling in that place for worship, it was highly proper that the services for the day should be made in reference to that fact. He had, therefore, selected as the appropriate topic for his discourse 'The Position and Duty of a Minister in These Times.'

"Mr. Parker passed in review the three great historical forms of religion—the heathen and the Jewish form, the office of whose priests it was to appease the wrath of a finite God by sacrifices; the form of the Roman Church, whose priests undertook to reconcile an offended finite God to offending men by virtue of the one great sacrificial offering of Christ's death, and to impart salvation to their communicants by sacraments, &c.; and the Protestant form, whose priests communicate and display a miraculous revelation of the will of God, whose chief function it is to explain the Scriptures—for belief in them is salvation through faith.

"These forms were insufficient, for they were based upon an insufficient idea of God and the wants of mankind. The true function of a minister, Mr. Parker contended, was to teach and promote religion among mankind—the religion of human nature. The idea he developed at great length, but we have no room to follow him in his elaborate statements. Mr. Parker will preach at Music Hall on Thanksgiving forenoon. The society under his charge have engaged it for a regular place of worship."

* * *

Wendell Phillips sought Music Hall as a place where he might speak in the cause of anti-slavery more freely, he said, than in any of the churches, which were then almost universally hostile to his stand. On his first appearance there, however, he was in a fair way to be mobbed. Then Acting Mayor Clapp is reputed to have been in sympathy with him, and was personally present at the meeting, when, to his knowledge, the special guard of sixty was on hand at the hall to prevent any trouble, escorting Phillips home as a body guard against the mob.

The shareholders of the Music Hall Association were reluctant to a degree both to Parker and Phillips appearing on their property because of the general unpopularity of the latter—the one for his extreme religious views, the other for his political stand. The shareholders felt that the hall would be boycotted by a considerable element. The two persecuted men, however, had their following in the association, and they were at least tolerated.

Many other eminent men have spoken in Music Hall—Wilson, Sumner, William Lloyd Garrison and the Irish patriots, Thomas Meagher and Parnell. Bryan, it will be remembered, addressed the Democratic State convention in 1896, the time the hall was captured by the silver faction.

In 1860 the hall was well started upon its versatile career. Shortly before Theodore Parker's death the Parker Fraternity lectures began, continuing there for many years. Mrs. Scott Siddons presented "A Midsummer Night's Dream" there, the music for which was given by an orchestra assembled for the occasion. It is told of Mrs. Siddons that she has agreed to rehearse with the orchestra a day or two before the event in Bumstead Hall, that place of many rehearsal trials. The musicians were ready at the appointed hour, but no Mrs. Siddons! One of the committee in charge of the affair presented himself at the Parker House, where Mr. and Mrs. Siddons were staying. The former was found alone at the breakfast table. The actress had not arisen. But she made all the haste possible, and the air was soon clearer in Bumstead Hall.

One of the most gorgeously decorated events that has taken place in Music Hall was the Army and Navy Fair in 1864. There was much patriotic music on that occasion, with bugle calls to attract and interest. In March, 1864, a Catholic fair was given on a grand scale, and in 1872 the fair in aid of the Homeopathic Hospital. A notable event was the reception given the United States soldiers, June 16, 1875, on the occasion of the centennial anniversary of Bunker Hill. Many Southern men were present to take part in the celebration.

Nordica Was Right.

Madame Nordica refused to sing at the St. Louis music festival two nights ago until the management handed her her pay about $1,900. Part payment was offered, but Nordica remained firm, and after a delay in the program, the cash was finally collected and the singer appeared.

Pacific Coast News.

Riverside, Cal., contributed a good share of the talent and a number of auditors to the concert given in Arlington on the 8th. The Misses Judith and R. Miller, H. Allen, R. Miller, Percy Errington and Keith Kennedy, Miss Winnie Rohrer, Mrs. R. C. Hawes, Miss Ethel Baldwin, Miss Clara Crawford, Miss Bonnie Rockhold, Mrs. Foster, Mrs. Hopkins, Mr. Willis, Miss Hicks and Mr. Hill were among those participating. The accompanists of the evening were Mrs. Turner, Miss Vera Rockhold and Miss Rohrer.

Mrs. Grace Morei Dickman, lately from Europe, sang at vespers in the Unitarian church, Alameda, on the 14th.

Raymond Benjamin, of Napa, violinist, assisted Miss Mabel Richardson, of Vallejo, in her recital at Santa Rosa early in the month.

San Francisco has a new music pavilion, erected in Golden Gate Park, which is said by experts to be the finest in the world. It was given to the city by Claus Spreckels. It consists of a main arch and peristyle, with colonnades at each end. The arch is 75 feet high, and the orchestra platform, 45 feet wide, accommodates 100 musicians. Its total cost was $100,000.

A reception was given Mrs. William Beckman and Mrs. Elizabeth Purnell, at Sacramento, recently. Miss Elizabeth Taylor, Mr. Bauer and Mrs. Hood were the soloists.

The musical program at the lawn fête given by Mrs. Dougherty at San José early in the month was given by Miss Marguerite Kennedy, Professor Bulwer, Miss Debora Faust, Charles Kimic, Prof. Edward Stower, Mrs. David J. Gairaud, the Misses Perdues. Miss Greeninger, A. Serio, Miss Hortense Hammond, Professor and Mrs. Henry Bettman.

Mrs. J. E. Birmingham, contralto, sang at the Loring concert in San Francisco October 18.

Vocal pupils of Percy A. R. Dow gave a recital at the residence of Mrs. Dow, in San Francisco, on the 20th. Those who participated in the program were Miss Marion H. Coyle, Miss Jessie P. Doty, Miss Corinne Gyle, Andrew V. Wood, Walton C. Webb, Henry B. Monges, Jr., with Miss Julia Levinson and Miss Blanche Hostetter as accompanists.

A Strauss Program.

At the second Strauss popular concert, at the Metropolitan Opera House, Sunday evening, November 11, six of Johann Strauss' compositions will be played, as also the ballet music from Delibes' "Sylvia," the always delightful "Loin du Bal," by Gillet; a potpourri from Bizet's "Carmen"; some excerpts from Rubinstein's "Bal Costume," and a new Waltz Movement by Erik Meyer-Helmund, for string quartet and harp.

Louis B. Voigt.

Louise B. Voigt, the soprano, has been engaged for the first concert of the Washington Saengerbund on December 2. She has also been booked by her manager for appearances with the Germania Club, of Brooklyn, November 10; Arion, Brooklyn, 18; Eichenkranz, New York, November 25, and New York Mozart Club, November 29.

A Ratcliffe-Caperton Pupil.

Paul Otto Volkmann, a pupil of Mrs. Ratcliffe-Caperton, received the following criticism after a recent concert in Philadelphia from the well-known critic William Armstrong:

The work done during the evening by Paul Otto Volkmann, tenor, and a pupil of Mrs. Ratcliffe-Caperton, was the most finished and satisfactory that I have heard in America as the result of the same length of training—in all, I believe, two years.

Carl Martens.

Los Angeles, Cal., November 3.—Carl Martens, once famous throughout the United States as musician and orchestra leader, was found dead in his room here to-day. He was a victim of consumption and his death was hastened by dissipation. Martens was educated in the conservatories of Brussels and Leipsic, and was at one time leader of Emma Abbott's orchestra. His divorced wife is living in San Francisco.

London, England.

THE GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Principal, WILLIAM H. CUMMINGS, Esq.
Established by the Corporation of London, 1880.

All branches of Music, Elocution and Languages taught.
Improvisation, Accompanying, Sight Singing, Sight Reading (Instrumental), Choral, Orchestral, Operatic and Chamber Music Classes. Second studies at greatly reduced rates. Scholarships, prizes, &c., given.

Fees from £1 11s. 6d. to £4 14s. 6d. per term of twelve weeks.

Staff of 130 Professors. Over 3,500 students. Resident Lady Superintendent. Prospectus and full particulars of the Secretary.
By order of the Committee.

HILTON CARTER, Secretary.
Victoria Embankment, London, E. C.

MR. ALBERT VISETTI,
Professor of Voice Production and the Æsthetics of Singing at the Royal College of Music and the Guildhall School of Music.

Paris.

SCHOOL FOR ACTING.

EMIL BERTIN,
1er Regisseur de la Scène de l'Opéra Comique.
Stage Practice. In Cast.
41 rue des Martyrs, Paris.

DELLE SEDIE, Paris.
Pure Italian Method. Complete course. Stage practice. Voice, lyric, declamation, languages, solfège, ensemble music, mise-en-scène.
Class and single lessons.
Regular course, three years. Terms moderate.
30 rue St. Petersbourg.

MONSIEUR HENRI FALCKE,
PIANIST.
Lessons in Piano Playing and Theory. M. Falcke Speaks English, German and Spanish.
Address: 169 Avenue Victor Hugo, Paris.

FOR THE EXPOSITION.
LA VILLA VIOLETTE.
TROCADERO.
...nouard. Mme. Fiessinger.
...ooms. Gardens. Excellent Table.
...walk from Exposition Grounds.

...COLONNE,
...ESSEUR DE CHANT,
...F PURE FRENCH SCHOOL
...FRENCH DICTION.
...ue de Berlin, Centre.

...LES DE BERIOT,
...ESSEUR DE PIANO.
...perieures au Conservatoire.
13 rue du Mail-Erard.
... Ecole Niedermeyer, Paris.

... Fortuny, Parc Monceau.
...hant. Concert, Oratorio, Opera.
...Theatre in Studio.

...IE ROZE,
...ESSEUR DE CHANT.
37 rue Joubert,
...tin, Paris.
...e. Ensemble practice in caste on stage.

EXPOSITION,

MME. FRANK,
201 Faubourg St. Honoré.
French Diction, Conversation, Yersin Chart.

MLLE. MARTINI,
Artiste Opera, Opera Comique, Theatre Lyrique, Professor of "Mime."
Silent interpretation, stage business, gesture, Pantomime, etc.
87 Rue St. Lazare, Paris.

FRENCH PRONUNCIATION,
PHONO-TONIQUE METHOD. SPECIAL FOR FOREIGNERS. Speaking, Singing.
MESDAMES ADAM.
5 rue Guillaume Tell, Place Pereire, Paris.

MME. IDA LURIG,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
French—Italian—German.
Specialty of German Songs and Oratorio.
(Trocadero) 5 rue Petrarque, Paris.

PROFESSOR OF FRENCH,
Special Method for Foreigners.
MLLE. MARIE FOURNAISE,
American reference. 29 Boulevard de Batignolles.

MME. FLORENZA D'ARONA,
20 rue Clement Marot,
Professeur de Chant Voice Placement, Répertoire. Four Languages, Mise-en-Scène.

ELSIE RAY
EDDY
SOPRANO.
Church, Concert, Song Recitals.
272 Clifton Place, BROOKLYN.
(Saenger Pupil.)

MRS. W. E. BEARDSLEY,
Instruction—Piano.
Studio: Knapp Mansion, Brooklyn, N. Y.

SHANNAH CUMMING
SOPRANO.
Oratorio, Concert, Recitals.
1424 Pacific Street, - BROOKLYN, N. Y.
Telephone: 906A Bedford.

S. G. PRATT
Principal West End Private School of Music,
176 West 86th Street, New York.
Accepts engagements for Chopin Analytical Recitals and the famous Concert-Lecture, "THE SOUL OF A SONG."

HOBART SMOCK,
ROBUST TENOR,
45 West 32d St., New York.
Telephone, 2283 Madison Square.

FRIEDRICH VOELKER,
Violin Virtuoso.
Concerts, Recitals, Instruction.
STUDIO: 69 West 104th Street, NEW YORK.

CARL HERRMANN,
Concert Pianist
Receives pupils at his residence:
234 East 72d Street, New York.

EDUARD HERRMANN,
Solo Violinist and Instructor.
Also classes for ensemble and quartet playing.
Address: 67 West 97th Street, New York.

MISS VIRGINIA BAILIE,
Pianist and Teacher.
LESCHETIZKY METHOD.
Studio: 1202 Carnegie Hall, New York.

THE HILD

The Concert-Goer

Boston office of THE CONCERT-GOER
Pierce Building, Nov. 1, 1900.

Thursday evening of last week, too late for review in the last issue, came the opening of the Symphony Hall's new organ by J. Wallace Goodrich. The program was:

Toccata and fugue, D-minor	J. S. Bach
Pastorale	J. S. Bach
Symphonie Romaine, op 73	C. M. Widor
Two Choralspiele	J. S. Bach
Fantasie in D-flat op. 101	C. Saint-Saëns
In Paradisum	Theo. DuBois
Fiat Lux	Theo. DuBois

Some smacked their lips over the program and some found fault with it, claiming it too stiff and not the most agreeable to public taste. Aside from the Symphonie, if the hearer was not altogether pleased then the fault must have been within him. The Symphonie, too, is remarkable music, especially its first movement. The program certainly displayed the organ and the performer alike; both are of Boston's best, and the organ received the most attention at the recital because it is the new comer. The console is movable, having 100 feet of free cable to the organ at the back of the stage and can be placed at any point on the stage. This was demonstrated at the symphony concert the week previous, when Mr. Goodrich was the soloist and had the advantage of being at the front of the stage. Mr. Goodrich's performances on both of these occasions left nothing to be desired.

Mme. Schumann-Heink was the soloist at the Symphony concert Saturday night. It was this season's second concert and the program follows:

Overture, "The Roman Overture"	Berlioz
Recitative and Rondo from "Titus"	Mozart
Orchestral Suite "Esclarmonde"	Massenet
Song "Die Allmacht"	Schubert
Symphony "From the New World"	Dvorák

The suite was the novelty, this being its first performance here. It is a very brilliant affair in four movements, being arranged for orchestra alone by the composer from the opera of the same name, "Esclarmonde." Mme. Schumann-Heink sang her numbers with her accustomed dramatic emphasis and dignity, with that impressive breadth of style for which she is noted. Despite the severe weather she was at her best and had evidently not been affected by hoarseness in any degree. The rest of the program has been heard in Boston before; the "New World" symphony is always invigorating and it seems to me a tempting and pleading model to American composers.

RALPH HOWARD PENDLETON.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

Established 1813.

The Official Paper of the State.

The Official Paper of the City.

SATURDAY MORNING, NOV. 10, 1900.

OUR ORCHESTRA ABROAD.

From the N. Y. Times.

It is hardly likely that the majority of the audience which greeted the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night at Carnegie Hall on its first appearance this season in New York was acquainted with the full significance of the occasion. The entertainment was the 1900th concert given by this orchestra since its foundation, 11 years ago. In mere number alone the record exceeds that of any other orchestral organization in the country. But the musical history which goes with the record and the beneficient work for the elevation of artistic standards and the development of public appreciation are far and away beyond any count of numbers. In the 19 years of its existence the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been the central sun of the orchestral system of this country, in whose refulgent rays other orchestras have paled as do the stars at the coming of the morning.

It stands today as the leader and the type of all that is most beautiful in musical ensemble, and it preaches the gospel of refinement, of artistic balance, and of polish of style as effectively as it did when it was first made known to this public in a certain memorable concert in the old Steinway Hall. For these reasons it is always welcome when it returns to us, and its concert last night, the close of its 18 century of entertainments, was one to be welcomed with joy and remembered with gratitude.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1900

Mr. Ernst von Dohnanyi, the Hungarian pianist, accompanied the Boston Symphony Orchestra on their trip this past week. His success has been such with the concert-going public that there is no doubt that crowded houses will greet him on his appearances in his recitals in Steinert Hall on Tuesday afternoon, Nov. 27 and Saturday afternoon, Dec. 1.

[illegible] and United States Gazette

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 1900

BOSTON ORCHESTRA PLAYS SCHUMANN AND MASSENET

Indifferent Work in Early Part of Programme Atoned for in Second Half.

Last night's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music was not so largely attended as the one which marked the opening of the first series on Monday evening. In the earlier part of the programme the musicians were apathetic to a point, indicating physical weariness. It was with the Scherzo of Schumann's Symphony No. 2, in C major, which constituted the second part of the programme, that the admirable temper of the orchestra was asserted.

The finish in careful detail so frequently of an absolute beauty, the attention to precision, and the mechanical demand of the composer, strong points of Mr. Gericke as a conductor, were at all times richly in evidence. But there were also other moments, particularly in the earlier portion of the programme, when a pedantic repression and premeditatedness proved all too frequently in evidence.

At such moments as these it is that one can fancy Mr. Gericke, even at his own execution, as taking out his watch to note the exact moment of his demise rather than giving way to any unnecessary emotions. The limitations are his own and not those of the body of musicians under him, although in the instance of last evening those earlier numbers were of an apathetic response on the part of the men, which helped seriously to hamper the interpretation. But with the second movement of the Schumann Symphony this apathy was banished, and the noble resources of the orchestra as well as a greater degree of warmth and spirit on the part of Mr. Gericke prevailed instead.

For all the French may confer the sobriquet of "Mlle. Wagner" upon Massenet, his music remains so characteristically French, so demanding of nuance, of daintiness and sensuousness, that the spirit of interpretation remains utterly and entirely peculiar to his nationality. The "Esclaramonde" suite of Massenet naturally does not differ in spirit from anything else he has written; indeed, in many other respects Massenet has the peculiarity of rarely differing. He does not naturally lie in the special province of Mr. Gericke as an interpreter, but, while we listened to him spoken last night with a foreign accent, as it were, there was such rare care in detail, precision and delicacy that the second and fourth numbers of the suite possessed great charm in the performance.

The soloist was Miss May Gertrude Stein, who selected Raff's tiresome "Dream King" arias, and Ariadne's aria from Wagner's "Rienzi," receiving after the latter number three recalls from the audience for the dramatic effect with which she gave the final climax.

WILLIAM ARMSTRONG.

THE RECORD

Philadelphia, November 8, 1900.

Boston Symphony's Splendid Playing.

The superb personnel of the Boston Symphony Orchestra had impressive demonstration in its rendition this week of its first two concerts of the local season. Dvorak's "New World" Symphony was notably interpreted on Monday evening, and last night the Berlioz "Roman Carnival" Overture, with its magnificent coloring, Massenet's orchestral suite, "Esclarmonde," and Schumann's melodious Symphony in C major were all beautifully performed. The brasses were perhaps not at their very best, but the work of the wood instruments in the Schumann number was even exceptionally exquisite. As for the Massenet suite, given for the first time at these concerts, it cannot be said that it is a fine work in the sense of musical ideas. Its instrumentation is striking and rich, but Massenet seems to have been vainly seeking to express something. He starts in with his materials to paint a picture and, after preparing a gorgeous frame, cannot find the picture itself. The second and last movements—the Magic Isle and the Pastoral and Hunt—were effective enough in their instrumentation, however, to win decided applause. The soloist of the occasion was Miss Gertrude Stein, who repeated her previous success before Philadelphia music-lovers by her singing of both Raff's "Dream King" and Adriane's aria from "Rienzi." Her voice deserves high praise, and although Adriane's aria was a little beyond her art in its highest demands, she sang it very creditably and finished it in fine style.

[illegible] LEDGER
AND DAILY TRANSCRIPT.

Philadelphia, Thursday, Nov. 8, 1900.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The First of the Wednesday Evening Series.

For fourteen years Monday was the chosen evening for the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Not until last season was an additional series of Wednesday evening concerts started, but so far they have not caught up in popularity with the Monday series. Not because the Monday series in one whit better; it is just a matter of habit, those who have been going for years continue to go on Monday, musical enthusiasts go on both days, but the remainder, who go on Wednesday for multifarious reasons, do not fill the house in the same comfortable fashion as it is filed on Mondays. So it was last night. It was a good-sized audience and a discriminating one, but the seats were not all filled. The programme, which was as follows, speaks for itself:

Overture, "The Roman Carnival," op. 9, Hector Berlios
Aria, "Traum Konig" ..... Raff
Gertrude May Stein.
"Esclarmonde," Orchestra Suite. Jules Massenet
(First time at these concerts.)
Adriane's Aria, from "Riensi" Richard Wagner
Gertrude May Stein.
Symphony No. 2, in C major, op. 61, Robert Schumann

It will be seen that, as usual, Mr. Gericke placed the symphony last, a habit which is responsible in a large measure for people leaving the Academy before the concert is over. It is no exaggeration to say that last Monday night fully 100 people left the house in the course of the symphony. Last night the numbers were not so great, but many found themselves, after nearly an hour and a half of close attention to serious music, unwilling to court musical indigestion by sitting out the symphony.

The last time that Schumann's C major symphony was played here was under Mr. Paur's direction in 1894. On that occasion the programme opened with the overture to "Tannhauser," which was followed by an aria, "La Jeune Captive," sung by Mrs. Julie M. Wyman. Then came the symphony, after which succeeded Gluck's Tambourin, Gavotte and Chaconne, another aria, one of Massenet's, and for the final number Goldmark's overture, "Sappho," played then for the first time in Philadelphia—an arrangement to which we respectfully beg to call Mr. Gericke's attention.

To return to last night's concert. Putting aside the symphony and the overture, which is not such a one as to kindle an audience quickly into an appreciatively receptive frame of mind, there remains the selections from Massenet's opera, "Esclarmonde," in which Miss Sibyl Sanderson sang the title role in Paris with great eclat. The suite begins with the invocation to Astarte, a weird and subtle number that is delightful in its suggestion of barbaric potions and spells and cabalistic mysteries. It is followed by music corresponding with the theme in the second act of "Tristan and Isolde," though entirely original, and the whole winds up with a pastoral, interwoven with a hunting chorus of horns, ending with a brilliant finale. The whole suite is charming from beginning to end, and the music augurs well for the popularity of the same composer's opera, "Le Cid," when it is sung here this winter.

Miss Gertrude May Stein sang both the Raff and the Wagner arias. Her delivery of the first was somewhat monotonous, but with the perplexed striving betwixt love and duty of Adriano's aria she sang with greater freedom and better effect. Miss Stein seems to have the dramatic instinct, but her voice is wanting in sympathetic quality and her singing in color.

The Times

PHILADELPHIA, NOVEMBER 8, 1900.

SYMPHONY CONCERT

First of the Second Series of the Boston Orchestra.

The feature of the first Wednesday night concert of the Boston Orchestra was the brilliant performance of the Schumann C major symphony. This beautiful work was played under Mr. Gericke with a fine poetic appreciation, with a clarity and refinement of execution and a fervor and force that left nothing to be demanded. The novelty on the programme was Massenet's "Esclarmonde" suite, a concert work rewritten from the music of the opera. Some of it is very beautiful music, imaginative and picturesque, but without the scene not all of it is self-sufficient. The instrumentation is very ingenious. The other orchestral number was Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" overture, and Miss Stein sang Raff's "Dream King" and an air from "Rienzi." Raff's long romantic ballads are much alike and this one is not particularly interesting, but Miss Stein is an interesting singer, with a lovely fresh voice and a good style, and she sang it very well indeed. The Wagner aria developed further fine capability of her voice and strengthened an agreeable impression.

The New Boston Music Hall.

Messrs. Editors: The opening of Symphony Hall in Boston was an event which not only excited the largest amount of local interest, but attracted the attendance of musical critics and enthusiasts from surrounding cities within a radius of several hundred miles.

The event was called the "city's new glory," and the opening performance was by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, supplemented by a local chorus, with soloists from New York.

Photographs of the hall have been received in Baltimore, and it is interesting to note that the interior is almost exactly a duplicate of Music Hall on Mount Royal avenue.

The opening address was made by Mr. H. L. Higginson, the founder and supporter of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In his speech Mr. Higginson stated that the directors "pondered long over plans, and finally, laying aside with regret Mr. McKim's beautiful design after the Greek theatre, they adopted the shape of hall which had of late been in vogue because successful."

Probably the opinion of the conductor and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra had much to do with this decision, as their expressions of satisfaction with the Baltimore Music Hall are well known, and they have abundant experience in both American and foreign music halls. Indeed, a representative of the directors came to Baltimore and took measurements of the interior of Music Hall, so that the extraordinary resemblance of the interiors of the two halls is not a surprise to those who are aware of the above facts.

The heating, lighting and ventilation of our Music Hall are entirely satisfactory, in which respects the Boston hall seems to be equal; but, judging from certain guarded remarks in the newspapers, it is likely that the acoustic qualities of our Baltimore hall (which are acknowledged to be excellent) are better than those of the Boston hall.

The Boston hall has a second gallery, and its total seating capacity is 2,560, while that of our Music Hall is 2,298, the arrangements of the seats being practically the same in each hall.

The rise in the main floor is the same as that in Baltimore, and in both halls a person can both see and hear from every seat.

The facade of the Boston hall is in its main construction like that of our Music Hall, but is relieved by cornices and entablatures, which can be added to the Baltimore hall at a comparatively small expense, and it will then present a finished and proper architectural appearance.

The total cost of our Music Hall was about $250,000, while the cost of the Boston Music Hall was about $750,000, of which about $400,000 was subscribed in cash to the capital stock, but about $350,000 had to be borrowed on mortgage.

Mr. Higginson stated in his address, speaking for the directors: "They mortgaged the hall with reluctance, but had no other course, as the money was essential. The building has been leased by the directors for 10 years to me, and I am to meet costs of administration, taxes and all charges and to pay to the stockholders the rest of the receipts."

It would appear from this statement that Mr. Higginson assumes the burden of paying the interest on the mortgage and all other expenses after receiving the rentals, which are likely to be far below the sums mentioned.

It is a matter of congratulations that no mortgage with a fixed charge rests upon our hall and that it is able to maintain itself from its own income.

The citizens of Baltimore, to whose generosity Music Hall is due, will doubtless be pleased to read these lines, and probably a Mr. Higginson or a combination of him may yet be found to enable Music Hall to be finished as it ought to be.

In conclusion I cannot do better than to quote Mr. Higginson's final words and apply them where they belong here:

"Certain citizens of Boston build a hall without regard to return in money, and by this act care for the happiness, the convenience, the education of the inhabitants for 20 miles around this spot; and it is fitting in a republic that the citizens, and not the government in any form, should do such work and bear such burdens. To the more fortunate people of our land belongs the privilege of providing the higher branches of education and of art."

FREDERICK M. COLSTON.

[40]

The Concert-Goer

Boston office of THE CONCERT-GOER
Pierce Building, Nov. 1, 1900.

Thursday evening of last week, too late for review in the last issue, came the opening of the Symphony Hall's new organ by J. Wallace Goodrich. The program was:

Toccata and fugue, D-minor	J. S. Bach
Pastorale	J. S. Bach
Symphonie Romaine, op 73	C. M. Widor
Two Choralspiele	J. S. Bach
Fantasie in D-flat op. 101	C. Saint-Saëns
In Paradisum	Theo. DuBois
Fiat Lux	Theo. DuBois

Some smacked their lips over the program and some found fault with it, claiming it too stiff and not the most agreeable to public taste. Aside from the Symphonie, if the hearer was not altogether pleased then the fault must have been within him. The Symphonie, too, is remarkable music, especially its first movement. The program certainly displayed the organ and the performer alike; both are of Boston's best, and the organ received the most attention at the recital because it is the new comer. The console is movable, having 100 feet of free cable to the organ at the back of the stage and can be placed at any point on the stage. This was demonstrated at the symphony concert the week previous, when Mr. Goodrich was the soloist and had the advantage of being at the front of the stage. Mr. Goodrich's performances on both of these occasions left nothing to be desired.

Mme. Schumann-Heink was the soloist at the Symphony concert Saturday night. It was this season's second concert and the program follows:

Overture, "The Roman Overture"	Berlioz
Recitative and Rondo from "Titus"	Mozart
Orchestral Suite "Esclarmonde"	Massenet
Song "Die Allmacht"	Schubert
Symphony "From the New World"	Dvorák

The suite was the novelty, this being its first performance here. It is a very brilliant affair in four movements, being arranged for orchestra alone by the composer from the opera of the same name, "Esclarmonde." Mme. Schumann-Heink sang her numbers with her accustomed dramatic emphasis and dignity, with that impressive breadth of style for which she is noted. Despite the severe weather she was at her best and had evidently not been affected by hoarseness in any degree. The rest of the program has been heard in Boston before; the "New World" symphony is always invigorating and it seems to me a tempting and pleading model to American composers.

RALPH HOWARD PENDLETON.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

Established 1813.

The Official Paper of the State.

The Official Paper of the City.

SATURDAY MORNING, NOV. 10, 1900.

OUR ORCHESTRA ABROAD.

From the N. Y. Times.

It is hardly likely that the majority of the audience which greeted the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night at Carnegie Hall on its first appearance this season in New York was acquainted with the full significance of the occasion. The entertainment was the 1800th concert given by this orchestra since its foundation, 18 years ago. In mere number alone the record exceeds that of any other orchestral organization in the country. But the musical history which goes with the record and the beneficient work for the elevation of artistic standards and the development of public appreciation are far and away beyond any count of numbers. In the 19 years of its existence the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been the central sun of the orchestral system of this country, in whose refulgent rays other orchestras have paled as do the stars at the coming of the morning.

It stands today as the leader and the type of all that is most beautiful in musical ensemble, and it preaches the gospel of refinement, of artistic balance, and of polish of style as effectively as it did when it was first made known to this public in a certain memorable concert in the old Steinway Hall. For these reasons it is always welcome when it returns to us, and its concert last night, the close of its 18 century of entertainments, was one to be welcomed with joy and remembered with gratitude.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1900

Mr. Ernst von Dohnanyi, the Hungarian pianist, accompanied the Boston Symphony Orchestra on their trip this past week. His success has been such with the concert-going public that there is no doubt that crowded houses will greet him on his appearances in his recitals in Steinert Hall on Tuesday afternoon, Nov. 27 and Saturday afternoon, Dec. 1.

The North American

Daily Advertiser
and United States Gazette

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 1900

BOSTON ORCHESTRA PLAYS SCHUMANN AND MASSENET

Indifferent Work in Early Part of Programme Atoned for in Second Half.

Last night's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music was not so largely attended as the one which marked the opening of the first series on Monday evening. In the earlier part of the programme the musicians were apathetic to a point, indicating physical weariness. It was with the Scherzo of Schumann's Symphony No. 2, in C major, which constituted the second part of the programme, that the admirable temper of the orchestra was asserted.

The finish in careful detail so frequently of an absolute beauty, the attention to precision, and the mechanical demand of the composer, strong points of Mr. Gericke as a conductor, were at all times richly in evidence. But there were also other moments, particularly in the earlier portion of the programme, when a pedantic repression and premeditatedness proved all too frequently in evidence.

At such moments as these it is that one can fancy Mr. Gericke, even at his own execution, as taking out his watch to note the exact moment of his demise rather than giving way to any unnecessary emotions. The limitations are his own and not those of the body of musicians under him, although in the instance of last evening those earlier numbers were of an apathetic response on the part of the men, which helped seriously to hamper the interpretation. But with the second movement of the Schumann Symphony this apathy was banished, and the noble resources of the orchestra as well as a greater degree of warmth and spirit on the part of Mr. Gericke prevailed instead.

For all the French may confer the sobriquet of "Mlle. Wagner" upon Massenet, his music remains so characteristically French, so demanding of nuance, of daintiness and sensuousness, that the spirit of interpretation remains utterly and entirely peculiar to his nationality. The "Esclaramonde" suite of Massenet naturally does not differ in spirit from anything else he has written; indeed, in many other respects Massenet has the peculiarity of rarely differing. He does not naturally lie in the special province of Mr. Gericke as an interpreter, but, while we listened to him spoken last night with a foreign accent, as it were, there was such rare care in detail, precision and delicacy that the second and fourth numbers of the suite possessed great charm in the performance.

The soloist was Miss May Gertrude Stein, who selected Raff's tiresome "Dream King" arias, and Ariadne's aria from Wagner's "Rienzi," receiving after the latter number three recalls from the audience for the dramatic effect with which she gave the final climax.

WILLIAM ARMSTRONG.

THE RECORD

Philadelphia, November 8, 1900.

Boston Symphony's Splendid Playing.

The superb personnel of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has had impressive demonstration in its rendition, this week, of its first two concerts of the local season. Dvorak's "New World" Symphony was notably interpreted on Monday evening, and last night the Berlios "Roman Carnival" Overture, with its magnificent coloring, Massenet's orchestral suite, "Esclarmonde," and Schumann's melodious Symphony in C major were all beautifully performed. The brasses were perhaps not at their very best, but the work of the wood instruments in the Schumann number was even exceptionally exquisite. As for the Massenet suite, given for the first time at these concerts, it cannot be said that it is a fine work in the sense of musical ideas. Its instrumentation is striking and rich, but Massenet seems to have been vainly seeking to express something. He starts in with his materials to paint a picture and, after preparing a gorgeous frame, cannot find the picture itself. The second and last movements—the Magic Isle and the Pastoral and Hunt—were effective enough in their instrumentation, however, to win decided applause. The soloist of the occasion was Miss Gertrude Stein, who repeated her previous success before Philadelphia music-lovers by her singing of both Raff's "Dream King" and Adriane's aria from "Rienzi." Her voice deserves high praise, and although Adriane's aria was a little beyond her art in its highest demands, she sang it very creditably and finished it in fine style.

PUBLIC LEDGER AND DAILY TRANSCRIPT.

Philadelphia, Thursday, Nov. 8, 1900.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The First of the Wednesday Evening Series.

For fourteen years Monday was the chosen evening for the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Not until last season was an additional series of Wednesday evening concerts started, but so far they have not caught up in popularity with the Monday series. Not because the Monday series in one whit better; it is just a matter of habit, those who have been going for years continue to go on Monday, musical enthusiasts go on both days, but the remainder, who go on Wednesday for multifarious reasons, do not fill the house in the same comfortable fashion as it is filed on Mondays. So it was last night. It was a good-sized audience and a discriminating one, but the seats were not all filled. The programme, which was as follows, speaks for itself:

Overture, "The Roman Carnival," op. 9, Hector Berlioz

Aria, "Traum Konig".....Raff
Gertrude May Stein.

"Esclarmonde," Orchestra Suite Jules Massenet
(First time at these concerts.)

Adriane's Aria, from "Rienzi".Richard Wagner
Gertrude May Stein.

Symphony No. 2, in C major, op. 61, Robert Schumann

It will be seen that, as usual, Mr. Gericke placed the symphony last, a habit which is responsible in a large measure for people leaving the Academy before the concert is over. It is no exaggeration to say that last Monday night fully 100 people left the house in the course of the symphony. Last night the numbers were not so great, but many found themselves, after nearly an hour and a half of close attention to serious music, unwilling to court musical indigestion by sitting out the symphony.

The last time that Schumann's C major symphony was played here was under Mr. Paur's direction in 1894. On that occasion the programme opened with the overture to "Tannhauser," which was followed by an aria, "La Jeune Captive," sung by Mrs. Julie M. Wyman. Then came the symphony, after which succeeded Gluck's Tambourin, Gavotte and Chaconne, another aria, one of Massenet's, and for the final number Goldmark's overture, "Sappho," played then for the first time in Philadelphia—an arrangement to which we respectfully beg to call Mr. Gericke's attention.

To return to last night's concert. Putting aside the symphony and the overture, which is not such a one as to kindle an audience quickly into an appreciatively receptive frame of mind, there remains the selections from Massenet's opera, "Esclarmonde," in which Miss Sibyl Sanderson sang the title role in Paris with great eclat. The suite begins with the invocation to Astarte, a weird and subtle number that is delightful in its suggestion of barbaric potions and spells and cabalistic mysteries. It is followed by music corresponding with the theme in the second act of "Tristan and Isolde," though entirely original, and the whole winds up with a pastoral, interwoven with a hunting chorus of horns, ending with a brilliant finale. The whole suite is charming from beginning to end, and the music augurs well for the popularity of the same composer's opera, "Le Cid," when it is sung here this winter.

Miss Gertrude May Stein sang both the Raff and the Wagner arias. Her delivery of the first was somewhat monotonous, but with the perplexed striving betwixt love and duty of Adriano's aria she sang with greater freedom and better effect. Miss Stein seems to have the dramatic instinct, but her voice is wanting in sympathetic quality and her singing in color.

The Times

PHILADELPHIA, NOVEMBER 8, 1900.

SYMPHONY CONCERT

First of the Second Series of the Boston Orchestra.

The feature of the first Wednesday night concert of the Boston Orchestra was the brilliant performance of the Schumann C major symphony. This beautiful work was played under Mr. Gericke with a fine poetic appreciation, with a clarity and refinement of execution and a fervor and force that left nothing to be demanded. The novelty on the programme was Massenet's "Esclarmonde" suite, a concert work rewritten from the music of the opera. Some of it is very beautiful music, imaginative and picturesque, but without the scene not all of it is self-sufficient. The instrumentation is very ingenious. The other orchestral number was Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" overture, and Miss Stein sang Raff's "Dream King" and an air from "Rienzi." Raff's long romantic ballads are much alike and this one is not particularly interesting, but Miss Stein is an interesting singer, with a lovely fresh voice and a good style, and she sang it very well indeed. The Wagner aria developed further fine capability of her voice and strengthened an agreeable impression.

The New Boston Music Hall.

Messrs. Editors: The opening of Symphony Hall in Boston was an event which not only excited the largest amount of local interest, but attracted the attendance of musical critics and enthusiasts from surrounding cities within a radius of several hundred miles.

The event was called the "city's new glory," and the opening performance was by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, supplemented by a local chorus, with soloists from New York.

Photographs of the hall have been received in Baltimore, and it is interesting to note that the interior is almost exactly a duplicate of Music Hall on Mount Royal avenue.

The opening address was made by Mr. H. L. Higginson, the founder and supporter of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In his speech Mr. Higginson stated that the directors "pondered long over plans, and finally, laying aside with regret Mr. McKim's beautiful design after the Greek theatre, they adopted the shape of hall which had of late been in vogue because successful."

Probably the opinion of the conductor and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra had much to do with this decision, as their expressions of satisfaction with the Baltimore Music Hall are well known, and they have abundant experience in both American and foreign music halls. Indeed, a representative of the directors came to Baltimore and took measurements of the interior of Music Hall, so that the extraordinary resemblance of the interiors of the two halls is not a surprise to those who are aware of the above facts.

The heating, lighting and ventilation of our Music Hall are entirely satisfactory, in which respects the Boston hall seems to be equal; but, judging from certain guarded remarks in the newspapers, it is likely that the acoustic qualities of our Baltimore hall (which are acknowledged to be excellent) are better than those of the Boston hall.

The Boston hall has a second gallery, and its total seating capacity is 2,569, while that of our Music Hall is 2,298, the arrangements of the seats being practically the same in each hall.

The rise in the main floor is the same as that in Baltimore, and in both halls a person can both see and hear from every seat.

The facade of the Boston hall is in its main construction like that of our Music Hall, but is relieved by cornices and entablatures, which can be added to the Baltimore hall at a comparatively small expense, and it will then present a finished and proper architectural appearance.

The total cost of our Music Hall was about $250,000, while the cost of the Boston Music Hall was about $750,000, of which about $400,000 was subscribed in cash to the capital stock, but about $350,000 had to be borrowed on mortgage.

Mr. Higginson stated in his address, speaking for the directors: "They mortgaged the hall with reluctance, but had no other course, as the money was essential. The building has been leased by the directors for 10 years to me, and I am to meet costs of administration, taxes and all charges and to pay to the stockholders the rest of the receipts."

If would appear from this statement that Mr. Higginson assumes the burden of paying the interest on the mortgage and all other expenses after receiving the rentals, which are likely to be far below the sums mentioned.

It is a matter of congratulations that no mortgage with a fixed charge rests upon our hall and that it is able to maintain itself from its own income.

The citizens of Baltimore, to whose generosity Music Hall is due, will doubtless be pleased to read these lines, and probably a Mr. Higginson or a combination of him may yet be found to enable Music Hall to be finished as it ought to be.

In conclusion I cannot do better than to quote Mr. Higginson's final words and apply them where they belong here:

"Certain citizens of Boston build a hall without regard to return in money, and by this act care for the happiness, the convenience, the education of the inhabitants for 20 miles around this spot; and it is fitting in a republic that the citizens, and not the government in any form, should do such work and bear such burdens. To the more fortunate people of our land belongs the privilege of providing the higher branches of education and of art."

FREDERICK M. COLSTON.

[40]

Press

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 1900.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Schumann's Great Work in C Major Read in Splendid Style.

What with the very welcome intermission of ten minutes before the symphony and the music that led up to it the interpretation of Schumann's impressive Symphony No. 2, in C major, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music last evening, was sharply defined as the feature of the concert. After hearing it read with that breadth of delivery and mastery of expression that is characteristic of the orchestra under Mr. Gericke's baton there was no question that this was what one came out to hear. The other features of the program were all very well as episodes, but the symphony stood out as a great work of art, attracting by its splendid proportions and its high classico-romantic appeal.

It was in vivid contrast to the program music of the French school represented by the well-known Berlioz Overture, "The Roman Carnival," tricky and bizarre and Massenet's orchestral suite, "Esclarmonde." Years and a decided change in the point of view lie between the "Roman Carnival," and "Esclarmonde," but there is a certain touch of Gallic nature and similarity of musical thought in both numbers, Berlioz anticipating the more modern work, while the modern composer reveals in this suite the palette recipes that Berlioz brought in and also justifies the sobriquet applied to him of "M'lle Wagner." As is characteristic of his school, Massenet's music is varied in apt color and the imitative and suggestive music is effective if the conventionally inevitable. The orchestra worked out the contrasts in the suite very delightfully, and was as crisp and clean cut in its work as if it were indeed a solo instrument.

The vocal interludes of the evening were in the shape of a somewhat tedious aria by Raff and Adriane's aria from "Rienzi," interpreted by Miss Gertrude May Stein, who has a warm soprano voice of power and wide range. The attack on certain notes in the Raff aria "Traum konig" was a little uncertain and the singer was heard to better advantage in the "Rienzi" selection, when her voice and art made a most favorable impression.

NEW YORK HERALD

HERALD SQUARE.

NEW YOR FRIDA , NOVEMBER 9 1900.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA HEARD

Opens the New York Season of Classical Concerts in Carnegie Hall.

DOHNANYI THE SOLOIST

His Interpretation of His Own Concerto for Pianoforte Wins Much Applause.

THE MUSICIANS PLAYED WELL

Wilhelm Gericke Conducted, and the Band Fully Sustained Its High Reputation.

Under Wilhelm Gericke's direction the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its first concert and the first classical orchestral concert of the musical season at Carnegie Hall last night. The increased attendance over that of last year showed that the organization is growing in popularity. Its work was as usual deservedly applauded. The soloist, Ernst von Dohnanyi, who played his own piano concerto, aroused much enthusiasm.

Herr von Dohnanyi's concerto (E minor) is a fine composition. In the solid first movement the piano is treated rather too much as part of the ensemble, instead of as a solo instrument. But in the andantino, which contains many beautiful passages—notably a sustained melody for the orchestra, with a delicate accompaniment of trills on the piano—and in the vivacious finale it fully asserted its rights. The pianist-composer who interpreted it is the most promising virtuoso who has been heard here since Paderewski made his first tour of conquest. He plays with brilliancy, dash and poetic feeling, and in manner is modest and unassuming. His success with the audience was most pronounced.

The orchestral numbers were Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" overture, a pretty scherzo by Goldmark and Dvorak's "From the New World" symphony. The concert might have been entitled an "Evening in E minor," for the introduction, allegro and vivace of the concerto and the introduction and three movements of the symphony were in that key.

All the orchestral works were played with great precision and much beauty of tone and with artistic expression. The orchestra was absolutely responsive to Mr. Gericke's baton.

THE MAIL AND EXPRESS

Broadway and Fulton St., New York.

FRIDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 9, 1900.

Before an audience of size and appearance befitting the occasion, the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the first of its ten New York concerts last evening at Carnegie Hall. Ernst von Dohnanyi, the young Hungarian pianist and composer, was the soloist, playing the piano part in his own concerto, with which he won a prize in competition in Vienna two years ago. Mr. Gericke was again at the conductor's stand, and the orchestra was the same body of virtuosi as of old. The programme included, besides the new Dohnanyi concerto, an unfamiliar work by Karl Goldmark, his "Scherzo," opus 45. The Berlioz "Roman Carnival" overture and Dvorak's "New World" symphony completed the list.

* * *

When Dohnanyi made his debut last March, with the Boston Orchestra, his choice of Beethoven's fourth piano concerto was taken as an indication of his preference, in a general way, for form over color. In his subsequent recitals, his powers as a colorist were shown to be considerable, yet it was made evident that his personal taste inclined less toward the use of this important factor, in pianoforte playing, than to an unusual sensitiveness for outline and mass. It was not surprising, therefore, to find in his pianoforte concerto, as heard last night, a close reflection of the young musician's temperament. It is rich in thematic material of a decided, if not always original, soft. Every movement has definite ideas in it, good melodic themes, marked in rhythm and purposeful in character. Though there are numerous passages in which the instruments combine to produce harmonies warm in color, one feels that this is rarely the ultimate object sought.

* * *

Sickliness and flabbiness play no part in this composition. Here was a musician with something very sweeping and positive to say. Like most juvenile efforts, the result contains some pretty commonplace matter, while exaggeration and lack of balance are also noticeable. Yet every whit is in deadly earnest. The composer has taken himself with proper seriousness, and his pronunciamentos, though they are not always effective, have come from a full heart.

The piano concerto, which is in E minor and bears the opus number 5, is in three movements, all of considerable length. The first opens adagio maestoso, in 3—4 time, changing quickly to allegro, in 2—2 time. The second movement, andantino, is in A minor, and in 2—2 time. The third movement, vivace, is in E minor, and in 3—4 time. Nothing in the whole composition is better than the full-throated introductory measures of the first movement. Throughout, the statement of thematic material, and its first elaboration, are the most interesting portions. In the working out sections, Dohnanyi was less successful. The orchestration, toward the end of each movement, becomes thick and turgid, and the fragments of themes, restated by small combinations of instruments, do not always attain a proper relief against the heavy body of orchestral tone. A conspicuous case of this occurs in the last movement, just before a closing presto.

The pianoforte part is important without either monopolizing the introduction of themes or degenerating into mere ornamentation. As Mr. Dohnanyi played it last night, one could tell that even his surprising technique was put to the test. His performance was admirable throughout, and, with the composition itself, increased the respect in which his musicianship is to be held. The acquaintance of this new work was well worth the making, if only as an indication of Mr. Dohnanyi's genuine promise. There was great enthusiasm last evening for the young composer, and he had to bow his acknowledgments many times.

* * *

Goldmark's "Scherzo" is evidently not intended to be taken too seriously. If it were, one could but deplore the fall from the high level of his recent "Sappho," with its haunting opening passage for two harps, or of the exquisite overture, "In Spring," to say nothing of the earlier "Sakuntala" of which the musical world is not likely to grow weary for many a day. But as Mr. Apthorp points out in the concert programme book, the term "Scherzo," as this new composition's title, is apparently used in its literal meaning of "a joke," rather than in its more common technical sense. Goldmark's feeling for rhythm and color is as marked as ever, in this new score; his melodic invention is not up to its usual standard, even when one considers this work as intended for a sort of musical trifle.

* * *

Mr. Gericke had not previously conducted Dvorak's "New World" symphony in New York, and there was some curiosity as to his reading of it. Except for a slight change in tempo in the English horn theme of the second movement, there was no conspicuous departure from tradition. And how the orchestra played! Those resounding strings fairly struck home, in such passages as the opening theme of the last movement; the wood wind choir, all important in this Dvorak score, covered itself with glory; the brass was incisive, or rich and mellow, as desired. Mr. Gericke enjoys almost a unique privilege in having at his command so perfect, so adaptable, so nicely adjusted an instrument as the Boston symphony orchestra.

The second concert of the New York series will take place on Saturday afternoon at Carnegie Hall, with Miss Gertrude May Stein as soloist, and a programme wholly different from last night's.

SAMUEL SWIFT.

The New York Times.

"All the News That's Fit to Print."

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.

NEW YORK, FRIDAY, NOV. 9, 1900.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA.

The 1,800th Concert of the Organization Given Last Night.

It is hardly likely that the majority of the audience which greeted the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night at Carnegie Hall on its first appearance this season in New York was acquainted with the full significance of the occasion. The entertainment was the eighteen-hundredths concert given by this orchestra since its foundation, nineteen years ago. In mere number alone the record exceeds that of any other orchestral organization in the country. But the musical history which goes with the record and the beneficent work for the elevation of artistic standards and the development of public appreciation are far and away beyond any count of numbers. In the nineteen years of its existence the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been the central sun of the orchestral system of this country, in whose refulgent rays other orchestras have paled as do the stars at the coming of the morning. It stands to-day as the leader and the type of all that is most beautiful in musical ensemble, and it preaches the gospel of refinement, of artistic balance, and of polish of style as effectively as it did when it was first made known to this public in a certain memorable concert in the old Steinway Hall. For these reasons it is always welcome when it returns to us, and its concert last night, the close of its eighteenth century of entertainments, was one to be welcomed with joy and remembered with gratitude.

The programme for the evening consisted of the "Carnival Romain" overture of Berlioz, an old battle horse of this orchestra, a piano concerto in E minor by Ernest Donhanyi, the young piano virtuoso; a new scherzo in A major for orchestra by Carl Goldmark, and the ever-welcome symphony of Antonio Dvorak, called "From the New World." The centre of interest was, of course, Mr. Donhanyi's piano concerto with the composer at the piano. This composition won for its writer the Boesendorfer Prize in Vienna, and that fact, in the minds of most music lovers, was sufficient to raise questions. For prize compositions have generally to be made on some familiar last, and to be neatly fashioned with counterpoint, harmonic modulations and melodic contrasts after the manner of the fathers who laid down the laws of the grammar of music. Any composer who flies in the face of tradition in working for a prize is like to find himself in the situation of young Walther before that eminent marker, Sixtus Beckmesser, who knew the rules but had no fancy for novelty.

Now, the judges who gave Mr. Dohnanyi the prize for his piano concerto must at least have been of the present epoch. They were not living wholly in the music of the past, for this concerto is not cut strictly according to any of the patterns. The first movement was originally intended for a whole work in one piece, and it bears evidences of that fact. It is too long, and it is not as closely related to the rest of the composition as it might be. It is tremendously dramatic in conception, and it is written with enormous vigor, though not with constant discretion nor that continence which will come to its composer with maturity. But the youth who can turn out such virile and freely written matter may do something in the field of composition when he shall have got his forces in hand. There are plenty of thematic ideas in the movement, but they are fragmentary and not associated in style. Mr. Dohnanyi has heard Beethoven and Wagner and Brahms, and while he thinks his own thoughts, he follows the style of first one and then another of his forerunners.

The second movement is the clearest and most consistent in the work. The third is weak, though there is effect in the final summing up of its ideas by the orchestra with a running commentary by the piano. The last movement is too eager in its search after imposing climax, and it overthrows itself by its ambition. But this is not a piece of music to be tossed lightly aside by the nib of the critical pen. It is made of bone and muscle, and it throbs, too, with the blood of ardent, aspiring, impassioned youth. Its errors are those of ingenuousness, for piling Pelion on Ossa in the struggle for majesty of utterance has always been an amiable mistake of youth.

Experience will teach this young man how to gain his ends at the expense of less appearance of exhausting the physical resources of music. Maturity will reveal to him that the highest utterance of genius is simple, and that the peaks of art lie serene and snowy in the radiance of the golden sunlight far above the turmoil of the sordid vales below. Let it be added that this concerto is remarkably free from the cheap piano figures which abound in the writings of some more noted composers, and the orchestral part is uncommonly rich and beautiful. The distribution of thought between the solo instrument and the orchestra is masterly, but it may be doubted whether in the first movement and at times in the others the composer has not strayed away from the natural idiom of the piano. Mr. Dohnanyi played his work with superb skill. In the crashing finale he rose to unusal heights, and he left the stage with the audience in a state of exaltation, which earned for him half a dozen enthusiastic recalls. The accompaniment was performed in perfect manner by Mr. Gericke and his splendid orchestra.

The Goldmark scherzo proved to be a work of genial mood and melodious character, delightfully written for the orchestra and played with that finish and sonority to which the Boston men have accustomed us. And at the end of all it was our privilege to listen once more to that admirable symphony of Dr. Dvorak, which, like so many other things musical, is to the taste of New York and to the distaste of Boston. For this there should be genuine regret. But Boston is nothing if not original, and whether in music or politics it has its own way. Let us rejoice that the Boston orchestra when away from home plucks up courage to perform as excellently as it did last night a symphony in which the composer said he was trying to note something of the musical spirit of the United States, as shown in the kind of folk-song most popular here. That the folk-song of the rest of the land is not that of Boston let us admit, where mothers lull their restless babes with the stern lyrics of Browning set to Philippine music. But the symphony delights us in spite of that saddening fact. It would delight us more if Mr. Gericke would not hurry the slow movement quite so much, but perhaps that is a matter of fancy. We would forgive much for the sake of such solid tone and perfect technic as that of the orchestra heard last night.

NOVEMBER 9, 1900.

BOSTON ORCHESTRA HEARD.

Opens the Season at Carnegie Hall —Dohnanyi's Concerto.

No longer can there be any doubt that the musical season is on in earnest. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the familiar leadership of Mr. Gericke, came to town last night and gave its first concert at Carnegie Hall. There was a well-filled house to welcome this band of accomplished musicians and in it were to be seen most of the prominent music-lovers of New York.

Mr. Gericke's programme consisted of four numbers, two of which were played for the first time here. One served to re-introduce Ernst von Dohnanyi, the Hungarian pianist, whose remarkable talent was disclosed here only toward the end of last season. It will be remembered that the simplicity and loftiness, the clean-cut touch, the disdain of clap-trap and lack of affectation that marked the playing of this young man then came as a welcome relief to ears surfeited with sensuous titilations and dulled with o'ermastering hammering.

Last night Mr. Dohnanyi played one of his own compositions, his Concerto in E Minor, recorded as his Opus 5. The work, which is of no mean order of merit, is a little too constrained. It is especially strong in orchestration and is developed with great technical skill. While not lacking in thought, the marks of labor somewhat obscure the inspiration. If they emphasize the promise of things to come, however, the half a dozen recalls that Mr. Dohnanyi got were fully deserved.

Goldmark's Scherzo in A major was the other novelty while Berlioz's overture, "The Roman Carnival," and Dvorak's "From the New World" symphony, completed the programme. The players were in fine fettle, responding to the slightest intimation of the conductor's desires and playing with a tone and a finish never more admirable. Some exception might be taken to Mr. Gericke's reading of the second movement of the symphony, but it did not seriously interfere with the enjoyment of the whole.

The orchestra may be heard to-night in Brooklyn and to-morrow the first matinee of the New York season will be given at Carnegie Hall.

The World.

ed by the Press Publishing Company, 53 to 63 PARK New York.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 1900.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA.

Gives Its First Concert with Pianist Dohnanyi as Soloist.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra made its first visit to New York yesterday and inaugurated the season of symphonic music in proper form at Carnegie Hall in the evening. By a coincidence, the concert was the eighteen hundreth given by the orchestra since its organization in 1881.

For the orchestral part of the programme Mr. William Gericke had selected Berlioz's overture, "The Roman Carnival," a scherzo by Karl Goldmark (A major, Op. 45), and Dvorak's fifth symphony—the one written while the composer was living here a few years ago and which is built on themes and rhythms which are current in the musical speech of America.

The orchestra was in its best form—barring a recurring weakness in the attack of the wood wind instruments. In precision, beauty and fulness of tone, finish, polish and sympathetic unity of interpretation this superlative organization has no superior. This fact has been established, and performances like that of last evening simply emphasize the matter. The precision was notably exhibited in the Berlioz overture, with its successive contrasts of character. The Goldmark scherzo, which had never before been played here, is a good show piece. Its calls on orchestral skill are incessant. Intrinsically the composition has little value. It is lively, spirited and entertaining, but the substance is thin. Goldmark's command of orchestration is fully utilized, but the work does not contain the dramatic expressiveness and breadth and the rich tone-color which are the indices of the composer's individuality in his more familiar works.

Mr. Gericke's reading of the Dvorak symphony was disturbing to New York notions. It was hard, cold and prosaic, with tempi and phrasings at variance with those which the composer—vicariously, through Mr. Seidl's agency—established at the work's first performance.

Ernst von Dohnanyi, the young pianist whose belated participation in the last season was one of its striking features, played his own concerto — the one with which he won the Vienna competition two years ago. The opus has the faults of youth. It is ambitious, pretentious and labored. The composer was not inspired, he was striving for a prize. He tried to put all he knew and all he thought he knew in its pages. It is well written, showing a very thorough knowledge of form and development, but it is weak in ideas. Another fault is, that the pianist has dominated the composer, and much of the matter has no other purpose than that of permitting the instrumentalist to exhibit his technical facility. The second movement is the best. It has a main theme of much melodic beauty. The finale is a burst of fiery vigor, which carries the audience away. Needless to say, Mr. von Dohnanyi played with extraordinary dash.

---

[41]

The Commercial Advertiser.

By The Commercial Advertiser Association.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOV. 9, 1900.

The first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Carnegie Hall last night brought out the distinguished audience that is always found at these events, and one, too, that filled the hall with comfort, a favorable augury for the prosperity of the organization in the coming season. Last year, for some reason, the audiences were not always so large as they should have been.

The programme was excellent, comprising two familiar and welcome numbers, Berlioz's Roman Carnival overture and Dvorak's From the New World Symphony, which had not been played here for three years, and two novelties, a scherzo in A major by Karl Goldmark and a pianoforte concerto in E minor by Ernst von Dohnányi, who was the soloist. The playing of the overture revealed all those qualities which make the Boston Orchestra one of the best in the world, the fine quality of tone, the absolute balance and the superb discipline and training which have made it the perfect and homogeneous instrument that it is. Few changes are observable in the composition of the band, which in itself will account for a good part of its fine work. Mr. Gericke, however, has changed the arrangement slightly by putting his 'cellos practically behind the first violins and bringing forward his violas to a position of greater prominence.

As to the symphony, to tell the truth, Mr. Gericke's treatment of this did not make a deep impression on us. In a way it was almost faultlessly played, as nearly everything undertaken by this band is, and the symphony gained immeasurably in beauty through the exquisite tone of the wood wind instruments. None the less the performance left one rather cold and unmoved. It was brilliant, but the warmth and geniality which so fill the work—one of the most charming things that Dvorak has written, and one that wears exceedingly well—were noticeable chiefly by their absence. It seemed as if Mr. Gericke was not greatly in sympathy with it and its purpose.

Goldmark's Scherzo is a show piece pure and simple, withal a pleasing one, but a piece which must suffer greatly when brought into comparison with many of his earlier compositions. The material of which it is built is not very substantial, and the composer's instrumentation, while effective to a certain degree, lacks much of that richness of color which has always been the hall-mark of Goldmark's work. Indeed, parts of it were very thin, and made one wonder if Goldmark is losing his grip, which would not be strange considering his age. Yet it is attractive, and is likely to become popular with concert-goers.

The welcome given to Mr. Dohnányi was warm and sincere as it should have been, for he is one of the most interesting pianists we have ever had here. His coming at the tail-end of last season was one of the few events which gave to it some distinction, all the more so since he came unknown and unheralded. A fine pianist, he is in addition to that a serious musician, who goes at his work with a sincerity which is altogether convincing; one who does not resort to any of the many tricks of the trade to win the approbation of the superficial. It would be strange, however, if we should find in him, considering his youth, as accomplished a composer as pianist. What of his work that was heard here last year indicated that he had good stuff in him which time would develop, and his concerto which he played last night confirmed this opinion. He has all the extravagance of youth, an abundance of ideas, but as yet he is not sure how best to give them expression. His concerto contains enough material for at least two, and there are composers writing who could make three out of it and do a pretty good job at that. It is too long and prolix, and the very richness of its material prevents the composer from doing justice to himself, for he at times gets into tangles from which he has to release himself by heroic measures, at the cost of symmetry and lucidity. Yet fault should not be found with this, for the sin, if it be one, will be corrected by age and experience and no one in these days should be criticized for having too much to say—musically.

In the general treatment of the subject one easily detects the influence of Brahms, both in the treatment of the solo instrument and in the orchestration. The piano is really a solo instrument but a part of the time, this despite some stunning passage work and striking cadenzas; it is really a part of the orchestra and the impression is left that Dohnányi was writing for the whole instead of the one. In this he is following the general tendency of subordinating the solo instrument in works of this kind, a tendency which, if carried to it logical end, will ultimately banish the concerto from the concert stage, a thing not altogether to be deplored. The instrumentation is rich and vigorous and the whole work was of a kind to leave a deep impression of promise for the future. Mr. Dohnányi played with great brilliancy and he received fine support from the band.

At the matinée to-morrow afternoon, the orchestra will play the Euryanthe overture, Massenet's Esclarmonde suite and Beethoven's C minor Symphony. The soloist will be Miss Gertrude May Stein.

New-York Daily Tribune.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 1900.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA.

The first concert for the season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which took place last night in Carnegie Hall, introduced two novelties to the local public and a somewhat novel reading of a work with which that public is on peculiar terms of intimacy. The new compositions were a pianoforte concerto by Ernst von Dohnanyi, the solo part of which was played by the composer, and an orchestral scherzo by Carl Goldmark. The familiar work which offered new things in the matter of reading was Dr. Dvorak's symphony, "From the New World," which has won recognition all the world over for its beauty and originality, but is still a cause of wit with the funny men of the Boston press. Mr. Gericke and his men were admirably disposed, and when they opened the concert with Berlioz's "Carnaval Romain" overture it seemed as if their tone had never been so brilliant, their precision so great, their rhythms so crisp, incisive and sparkling. These qualities, indeed, marked all the work of the evening, but much of the dreamy poetry of the second movement of the symphony was sacrificed by Mr. Gericke's unconscionably rapid tempo, as was also much of the beauty of the first movement. In the case of this symphony there is validity in local tradition, for it was here that the work was first awakened into life, and the composer's sanction was impressed upon the first performances which it received under Mr. Seidl at Philharmonic concerts. It is also a part of the history of the symphony that Dr. Dvorak changed the time designation of the slow movement to make it conform to Mr. Seidl's conception of its proper tempo. Mr. Gericke did not give us a largo, but an andante. The scherzo by Goldmark proved to be an uninteresting composition, which no doubt accounts for the circumstance that, though it is a dozen or fifteen years old at least, and all the rest of its composer's orchestral pieces have won popularity in our concert rooms, it waited till last night for its first performance in the American metropolis.

Mr. Dohnanyi played his concerto with such fine dash and life as would have predisposed the audience in its favor had it been only half as interesting a work as it turned out to be. Mr. Dohnanyi is a young man and is still leading a strenuous artistic life. Even when his thoughts are not large they surge and seethe in the utterance and take on an importance to which they are not fairly entitled. Yet this concerto is a striking piece of evidence of that fine talent, not to call it genius, which we were glad to recognize in the young musician a year ago. It might profitably be pruned in respect of length as well as thickness of orchestration, but it speaks for things which are admirable and which must be recognized with gratitude.

The number of copies of the Evening Telegram printed yesterday was . . . 145,800

NEW YORK, FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 1900.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Heard.

Under Wilhelm Gericke's direction the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its first concert and the first classical orchestral concert of the musical season at Carnegie Hall last night. The increased attendance over that of last year showed that the organization is growing in popularity. Its work was as usual deservedly applauded. The soloist, Ernst von Dohnanyi, who played his own piano concerto, aroused much enthusiasm.

The orchestral numbers were Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" overture, a pretty scherzo by Goldmark and Dvorak's "From the New World" symphony. The concert might have been entitled an "Evening in E minor," for the introduction, allegro and vivace of the concerto and the introduction and three movements of the symphony were in that key.

All the orchestral works were played with great precision and much beauty of tone and with artistic expression. The orchestra was absolutely responsive to Mr. Gericke's baton.

The New York Times.

"All the News That's Fit to Print."

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.

NEW YORK, FRIDAY, NOV. 9, 1900.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA.

The 1,800th Concert of the Organization Given Last Night.

It is hardly likely that the majority of the audience which greeted the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night at Carnegie Hall on its first appearance this season in New York was acquainted with the full significance of the occasion. The entertainment was the eighteen-hundredths concert given by this orchestra since its foundation, nineteen years ago. In mere number alone the record exceeds that of any other orchestral organization in the country. But the musical history which goes with the record and the beneficent work for the elevation of artistic standards and the development of public appreciation are far and away beyond any count of numbers. In the nineteen years of its existence the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been the central sun of the orchestral system of this country, in whose refulgent rays other orchestras have paled as do the stars at the coming of the morning. It stands to-day as the leader and the type of all that is most beautiful in musical ensemble, and it preaches the gospel of refinement, of artistic balance, and of polish of style as effectively as it did when it was first made known to this public in a certain memorable concert in the old Steinway Hall. For these reasons it is always welcome when it returns to us, and its concert last night, the close of its eighteenth century of entertainments, was one to be welcomed with joy and remembered with gratitude.

The programme for the evening consisted of the "Carnival Romain" overture of Berlioz, an old battle horse of this orchestra, a piano concerto in E minor by Ernest Donhanyi, the young piano virtuoso; a new scherzo in A major for orchestra by Carl Goldmark, and the ever-welcome symphony of Antonio Dvorak, called "From the New World." The centre of interest was, of course, Mr. Donhanyi's piano concerto with the composer at the piano. This composition won for its writer the Boesendorfer Prize in Vienna, and that fact, in the minds of most music lovers, was sufficient to raise questions. For prize compositions have generally to be made on some familiar last, and to be neatly fashioned with counterpoint, harmonic modulations and melodic contrasts after the manner of the fathers who laid down the laws of the grammar of music. Any composer who flies in the face of tradition in working for a prize is like to find himself in the situation of young Walther before that eminent marker, Sixtus Beckmesser, who knew the rules but had no fancy for novelty.

Now, the judges who gave Mr. Dohnanyi the prize for his piano concerto must at least have been of the present epoch. They were not living wholly in the music of the past, for this concerto is not cut strictly according to any of the patterns. The first movement was originally intended for a whole work in one piece, and it bears evidences of that fact. It is too long, and it is not as closely related to the rest of the composition as it might be. It is tremendously dramatic in conception, and it is written with enormous vigor, though not with constant discretion nor that continence which will come to its composer with maturity. But the youth who can turn out such virile and freely written matter may do something in the field of composition when he shall have got his forces in hand. There are plenty of thematic ideas in the movement, but they are fragmentary and not associated in style. Mr. Dohnanyi has heard Beethoven and Wagner and Brahms, and while he thinks his own thoughts, he follows the style of first one and then another of his forerunners.

The second movement is the clearest and most consistent in the work. The third is weak, though there is effect in the final summing up of its ideas by the orchestra with a running commentary by the piano. The last movement is too eager in its search after imposing climax, and it overthrows itself by its ambition. But this is not a piece of music to be tossed lightly aside by the nib of the critical pen. It is made of bone and muscle, and it throbs, too, with the blood of ardent, aspiring, impassioned youth. Its errors are those of ingenuousness, for piling Pelion on Ossa in the struggle for majesty of utterance has always been an amiable mistake of youth.

Experience will teach this young man how to gain his ends at the expense of less appearance of exhausting the physical resources of music. Maturity will reveal to him that the highest utterance of genius is simple, and that the peaks of art lie serene and snowy in the radiance of the golden sunlight far above the turmoil of the sordid vales below. Let it be added that this concerto is remarkably free from the cheap piano figures which abound in the writings of some more noted composers, and the orchestral part is uncommonly rich and beautiful. The distribution of thought between the solo instrument and the orchestra is masterly, but it may be doubted whether in the first movement and at times in the others the composer has not strayed away from the natural idiom of the piano. Mr. Dohnanyi played his work with superb skill. In the crashing finale he rose to unusal heights, and he left the stage with the audience in a state of exaltation, which earned for him half a dozen enthusiastic recalls. The accompaniment was performed in perfect manner by Mr. Gericke and his splendid orchestra.

The Goldmark scherzo proved to be a work of genial mood and melodious character, delightfully written for the orchestra and played with that finish and sonority to which the Boston men have accustomed us. And at the end of all it was our privilege to listen once more to that admirable symphony of Dr. Dvorak, which, like so many other things musical, is to the taste of New York and to the distaste of Boston. For this there should be genuine regret. But Boston is nothing if not original, and whether in music or politics it has its own way. Let us rejoice that the Boston orchestra when away from home plucks up courage to perform as excellently as it did last night a symphony in which the composer said he was trying to note something of the musical spirit of the United States, as shown in the kind of folk-song most popular here. That the folk-song of the rest of the land is not that of Boston let us admit, where mothers lull their restless babes with the stern lyrics of Browning set to Philippine music, but the symphony delights us in spite of that saddening fact. It would delight us more if Mr. Gericke would not hurry the slow movement quite so much, but perhaps that is a matter of fancy. We would forgive much for the sake of such solid tone and perfect technic as that of the orchestra heard last night.

The New York Times.

"All the News That's Fit to Print."

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.

NEW YORK, SUNDAY, NOV. 11, 1900.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA.

First Afternoon Concert of the Season at Carnegie Hall.

It was evident from the programme of the first afternoon concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which was given at Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon, that Mr. Gericke intends to make a distinction between the character of the evening entertainments and that of those offered in the afternoons. The former are, as is right and expedient, to be the more serious, while the latter, without falling below the dignity of the organization, will be of a popular kind. Let it be added that the popularity will not be of the variety commonly meant when that word is used, but of the sort understood among people to whom music does not signify the froth of operettas or the vain imaginings of Sousa.

The programme yesterday afternoon consisted of Weber's overture to "Euryanthe," Raff's aria "Traum Koenig," the ballet music from Massenet's "Esclarmonde," Adriano's aria from Wagner's "Rienzi," and Beethoven's fifth symphony. The soloist was Miss Gertrude May Stein. The audience was a large one, a fact which showed the wisdom of changing the day of the matinées from Wednesday to Saturday, and the applause demonstrated that the assembly was in search of sweets of a nature easy on the tongue. The largest amount of enthusiasm was aroused by the dainty scherzo of the ballet. But the other good things of the feast were not lacking in appreciation.

Again the orchestra proved its title to the first place among organizations of the kind. Its playing was admirable, though it must be noted that in the symphony one viola player made an incorrect entry, a thing so uncommon among these Bostonian artists as to call for remark. The "Esclarmonde" music afforded Mr. Gericke opportunity for the display of the virtuosity of his assembly of instrumentalists, and they acquitted themselves with their unfailing success. It is a delight to hear brilliant music played brilliantly, and it would be hard, indeed, to find anything more admirable in the way of precision and beauty of tone than the performance of this number. Yet in the symphony the players revealed once again those sterling qualities which have done more for the reputation of this orchestra than any mere displays of technical skill. The solidity and purity of tone, the perfection of the phrasing, and withal the constant revelation of artistic intelligence in the performance made it thoroughly praiseworthy. Certainly it would be impossible to play the famous andante better than it was played yesterday.

Miss Stein is a singer of irregular moods. Her normal musical state is one of icy smoothness and glitter, yet it is not so long since, in Boston, she astonished her hearers by singing in Beethoven's mass in D with moving warmth. She had not this warmth yesterday. Her tone was pinched and consequently cold, and without warm tone warm style is out of the question. In the cantabile of the Wagner air, too, it must be admitted that Miss Stein was at times off the key. But muscular contraction of the throat in the effort to control tone never does anything but harm. What a pity that so many singers get so far away from nature in what they are pleased to call their "method."

The reappearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last week was the principal musical occurrence of the week. That the players from the Aguinaldian city of Massachusetts were in splendid form was a matter to be noted, but not a subject for astonishment. Their tone sounded unusually substantial and brilliant on Thursday night, and it was not possible to discern the reason for it. The atmospheric conditions did not seem to be exceptional, and the arrangement of the stage and the seating of the orchestra were the same as heretofore. But the fact remains that there was something uncommonly fine in the sound of the body of instruments.

It is a pity that Mr. Gericke's reading of the Dvorak symphony was not as admirable as the orchestra's performance of it. It is not possible to conceive how he could so have misread the slow movement. By taking it at an incorrectly fast tempo he destroyed the entire spirit of this wonderfully poetic piece of writing. Wagner declared that the whole duty of the conductor lay in the right conception of the tempo. If that is all right, the rest will follow of itself. No clearer demonstration of the truth of this assertion by a man whose head was wonderfully level on most questions of musical art was ever given than in Mr. Gericke's too swift performance of the largo of this symphony. The purpose of the music, its color, its emotional atmosphere, all were quite obliterated. It was, indeed, sad, for the orchestra was fit to play the symphony as it had never been played here before. Again, in the last movement, Mr. Gericke made one long for the muscular precision of his predecessor, who would certainly not have polished the corners off this piece of square-cut, resolute music.

***

With the Boston Orchestra there returned to the local concert stage that admirable young piano virtuoso Ernest Dohnanyi. He was welcomed as he deserved to be, and he played like a young Apollo. His new concerto was sufficiently discussed after its performance, but an additional word must be said as to the personality of this most interesting artist. He has the real material in him, and his individuality is wonderfully fascinating. It has justly been said of him that he is the first pianist made known to this public since Paderewski who has whetted the musical appetite. He is a true artist, musical in organization, gifted with temperament and intelligence, already far advanced in self-control, and competent to hold the attention of an audience at all times. Frequently he can move his hearers to a high pitch of excitement. His two recitals announced elsewhere should have large audiences, and doubtless will.

***

The Sun.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1900.

BOSTON SYMPHONY MATINEE.

A Pleasing and Popular Concert in Carnegie Hall Yesterday.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played for the second time this week in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon. It was a pleasing but by no means remarkable concert. Conductor Gericke built his programme with the heavy artillery closing up the rear; Beethoven's fifth symphony ended the affair; Weber's Euryan the overture began it. In the middle he plumped that amazing convocation of other men's ideas —Massenet's Esclarmonde suite. This, with two arias sung by Miss Gertrude May Stein, made up a scheme if not notable for novelty, at least sound and enjoyable. At the previous concert the fact was noticeable that this orchestra of virtuosi had not yet limbered up after a long vacation. The wood wind when massed lacked the precision and purity to be expected from such artists; while the apathy of the general performance could not be overlooked. It seemed as if the Berlioz overture had exhausted the speed and fire of the organization. Yesterday the Weber overture was not so brilliantly delivered as the Berlioz "pastaccio," but it was sufficiently muscular to be inspiring, and better still, it did not absorb the dynamic energy of Mr. Gericke and his men. As to details, one may cavil at the hoarseness of the brass, particularly near the close. Weber is a pet composer of the conductor's and his interest in the music was gratifyingly felt.

The Esclarmonde suite is not a novelty in this city, having been heard under Seidl and others. It was announced on the programme as new at these concerts. As a composition it has all the distinguishing earmarks of being made to suit the popular taste. When Massenet brews his musical entertainments the wraith of Wagner is not afar. It looms up in the hollow and sonorous invocation; in company with Berlioz it hovers restlessly over the Magic Isle; and when the formal patterns of the great dead composer are not in evidence his rich coloring is utilized with—it must be confessed—an ear-tickling effect that speeds like a bullet to the public target. If Wagner fails our gifted Frenchman Raff comes at the beck of his versatile pen. The Pastoral—charmingly pired by M. Longy and his bosky oboe—and the Hunt, are Raffish in intention rather than strictly imitative. Massenet manufactured this suite out of his operatic snippets: at the best it is nothing if not panoramic. It was extremely well done by the band. Mr. Gericke mixes his colors well even if he does not accelerate one's pulse beat. To play innovations into the C minor symphony is the dear desire of most modern conductors. A memorable exception is this one. He is academic; he believes in saying the old things well rather than the new indifferently. But well enough is not good enough for the interpretation of this arch type of symphonic literature. Beethoven needs the big note and the big note was what we did not hear yesterday afternoon. There were smooth and decorative surfaces, mellifluousness, even breadth in the final allegro; but the swing, majesty and dramatic spirit were absent. For this reason the lovely song of the andante went begging. Too filed out were its phrases and the breath of poetry was not in it. No more familiar work is played to our audiences, yet no more remote work, remote and inaccessible, has ever been created. It has been given so often by the Boston Symphony Orchestra that from its "vasty deep" the spirits do not always answer Mr. Gericke's summons.

Miss Stein, a local mezzo-soprano, gave an unfamiliar air, "Traune Koenig," by Raff and Adriano's air, "Gerechter Gott," from "Rienzi." She sang with her accustomed intelligence and finish. The Raff music was undoubtedly warmed at the Bayreuth oven. It is pretty with a vague prettiness and some of it seemed too low for the singer. The phrase, "Mein Lieb," taxed her deeper notes. She was more successful with parts of the Wagner recitative and air, though missing the larger dramatic accent. The audience quite filled the hall and was not demonstrative.

New-York Daily Tribune.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1900.

An extremely interesting set of ballet pieces was brought forward as the central number in the scheme of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert yesterday afternoon. It is a composition by Jules Massenet and grew out of music originally written for "Esclarmonde," which, like so many French operas, had its little out lively day in Paris. The music is piquant, clever in invention and most ingeniously orchestrated, and the number made a delightful impression. The concert began with the overture to "Euryanthe" and closed with Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, in the reading of which there was little to admire, the pleasure which the performance gave coming chiefly from the exquisite tone of the band and the precision of its playing. Eloquent, picturesque, suggestive, inspiriting, Mr. Gericke's interpretation of this masterpiece is not; but illuminative of its textual contents. Miss Gertrude May Stein sang Raff's "Der Traum König und Sein Lieb" and Adriano's air from Wagner's "Rienzi," which has earned a few years' rest. Miss Stein sang, as she always does, very well indeed.

Last night in Mendelssohn Hall the Kneisel Quartet assisted Miss Florence Gale in giving a concert of chamber music. There was an air of seriousness about the programme not often observable in concerts whose design is primarily to exploit a pianoforte player, and an air of gentleness and kindness prevailed among the listeners; so the affair passed off amiably. Miss Gale, who is a pupil of Leschetizky, played Mendelssohn's Trio in D minor with Messrs. Kneisel and Schroeder, and Schumann's Quintet with Mr. Kneisel and his three companions, and was also heard in four solos—Schumann's Novelette, Op. 21, No. 8; Tschaikowsky's Romance in A flat, Op. 5; Liszt's D flat study, and Mosskowski's "Zur Guitarre," the last given on a recall. Her style of playing is marked by clearness, rhythmical incisiveness and robustness of tone, but deficient in sentiment and poetry.

The Music Committee of the Deutscher Liederkranz has instituted a series of chamber music concerts, the first of which will be given in the hall of the club this afternoon. The performers will be Richard Arnold, Hermann Kuehn and John Sparger, violins; Carl Binhak, viola; Leo Taussig, violoncello, and August Kalkhof, double bass, and the programme will consist of Beethoven's Quartet, Op. 18, No. 4; Wuerst's Russian suite (sextet), Henri Hartog's "Bonheur" (sextet) and Tschaikowsky's Serenade, Op. 48.

The World.

Published by the Press Publishing Company, 53 to 63 PARK ROW, New York.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1900.

It is so seldom that one is called upon to express dissatisfaction with a musical performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra that the words drop reluctantly from the point of the pen. Still, the truth demands the record of the fact that Mr. Gericke's reading of the Dvorak "New World" symphony seemed as if inspired by hostility. It can be understood that the Bohemian composer's notion of reflecting in this work in an idealized manner certain fixed national musical forms and idioms would escape a conductor who has never been susceptible to the influences of his American environment. But there is no explanation for the perversion of elementary indications of tempo. Mr. Gericke may not be familiar with the exact rhythmic twist of the so-called "snap," but he can not be ignorant of the fact that "largo" and "andante" are not interchangeable terms. As played on Thursday evening the symphony was robbed of all its charm and poetry.

* * *

NEW YORK HERALD, SU NOVEMBER 11, 1900.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave an afternoon concert at Carnegie Hall yesterday, playing among other works, under Wilhelm Gericke's direction, selections from Massenet's "Esclarmonde" and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. The orchestra and the soloist, Miss Gertrude May Stein, who sang selections by Raff and Wagner, were much applauded.

The Sun.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 1900.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Ernst Von Dohnanyi's Concerto Heard for the First Time Here.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which has come to occupy such a high place in the affections of New York music lovers, gave the first concert of its present season last night at Carnegie Hall. The Boston players are now nearly as much at home here as in the city which claims them. In the regrettable absense of any comparable orchestra of its own the local public has elected to bestow its patronage liberally on the visiting musicians.

The programme last night included the "Roman Carnival" overture by Berlioz, Ernst von Dohnanyi's concerto for piano in E minor, opus 5; Carl Goldmark's Scherzo in A minor, and Antonin Dvorak's Fifth Symphony, in E minor, commonly called "From the New World." M. Dohnanyi was the soloist in his own composition. It was the novelty of the programme and attracted particular attention through the composer's performance.

The history of the work is already more or less familiar. It received the prize in a competition organized by a firm of Viennese piano makers in 1898 when the jury, which was to pass on the merits of the work, included besides Wilhelm Gericke, the conductor last night, MM. Epstein, Gruenfeld, Leschetizy and Rosenthal. Although M. Dohnanyi submitted his concerto in an unfinished condition it won the first prize over the seventy-one works submitted. It has been played by the composer already in Vienna, London and Berlin. It is a highly pretentious work and moreover a long one, as it occupies nearly three-quarters of an hour in performance. It is modern in form and the piano is not always kept a solo instrument, but becomes at times a part of the orchestra. The concerto is an extremely interesting work, although the composer's ambitions have at times been too much for his present power of achievement. He shows a mastery of the orchestra and his efforts to combine the styles of two composers were evident frequently; for, like many young composers, M. Dohnanyi has not yet formed his own style, although his natural talents as they were shown in the concerto are likely to develop until his own individuality is more strongly stamped on his work. The composition bore in other particulars marks of the young musician's work. The effort to accomplish a great effect was frequently obvious and there were at times greater evidence of study than spontaneity or inspiration. The success of the work with the audience was undoubted. M. Dohnanyi was repeatedly recalled. His own performance was brilliant and the orchestra played in this number, as in all others, with faultless skill, which is characteristic of the organization.

Another novelty last night was Goldmark's "Scherzo," which has not been heard here before. The name is used by the composer in its literal sense to mean "a joke" and not in its musical significance. The work had the orchestral splendor which is always to be expected of the composer and its character was at times distinctly suggestive of Mendelssohn. It proved to be an agreeable composition rather popular than classical in its nature and without striking originality. The playing of the orchestra in this selection as well as in the Berlioz overture and the Dvorak symphony, was as remarkable as ever for its beauty of tone, precision, finish and elegance.

The organization has been truthfully called a "virtuoso" orchestra and it has never lost its right to that title.

The Evening Post.

New York, Friday, Nov. 9, 1900.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

There are few bands in the world equal in make-up and training to the Boston Symphony Orchestra; yet its opening concert last night at Carnegie Hall was a bore from beginning to end, owing partly to the programme, partly to the manner of its interpretation. The soloist, Mr. Dohnanyi, played his own concerto in E minor, opus 5, concerning which so much has been heard because at a competition in Vienna it won the prize of $800 over more than seventy rivals. While listening to it, one could not but recall Voltaire's sneer at the optimism of Leibnitz: "If this is the best of all possible worlds, what must the others be?" If the Viennese judges (Mr. Gericke was one of them) found this the best concerto submitted to them from all the countries of Europe, then the creative musical impulse must be at a low ebb in those countries.

For an opus 5 it is indeed very well written, revealing in every movement the fact that the composer has mastered the rules of harmony and counterpoint, and the art of orchestration, as taught at the conservatories. But of creativeness there is not a trace. There are themes, to be sure, for without themes one cannot write any music; but themes are not necessarily ideas. "How do you do?" and "There is a cold wave coming from the west" are themes, but not ideas. Mr. Dohnanyi's concerto—like 95 per cent. of all music written—consists of strings of such platitudes, and, as it lasts forty-five minutes, it becomes most wearisome long before the end. Mr. Dohnanyi has now learned how to write music. The next thing for him to learn is a number of "Don'ts," and among these the most important is, "Don't compose unless you have something new to say." It is needless to add that the young composer played his concerto with dash and enthusiasm; yet, for a Hungarian, he seemed remarkably Teutonic. He will be heard to better advantage at his Mendelssohn Hall recitals on November 14 and 17.

It has often been remarked in this journal that Mr. Gericke, and the Bostonians in general, show a strange fondness for Berlioz, the emptiest of all orchestral writers. The reason doubtless lies in the fact that Berlioz gives this admirably drilled orchestra a good chance to show off its virtuosity. It has also been observed repeatedly in this journal that Mr. Gericke habitually gives Manhattan less interesting programmes than any other city or borough, including Brooklyn. Brooklyn to-night will hear the charming ballet music and entr'acte from Schubert's "Rosamunde." This was also on the Carnegie Hall programme, but a few days ago it was announced that a scherzo (A major, opus 45), by Goldmark, would be substituted for it. Why? Mr. Gericke is an excellent Schubert conductor, and the "Rosamunde" selection would no doubt have been enjoyed, whereas the Goldmark Scherzo proved to be singularly dry and uninteresting—void of ideas, and quite unworthy of the composer of the "Queen of Sheba."

In both the Berlioz and the Goldmark numbers the Boston orchestra displayed its best qualities. Not so in the final number on the programme Dvorák's superb "New World" symphony. Here there was a strange lack of that delicious euphony characteristic of Dvorák, while the phrasing was often slovenly and unintelligent. The orchestra was less to blame for this than the conductor, who showed a strange lack of sympathy with and understanding of this work. To be sure we shall never again hear such an inspired and stirring performance of this great work as that which the Philharmonic Orchestra give under Anton Seidl's bâton in presence of the composer. That was an event to be remembered a lifetime. The audience was stirred to intense enthusiasm, and during the slow movement tears were in many eyes. Last evening this same symphony scored barely a succès d'estime. It was played coarsely in the allegro movements and the scherzo, while the execution of the slow movement can only be called murder in the first degree. Mr. Gericke took it at least 40 per cent. too fast, though it is marked largo, which is defined as "the slowest of all tempo indications"; while in the C sharp minor section, which is marked un poco più mosso, the conductor retarded the pace! Dvorák's largo is one of the saddest pieces ever written. Those who knew the composer intimately during his sojourn in New York are aware that he was not happy here; he longed for his native Bohemia, and this slow movement was an expression of his Heimweh. Mr. Gericke's tempo and abrupt staccato phrasing (in place of the legatissimo called for) deprived it of all poetry, all expressiveness, all its dolorous sweetness and tender longing. How truly Richard Wagner observed that the art of conducting consists chiefly in the instinct for the right tempo, because, as he explained, he proves by his choice of the tempo whether he does or does not understand the piece, and is thus otherwise able to interpret it.

Boston Journal.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1900.

Mr. H. T. Finck wrote as follows in the New York Evening Post of Nov. 9 about Dohnányi's piano concerto which was performed in that city the night before at a concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra:

The soloist, Mr. Dohnányi, played his own concerto in E minor, opus 5, concerning which so much has been heard because at a competition in Vienna it won the prize of $800 over more than 70 rivals. While listening to it, one could not but recall Voltaire's sneer at the optimism of Leibnitz: "If this is the best of all possible worlds, what must the others be?" If the Viennese judges (Mr. Gericke was one of them) found this the best concerto submitted to them from all the countries of Europe, then the creative musical impulse must be at a low ebb in those countries. For an opus 5 it is indeed very well written, revealing in every movement the fact that the composer has mastered the rules of harmony and counterpoint, and the art of orchestration, as taught at the conservatories. But of creativeness there is not a trace. There are themes, to be sure, for without themes one cannot write any music; but themes are not necessarily ideas. "How do you do?" and "There is a cold wave coming from the West" are themes, but not ideas. Mr. Dohnányi's concerto—like 95 per cent. of all music written—consists of strings of such platitudes, and, as it lasts 45 minutes, it becomes most wearisome long before the end. Mr. Dohnányi has now learned how to write music. The next thing for him to learn is a number of "Don'ts," and among these the most important is, "Don't compose unless you have something new to say." It is needless to add that the young composer played his concerto with dash and enthusiasm; yet, for a Hungarian, he seemed remarkably Teutonic.

Mr. Finck found Goldmark's Scherzo "singularly dry and uninteresting—void of ideas, and quite unworthy of the composer of 'The Queen of Sheba.'" And he described the phrasing in the performance of Dvorák's Congo-American symphony as "often slovenly and unintelligent. The orchestra was less to blame for this than the conductor, who showed a strange lack of sympathy with and understanding of this work. * * * Last evening this same symphony scored barely a succès d'estime. It was played coarsely in the allegro movements and the scherzo, while the execution of the slow movement can only be called murder in the first degree. Mr. Gericke took it at least 40 per cent. too fast, though it is marked largo, which is defined as "the slowest of all tempo indications"; while in the C sharp minor section, which is marked un poco piu mosso, the conductor retarded the pace! Dvorák's largo is one of the saddest pieces ever written. * * * Mr. Gericke's tempo and abrupt staccato phrasing (in place of the legatissimo called for) deprived it of all poetry, all expressiveness, all its dolorous sweetness and tender longing. How truly Richard Wagner observed that the art of conducting consists chiefly in the instinct for the right tempo, because, as he explained, he proves by his choice of the tempo whether he does or does not understand the piece, and is thus otherwise able to interpret it."

* *

[43]

FASHION STUDIES IN SYMPHONY HALL.

Possibilities of Artistic Gowning Revealed at the Friday Afternoon Rehearsals at the New Temple of Music.

AT no other matinee in town is there a better opportunity to study fashion than at the Friday afternoon rehearsals in Symphony Hall. That is where one gets such good ideas on how to wear one's clothes well. And the possibilities for artistic gowning in this house has probably never occurred to the throng of handsome women who will occupy their seats regularly throughout the season. That coloring, Pompeiian red on the aisles and the deep pastel green leather on the chairs has a tendency to throw into relief the costumes donned on these occasions.

It is the one place of entertainment where hats can be worn, and from an excellent point of vantage last week I studied the fashionable throng as it swept down the long aisles. It is safe to say that two-thirds of the women in the house were clad in cloth coats and skirts in black, Oxford gray or dark blue. Every woman removed her coat immediately she found her place, and revealed her stunning separate bodice of white or one in the palest tints of blue, yellow or green.

A few there were in handsome toilets of veiling, cashmere and crepe de chine, decorated with rich ecru lace and effective touches of black velvet. It is needless to say that these young women and girls invariably affected the long, loose-backed raglans in Oxford gray or the light covert newmarkets as outside wraps, and wore handsome millinery creations.

And speaking of hats what an opportunity for smart head coverings there is at these rehearsals. In the centre of the house there sat a well set up brunette, who wore a gown of beige cloth, that fascinating light tan shade. The skirt was built in three tiers, all shaped flounces. This model is no end becoming to slight women. The bodice was snug in fit and without ornamentation save a rounded guimpe effect of white cloth embroidered in gold thread and a high choker done in the same embroidered cloths. Her hat was a low crushed affair of vivid cerise, canted well up on one side, with happy effect, which lent an amount of dash to her ensemble.

Nearby sat a picturesque looking young woman who wore one of the new white Louisine bodices, built very like a shirtwaist, with clusters of tucks forming a V in front and decorated through its centre with a row of dull gold buttons.

The odd feature which distinguished this waist from many others in that vicinity was that it buttoned fetchingly down the back with dull gold buttons. Her choker was of white panne velvet latticed at its base with narrow cloth of gold bands and a most enchanting picture hat drooping low over her piquante face, its soft pale blue chiffon lines encircled with a drooping white plume completed a picture that few in that vast audience noticed, so rapt was their attention on the performance of the artist at the piano.

Another bodice, showing the season's modish touches, was well worn by a chic young woman who sat in a balcony seat. It was in white taffeta with motifs of black chantilly lace appliqued and the material cut out beneath. It was built on a tight fitting lining apparently, though it was very much bloused all around. There was a broad fitted girdle decorated with stitching of black silk and black silk hand embroidered French knots. The sleeves were those wide at the elbow ones, with tight forearm undersleeves, and there were overhanging stitched caps over the shoulders. Her hat was a continental affair created from tucked taffeta, in a salmon pink tone, with a huge knot of sable its only decoration. It was tilted well over her brow just revealing the side parted coiffure.

All ultra smart women know how modish this over the face style of hat remains and that little fashion point, the jutting knot of fur or velvet is the hallmark of elegance. G. M. P.

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1900

Frieda Siemens, the talented young German pianist, who played in Boston last season, has arrived in New York on the steamship Rotterdam to begin her American tour. She will be heard with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and in recitals.

BOSTON HOME JOURNAL

A PAPER OF TO-DAY

Vol. 56. SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1900. No. 45.

THE pale, anæmic Ernst von Donhanyi appeared in the dual role of composer and pianist at the third Symphony concert, and won a great amount of popular acclaim. This, I take it—and perhaps the wish is father to the thought—was due to his magnificent playing, which triumphed over every difficulty he had set for himself, rather than to any great virtue in his concerto. This work is a titanic blare, a confused mass of "heavy" effects of instrumentation, with no clear underlying idea and possessed of no special beauty or charm of any sort. As the work of a boy it is not to be jeered at—that is to be understood emphatically—yet it does not give any very definite promise.

The other features of the concert may be summed up in a very few words. The "Magic Flute" overture was played with all the grace in the world; there was considerable roughness displayed by the orchestra in Goldmark's scherzo, heard here for the first time, and of not much musical value, while the delightful Schumann symphony in C major received an interpretation that matched its own beauty perfectly.

And I trust it will not be considered trivial or flippant for me to add that the wild blasts from the Symphony Hall ventilators have been in a great measure tamed, and that one can now enjoy his music without the accompaniment of aconite pellets. For many these draughts have hitherto been a really serious matter, and their cessation is hailed with delight.

There will be no Symphony concert to-night, the orchestra having taken its departure to New York, there to show the denizens of the big town what instrumental music really is. But we shall not be entirely without concerts, for Mr. Felix Fox gives a pianoforte recital in Steinert this evening. Mr. Fox is one of the most poetic and accomplished of our resident players, and withal—this is the strange thing—entirely lacking in that conceit that makes the gorge rise at so many musicians.

What is there inherent in high musical ability that tend to give its possessor so vast an opinion of himself? In no other profession in the world, save one, can there be found such overweening self-sufficiency, such preposterous development of the stand-and-look-at-me sentiment. Nor is it at all retarded by the petting so many of the players receive from the leaders of society. There are men in the Symphony Orchestra to-day who cut dead on the street the acquaintances they used half a dozen years ago. I know of specific cases that ought to make their perpetrators red with shame whenever they are called to mind. Yet the gentlemen are entirely complacent and believe in their own greatness more implicitly every day.

An unseemly story is wafted over from Philadelphia, the purport of which is that one Riter Fitzgerald is there belaboring in print the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He does not deny that our band is a rather good specimen of its kind, but he alleges that the Quaker town does not need us any longer, because it now has a permanent orchestra of its own, conducted by a man named Fritz Scheel. "Go away, Boston Orchestra, we do not want you any longer," he shouts in elegant language. Whether Mr. Riter Fitzgerald is a huge joke or not is not quite evident at this distance, but in any event he should be frowned upon At this rate Philadelphia will soon be claiming to be the "musical centre of the United States," and then there will be a pretty row between that city and New York, which has already applied for a copyright on the phrase.

SYMPHONY CONCERT.

First of the Season Heard by Large Audience.

The nineteenth series of concerts in this city by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was opened in Infantry Hall last night. The arrangements this season are for a series of six concerts, instead of the eight given for several years past, and the popularity of this change, with the consequent reduction in the price of season tickets, was evidenced by the presence of the largest audience ever seen on an opening night.

There were many late-comers, as there seemed to be some confusion in regard to the hour of opening. The season tickets say 8 o'clock, while the programme books give the hour as 7:45 on one page and 8 on another. In spite of printer's errors, however, the concerts will begin at 7:45 this season, and patrons should govern themselves accordingly.

The programme was an interesting one upon the whole, although it contained no novelties. A new singer, Mme. Evta Kileski, was the soloist, who made a very favorable impression. The numbers were as follows:

Overture, "The Roman Carnival," Op. 9 ..... Hector Berlioz

Aria, "Dove Sono," from "Marriage of Figaro" ..... Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart

Ballet-Movement and Entr'acte from Rosamunde ..... Franz Schubert
I. Ballet: Andantino (G major).
II. Entr'acte: Andantino (B-flat major).

Aria, "Ocean, Thou Mighty Monster," from "Oberon" ..... Karl Maria von Weber

Symphony No. 5, in E minor, "From the New World," Op. 95 ..... Antonin Dvorak
I. Adagio (E minor). Allegro molto (E minor).
II. Largo (D-flat major).
III. Scherzo: Molto vivace (E minor).
IV. Allegro con fuoco (E minor).

The playing of these numbers by the orchestra was brilliant in the extreme, and marked by the precision and finish of detail which have been conspicuous features since conductor Gericke assumed control. It would be almost impossible to expect a more finished technical performance than that given Berlioz's picturesque "Roman Carnival." The music offers unusual opportunities for display. No one has ever excelled the great French composer in the writing of suggestive and interesting "programme music," or shown such intimate knowledge of effective instrumentation. It matters not with him whether the themes he handles are pregnant or trivial; before they leave his workshop they are adorned with such rainbow-colored orchestral millinery that one forgets to notice whether they be mere lay figures or real flesh and blood. The second instrumental number, consisting of two selections from Schubert's "Rosamunde" music, was also played in a most satisfactory fashion, some charming dynamic effects being brought out in the presentation of the dainty ballet.

Dvorak's "New World" symphony was chosen as the piece de resistance of the programme. As this much-talked-of work becomes more familiar through repeated hearings its made-to-order character becomes more fully revealed. It is perhaps not polite to look a gift horse in the mouth. Nevertheless, Dr. Dvorak's efforts on our behalf only serve to accentuate the belief that the American symphony will have to be written by an American, if it is ever written at all. The title, "From the New World," might as well have been "From the Carboniferous Period," for the typical themes are at least amphibian in character if not invertebrate. That the composer found them here is hardly sufficient to establish their nationality. The barbaric runes of slaves on the Southern plantations, handed down by tradition from their wild African ancestors, or evolved from their own rude musical instincts, are about as fit and appropriate to typify American life, character and genius, as is the "made in Germany" dress wherewith Dr. Dvorak has clothed them.

From a merely musical point of view the symphony has undeniable claims to recognition. The workmanship is that of a skilled hand; indeed, nothing less could be expected from the foremost of living composers. Yet even here the attempt to exploit the "typical" character of the symphony is too apparent. What need of so much twisting and turning of those exceptionally ugly and disjointed themes until they have run the gamut of every instrument in the orchestra? Does all this "damnable iteration" prove anything? These characteristics are more noticeable in the opening movement than elsewhere. The largo, having the least of them, is conspicuously the best of the four. In the two closing movements the composer at times forgets his "American" inspiration, and breaks out here and there in true Bohemian style. Truly, a composite, not to say cosmopolitan composition.

Mme. Evta Kileski, the soloist of the evening, gave much pleasure by her refined and artistic singing. Her voice is a true soprano, of beautiful quality and ample range, and her technical equipment is of the best. The Mozart aria was excellently suited to her voice and style, and a most satisfactory performance resulted. The great aria from Weber's "Oberon" requires a larger voice for its full effect, though here again the work of the singer was unexceptionable. Mme. Kileski was heartily applauded and recalled after both numbers.

The second concert of the series will be given on Wednesday evening, Dec. 19, at 7:45 sharp.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERTS

The first concert of this season, and the 1,800th concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was given in Carnegie Hall on Thursday evening of last week. The programme consisted of the "Carnival Romain" overture of Berlioz, an old favorite of this orchestra; a piano concerto in E minor by Ernst von Dohnanyi; a new scherzo in A major for orchestra by Carl Goldmark, and the well-known symphony of Antonio Dvorak, called "From the New World." The soloist, Mr. von Dohnanyi, and his composition, was the center of interest of the evening. This composition won last year a prize in Vienna, and this added somewhat to the enthusiasm with which its author was received at this, his second visit to this country. Great opoprtunity was given in this composition for technique, but the beautiful expression which was enjoyed so much last year in Mr. von Dohnanyi's recital, was absent in this performance. The second movement in this concerto was the most beautiful, the passionate, sweeping chords of the piano, being intensified by the deep throbbing of the pizzicati of the lower strings. The symphony was splendidly worked out, and the beautiful principal theme in the second movement was sung by the English horn over an harmonic accompaniment in the strings. It was an evening of glorious music, perfect under the control of Mr. Gericke, and enthusiastically received by a sympathetic audience, which will always remember with joy the last concert of the Boston orchestra's eighteenth century of entertainments.

The second concert, on Saturday afternoon, was as well attended, and the various numbers were received with equal enthusiasm and delight. The programme was composed of the overture to "Euryanthe," "Esclarmonde," Orchestra Suite, by Jules Massenet, and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. Miss Gertrude May Stein was the soloist, and she sang Raff's "Der Traumkönig und Sein Lieb," and Adriane's Aria, from Wagner's "Rienzi," in her usual artistic and effective manner. The most interesting number of the afternoon was the central one, "Esclarmonde." This set of ballet pieces is not, properly speaking, made up of selections from the music of the opera of the same name. Massenet has simply taken parts of scenes from the opera and developed them as concert music for orchestra. The result is a delightfully brilliant composition, and it was played with a precision and beauty of tone that was admirable. Especially charming was the second movement, "L'Ile Magique," in which mysterious, dreamy harmonies alternate with a brisk dance. The symphony was also played with the artistic intelligence and sympathetic feeling that has always characterized the performances of the orchestra. Once more it was made evident that the Boston Symphony Orchestra has no superior among organizations of the kind.

---

[44]

FASHION STUDIES IN SYMPHONY HALL.

Possibilities of Artistic Gowning Revealed at the Friday Afternoon Rehearsals at the New Temple of Music.

AT no other matinee in town is there a better opportunity to study fashion than at the Friday afternoon rehearsals in Symphony Hall. That is where one gets such good ideas on how to wear one's clothes well. And the possibilities for artistic gowning in this house has probably never occurred to the throng of handsome women who will occupy their seats regularly throughout the season. That coloring, Pompeiian red on the aisles and the deep pastel green leather on the chairs has a tendency to throw into relief the costumes donned on these occasions.

It is the one place of entertainment where hats can be worn, and from an excellent point of vantage last week I studied the fashionable throng as it swept down the long aisles. It is safe to say that two-thirds of the women in the house were clad in cloth coats and skirts in black, Oxford gray or dark blue. Every woman removed her coat immediately she found her place, and revealed her stunning separate bodice of white or one in the palest tints of blue, yellow or green.

A few there were in handsome toilets of veiling, cashmere and crepe de chine, decorated with rich ecru lace and effective touches of black velvet. It is needless to say that these young women and girls invariably affected the long, loose-backed raglans in Oxford gray or the light covert newmarkets as outside wraps, and wore handsome millinery creations.

And speaking of hats what an opportunity for smart head coverings there is at these rehearsals. In the centre of the house there sat a well set up brunette, who wore a gown of beige cloth, that fascinating light tan shade. The skirt was built in three tiers, all shaped flounces. This model is no end becoming to slight women. The bodice was snug in fit and without ornamentation save a rounded guimpe effect of white cloth embroidered in gold thread and a high choker done in the same embroidered cloths. Her hat was a low crushed affair of vivid cerise, canted well up on one side, with happy effect, which lent an amount of dash to her ensemble.

Nearby sat a picturesque looking young woman who wore one of the new white Louisine bodices, built very like a shirtwaist with clusters of tucks forming a V in front and decorated through its centre with a row of dull gold buttons.

The odd feature which distinguished this waist from many others in that vicinity was that it buttoned fetchingly down the back with dull gold buttons. Her choker was of white panne velvet latticed at its base with narrow cloth of gold bands and a most enchanting picture hat drooping low over her piquante face, its soft pale blue chiffon lines encircled with a drooping white plume completed a picture that few in that vast audience noticed, so rapt was their attention on the performance of the artist at the piano.

Another bodice, showing the season's modish touches, was well worn by a chic young woman who sat in a balcony seat. It was in white taffeta with motifs of black chantilly lace appliqued and the material cut out beneath. It was built on a tight fitting lining apparently, though it was very much bloused all around. There was a broad fitted girdle decorated with stitching of black silk and black silk hand embroidered French knots. The sleeves were those wide at the elbow ones, with tight forearm undersleeves, and there were overhanging stitched caps over the shoulders. Her hat was a continental affair created from tucked taffeta, in a salmon pink tone, with a huge knot of sable its only decoration. It was tilted well over her brow just revealing the side parted coiffure.

All ultra smart women know how modish this over the face style of hat remains and that little fashion point, the jutting knot of fur or velvet is the hallmark of elegance. G. M. P.

BOSTON HOME JOURNAL
A PAPER OF TO-DAY

Vol. 56. SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1900. No. 45.

THE pale, anæmic Ernst von Donhanyi appeared in the dual role of composer and pianist at the third Symphony concert, and won a great amount of popular acclaim. This, I take it—and perhaps the wish is father to the thought—was due to his magnificent playing, which triumphed over every difficulty he had set for himself, rather than to any great virtue in his concerto. This work is a titanic blare, a confused mass of "heavy" effects of instrumentation, with no clear underlying idea and possessed of no special beauty or charm of any sort. As the work of a boy it is not to be jeered at—that is to be understood emphatically—yet it does not give any very definite promise.

The other features of the concert may be summed up in a very few words. The "Magic Flute" overture was played with all the grace in the world; there was considerable roughness displayed by the orchestra in Goldmark's scherzo, heard here for the first time, and of not much musical value, while the delightful Schumann symphony in C major received an interpretation that matched its own beauty perfectly.

And I trust it will not be considered trivial or flippant for me to add that the wild blasts from the Symphony Hall ventilators have been in a great measure tamed, and that one can now enjoy his music without the accompaniment of aconite pellets. For many these draughts have hitherto been a really serious matter, and their cessation is hailed with delight.

There will be no Symphony concert to-night, the orchestra having taken its departure to New York, there to show the denizens of the big town what instrumental music really is. But we shall not be entirely without concerts, for Mr. Felix Fox gives a pianoforte recital in Steinert this evening. Mr. Fox is one of the most poetic and accomplished of our resident players, and withal—this is the strange thing—entirely lacking in that conceit that makes the gorge rise at so many musicians.

What is there inherent in high musical ability that tends to give its possessor so vast an opinion of himself? In no other profession in the world, save one, can there be found such overweening self-sufficiency, such preposterous development of the stand-and-look-at-me sentiment. Nor is it at all retarded by the petting so many of the players receive from the leaders of society. There are men in the Symphony Orchestra to-day who cut dead on the street the acquaintances they used half a dozen years ago. I know of specific cases that ought to make their perpetrators red with shame whenever they are called to mind. Yet the gentlemen are entirely complacent and believe in their own greatness more implicitly every day.

An unseemly story is wafted over from Philadelphia, the purport of which is that one Riter Fitzgerald is there belaboring in print the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He does not deny that our band is a rather good specimen of its kind, but he alleges that the Quaker town does not need us any longer, because it now has a permanent orchestra of its own, conducted by a man named Fritz Scheel. "Go away, Boston Orchestra, we do not want you any longer," he shouts in elegant language. Whether Mr. Riter Fitzgerald is a huge joke or not is not quite evident at this distance, but in any event he should be frowned upon. At this rate Philadelphia will soon be claiming to be the "musical centre of the United States," and then there will be a pretty row between that city and New York, which has already applied for a copyright on the phrase.

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1900

Frieda Siemens, the talented young German pianist, who played in Boston last season, has arrived in New York on the steamship Rotterdam to begin her American tour. She will be heard with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and in recitals.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 15, 1900

SYMPHONY CONCERT.

First of the Season Heard by Large Audience.

The nineteenth series of concerts in this city by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was opened in Infantry Hall last night. The arrangements this season are for a series of six concerts, instead of the eight given for several years past, and the popularity of this change, with the consequent reduction in the price of season tickets, was evidenced by the presence of the largest audience ever seen on an opening night.

There were many late-comers, as there seemed to be some confusion in regard to the hour of opening. The season tickets say 8 o'clock, while the programme books give the hour as 7:45 on one page and 8 on another. In spite of printer's errors, however, the concerts will begin at 7:45 this season, and patrons should govern themselves accordingly.

The programme was an interesting one upon the whole, although it contained no novelties. A new singer, Mme. Evta Kileski, was the soloist, who made a very favorable impression. The numbers were as follows:

Overture, "The Roman Carnival," Op. 9 ..... Hector Berlioz
Aria, "Dove Sono," from "Marriage of Figaro" ..... Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart
Ballet-Movement and Entr'ace from Rosamunde ..... Franz Schubert
I. Ballet: Andantino (G major).
II. Entr'acte: Andantino (B-flat major).
Aria, "Ocean, Thou Mighty Monster," from "Oberon" ..... Karl Maria von Weber
Symphony No. 5, in E minor, "From the New World," Op. 95 ..... Antonin Dvorak
I. Adagio (E minor). Allegro molto (E minor).
II. Largo (D-flat major).
III. Scherzo: Molto vivace (E minor).
IV. Allegro con fuoco (E minor).

The playing of these numbers by the orchestra was brilliant in the extreme, and marked by the precision and finish of detail which have been conspicuous features since conductor Gericke assumed control. It would be almost impossible to expect a more finished technical performance than that given Berlioz's picturesque "Roman Carnival." The music offers unusual opportunities for display. No one has ever excelled the great French composer in the writing of suggestive and interesting "programme music," or shown such intimate knowledge of effective instrumentation. It matters not with him whether the themes he handles are pregnant or trivial; before they leave his workshop they are adorned with such rainbow-colored orchestral millinery that one forgets to notice whether they be mere lay figures or real flesh and blood. The second instrumental number, consisting of two selections from Schubert's "Rosamunde" music, was also played in a most satisfactory fashion, some charming dynamic effects being brought out in the presentation of the dainty ballet.

Dvorak's "New World" symphony was chosen as the piece de resistance of the programme. As this much-talked-of work becomes more familiar through repeated hearings its made-to-order character becomes more fully revealed. It is perhaps not polite to look a gift horse in the mouth. Nevertheless, Dr. Dvorak's efforts on our behalf only serve to accentuate the belief that the American symphony will have to be written by an American, if it is ever written at all. The title, "From the New World," might as well have been "From the Carboniferous Period," for the typical themes are at least amphibian in character if not invertebrate. That the composer found them here is hardly sufficient to establish their nationality. The barbaric runes of slaves on the Southern plantations, handed down by tradition from their wild African ancestors, or evolved from their own rude musical instincts, are about as fit and appropriate to typify American life, character and genius, as is the "made in Germany" dress wherewith Dr. Dvorak has clothed them.

From a merely musical point of view the symphony has undeniable claims to recognition. The workmanship is that of a skilled hand; indeed, nothing less could be expected from the foremost of living composers. Yet even here the attempt to exploit the "typical" character of the symphony is too apparent. What need of so much twisting and turning of those exceptionally ugly and disjointed themes until they have run the gamut of every instrument in the orchestra? Does all this "damnable iteration" prove anything? These characteristics are more noticeable in the opening movement than elsewhere. The largo, having the least of them, is conspicuously the best of the four. In the two closing movements the composer at times forgets his "American" inspiration, and breaks out here and there in true Bohemian style. Truly, a composite, not to say cosmopolitan composition.

Mme. Evta Kileski, the soloist of the evening, gave much pleasure by her refined and artistic singing. Her voice is a true soprano, of beautiful quality and ample range, and her technical equipment is of the best. The Mozart aria was excellently suited to her voice and style, and a most satisfactory performance resulted. The great aria from Weber's "Oberon" requires a larger voice for its full effect, though here again the work of the singer was unexceptionable. Mme. Kileski was heartily applauded and recalled after both numbers.

The second concert of the series will be given on Wednesday evening, Dec. 19, at 7:45 sharp.

THE HOME JOURNAL
November 15, 1900

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERTS

The first concert of this season, and the 1,800th concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was given in Carnegie Hall on Thursday evening of last week. The programme consisted of the "Carnival Romain" overture of Berlioz, an old favorite of this orchestra; a piano concerto in E minor by Ernst von Dohnanyi; a new scherzo in A major for orchestra by Carl Goldmark, and the well-known symphony of Antonio Dvorak, called "From the New World." The soloist, Mr. von Dohnanyi, and his composition, was the center of interest of the evening. This composition won last year a prize in Vienna, and this added somewhat to the enthusiasm with which its author was received at this, his second visit to this country. Great opoprtunity was given in this composition for technique, but the beautiful expression which was enjoyed so much last year in Mr. von Dohnanyi's recital, was absent in this performance. The second movement in this concerto was the most beautiful, the passionate, sweeping chords of the piano, being intensified by the deep throbbing of the pizzicati of the lower strings. The symphony was splendidly worked out, and the beautiful principal theme in the second movement was sung by the English horn over an harmonic accompaniment in the strings. It was an evening of glorious music, perfect under the control of Mr. Gericke, and enthusiastically received by a sympathetic audience, which will always remember with joy the last concert of the Boston orchestra's eighteenth century of entertainments.

The second concert, on Saturday afternoon, was as well attended, and the various numbers were received with equal enthusiasm and delight. The programme was composed of the overture to "Euryanthe," "Esclarmonde," Orchestra Suite, by Jules Massenet, and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. Miss Gertrude May Stein was the soloist, and she sang Raff's "Der Traumkönig und Sein Lieb," and Adriane's Aria, from Wagner's "Rienzi," in her usual artistic and effective manner. The most interesting number of the afternoon was the central one, "Esclarmonde." This set of ballet pieces is not, properly speaking, made up of selections from the music of the opera of the same name. Massenet has simply taken parts of scenes from the opera and developed them as concert music for orchestra. The result is a delightfully brilliant composition, and it was played with a precision and beauty of tone that was admirable. Especially charming was the second movement, "L'Ile Magique," in which mysterious, dreamy harmonies alternate with a brisk dance. The symphony was also played with the artistic intelligence and sympathetic feeling that has always characterized the performances of the orchestra. Once more it was made evident that the Boston Symphony Orchestra has no superior among organizations of the kind.

SUNDAY HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. LVIII., NO. 141.

SUNDAY, NOV. 18, 1900.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Rather Perfunctory Symphony of Haydn Given Last Night.

It Has a Frolicking Finale, However—Dreary Norwegian Folk Music and a Weary Concerto of Dvorak's Produced—The Former Is Blackly Pessimistic.

The Boston Symphony orchestra gave its fourth concert of the season in Symphony Hall, last evening, the programme being:

Symphony No. 5, in D major.....Haydn
Concerto for violin, op. 53.....Dvorak
Ballad on a Norwegian folk melody, op. 36.....J. Rontgen
Overture to "Tannhauser".....Wagner

Mr. T. Adamowski was the soloist. The symphony was given on this occasion for the first time at these concerts, and the concerto and the ballad were given for the first time in Boston.

The Haydn symphony is not among the most interesting of the composer's works in its class. It is lacking in the seeming spontaneity of inspiration that is so charmingly characteristic of Haydn in general, and, with the exception of a few moments in the slow movement, suggests that it was a perfunctory effort when his vein was not propitious. Toward the close of the slow movement there is an interesting solo treatment of the drums, very rare, indeed, before Beethoven had the happy thought of putting them to better use than that of mere noise making.

The free fantasia that opens the second part of the first movement is in Haydn's finest contrapuntal mood, but in the main the symphony is dull, despite the naively frolicking spirit of the finale. However, it would have been better placed after the long and wearisome concerto, and the sombre and dreary ballad, in which position it would not have seemed dull, but, instead, a burst of genial and enlivening sunshine through a veil of depressing gloom.

It may be reasonably imagined that Mr. Adamowski selected this uninspired rambling and vexatious concerto in order to avoid repeating one of the stock concertos that have done service so often at these concerts, but, unfortunately, any of the hackneyed pieces would have given more pleasure in the hearing than did this, to say nothing of the thanklessness of the task the artist set himself when he labored to overcome the difficulties of the work and to memorise it.

Mr. Adamowski is to be credited with a brilliant and fluent performance of the concerto, not always perfect in intonation, but admirable in its technique, and denoting still further the advance the artist steadily makes in the higher essentials of his art. He was received with cordial heartiness, vigorously and appreciatively applauded, and recalled twice with great acclaim.

The orchestration of the Rontgen ballad is remarkably rich, often immensely impressive, and always clear, able and effective. The composition moans almost unbrokenly from beginning to end, and its brief themes are turned over and over in almost every possible way without giving any relief to their melodic monotony of effect. Perhaps Mr. Rontgen meant to produce this very result and its attendant impression, in which case he is to be congratulated on his perfect success, in addition to a warm recognition of his really fine orchestration.

But ballads on Norwegian folk melodies, if they are all of the same description as this, are luxuries to be indulged in sparingly, unless one has a very pronounced taste for such things and can snap one's fingers defiantly at all possible chances of a lapse into incurable and morbid pessimism.

The programme for the next concert is, "Idyllic" Symphony, F. Cowen, first time; Petite Suite, Bizet; Symphony No. 1 in G-minor, Brahms. There is to be no soloist on this occasion.

At the Symphony rencarsal on Friday, with Mr. Timothee Adamowski as the soloist there was a full and appreciative house. Mr. Adamowski was heartily recalled after his splendid playing of the Dvorak concerto. Among those there were noted: Mr. Augustus N. Rantoul, Mr. and Mrs. William Bassett, Mrs. Hall Curtis, Mrs. Ezra J. Trull, Mrs. J. A. Baldwin, Miss Baldwin, Mrs. John B. Osborn, Mrs. William Hooper, Miss Ames, Mrs. C. R. Hayden, Mrs. Hasbrouck and Mr. Francis Shaw Sturgis.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

SUNDAY MORNING, NOVEMBER 18, 1900.

FOURTH SYMPHONY CONCERT

The fourth concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given last evening in the Symphony Hall. Mr. T. Adamowski, violinist, was the soloist, and the programme included Haydn's Symphony No. 5 (first time at these concerts); Dvorak's violin concerto in A-minor, op. 53 (first time at these concerts); an orchestra ballad by Julius Rortgen (also first time), and Wagner's "Tannhauser" overture.

All the selections proved to uninteresting. The "Tannhauser" overture was all that saved the concert from being one of the dullest in the history of this orchestra, although the playing was up to the usual high standard. Mr. Adamowski played superbly, though his selection was hardly the kind to show his abilities to the best advantage.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.
The Official Paper of the State.
The Official Paper of the City.

MONDAY MORNING, NOV. 19, 1900.

It was rather a dull programme, that of Saturday night, with nothing in any of its numbers to inspire enthusiasm until its end, when the pent-up energy of the orchestra, which had been repressed almost entirely until this point, burst forth in a performance of the "Tannhaeuser" overture, that was electrifying.

The Haydn symphony in D major, No. 5 of the Breitkopf & Haertel edition, is about the most placid of the "English Symphonies" which Haydn wrote so glibly to Salamon's order. The first movement has some interesting development of a short figure, in a clear contrapuntal style that might be a lesson to those moderns who use up all the musical dissonances in their "devil-opements". But apart from this there was nothing exciting in the piece, or interesting either.

The suavity of the slow movement was of that order of Chesterfieldian conventionality which Haydn uses in his scenes in the Garden of Eden when his kid-gloved Adam and Eve pay polite compliments to each other. One mild little joke was present in the Largo; the orchestra was hushed into gentle purlings, the flute heaved a sigh that faded away into silence; then followed a pause, and when one began to wonder how matters would begin again, there came a comical grunt upon the bassoon in deepest register; a jest not altogether unlike Haydn's practical joke with the kettle-drum in the "Surprise Symphony". But the whole work could only awaken a languid interest, such as one might display at the reading of a Richardson novel,—like "Clarissa Harlowe", or "Sir Charles Grandison", it belongs to the past.

But the novelties that followed afforded no change; indeed the dullness of the present, as represented by Dvorak's Violin Concerto in A minor, (which was performed for the first,—and probably last—time in Boston, on this occasion) fully balanced the tepid effects of Haydn, with the added defect that here there was incoherency in place of the crystal clearness of the older composer. One might as well endeavor to find a consecutive plot in Webster's Dictionary as look for logical sequence or coherency in this work; the orchestra and the solo violin interrupted each other with short phrases and with garrulous embellishments, like two tipsy boon-companions, but all the vociferous conversation seemed meaningless or inconsequential. This is a most severe statement to make of a composer who has done such great work as Dvorak, but it is evident that the Bohemian Homer nodded here.

The second movement made some amends. It was linked to the first movement (rather an unusual proceeding, for the slow movement is generally joined to the finale in concerto, if not standing alone) and it had something of that Slavonic melancholy which is almost always impressive. Mr. Adamowski, who was the soloist, made the most of his opportunities here, and his breadth of tone and sympathetic quality deserve much commendation. A dashing Rondo, still somewhat incoherent, ended the work. There was some attractive orchestration here, particularly a bassoon passage that seemed to be taken bodily from Beethoven's eighth symphony.

Whether the audience liked the work or not, they certainly liked the violinist, and recalled Mr. Adamowski with great fervor.

Now followed Roentgen's "Ballad on a Norwegian Folk-melody," also for the first time in Boston. It shone by comparison with the spasmodic violin concerto, but it had no particular Roentgen rays of its own. What it said has already been said many times in a more vigorous manner by Grieg; and even Cowen has done more justice to the pensive sadness of the North, in his "Scandinavian Symphony." Yet here one could at least grasp the thread of the musical discourse, and there were points of orchestration that deserved commendation, particularly the use of the deepest wind-instruments. If not as strong as "Norske Ponsk" the work was at least musicianly, and worth a single hearing, even if we must keep a few numbers by Richard Strauss or a St. Saens symphony waiting.

But this concert, like a wasp, had all its fire in its end; how all the foregoing shrivelled up when the "Tannhaeuser" overture was played! And the musicians played it as if they knew that they had reached a higher plateau in the domain of music. The whole work went as if inspired, and one involuntarily exclaimed (as Beethoven did about Handel) —"Das ist das Wahre!" The audience showed at once that it understood the situation, and something near to an encore was achieved in the tumultuous applause at the close of the concert.

One swallow does not make a summer; one noble number does not constitute a symphony programme; a demand for a more interesting programme than such a one as was presented at this concert ought not to seem audacious. We have ever been recognizant of the great debt we owe to the orchestra and to its great conductor; a little more zeal and care in the arrangement of programmes might even increase that debt. The mere statement that one or two novelties are upon a programme is not enough; the character of these novelties might be more carefully sifted. In this respect Chicago is somewhat ahead of Boston, and Theodore Thomas has taught all the world what breadth of view and catholicity of taste in programme-making mean.

Louis C. Elson.

Boston Journal.
SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1900.

SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Two Novelties—A Violin Concerto Composed by Dvorak and Played by Mr. Adamowski and a Ballade by Roentgen.

(By Philip Hale.)

The program of the fourth Symphony concert, which was given last night in Symphony Hall, Mr. Gericke conductor, was as follows:

Symphony No. 5, in D major....Josef Haydn
Concerto for Violin, in A minor, op. 53.....Dvorak
I. Allegro ma non troppe (A minor)....4-4
II. Adagio ma non troppe F major).....3-8
III. Finale: Allegro giocoso, ma non troppo (A major).....3-8
Ballad on a Norwegian Folk-Melody, op. 36.....Roentgen
Overture to "Tannhaeuser".....Wagner

Our novelties come late—so late. Dvorák's violin concerto is at least fifteen years old. I believe it was first played by Ondricek, and it was he who introduced it in London in 1896. Halir played it in Berlin in 1891 and Max Bendix in Chicago that same year. Maud Powell played it in New York in 1893—by the way, is not this admirable violinist to appear at a Symphony concert this season?

The program stated that the concerto was played last night for the first time in Boston. It was played by Bernhard Listemann with piano accompaniment Jan. 9, 1893.

And now that we have heard it with orchestral accompaniment, what is to be said except that it is not worth a performance? There are a few pleasant passages in the adagio that lull and soothe, and occasionally there are charming effects of orchestration, but the work as a whole is rambling and uninspired, and the finale is frankly vulgar. We might not be surprised at Dvorák's failure if this concerto were one of the very latest works, but it followed some characteristic pieces and it preceded the "Stabat Mater," "The Spectre's Bride" and some delightful chamber music. In this concerto the composer is garrulous; he chatters and he dozes, and then he wakes with a start and begins to chatter again without the remembrance of where he left off. Mr. Adamowski was becomingly sweet and sympathetic in the adagio. His performance, as an exhibition of technic and authority, did not reach the high standard he set for himself last season. And why in the world did he choose Dvorák's concerto?

Roentgen's Ballad on a Norwegian Folk-Melody was played for the first time in Boston. It is about four years old, and Theodore Thomas brought it out in Chicago in 1896. Roentgen is of a Dutch family and he lives now at Amsterdam. The Ballad is a curious composition, pretentious at times in the choice of harmonies, now strongly reminiscent of the Grieg of the piano concerto, and now almost repulsive in ugliness of orchestration. At the same time it shone by contrast with Dvorák's concerto. There were at least hints at a definite mood, and if the mood was that of Grieg it was not therefore displeasing. But, considered by itself, the Ballad seemed rambling and ineffective.

The choice of the Haydn symphony was not a happy one. The second movement is of worth, but the others are perfunctory music such as Haydn with his facility could spin out day after day. The "cheerfulness" of which conservative critics and hearers are never weary of speaking is in this instance the cheerfulness of formalism. Haydn's little points in this symphony are carefully prepared, even when he is apparently most childlike; and he is deliberatively naive.

And so it must be said that the concert as a whole was neither impressive no exhilarating. There was one, just one composition of flesh and blood—the "Tannhaeuser" overture.

Boston Sunday Globe.
SUNDAY, NOV. 18, 1900.

T. Adamowski Soloist at the Symphony Concert.

The fourth of this season's concerts by the Boston symphony orchestra received the customary patronage of audiences limited in size only by the capacity of Symphony hall. The audience at the Friday afternoon rehearsal was even more largely feminine than usual, doubtless because Mr Timothee Adamowski was to be the soloist. Whatever may be the opinion among musicians regarding Mr Adamowski's ability as a violinist, there is thorough unanimity as to his personal popularity in society and with the fair sex generally.

The program of the concert was as follows: Josef Haydn, Symphony No. 5, in D major; Antonin Dvorak, concerto for violin, in A minor, op 53; Julius Rontgen, ballad on a Norwegian Folk-Melody, op 36; Richard Wagner, overture to "Tannhauser."

Director Gericke has not often presented so many novelties on one occasion. With the exception of the "Tannhauser" overture none of the selections had before been played by the Boston symphony orchestra. The Haydn symphony, while by no means entitled to rank among its composer's greatest works, deserves more attention than has been granted here, and Mr Gericke is to be commended for giving it a place on his programs.

The symphony is severely classical, and the themes, not overabundant in melody, are developed without much elaboration and along conventional lines. Rather the most graceful theme of the composition is found in the second movement, the third movement is also pleasing because of the graceful treatment of the menuetto, and in the trio there are some odd and interesting tonal effects. The finale is a contra-dance ronda, of which Haydn has often given evidence of fondness. Mr Gericke's reading was thoroughly in accord with the spirit of the work.

The performance of the violin concerto was naturally the most interesting feature of the program. It is a long and very elaborately developed work, rather too exacting on attention at times because of reiteration of academic themes, but at other moments delightful in flowing melody and brilliantly contrasted tonal effects. The solo violin is given due prominence, and there is no lack of showy and difficult passages to display the virtuosity of the performer, but the orchestral accompaniment is uncommonly heavy and elaborate. Dvorak's scholarly musicianship is constantly in evidence, and he makes no concession to popular taste.

Mr Adamowski's performance was thoroughly creditable. He played with good expression, grace and finish, readily meeting all demands in matters of technique and otherwise fulfilling the expectations of his admirers, who applauded him with great enthusiasm.

The performance of Rontgen's "Ballad on a Norwegian Folk-Melody" was received with only mild expressions of approval. It was chiefly interesting as an evidence of how thoroughly unmelodious a Norwegian melody can be and because of some bizarre effects in the instrumentation. The familiar "Tannhauser" overture was played by the orchestra with accustomed spirit and thoroughness of effect.

The program for the next Symphony concert will be as follows: Idyllic Symphony in E major, No. 6, Frederic Cowen; Petite Suite, "Jeux d'Enfants," Bizet; Symphony No. 1, in C minor, Brahms.

---

[45]

THE SUN, SUNDAY,
OCTOBER 28, 1900.

PLANNING A MUSIC HALL.

ACOUSTIC SCIENCE APPLIED TO BOSTON'S NEW AUDITORIUM.

The First Building Whose Hearing Qualities Were Known With Certainty in Advance—Work of a Harvard Professor—Interesting Use of Scientific Investigation.

BOSTON, Oct. 27.—The new Symphony Hall, which is to be the home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is perhaps the first building ever erected, either in this country or abroad, whose acoustic properties were not, during the planning and construction, very largely a matter of mere guesswork. Long before the walls were up it was known with great accuracy what the acoustic qualities of the auditorium were to be, and the architects proceeded with their work in entire confidence that the acoustic principles to which they were adapting their plans were scientifically sure.

This certainty on a point so long considered almost hopelessly uncertain was due to the investigations of Wallace C. Sabine, assistant professor of physics at Harvard University, who has been engaged in studying the subject of architectural acoustics since 1895, when he was asked by the Harvard Corporation to remedy the acoustic defects of a college lecture room. Preliminary study of the problems involved led to a complete examination of the whole subject, culminating in the notable work done on the new Symphony Hall.

It has been a popular impression for a long time that acoustics practically applied was nearly if not quite a hopeless problem. People have seen a hall which was acoustically good, copied, as they imagined, exactly, with a result which was a total failure, and very naturally, perhaps, they have come to believe that the whole subject was beyond control. Books on acoustics abound in inconsistencies. One writer says that the dimensions of a perfect music hall should be as 2 to 3 to 5; a second, as 1 to 1 to 2; and another, as 2 to 3 to 4. The whole matter, popularly and scientifically alike, has been in a state of confusion.

But as a matter of fact the difficulty has been a lack of study and therefore of understanding of the various details that influence the acoustic properties of a public hall, and this lack the Harvard investigations have gone far to supply. It is now known that the acoustic quality of one hall will be exactly duplicated by that of another if the second is built exactly like the first, only the model must be followed in every way, in material, proportion and arrangement. Nothing can be varied, even the slightest detail, without varying the acoustics also.

Of course, it is almost impossible to make one hall a mere facsimile of another. New methods of construction or ventilation, a thousand details, in a word, will cause a greater or less variation. But it is now possible to calculate the effect of all these changes, and by making still other compensating changes to retain the special values of any auditorium that one may have chosen to take as a model for good hearing.

Symphony Hall is a case in point. The architects, McKim, Mead & White of New York, at first prepared plans for a building along classical lines, and Mr. McKim visited Europe for the purpose of consulting with scientific authorities in France and Germany. It was decided finally that a Greek theatre as a music hall would be too dangerous an experiment in acoustics; and it was first decided by the committee to follow the general proportions and arrangement of a well-known auditorium the Gewandhaus, in Leipsic. But the seating capacity of this hall, only about 1,500, was too small, and the plan had to be abandoned. The new hall with its two galleries, its stage recess, its sloping floor, and above all its increased seating capacity, is a copy of the old hall only in certain acoustical results, not in the architectural means by which these results were attained. The Boston hall contains about 175,000 cubic feet more than the one in Germany; yet, owing to skilful reckoning and careful balancing, the reverberation of the former, as expressed in the formulas prepared at Harvard, is 2.31, against 2.30 for Leipsic.

The investigations at Harvard have embraced practically every detail of architectural acoustics, and have been carried on with a minuteness and a patience astonishing to the layman. Not only have the more obvious problems been studied, but calculations have been made to establish the acoustic differences between a room containing a small audience and the same room when completely filled; and something has even been done toward establishing the effect of plants when placed in an auditorium. The three essentials of a good music hall are, of course, fairly obvious: the sound from the stage should be sufficiently loud; the component parts of a complex sound must keep the proper balance of intensity; and a succession of sounds must come out distinctly, without confusion among themselves or from without. The problems arising on all these points have been carefully worked out, although the results of this study have not yet, in all cases, been fully tabulated.

In the important matter of reverberation, however, a most interesting statement has just been made, with particular reference, aside from the purely mathematical treatment of the subject, to the qualities which various objects have of absorbing sound. Sound is one form of energy, and can be changed into any other form. Usually it passes into heat. This process of decay, as it is called, is known as absorption; and sound is absorbed, more or less, by any substance with which it comes in contact.

Reverberation is sufficiently well understood. An echo is a special example of it, but the more general sort of reverberation is a confused mass of sounds, as it were, which, unlike an echo, is incapable of being analyzed into its various parts. Reverberation has spoiled many a public hall, but on the other hand a certain amount of it is not only not objectionable but actually desirable in a good music hall. In the ordinary theatre, where reverberation is reduced to the lowest practical limit, an orchestra like the Boston Symphony would sound muffled and dead as compared with a performance in a hall like its present home, where the committee, Mr. Gericke, demanded in order to obtain the best results that the architects should not eliminate the reverberation below a definite limit.

The use of various materials as absorbents of reverberation, therefore, and the calculation of the effect of each, is one of the most interesting problems of acoustics. The lecture room in Cambridge where the present experiments were begun was so exceedingly slow in absorbing sound that a word spoken in an ordinary tone of voice was audible five and a half seconds after it had been uttered. During this time even a very deliberate speaker would have uttered a dozen or more succeeding syllables. These successive enunciations were blended into a loud noise, through and above which it was necessary to distinguish the orderly progression of the speech. This could not be done across the room, and even near the platform the effort to listen for any length of time was wearisome. By bringing into this room some 1,500 cushions from the seats of Sanders Theatre, in Memorial Hall, and arranging them so as to expose the largest possible surface, the length of reverberation was reduced to 1.14 seconds—or about a fifth of what it had been before. The cushions had absorbed the rest of the reverberation.

In calculating absorption an open window is taken as the unit, since it makes no difference whether sound escapes into the open air or is transformed to heat in some substance, and an equal area of any other material is compared with this unit as a standard. The absorption of glass, for example, is thus expressed by the fraction .025, and of pine sheathing by .061. More curious are the figures for persons, or for an audience en masse. A woman absorbs more than a man for the reason that her dress offers a greater surface. For the same reason a person sitting in a scattered audience absorbs more than he would if he were one of a crowded audience. An audience is reckoned as a bounding surface, like a floor, in these calculations, and its area is measured in metres. Here is a table of comparative values:

Audience per metre	.96
Audience per person	.44
Isolated woman	.54
Isolated man	.48

To give still another example, a settee upholstered in hair and leather has a value of 1.10, while a plain settee of ash is only .039.

Without attempting to go into the other branches of this novel inquiry, it will be easy enough to see how the Harvard investigations have raised architectural acoustics to a position it never before held, and made it, as in the new Symphony Hall, a trustworthy science.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has published as yet no definite announcement of its winter programme, but its unfamiliar numbers are to be made up, in all likelihood, from the following répertoire: Goldmark's scherzo, Op. 45; Rontgen's ballad on a Norwegian folksong; Cowen's "Idyllic" symphony, which is the composer's sixth in E; Nicode's symphonic variations; F. S. Converse, ballade (MS.), suggested by John Keate's "Endymion;" Rubl, symphony in D minor; Tschaikowsky, "Manfred," symphony in four scenes—"Manfred wandering amid the Alpine heights;" scherzo, "The Spirit of the Alps;" "A picture of the simple but prosperous life of the mountaineers;" "The subterranean palace of Arimane, with the death of Manfred;" Tschaikowsky, suite No. 2, Op. 53; Brull, overture to "Macbeth;" Saint-Saëns, symphony No. 3, with organ and piano; Van der Stucken, "William Ratcliffe;" symphony prologue, Glazounoff, ballet suite, "Raymond;" Bruckner, symphony in D minor, No. 3; Smetana, symphonic poems "Sarka" and "Aus Bohmischen Fluren und Hainen;" they were written in 1875 and are Nos. 2 and 3 of the cycle "Mein Vaterland;" Liszt, symphonic poem "Hunnenschlacht;" Howard A. Brockway, suite; Felix Weingartner, symphony in G major. The soloists at the New York concerts are to be Adele aus der Ohe, Gertrude Stein, Ernest von Dohnanyi, Leopold Godowsky, Franz Kneisel, Hugo, Beecher and Loeffler.

Boston Transcript
MONDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1900

Symphony Hall: Boston Symphony Orchestra

The fourth symphony concert was given in Symphony Hall last Saturday evening, the programme being as follows:

Haydn: Symphony No. 5 (B. & H.), in D major.
(First time at these concerts.)
Dvorak: Concerto for Violin, in A minor, opus 53.
(First time in Boston.)
Julius Röntgen: Ballad on a Norwegian Folk-Melody, opus 36.
(First time in Boston.)
Wagner: Overture to "Tannhäuser."
Mr. Timothée Adamowski was the solo violinist.

Rather a dark programme! The Haydn symphony, which had not been heard here for over twenty years, turned out not to be one of the composer's most cheerful works. Here Haydn falls almost into the academic, possibly in aiming at grandeur. The whole composition, even to the Minuet, has a certain air of severity, of sternness; and this was emphasized rather than toned down by the performance. A composer's expression-marks are, to be sure, not to be trifled with; but it did seem to me on Saturday evening as if Haydn's indicated accents were insisted upon in a way that made for heaviness and monotony. Of course, when an accent returns on the first beat of successive measures, or on the first beat of alternate measures, it must be played accordingly; but must it necessarily be played with exactly the same force at each and every recurrence? Cannot some slight difference of emphasis be made? just enough to prevent four-measure periods being cut up into heavy two-measure or even one-measure periods? At this concert there was often a monotonous heaviness of accent in the playing that had something of the inexorable about it, and did not, to my mind, quite tally with the character of the symphony.

Dvorak's violin concerto does not sin on the side of over-sunniness, either. After a not very careful reading of the score, and very careful listening to the performance, I am left with the impression that the work is decidedly dull. It begins with as dour a scowl as that on the brow of the infant Napoleon; and does not get into much better humor until the finale, when it does begin to dance and sing and show—what an exceedingly sad business dancing in leaden sandals is. Upon the whole, what a peculiarly limited person Dr. Dvorak seems to be; some half-dozen of his compositions could evidently have been written by no one but a man of genius; but, when you get beyond that half-dozen or so, what a Sahara of dulness you find! For a man who really knows from personal experience what inspiration is, he makes about as poor a showing when at second-best as any composer in the whole list.

Mr. Adamowski played the concerto admirably, with adequate technique and all the enthusiasm which the composer seemed to lack. Every chance he got, notably in the slow movement, to make play with that poignant sweetness of expression of which he possesses the secret, he rose to the occasion manfully; he did wonders, too, in giving wings to the leaden dance-lilt of the finale, rising now and then to the pitch of true brilliancy in spite of all. He was rapturously applauded and twice recalled at the end; he amply deserved it!

So far, the concert, as I have said, had not been any too cheerful; but with the Röntgen ballad came a gloom so thick and black that you could not even see the coal-heavers which, you somehow felt, lined the horizon. Can this mood be natural to Mr. Röntgen, who is a Dutchman by descent and not racially given to the blues? Or did he deem it a dire duty to be as gloomy as possible when treating a Norwegian theme? Certainly this ballad of his opens vistas of abysses of low-spiritedness that are simply appalling; Lawrence Barrett's Hamlet, walking arm in arm at a funeral with Couldock's Stranger, would be cheerful in comparison. When a man gives evidence of being in such a state of mind, your first impulse is to tell him to take a pill; perhaps Mr. Röntgen's aim was to give a symphonic tone-picture of the universe before the invention of pills. Save for this preternatural, ultra-Tchaikovskian blueness, the piece is by no means uninteresting; the orchestration is masterly, and rather new in the commanding prominence it gives to the string tone, even in the most heavily scored passages; that piccolo-flute bat-whistling toward the end is quite a stroke of genius in its way; then, the composer may be said to carry through his black melancholy with a very firm and sure hand. In fine, the composition would be wondrously poetic and strong, did it not push atrabiliar gloom to the comical pitch. It was admirably read and played.

Then Lux facta est! Such a thrice-splendid performance of the "Tannhäuser" overture I cannot remember since I first listened to music. It was simply gorgeous!

The next programme is: Frederic Cowen, idyllic symphony in E major, No. 6 (first time in Boston); Bizet, petite suite, "Jeux d'Enfants"; Brahms, symphony No. 1, in C minor, opus 68. W. F. A.

Boston Transcript
SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1900

TO STOP PRESENT SPECULATION

New System of Admission to the Public Rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Go into Effect Next Week, to Remedy an Existing Evil

To stop speculation in the twenty-five-cent tickets to the second balcony only for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in Symphony Hall, it has been found necessary by Charles A. Ellis, manager, and Frederic R. Comee, the assistant manager, to adopt a new plan. Beginning next week, for the public rehearsals on Friday afternoons no tickets will be sold. Hereafter, on Fridays, at noon, the Huntington-avenue entrance only will be opened, and precisely 505 persons will be admitted, giving each person a seat. Four lines in single file will be formed along the side corridors, beginning at the foot of each staircase. At half-past one, on the payment of a quarter of a dollar, admission will be given to the second balcony, where the seats will be, as heretofore, "first come, first served." No changing of places in the line will be allowed, and anyone leaving his or her place will forfeit it. No money will be changed at the door, and a quarter of a dollar piece will be the only coin accepted.

It may strike some people as singular that the management has been forced to adopt this new system because of the evil of speculation now existing. Not only have supposed-professional speculators been conspicuous this season among the crowd waiting to be admitted to these rehearsals, but well-dressed individuals who have not the look of making a regular business of selling tickets at a premium seem to have joined in the general desire to make capital of what was intended to be a public benefaction. The management easily could have sold at excellent premiums at auction every seat in the second balcony for these rehearsals, just as every seat for the evening performances is sold, but it was felt that, to such limited extent as accommodations in this part of Symphony Hall offered, the general public, unable to pay the prices at which are sold seats in other parts of the hall, might have at least some opportunity to gain admission. It seems hardly fair that individual speculators should profit by the unselfishness of the management in offering the second balcony seats to the public, hence the adoption of the new system.

The management of the Symphony Orchestra concerts make this announcement: "To stop speculation in the twenty-five-cent tickets to the second balcony only for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall, it has been found necessary to adopt a new plan. Beginning next week, for the public rehearsals on Friday afternoons no tickets will be sold. On Fridays, at noon, the Huntington-avenue entrance only will be opened. Precisely five hundred and five (505) persons will be admitted, giving each person a seat. Four lines in single file will be formed along the side corridors, beginning at the foot of each staircase. At half-past one, on the payment of a quarter of a dollar, admission will be given to the second balcony, where the seats will be, as heretofore, 'first come, first served.' No changing of places in the line will be allowed, and anyone leaving his place will forfeit it. No money will be changed at the door, and a quarter of a dollar will be the only coin accepted."

The soloist at the Symphony Concerts next week, Nov. 30 and Dec. 1, will be Mr. Harold Bauer, who comes to this country with a great reputation. He has toured through every country of Europe, awakening unvarying enthusiasm. He will appear in a recital on the afternoon of Dec. 8 in Steinert Hall.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1900

Dohnanyi's Double Triumph.

THE reappearance of Ernst von Dohnányi with the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been one round of magnificent successes. At every appearance he was more than enthusiastically received. His appearances in Boston and New York, where he played for the first time in this country his own piano concerto, was the scene of unusual demonstrations, his success with the audience being instantaneous. At each appearance he was recalled six and seven times. No less demonstrative were his appearances with the orchestra in Baltimore, Philadelphia and Brooklyn. The critics everywhere, without exception, were lavish in their praise of his playing. His concerto, too, came in for many worthy notices. The following are extracts from the opinions of the critics following his appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra:

ERNST VON DOHNANYI.

That admirable virtuoso, Ernst Von Dohnányi, was welcomed as he deserved to be. He played like a young Apollo. He has the real material in him, and his individuality is wonderfully fascinating. He is the first pianist made known to the public since Paderewski who has whetted the musical appetite. He is a true artist, musical in organization, gifted with temperament and intelligence, already far advanced in self-control and competent to hold the attention of an audience at all times. Frequently he can move his hearers to a high pitch of excitement.—New York Times.

The pianist-composer, Ernst Von Dohnányi, is the most promising virtuoso who has been heard here since Paderewski made his first tour of conquest. He plays with dash, brilliancy and poetic feeling. His success with the audience was most pronounced.—New York Herald.

After the Symphony came Dohnányi, the great, who made such a wonderful impression last season by his piano performances. The concerto displays the young pianist in a most astounding manner as a veritable king of the keyboard.—Boston Advertiser.

Mr. Dohnányi's command of the keyboard is well nigh perfect, and it is difficult to believe that the force of technical accomplishments can go further. In his liquid runs and rippling trills he suggests the playing of Joseffy.—Philadelphia Telegraph.

THE ORCHESTRAL QUESTION.

EVERY effort to organize a Permanent Orchestra in New York has thus far failed, although the need of it is constantly felt, being emphasized at the very beginning of the season this year by the miserable playing of the temporary organization that accompanied Gabrilowitsch at his opening concert. All the talent, executive force and musicianship of Emil Paur could not bring about proper technical work through such an incompetent band, and adding to this the customary lack of rehearsal nothing better could have been expected, just as nothing worse could have been imagined. Those who heard the "Euryanthe" overture played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra here a few days before and then heard it at the Gabrilowitsch concert could form an estimate of differences that must have forced a blush of shame at the humiliation of orchestral music in New York city.

The causes of this degradation have been touched upon for years past and all of us interested in good music and its dissemination are acquainted with the facts that recurringly subject us to these intolerable performances. The question now is not the cause or causes, but What is New York going to do to emancipate itself from this bondage of inartistic, slovenly and incompetent orchestral work? How is this enormous community to be liberated from this enormous crime, for it is a crime to permit the present condition to prevail any longer?

An appeal to the public is useless; the people themselves will not come to the rescue because orchestras are not of interest to the masses, are not supported by them.

Musical institutions are not in condition to combine for such a purpose and many of them are at work at such cross purposes that co-operation is hopeless.

A subscription fund to be formed with the aid or support of music lovers cannot be collected because it requires an organized corps of paid canvassers to do this properly and that means ready capital to begin the work; there is no such initiative possible.

The only hope therefore rests in the public spirit of one of the wealthy citizens of this metropolis just as the Boston orchestra owes its inception and fortune to such a man, and unless such a philanthropist can be found in this community we must suffer the tortures to which all music lovers are doomed here under present orchestral conditions.

The victims are not only the music lovers but the orchestral players themselves. Many of them are sincere and true musicians who would welcome opportunities by means of which they could, with proper and sufficient rehearsals, advance in their art by participating in lofty and serene and dignified performances instead of the perfunctory and slipshod work characteristic of New York orchestral performances. As the case now stands even those who might be tempted to engage orchestras here for concert purposes must abandon their projects after having heard the actual din, noise and technical confusion that reigned at the Gabrilowitsch concert, which was given, as it had to be, with one rehearsal. What can Mr. Paur or any conductor accomplish with a heterogenous collection of players with one rehearsal?

As all orchestral projects will gradually be relinquished the New York orchestral player will find his artistic pursuit ruined, and he can then scramble for a place in a theatre orchestra or play at balls, receptions and restaurants. He is therefore a greater sufferer than the music lover himself in this hopeless state of orchestral chaos, which is destined to continue unless a man arises from among the wealthy to save us.

n Traveler

BY THE

307 Washington St.

THE SYMPHONY.

One novelty was offered at the fifth symphony concert last Saturday evening, a symphony by Mr. F. H. Cowen, given for the first time by this orchestra. Then there was a most delightful bit of filling in by Bizet, and last, but not least, Brahms' grand first symphony. To be more particular the programme was:

Symphony No. 6, "Idyllic".....F. H. Cowen
(First time in Boston.)
Little suite, Children's Games, op. 22.....Bizet
Symphony No. 1, in C minor, op. 68.....Brahms

While it is hardly just to pass judgment upon a symphony on its first hearing, it will have to be admitted that this work of Mr. Cowen contains little that can be called striking. Pleasing at times it most certainly is, particularly the horn passages at the opening of the second movement, and even in the third and fourth movements there are moments when one's ear is tickled, but that is all. It lacks clearness, and in scarcely a movement does it appear to convey any definite thought.

Doubly welcome, therefore, was the Bizet selection, with its charming sprightliness in every number, each telling clearly and crisply its own little story, perhaps a trifle light for a symphony programme, but none the less interesting on that account. As played by the orchestra it acted like a tonic upon the audience, thoroughly awakening them from the semi-indifferent state caused by the Cowen number. Mr. Gericke was most enthusiastically recalled.

Brahms at his best is what is claimed for this first symphony. One is most ready to admit the claim, after hearing the symphony interpreted by this orchestra. The playing, it seems almost needless to add, was well nigh faultless.

MONDAY, NO[illegible]

Symphony Hall: Boston Symphony Orchestra

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the fifth symphony concert in Symphony Hall on Saturday, the programme being as follows:

Cowen: Symphony No. 6, in E minor, "Idyllic." (First time in Boston.)
Bizet: Petite Suite, "Jeux d'Enfants," opus 22.
Brahms: Symphony No. 1, in C minor, opus 68.

Another of those delightful, satisfying concerts where the orchestra has it all to itself, and there are no aggressive solo people.

Cowen's "Idyllic" symphony was given for the first time in this city, and given as it stands in the published score—that is, without extenuating poetic scare-heads. When the work was first played from MS. in London (in 1897), it was a full-fledged piece of programme-music, with descriptive headings to all the four movements. It, or rather its descriptive purpose, was considerably laughed at at the time by captious critics. Indeed, the composer had gone somewhat beyond the ordinary limits of programme-headings, and pointed out his picturesque intentions with a definiteness that bordered on pathos. The third movement (Adagio), for instance, was to depict something like "Sunday afternoon's meditation on the morning's sermon"—a picture in which probably only the gifted Felicia Hemans could find poetic suggestions. One critic even went so far as to ask why Mr. Cowen had not taken up the challenge of what Berlioz would have called a desperate "atheist in expression"—to draw a vivid tone-picture of "an Englishman in Paris on a rainy day, who cannot speak French and has lost his umbrella." But, whether Cowen was thus laughed out of his first intention, or came to his better senses by himself, all these illuminative headings were omitted when the score came to be published, only the title "Idyllic" being retained, so that the work now stands as simply a piece of absolute music.

After a first hearing one finds the symphony—well, just what might have been expected of Frederic Hymen Cowen. A work showing considerable graceful inventiveness in thematic material, more modern in harmony than some of his earlier symphonies, abounding in charming effects of coloring, generally poetic and imaginative in mood, only now and then recalling the Kapellmeister; but lacking that indescribable something which holds a work firmly together and lifts it out of the second rank. The composer shows himself as adequate to about anything except an emergency; he talks on glibly, fancifully, charmingly up to the moment when you think he is going to say something important; and then he fails to say it! Decidedly the best movement of the four seems to me the second, Allegro scherzando; this has something of an air of totality about it, it holds together and is more than a mass of details. The other movements have much that is admirable in them, but seem full of holes. One wonders whether Mr. Cowen have not really outgrown the symphonic form, whether the warm blood in him would not fill another mould better, more naturally, with less need of academic force-pumps. The performance was excellent, and evidently gave one a sufficiently correct idea of the work.

Bizet's little suite is delightful and not, by turns. Now and then the composer seems to drop the nursery tone, and forget to be childlike; but when he preserves the child atmosphere in his music he is infinitely charming. That "Top" movement is a gem! The thing was very daintily and deftly played.

Brahms's C minor symphony seems greater and greater every time you hear it. Looking back over the symphonic production of the world since Beethoven, one begins to wonder whether this first symphony of Brahms be not really—as it was called in 1876 by some apparently foolish person—the "tenth symphony." No other symphony written since 1828 (the year of Beethoven's ninth) comes so near to Beethoven in point of intrinsic greatness—far away from him though it be in other respects. It is a work totus teres atque rotundus, one in which every stroke draws blood, and nothing is superfluous; and, when you come to coloring, where in all orchestral music can you find a composition in which the color better fits the shape? If the art of orchestration is to be defined as the art of writing for orchestra so as to obtain the desired effect, then is Brahms a supreme master of it. The performance was excellent, though not quite what one would call great. To my mind, it did not dare quite enough, notably in the first movement; that great whirlwind of passion sounded rather academic and proper. No doubt, where a composer shows as much reserved force as Brahms, there should be a corresponding reserve in the playing; but even Brahms sometimes lets himself go, and never has he done so more freely than in this movement. There are strokes in it that should cut like a knife; last Saturday evening the edge seemed a thought dulled. The other movements went more convincingly, notably the great Finale.

The next programme is: S. Taneyeff, overture to "The Oresteia" of Æschylus, opus 6 (first time in Boston); Brahms, concerto for pianoforte, No. 1, in D minor, opus 15 (first time in Boston); Smetana, symphonic poem, "From Bohemia's Groves and Meadows," from the cyclus, "My Country," No. 4 (first time in Boston); Beethoven, symphony No. 1, in C major, opus 21. Mr. Harold Bauer will be the pianist.

W. F. A.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1900

Dohnanyi's Double Triumph.

THE reappearance of Ernst von Dohnányi with the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been one round of magnificent successes. At every appearance he was more than enthusiastically received. His appearances in Boston and New York, where he played for the first time in this country his own piano concerto, was the scene of unusual demonstrations, his success with the audience being instantaneous. At each appearance he was recalled six and seven times. No less demonstrative were his appearances with the orchestra in Baltimore, Philadelphia and Brooklyn. The critics everywhere, without exception, were lavish in their praise of his playing. His concerto, too, came in for many worthy notices. The following are extracts from the opinions of the critics following his appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra:

ERNST VON DOHNANYI.

That admirable virtuoso, Ernst Von Dohnányi, was welcomed as he deserved to be. He played like a young Apollo. He has the real material in him, and his individuality is wonderfully fascinating. He is the first pianist made known to the public since Paderewski who has whetted the musical appetite. He is a true artist, musical in organization, gifted with temperament and intelligence, already far advanced in self-control and competent to hold the attention of an audience at all times. Frequently he can move his hearers to a high pitch of excitement. New York Times.

The pianist-composer, Ernst Von Dohnányi, is the most promising virtuoso who has been heard here since Paderewski made his first tour of conquest. He plays with dash, brilliancy and poetic feeling. His success with the audience was most pronounced.—New York Herald.

After the Symphony came Dohnányi, the great, who made such a wonderful impression last season by his piano performances. The concerto displays the young pianist in a most astounding manner as a veritable king of the keyboard.—Boston Advertiser.

Mr. Dohnányi's command of the keyboard is well nigh perfect, and it is difficult to believe that the force of technical accomplishments can go further. In his liquid runs and rippling trills he suggests the playing of Joseffy.—Philadelphia Telegraph.

THE ORCHESTRAL QUESTION.

EVERY effort to organize a Permanent Orchestra in New York has thus far failed, although the need of it is constantly felt, being emphasized at the very beginning of the season this year by the miserable playing of the temporary organization that accompanied Gabrilowitsch at his opening concert. All the talent, executive force and musicianship of Emil Paur could not bring about proper technical work through such an incompetent band, and adding to this the customary lack of rehearsal nothing better could have been expected; just as nothing worse could have been imagined. Those who heard the "Euryanthe" overture played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra here a few days before and then heard it at the Gabrilowitsch concert could form an estimate of differences that must have forced a blush of shame at the humiliation of orchestral music in New York city.

The causes of this degradation have been touched upon for years past and all of us interested in good music and its dissemination are acquainted with the facts that recurringly subject us to these intolerable performances. The question now is not the cause or causes, but What is New York going to do to emancipate itself from this bondage of inartistic, slovenly and incompetent orchestral work? How is this enormous community to be liberated from this enormous crime, for it is a crime to permit the present condition to prevail any longer?

An appeal to the public is useless; the people themselves will not come to the rescue because orchestras are not of interest to the masses, are not supported by them.

Musical institutions are not in condition to combine for such a purpose and many of them are at work at such cross purposes that co-operation is hopeless.

A subscription fund to be formed with the aid or support of music lovers cannot be collected because it requires an organized corps of paid canvassers to do this properly and that means ready capital to begin the work; there is no such initiative possible.

The only hope therefore rests in the public spirit of one of the wealthy citizens of this metropolis just as the Boston orchestra owes its inception and fortune to such a man, and unless such a philanthropist can be found in this community we must suffer the tortures to which all music lovers are doomed here under present orchestral conditions.

The victims are not only the music lovers but the orchestral players themselves. Many of them are sincere and true musicians who would welcome opportunities by means of which they could, with proper and sufficient rehearsals, advance in their art by participating in lofty and serene and dignified performances instead of the perfunctory and slipshod work characteristic of New York orchestral performances. As the case now stands even those who might be tempted to engage orchestras here for concert purposes must abandon their projects after having heard the actual din, noise and technical confusion that reigned at the Gabrilowitsch concert, which was given, as it had to be, with one rehearsal. What can Mr. Paur or any conductor accomplish with a heterogenous collection of players with one rehearsal?

As all orchestral projects will gradually be relinquished the New York orchestral player will find his artistic pursuit ruined, and he can then scramble for a place in a theatre orchestra or play at balls, receptions and restaurants. He is therefore a greater sufferer than the music lover himself in this hopeless state of orchestral chaos, which is destined to continue unless a man arises from among the wealthy to save us.

n Traveler

BY THE

307 Washington St.

THE SYMPHONY.

One novelty was offered at the fifth symphony concert last Saturday evening, a symphony by Mr. F. H. Cowen, given for the first time by this orchestra. Then there was a most delightful bit of filling in by Bizet, and last, but not least, Brahms' grand first symphony. To be more particular the programme was:

Symphony No. 6, "Idyllic".....F. H. Cowen
(First time in Boston.)
Little suite, Children's Games, op. 22.....Bizet
Symphony No. 1, in C minor, op. 68.....Brahms

While it is hardly just to pass judgment upon a symphony on its first hearing, it will have to be admitted that this work of Mr. Cowen contains little that can be called striking. Pleasing at times it most certainly is, particularly the horn passages at the opening of the second movement, and even in the third and fourth movements there are moments when one's ear is tickled, but that is all. It lacks clearness, and in scarcely a movement does it appear to convey any definite thought.

Doubly welcome, therefore, was the Bizet selection, with its charming sprightliness in every number, each telling clearly and crispily its own little story, perhaps a trifle light for a symphony programme, but none the less interesting on that account. As played by the orchestra it acted like a tonic upon the audience, thoroughly awakening them from the semi-indifferent state caused by the Cowen number. Mr. Gericke was most enthusiastically recalled.

Brahms at his best is what is claimed for this first symphony. One is most ready to admit the claim, after hearing the symphony interpreted by this orchestra. The playing, it seems almost needless to add, was well nigh faultless.

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 26, 1900

Symphony Hall: Boston Symphony Orchestra

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the fifth symphony concert in Symphony Hall on Saturday, the programme being as follows:

Cowen: Symphony No. 6, in E minor, "Idyllic." (First time in Boston.)
Bizet: Petite Suite, "Jeux d'Enfants," opus 22.
Brahms: Symphony No. 1, in C minor, opus 68.

Another of those delightful, satisfying concerts where the orchestra has it all to itself, and there are no aggressive solo people.

Cowen's "Idyllic" symphony was given for the first time in this city, and given as it stands in the published score—that is, without extenuating poetic scare-heads. When the work was first played from MS. in London (in 1897), it was a full-fledged piece of programme-music, with descriptive headings to all the four movements. It, or rather its descriptive purpose, was considerably laughed at at the time by captious critics. Indeed, the composer had gone somewhat beyond the ordinary limits of programme-headings, and pointed out his picturesque intentions with a definiteness that bordered on pathos. The third movement (Adagio), for instance, was to depict something like "Sunday afternoon's meditation on the morning's sermon"—a picture in which probably only the gifted Felicia Hemans could find poetic suggestions. One critic even went so far as to ask why Mr. Cowen had not taken up the challenge of what Berlioz would have called a desperate "atheist in expression"—to draw a vivid tone-picture of "an Englishman in Paris on a rainy day, who cannot speak French and has lost his umbrella." But, whether Cowen was thus laughed out of his first intention, or came to his better senses by himself, all these illuminative headings were omitted when the score came to be published, only the title "Idyllic" being retained, so that the work now stands as simply a piece of absolute music.

After a first hearing one finds the symphony—well, just what might have been expected of Frederic Hymen Cowen. A work showing considerable graceful inventiveness in thematic material, more modern in harmony than some of his earlier symphonies, abounding in charming effects of coloring, generally poetic and imaginative in mood, only now and then recalling the Kapellmeister; but lacking that indescribable something which holds a work firmly together and lifts it out of the second rank. The composer shows himself as adequate to about anything except an emergency; he talks on glibly, fancifully, charmingly up to the moment when you think he is going to say something important; and then he fails to say it! Decidedly the best movement of the four seems to me the second, Allegro scherzando; this has something of an air of totality about it, it holds together and is more than a mass of details. The other movements have much that is admirable in them, but seem full of holes. One wonders whether Mr. Cowen have not really outgrown the symphonic form, whether the warm blood in him would not fill another mould better, more naturally, with less need of academic force-pumps. The performance was excellent, and evidently gave one a sufficiently correct idea of the work.

Bizet's little suite is delightful and not, by turns. Now and then the composer seems to drop the nursery tone, and forget to be childlike; but when he preserves the child atmosphere in his music he is infinitely charming. That "Top" movement is a gem! The thing was very daintily and deftly played.

Brahms's C minor symphony seems greater and greater every time you hear it. Looking back over the symphonic production of the world since Beethoven, one begins to wonder whether this first symphony of Brahms be not really—as it was called in 1876 by some apparently foolish person—the "tenth symphony." No other symphony written since 1823 (the year of Beethoven's ninth) comes so near to Beethoven in point of intrinsic greatness—far away from him though it be in other respects. It is a work totus teres atque rotundus, one in which every stroke draws blood, and nothing is superfluous; and, when you come to coloring, where in all orchestral music can you find a composition in which the color better fits the shape? If the art of orchestration is to be defined as the art of writing for orchestra so as to obtain the desired effect, then is Brahms a supreme master of it. The performance was excellent, though not quite what one would call great. To my mind, it did not dare quite enough, notably in the first movement; that great whirlwind of passion sounded rather academic and proper. No doubt, where a composer shows as much reserved force as Brahms, there should be a corresponding reserve in the playing; but even Brahms sometimes lets himself go, and never has he done so more freely than in this movement. There are strokes in it that should cut like a knife; last Saturday evening the edge seemed a thought dulled. The other movements went more convincingly, notably the great Finale.

The next programme is: S. Taneyeli, overture to "The Oresteia" of Æschylus, opus 6 (first time in Boston); Brahms, concerto for pianoforte, No. 1, in D minor, opus 15 (first time in Boston); Smetana, symphonic poem, "From Bohemia's Groves and Meadows," from the cyclus, "My Country," No. 4 (first time in Boston); Beethoven, symphony No. 1, in C major, opus 21. Mr. Harold Bauer will be the pianist.

W. F. A.

Boston [illegible].

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1900.

A NEW SYMPHONY.

Cowen's "Idyllic" Symphony Produced at the Fifth Concert for the First Time in Boston—A Charming Little Suite by Bizet.

(By Philip Hale.)

The program of the fifth Symphony concert given last night at Symphony Hall was as follows:

Symphony No. 6 in E major, "Idyllic" Cowen
Suite, "Jeux d'enfants".....Bizet
Symphony No. 1.....Brahms

Two symphonies by Cowen had already been played at these concerts: the "Scandinavian" (No. 3), in 1883 and 1890, and the "Welsh" (No. 4), in 1887. The "Idyllic" (No. 6), which was played last night for the first time in Boston, was produced at a Richter concert in London, May 21, 1897. The writer of the analytical program-book for this Richter concert affirmed that the work suggests in its four movements: (1) The pleasurable sensation of awaking in the country on a breezy, sunny summer's morning. (2) A walk in the fields which are resonantly bright with the sound of a shepherd's pastoral pipe. (3) The peace and meditative stillness of a hot Sunday afternoon. (4) Evening out-door festivities. At this same concert Mr. Gabrilowitsch made his first appearance in London and played Tschaikowsky's concerto in B flat minor for the piano.

The score of the symphony gives no clue by titles or preface to any deliberate plan of the composer. He probably talked with the London analyist, and preferred that manner of telling his purpose to the musical world. Or, perhaps, he was uneasy when he sought the publisher and feared the jibes of the unappreciative and the believers in absolute music.

Cowen was born in Jamaica—where the rum comes from. He left that happy island when he was four years old, too young to appreciate the great gift of Nature. If he had stayed there longer and absorbed the staple product in judicious quantities he might have written better music.

For what can be said honestly in praise of this symphony? Even the mild critic of the Musical Times (London) was obliged to frame a platitude and find on every page, "the loving care of a thoughtful musician whose utterances command respect if they do not cause general admiration." The symphony might be dismissed as "amiable music."

But it is without ideas of any force, beauty or value; and if a composer has no ideas why should he make music or be encouraged to go on making music. Mr. Cowen could not say that he was obliged to write a symphony, to show what he could or could not do. He had already written five. In 1874 he wrote an operetta "One Too Many." He might have chosen this title for his sixth symphony.

There is not one commanding idea in the work; and if we take the analyst's titles as authorized by the composer, only once is there a comparatively successful attempt at the establishment of a mood: that is the musical portrayal of a Sunday afternoon in England—which is marked appropriately "adagio, molto tranquillo." But no music—not even Mr. Cowen's—can portray adequately the dismal London Sunday.

Nor is the want of ideas atoned for by any originality in rhythmic or harmonic or instrumental treatment. Commonplace follows commonplace. The movements are merely enlarged and swollen drawing-room piano-pieces and songs, which after a digestion-defying dinner might lull the bulbous British matron.

* * *

Bizet's charming little suite was first produced here by Mr. Paur four years ago next month. When Colonne started the concerts that are now given at the Châtelet he asked Bizet for an unpublished work to play at the first concert, which took place at the Odéon, March 2, 1873. Bizet had just published twelve pieces for the piano, four hands—"Jeux d'Enfants." He orchestrated Nos. 2, 3, 6, 11, 12. They are dainty trifles, light as air, but they show the born musician as well as the composer of infinite taste and skill. How artistic is the very simplicity, with here and there a refined and saving touch when there is an approach to that which might be common! The master is known in works of slight dimensions as well as in works of long breath and serious face.

* * *

Then came Brahms's symphony in C minor. Professor Schweizerhoffsteinlein, the celebrated Wagnerite, once said: "To me, however many movements in an orchestral work of Johannes Brahms there are, to me—hear me once—there are only two: He makes the first and I make the second." But the eminent professor was no doubt unjust toward Brahms, in his clumsy, ponderous way.

THE programs arranged by Mr. Wilhelm Gericke for the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in Symphony Hall, are exciting criticism that is for the most part unfavorable. This criticism does not come solely from the unfortunate beings known as professional critics, who are popularly supposed to sit in the seats of the scornful; it comes from musicians, both in and out of the orchestra, and from holders of subscription tickets. Even some of those who hold Mr. Gericke to be an ideal conductor shake their heads if you turn their attention to the character of his programs.

The objectors say: "For Mr. Gericke the man, we have a high regard; we respect Mr. Gericke as a most competent driller of men and admit that in certain works which appeal to him he gains almost perfect results, but we do not find him in sympathy with the ultra-modern school of composers, and we miss in his interpretations the warm and sustaining breath of imagination. Here is an orchestra that is one of the best in the world, if not the very best. It is supported generously both by Mr. Higginson, who called it into being, and the public at large. Has not the public a right to hear modern works that excite attention not only in European cities, but in New [illegible] either familiar compositions over and over again or novelties that are in reality several years old and of slight interest? These concerts are not educational concerts in a conservatory. And if you insist on the word 'educational,' is it the part of an educator to ignore so many works of contemporaneous composers?"

Now, I do not propose to discuss at present Mr. Gericke as man or as conductor. The man is universally respected as high-minded and honorable. The conductor has both merits and faults; for, after all, he is human; and do you know anywhere of an ideal conductor, one that suits all hearers of various degrees of musical intelligence and temperament? But in order to understand the tastes of Mr. Gericke, as shown in his programs, it is necessary to glance for a moment at the milieu and the early experiences that influenced him.

Mr. Gericke is now 55 years old. He was the pupil of Dessoff, a conservative, who was in turn a pupil of the conservative Moscheles, Hauptmann and Rietz. Mr. Gericke was one of the conductors at the Imperial Opera House, Vienna, from May 1, 1874, till April 30, 1884. He also conducted "Gesellschafts Konzerte" in Vienna. He won an honorable reputation in these offices. He was not known distinctively as a conductor of symphony concerts.

He succeeded Mr. Henschel as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1884, and he held this position until the spring of 1889. He then returned to Vienna and again conducted the "Gesellschafts Konzerte." In 1895 he retired and was not actively employed until the fall of 1898, when he returned to Boston.

Mr. Gericke was undoubtedly the very man for the place when he succeeded Mr. Henschel in this city. However good and versatile musician Mr. Henschel may be, he is not a first-class conductor even after the years of his experience in London; and when he was put at the head of the Boston orchestra he was utterly without orchestral training or experience. Mr. Gericke had one supreme task, to raise the technical standard of the orchestra to the highest possible notch. He accomplished this task in the face of many obstacles. For this alone he deserves the highest praise, and for this work, which was largely drudgery, his name must be remembered gratefully with that of Mr. Higginson, who made Mr. Gericke's success possible by his own generosity, faithful adherence to the conductor, and indomitable perseverance in the carrying out of his own cherished plan.

After Mr. Gericke resigned on account of his health, Mr. Nikisch came. He was a conductor of romantic spirit, flaming enthusiasm, a musician in fullest sympathy with the modern movement in music. He had his failings, and these were grievously apparent in his interpretation of the classics; but his best qualities were of an intensely poetic nature, and his fame was founded on the performance of distinctively modern works.

After him came Mr. Paur, another romanticist of fiery imagination, to whom Richard Strauss, Tschaikowsky, Rimsky-Korsakoff were something more than names in a music lexicon. Their works aroused his soul, and the performances of the Pathetic Symphony, "Thus Spake Zarathustra," and "Scheherazade," were among, nay, were the most splendid achievements of the superb orchestra.

For nine musical years Boston was under the spell of romantic conductors.

Then Mr. Gericke returned. What had happened during his absence? What works of modern tendencies had appeared? The taste of Boston had been modified, broadened. The horizon was larger. It is true that there are still here estimable and elderly men and women who think that music died with Schumann, if it did not give up the ghost with Mendelssohn, and prefer an academic symphony by Haydn or the "Euryanthe" overture to any of the works of Tschaikowsky, Richard Strauss or d'Indy, strange composers who perplex and disconcert them. There is today another generation in Symphony Hall, a younger generation of musicians and lovers of music, who know that music is not confined within the boundary lines of Germany or Austria, and that Berlioz and Saint-Saëns are not the only French composers.

Now Mr. Gericke is thoroughly Viennese in his musical tastes and beliefs. Look over the records of concerts in Vienna for the last 20 years, read the collected criticisms of Hanslick, say from 1880 to 1899, and you will see at once what I mean. The programs of these concerts are incredibly conservative; novelties, unless they were written by Viennese citizens, were introduced timidly, almost apologetically. And the criticisms of Hanslick, illuminating as they often are, show, nevertheless, a narrow horizon and a shrinking from the approach of Russian, French, Italian, Scandinavian, Belgian composers, or Germans who have tasted of the sinful fruit of modernity. Rosenthal once told me that Hanslick wrote like an "educated washerwomen." The taunt was a bitter one, not wholly true, and we must remember that Hanslick had pooh-poohed Rosenthal's piano playing; yet the pianist pierced Hanslick through the weak joint of his harness; for Hanslick is not a man of catholic taste, and he is essentially a bourgeois. His memoirs "Aus meinem Leben" reveal this characteristic as well as his colossal egoism.

I can understand readily how Mr. Gericke, brought up in this Viennese atmosphere, in close association with musicians and critics who added to the list of classic names only such names as Brahms, Fuchs, Dvorák and a few others of more strictly parochial reputation, cannot see why anybody in Boston should really wish to hear [illegible] by the "modern" Russians, the "decadent" Frenchmen and Belgians, or the "Don Quixote" and "Ein Heldenleben" of Richard Strauss. Johann Strauss, yes; he was a genius in his way; but why the latest works of Richard?

During the last 10 years there has been a mighty change in the musical thought and expression of the world, and even Boston has been affected. I do not say whether this change is for the better or the worse. But I do say that inasmuch as we are living in these times of development or retrogression—whichever you please to call it—we should hear the works of gifted and sincere composers who put into music that which is within them. A babbling and dull violin concerto by Dvorák, a Ballad by Roentgen—these may be given once to serve as awful warnings; but why should we not hear really new pieces that are individual and interesting?

Chicago has heard Strauss's "Don Quixote" and "Ein Heldenleben"; Balakireff's "Tnamar"; Chabrier's Pastorale Suite; music from Benoit's "Charlotte Corday"; Berlioz's "Rob Roy" overture; Charpentier's "Impressions d' Italie"; Chausson's "Viviane"; Dukas's "L'apprenti Sorcier"; Duvivier's "Dramatic" Symphony; Glazunoff's two concert waltzes, Cortége solennel, Oriental Rhapsody, Fantasia, "Le Printemps," pieces by Guiraud and Halvorsen, d'Indy's "Wallenstein's Camp," the prelude to Lazzari's "Armor," Rimsky-Korsakoff's Suite "Mlada." Sinding's "Episodes chevalresques" and "Rondo infinito," Tinel's "Fête dans le Temple de Jupiter," many pieces by Tschaikowsky unknown to us here, Weingartner's "King Lear," etc.

Even in the Western town of Cincinnati Mr. Van der Stucken has in rehearsal such a brand-new novelty as Henri Rabaud's "La Procession nocturne."

I do not say whether these pieces are good or bad; whether they would be liked or disliked; I ask only this—why should we not have an opportunity of hearing new works while discussion is hot about them?

And instead of constant repetitions of familiar works by Brahms, Haydn, Mozart, Schumann, Weber and such men, might it not be well to repeat at comparatively short intervals new works that a more definite impression may be made a sounder opinion formed? We hear a work by, say, Borodin, Chadwick, Glazunoff, d'Indy; it is played for the first time; then it is put upon the shelf. Would it not be fairer to composer and audience to give a second performance within a year, especially as there are 24 concerts each season?

Certainly there has been just cause for condemnation of the programs during the last year. But there are signs that Mr. Gericke is beginning to realize the importance of yielding gracefully to the wishes of the majority of the hearers who are still on the sunny side of 50. Thus we see that an overture by Tanieff is announced for the next concert.

* * *

The death of Sir Arthur Sullivan is not as great a loss to the musical world as though it had occurred shortly after the production of "H. M. S. Pinafore"; for his best music is dated from 1875 ("Trial by Jury") till 1885 ("The Mikado") There are pretty things in "Ruddigore," "The Gondoliers," in the revision of "Contrabandista" and even in "Utopia," but "The Mikado" was his last great little operetta.

He was great in a little field—the field of operetta. Gilbert was to him as Meilhac and Halévey were to Offenbach, and seldom has any musician—I know of none but Offenbach—worked so unitedly with a librettist as did Sullivan with the man that turned the world and humanity topsy-turvy and argued with irresistible logic from satirical premises.

Rossini described Offenbach as the Mozart of the Champs-Elysées. Sullivan was the Mozart of the Savoy.

For Sullivan had infinite gift of melody—although he was not always scrupulous about helping himself to tunes by others—rare skill in leading voices in ensemble, unerring sense of discreet and telling instrumentation, and an instinct for stage effect that was remarkable.

This, however, does not hold true of his larger and serious works. Whether these works be sacred or profane they are at the best only mediocre. He will be known to future generations not as the composer of "Ivanhoe," or any orchestral work, or any oratorio; but as the admirable musician of "Trial by Jury," "Pinafore," "The Pirates of Penzance," "Patience" and "The Mikado."

Will these operettas live? They said a few years ago that Offenbach's gay works were dead, but even this season there are successful revivals of some of them in European cities. The life of operetta is short; the libretto is often of merely passing interest, and unless the libretto be witty or founded on an eternal verity the music must go under. You would have said that the theme of "Patience" was buried long ago. And yet that operetta was revived at the Savoy the 7th of this month with genuine success, and I can do no better than to quote from Mr. Blackburn's review, for he discloses the secret of Sullivan's talent:

"Meanwhile, apart from Mr. Gilbert's exquisite satire, there is Sir Arthur Sullivan's music to reckon with. It is music indeed to reckon with; for never was his inspiration so fresh, so inspired, so engrossing as it appeared in this setting. From beginning to end the score is a marvel of high spirits, and a wonder of gayety—but gayety, let it be known, combined with a very serious musical intention. Take, for example, the sestet of the first act; the thing is a most admirable piece of sentimentality and sentimentalism combined. You look in vain for the humor when you feel the sentiment; you look in vain for the sentiment when you understand the humor. Once more, take such a melody as Patience's 'Love is a Plaintive Song.' Here the former feeling of humor seems to overbear the pathos of the situation, and yet the situation remains pathetic. It is one of the big triumphs of this wonderful combination that humor and pathos run hand in hand. In 'Patience,' perhaps, that achievement reached its highest level.

"It will be asked on every side whether 'Patience' has any life for the modern young man of the street. To that we naturally can give no definite reply; the young men of today have forgotten Offenbach; it may be urged that the young man of today will easily ignore Sullivan; but the combination which goes to the building up of this work is so extraordinary that we doubt if 'Patience' can be overlooked, in spite of the modernity of more modern works."

Philip Hale.

To stop speculation in the 25 cent tickets to the second balcony only for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall, it has been found necessary to adopt a new plan. Beginning next week, for the public rehearsals on Friday afternoons no tickets will be sold. On Fridays, at noon, the Huntington Avenue entrance only will be opened. Precisely five hundred and five (505) persons will be admitted, giving each person a seat. Four lines in single file will be formed along the side corridors, beginning at the foot of each staircase. At half past one, on the payment of a quarter of a dollar, admission will be given to the second balcony, where the seats will be, as heretofore, "first come, first served." No changing of places in the line will be allowed, and anyone leaving his place will forfeit it. No money will be changed at the door, and a quarter of a dollar will be the only coin accepted.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, NOV. 25, 1900.

Fifth of This Season's Symphony Concerts.

Two substantial symphonies and one merry little suite constituted the program arranged by director Gericke for the fifth of this season's concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Frederic H. Cowen's symphony, No. 6, in E major, entitled "Idyllic," was played for the first time in Boston. Mr Cowen has long held a position of distinction among English composers, and he has written a great variety of works that have received cordial recognition both from the general public and from those who are capable of appreciating the true musical value of a composition. He has written several operettas and one grand opera for which he has received popular approval, besides a great number of songs highly esteemed in the parlor and concert room. He has also been a prolific writer of cantatas and oratorios, chamber music and orchestral works generally.

His sixth symphony must add materially to the fame brought him by earlier compositions. It is a thoroughly interesting work, scholarly, but not oppressively academic, and is entitled to a high place among similar compositions by composers of the present time. Extremely enthusiastic applause rewarded its performance at both the Friday afternoon rehearsal and last night's concert.

The symphony was originally written as program music, and there were descriptive headings for the several movements, but in the score as now published only the general title "Idyllic" remains. The title is appropriate. The first movement is rather the least interesting of the four, although it is notable for some elaborate tonal effects and an unconventional interweaving of themes. The second movement is full of surprises in curious modifications of form, and delightfully odd and dainty themes. The third movement is impressive, and the finale, although rather long and exceedingly elaborate in instrumental embroidery, is very interesting and enjoyable.

The performance of Georges Bizet's deliciously dainty little suite, "Children's Games," was very welcome and the merry themes were interpreted in the right spirit by Mr Gericke and his orchestra, who seemed to share with the audience the pleasure of this musical relaxation.

Johannes Brahms' first symphony has often been played by the Boston orchestra, but probably never with more impressively artistic effect than last evening. It is a noble work and it was given noble interpretation.

Harold Bauer will be the soloist at the next concert and the program will be as follows:

Overture, "De l'Oreste," Op 6, S. Taneiew; concerto for pianoforte, No. 1, Op 15, in D minor, Brahms; "From Bohemia's Groves and Meadows," from the symphonic poem, "My Country," Smetana; symphony No. 1, in C major, Beethoven.

The management of the Boston symphony orchestra makes the following announcement, which will no doubt be read with interest by patrons of these concerts:

"To stop speculation in the 25-cent tickets to the second balcony only for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals of the Boston symphony orchestra in Symphony hall, it has been found necessary to adopt a new plan. Beginning next week, for the public rehearsals on Friday afternoons no tickets will be sold. On Fridays, at noon, the Huntington av entrance only will be opened. Precisely 505 persons will be admitted, giving each person a seat. Four lines in single file will be formed along the side corridors, beginning at the foot of each staircase. At 1.30, on the payment of a quarter of a dollar, admission will be given to the second balcony, where the seats will be, as heretofore, "first come, first served." No changing of places in the line will be allowed, and any one leaving his place will forfeit it. No money will be changed at the door, and a quarter of a dollar will be the only coin accepted."

The soloist at the next Symphony concert will be Mr Harold Bauer, who comes to this country with a great reputation. Before becoming a pianist Mr Bauer was a master of the violin and his admirers explain the peculiar expressionful manner of his cantabile by the fact of his previous mastership of the gut-stringed instrument. He will also appear in a recital on the afternoon of Dec 8 in Steinert hall.

[48]

SUNDAY HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. CVIII., NO. 148.

SUNDAY, NOV. 25, 1900.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Mr. Cowen's "Idyllic" Work Not up to the Standard.

Orchestration Sometimes Effective, but Often Lacking in Clearness—Trifles by Bizet Heard Again with Delight—The Brahms Symphony Also a Success.

Last evening the fifth concert of this season by the Boston Symphony orchestra was given in Symphony Hall, with this programme.

Symphony No. 6, "Idyllic".....F. H. Cowen
(First time in Boston.)
Little suite, Children's Games, op. 22...Bizet
Symphony No. 1, in C-minor, op. 68...Brahms

Mr. Cowen's symphony is not a work that commends itself powerfully to admiration on a first hearing. On the contrary, it is somewhat repelling in its dry dulness and cloudy as to its meaning, idyllic and otherwise. A thorough familiarity with the symphony may possibly bring out beauties of the highest order; but heard only once, it seems to be laboriously manufactured on the most up-to-date Kapellmeister model; to be wearyingly garrulous anent foggy themes, and irritatingly vacuous generally.

The orchestration is at times ingenious and effective, but it is oftener lacking in clearness, and rarely compact, except in the fortissimos, and even there it is wanting in rich solidity. Originally, it appears, the work was written as a piece of programme music, and that in the score the four movements had elaborate descriptive headings; but for some reason or other the composer suppressed these, and confined himself to the general title, "Idyllic." It is a pity that he took this course, for his explanations, though they might not have made his symphony any the more captivating on a first hearing, would, at least, have enabled his audience to learn what he thought he was writing and what impression he intended to convey.

It is well that we should be afforded the opportunity of listening to new works by reputable composers, and Mr. Gericke is to be thanked whenever he produces an ambitious novelty thus fathered. Still, there must be new compositions far more deserving presentation here than this dry Idyllic symphony, the dreary Rontgen Norwegian ballad, the frivolous Goldmark scherzo, and so on.

The charming trifles by Bizet were heard again with delight, especially under the exquisite treatment they received from both Mr. Gericke and the orchestra. They sounded all the brighter coming as they did after Cowen.

The Brahms symphony has always been among the most brilliant successes of the orchestra, and on this occasion the fine treatment it was to receive was vigorously indicated by the splendid spirit in which the first allegro was read and played from beginning to end.

The programme for the next concert is: Overture, "Oreste," Taniew, first time; concert for pianoforte, No. 1, Brahms; "From Bohemia's Groves and Meadows," Smetana; symphony No. 1, Beethoven. The soloist is to be Mr. Harold Bauer.

The management of the Boston Symphony orchestra makes the announcement that no tickets will henceforward be sold for the public rehearsals, but that to stop speculation in the 25-cent tickets for these occasions, the following plan has been adopted: Beginning this week, on Fridays, at noon, the Huntington avenue entrance only will be opened. Precisely 505 persons will be admitted, giving each person a seat. Four lines in single file will be formed along the side corridors, beginning at the foot of each staircase. At 1:30, on the payment of a quarter of a dollar, admission will be given to the second balcony, where the seats will be, as heretofore, "first come, first served." No changing of places in the line will be allowed, and any one leaving his place will forfeit it. No money will be changed at the door, and a quarter of a dollar will be the only coin accepted.

The second concert in the Symphony orchestra series at Sanders Theatre was Thursday evening, and there was a large and fine audience. Miss Edith Thompson, a pupil of Mr. MacDowell, was the soloist, and played the Grieg concerto in A minor with marked success. She was recalled twice, and given a large bunch of roses. Miss Thompson wore shell pink satin, with low cut pleated bodice of the same and much white lace. Some there were President and Mrs. Charles W. Eliot, who made their last appearance before leaving the next day on a five months' trip; Prof. and Mrs. J. K. Paine, Prof. and Mrs. George H. Palmer, Dr. and Mrs. E. H. Bradford, Mr. S. Lothrop Thorndike, Prof. Charles Eliot Norton and Miss Norton, Prof. James Mills Pierce, Mr. and Mrs. Charles S. Dennison, Mrs. G. W. Cummings, Prof. and Mrs. Charles H. Moore, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Lucas, Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Curtiss, Mr. George Riddle and Miss Riddle, Mr. Arthur Gilman, Mr. T. C. Cummings, Prof. and Mrs. Edward Pickering, Miss Alice A. Cummings, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Hubbard, Miss Edwards, Mrs. Bancroft, Morrill Wyman, Jr., Prof. and Mrs. Niles, Mr. and Mrs. Hersey B. Goodwin and Mr. W. C. Munroe. The next concert will be on Thursday, Dec. 6.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.
MONDAY MORNING, NOVEMBER 26, 1900.
(Copyright, 1900, Post Publishing Company.)

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

First Boston Presentation of Cowen's "Idyllic" Symphony--Other Features of the Programme.

The most interesting portion of the Symphony programme last evening was Frederic Hymen Cowen's "Idyllic" symphony in E major, which was heard for the first time in this city. This work was first brought out at one of the Richter concerts in London in 1897, and is consequently quite modern. Originally it was in the form of programme music, but was eliminated of its descriptive headings in the Symphony score. Its four movements are entertaining, although there is nothing in the composition of a remarkable nature. The reading by Mr. Gericke was thoroughly artistic and comprehensive.

Bizet's "Jeu d' Enfants" followed, replete with the musical ideas of this gifted musician. It has not been given here since Emil Paur produced it for the first time Dec. 26, 1896. It is a collection of short pieces, trifling but pretty, and graceful and admirably scored.

The closing number was the Brahms Symphony in C minor, an old orchestral standby since its first presentation in Boston by the Harvard Musical Association in 1878. Mr. Gericke's programme was unique in its selection, the light number coming between the two heavy compositions, and suggesting to those of a gastronomic turn of mind an egg sandwich.

TO STOP SPECULATION.

Symphony Hall Management Will Adopt New Plan Next Week.

To stop speculation in the 25-cent tickets to the second balcony only for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in Symphony Hall, it has been found necessary by Charles A. Ellis, manager, and Frederic R. Comee, the assistant manager, to adopt a new plan.

Beginning next week, for the public rehearsals on Friday afternoons no tickets will be sold. Hereafter, on Friday, at noon, the Huntington avenue entrance only will be opened, and precisely 505 persons will be admitted, giving each person a seat.

Four lines in single file will be formed along the side corridors, beginning at the foot of each staircase. At 1:30 o'clock, on the payment of 25 cents, admission will be given to the second balcony, where the seats will be, as heretofore, "first come, first served."

No changing of places in the line will be allowed, and anyone leaving his or her place will forfeit it. No money will be changed at the door, and a quarter of a dollar piece will be the only coin accepted.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Special Announcement.

To stop speculation in the 25-cent tickets to the second balcony only for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall, it has been found necessary to adopt a new plan.

Beginning next week, for the public rehearsals on Friday afternoons no tickets will be sold. On Fridays, at noon, the Huntington avenue entrance only will be opened. Precisely 505 persons will be admitted, giving each person a seat. Four lines in single file will be formed along the side corridors, beginning at the foot of each staircase. At 1:30, on the payment of a quarter of a dollar, admission will be given to the second balcony, where the seats will be, as heretofore, "first come, first served." No changing of places in the line will be allowed, and anyone leaving his place will forfeit it. No money will be changed at the door, and a quarter of a dollar will be the only coin accepted. Charles A. Ellis, manager; Frederic R. Comee, assistant manager.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER.
Established 1813.
The Official Paper of the State.
The Official Paper of the City.
MONDAY MORNING, NOV. 26, 1900.

The symphony concert of Saturday presented a rather unusual list, consisting of two widely-different symphonies with a set of children's tone-pictures sandwiched between; it was like placing the "Bab Ballads" between Virgil and Browning. One symphony was romantic, the other pedantic,—at least at times, one dealt in tone-coloring, the other in thematic development; but both Cowen's "Idyllic Symphony" and Brahms's first symphony (which Bulow graphically called the "tenth" symphony) agreed in adhering to the established order of things and gave the symphonic form with commendable symmetry; and both adopted the Beethoven device of transferring subject matter from preceding movements into the finale.

Cowen's "Idyllic Symphony" scarcely wins a position beside his beautiful "Scandinavian Symphony", nor does it seem to deserve its title; although some of the dictionary makers consider an "Idyl" to be any narative or descriptive poem of elevated and highly-finished style, most people regard it as an eclogue, a pastoral composition. Now in this particular idyl the shepherds played upon trombones more frequently than upon pastoral pipes, and occasionally they indulged in dissonances that might have been permitted to Vikings but were a little too inflated for simple country people. There was also a degree of development that consorted ill with rustic directness.

The second and fourth movements were the best parts of the symphony; the third the weakest. In this, as in much of his work, Cowen shows inequality, sometimes evolving beautiful thoughts and uttering platitudes in the same movement. The third movement, for example, had some charming counterpoint scored for the woodwind, amid some of the dreariest of commonplaces.

The second movement, the Scherzo, was much more bucolic than the rest of the symphony. It began with a distinctly rustic theme upon the English horn, excellently played and quite characteristic. Of all the instruments of the orchestra, the English horn is most peculiarly suited to portray a Shepherd's pipe; in fact, it was itself the musical instrument of the English Shepherds in pre-Shakespearian days. Beethoven seems not to have understood its tone-color, and in the Finale of the "Pastoral Symphony", after the thunder storm, where a shepherd's pipe is wanted, he uses a clarinette and a French horn; but the Shepherd boy in "Tannhauser", the Swiss herdsman in Schumann's "Manfred", the mountaineer in the "William Tell overture, the love-lorn rustic in Berlioz's "Symphonie Fantastique", and a host of other rural characters that might be cited, speak on the English horn, as Cowen allows his idyllic party to do in this movement.

The Finale was distinctly military, as if the whole coterie, dryads, satyrs, shepherds and all, had taken the queen's shilling and gone to the wars. At the very close, in a most expressive coda, matters became pastoral again. All in all, one can pay tribute to the definite form of Cowen's work, its generally excellent orchestral effects, and its ingenious development, but it is too long for what it has to say, it is too graphic for pure music, and not specific enough for "programme-music", and its title is misleading.

Bizet's set of children's pictures was evidently intended as a foil to the symphonic character of the programme. If anything it erred in the direction of lightness, but we are glad to see every scrap of Bizet's legacy to the world made use of, just as we preserve the weaker and the stronger parts of Keat's work as landmarks in the growth of a genius. And Bizet, like Keats, is an enormous "If" in the domain of art; one wonders what such a luxurious tropical plant (cut down so early) would have grown into. All through the little pictures there was piquancy, picturesqueness, and delicacy. There may have been a little too much of humor to have been in place in such proximity to Brahms, but even this was a failing that "leaned to Virtue's side".

Then came the solid part of the feast. Never did the first Brahms symphony sound better. This may have been largely because of a really virile performance, but we believe that the excellent custom of the intermission (and lobby promenade) brought most of the auditors to the work in an unjaded condition, and isolated the symphony to its advantage. The first movement is one of the hardest of nuts to crack; it is music that is not easily digested; it appeals to the analytical musician rather than to the poetic amateur. Yet it has an authoritative vein that compels attention. The Andante is also evidently great without being able to awaken a glow of ardent enthusiasm. Then matters change; we believe if one could listen to the Allegretto and the final Allegro of this symphony, without being forced to study the ascetic learning of the first two movements, the average auditor would agree with the more studious analyst, that Brahms is beautiful and sometimes grand in his expression.

The Allegretto was played with much taste and a perfect ensemble, the woodwind doing especially good work in the chief theme. But the glory of the performance (as the glory of the symphony itself) lay in the Finale. Not Beethoven himself has achieved a broader and more dignified ending of a lofty work. The making of it into an epitome of preceding portions of the symphony was an idea that could have been borrowed from the Ninth symphony, but the ease and power with which these reminiscences are developed, the mighty outburst of triumph in the Coda, the caprice of the pizzicato passages, and the effective melody of the themes,—these are touches that place the work upon an eternal pedestal. Send the performance was a memorable one; again we had a great climax at the end of the concert, and a recognizant outburst of enthusiasm. Mr. Gericke and his men deserve unbounded praise for the manner in which this work was read and executed; we doubt whether such a performance of the difficult masterpiece would be possible anywhere in America except in Symphony Hall and with our present forces

Louis C. Elson.

MUSICAL NOTES.

The soloist at the Symphony concerts next week, Nov. 30 and Dec. 1, will be Mr. Harold Bauer, who comes to this country with a great reputation. Before becoming a pianoist Mr. Bauer was a master of the violin, and his admirers explain the peculiar expressional manner of his cantabile by the fact of his previous mastership of the gut-stringed instrument. He has toured through every country of Europe, awakening unvarying enthusiasm wherever he appeared, and there is no doubt but what he will find sympathetic audiences here. He will also appear in a recital on the afternoon of Dec. 8 in Steinert Hall.

To stop speculation in the 25-cent tickets to the second balcony only for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals of the Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall, it has been found necessary to adopt a new plan.

Beginning next week, for the public rehearsals on Friday afternoons no tickets will be sold. On Fridays, at noon, the Huntington Ave. entrance only will be opened. Precisely 505 persons will be admitted, giving each person a seat. Four lines in single file will be formed along the side corridors, beginning at the foot of each staircase. At 1:30, on the payment of 25 cents, admission will be given to the second balcony, where the seats will be, as heretofore, "first come first served."

No money will be changed at the door, and a quarter of a dollar will be the only coin accepted.

BOSTON HERALD.
PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. LVIII., NO. 151.
WEDNESDAY, NOV. 28, 1900.

"SHARKS" SHUT OUT.

No 25-Cent Symphony Tickets to Be Sold.

Abuse of the Privilege Has Aroused Management.

New Plan Adopted by Which Patrons Will Benefit.

The abuse of the 25-cent admission privilege to the Friday afternoon Symphony rehearsals has probably met its Waterloo. From now on there will be no tickets issued or sold, and the sidewalk speculator may as well shut up shop.

Through the considerateness of the management, some years ago, there was instituted the laudable custom of issuing for the Friday afternoon performances in the old Music Hall, admission tickets at 25 cents each. These were intended for the use of musical students and music lovers who were unable to pay the higher rates. Soon after its introduction, an abuse of this privilege started up in a small way. Speculators began buying up these admission tickets, and, as they were limited to the standing capacity of the hall, they were able to dispose of them at some profit.

As long as the practice was within reasonable bounds, and did not menace the general public, it was overlooked. But about two years ago it began to be a matter of some difficulty for legitimate patrons to get in ahead of the "sharks." And when the Symphony moved to its new home, this fall, the abuse immediately assumed alarming proportions.

The old hall has accommodated 800 "standees," representing as many 25-cent admissions. When Symphony Hall was opened, the management generously gave over the entire second balcony, which is provided with 505 chairs, to holders of 25-cent, regularly numbered tickets. Appreciating this limit to the supply of seats, the speculator stepped in early, while the harvest was ripe. Four seats only were allowed to each applicant. But when the box office opened Monday mornings, there was always a long line of speculators, or their agents, ahead of legitimate applicants.

Of course, every one bought the full limit of four seats, and it is a fact that many times there were more people turned away, after the 500 seats had been sold, than had secured tickets. For the dissappointed ones the only recourse was to stay away or buy seats of the speculators, who lined up instantly and resold for $1 and $1.50 each the same tickets they had paid a quarter for less than an hour previous.

On one Monday there were no less than seven of these pedlers ranged along the sidewalk by the hall, crying their wares with plenty of gusto. When one of them was approached by an official of the hall, and was warned against selling these tickets, the fellow insolently pulled a pedler's license from his pocket, shook it in the man's face, and said: "Bring along the cop and have me arrested if you can." And unfortunately the speculator was acting within the law.

But perhaps the most regrettable phase of the whole business has been the wholesale traffic carried on by the respectable element in the community. Men and women who are not dependent on ventures of this sort for their livelihood have boldly bought up tickets and gone right out and sold them for four and five times what they paid for them. One woman has been doing a thriving business in this line. A bell-boy from a neighboring apartment house has been a regular trafficker in tickets. But the limit of Shylock dealing was reached last week, when a well dressed, respectable looking matron bought in her four tickets, paying $1 for the four, then turned and went down the line and sold all but one for $1.50 apiece, right within sight of the ticket window, inside the hall.

This was perhaps the last straw. For now the management has arranged to have no tickets whatever issued. The only way now to get a seat is to bring a quarter of a dollar to the Huntington avenue door, which will be opened on Fridays at 12 o'clock noon, when patrons will be admitted singly up to the exact number of seats in the second balcony. When 505 persons have been admitted, the door will be shut.

Once inside, there will be two lines formed in each corridor—one facing the stairs leading to the side seats, the other heading for the stairway to the centre seats, in the balcony. When the lines have been formed, the ushers will pass along the line, collect the 25-cent piece from each person, and hand him a programme. At 1:30 the doors to the balcony will be thrown open, and the selection of seats will proceed on the "first come, first served" basis.

In the adoption of this scheme the management feels that it has found a way to circumvent the speculators. And in soliciting the co-operation of the music-loving public, patrons are reminded of two things—first, exactly 505 persons, and no more, will be admitted when the doors open at noon; and second, only a 25-cent coin will be taken. Nickels, dimes and coppers, even of the exact amount, will be refused.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

MONDAY MORNING, NOVEMBER 25, 1900.
(Copyright, 1900, Post Publishing Company.)

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

First Boston Presentation of Cowen's "Idyllic" Symphony—Other Features of the Programme.

The most interesting portion of the Symphony programme last evening was Frederic Hymen Cowen's "Idyllic" symphony in E major, which was heard for the first time in this city. This work was first brought out at one of the Richter concerts in London in 1897, and is consequently quite modern. Originally it was in the form of programme music, but was eliminated of its descriptive headings in the Symphony score. Its four movements are entertaining, although there is nothing in the composition of a remarkable nature. The reading by Mr. Gericke was thoroughly artistic and comprehensive.

Bizet's "Jeu d' Enfants" followed, replete with the musical ideas of this gifted musician. It has not been given here since Emil Paur produced it for the first time Dec. 26, 1896. It is a collection of short pieces, trifling but pretty, and graceful and admirably scored.

The closing number was the Brahms Symphony in C minor, an old orchestral standby since its first presentation in Boston by the Harvard Musical Association in 1878. Mr. Gericke's programme was unique in its selection, the light number coming between the two heavy compositions, and suggesting to those of a gastronomic turn of mind an egg sandwich.

TO STOP SPECULATION.

Symphony Hall Management Will Adopt New Plan Next Week.

To stop speculation in the 25-cent tickets to the second balcony only for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in Symphony Hall, it has been found necessary by Charles A. Ellis, manager, and Frederic R. Comee, the assistant manager, to adopt a new plan.

Beginning next week, for the public rehearsals on Friday afternoons no tickets will be sold. Hereafter, on Friday, at noon, the Huntington avenue entrance only will be opened, and precisely 505 persons will be admitted, giving each person a seat.

Four lines in single file will be formed along the side corridors, beginning at the foot of each staircase. At 1:30 o'clock, on the payment of 25 cents, admission will be given to the second balcony, where the seats will be, as heretofore, "first come, first served."

No changing of places in the line will be allowed, and anyone leaving his or her place will forfeit it. No money will be changed at the door, and a quarter of a dollar piece will be the only coin accepted.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Special Announcement.

To stop speculation in the 25-cent tickets to the second balcony only for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall, it has been found necessary to adopt a new plan.

Beginning next week, for the public rehearsals on Friday afternoons no tickets will be sold. On Fridays, at noon, the Huntington avenue entrance only will be opened. Precisely 505 persons will be admitted, giving each person a seat. Four lines in single file will be formed along the side corridors, beginning at the foot of each staircase. At 1:30, on the payment of a quarter of a dollar, admission will be given to the second balcony, where the seats will be, as heretofore, "first come, first served." No changing of places in the line will be allowed, and anyone leaving his place will forfeit it. No money will be changed at the door, and a quarter of a dollar will be the only coin accepted. Charles A. Ellis, manager; Frederic R. Comee, assistant manager.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.
The Official Paper of the State.
The Official Paper of the City.

MONDAY MORNING, NOV. 26, 1900.

The symphony concert of Saturday presented a rather unusual list, consisting of two widely-different symphonies with a set of children's tone-pictures sandwiched between; it was like placing the "Bab Ballads" between Virgil and Browning. One symphony was romantic, the other pedantic,—at least at times, one dealt in tone-coloring, the other in thematic development; but both Cowen's "Idyllic Symphony" and Brahms's first symphony (which Bulow graphically called the "tenth" symphony) agreed in adhering to the established order of things and gave the symphonic form with commendable symmetry; and both adopted the Beethoven device of transferring subject matter from preceding movements into the finale.

Cowen's "Idyllic Symphony" scarcely wins a position beside his beautiful "Scandinavian Symphony", nor does it seem to deserve its title; although some of the dictionary makers consider an "Idyl" to be any narrative or descriptive poem of elevated and highly-finished style, most people regard it as an eclogue, a pastoral composition. Now in this particular idyl the shepherds played upon trombones more frequently than upon pastoral pipes, and occasionally they indulged in dissonances that might have been permitted to Vikings but were a little too inflated for simple country people. There was also a degree of development that consorted ill with rustic directness.

The second and fourth movements were the best parts of the symphony; the third the weakest. In this, as in much of his work, Cowen shows inequality, sometimes evolving beautiful thoughts and uttering platitudes in the same movement. The third movement, for example, had some charming counterpoint scored for the woodwind, amid some of the dreariest of commonplaces.

The second movement, the Scherzo, was much more bucolic than the rest of the symphony. It began with a distinctly rustic theme upon the English horn, excellently played and quite characteristic. Of all the instruments of the orchestra, the English horn is most peculiarly suited to portray a Shepherd's pipe; in fact, it was itself the musical instrument of the English Shepherds in pre-Shakespearian days. Beethoven seems not to have understood its tone-color, and in the Finale of the "Pastoral Symphony", after the thunder storm, where a shepherd's pipe is wanted, he uses a clarinette and a French horn; but the Shepherd boy in "Tannhauser", the Swiss herdsman in Schumann's "Manfred", the mountaineer in the "William Tell overture, the love-lorn rustic in Berlioz's "Symphonie Fantastique", and a host of other rural characters that might be cited, speak on the English horn, as Cowen allows his idyllic party to do in this movement.

The Finale was distinctly military, as if the whole coterie, dryads, satyrs, shepherds and all, had taken the queen's shilling and gone to the wars. At the very close, in a most expressive coda, matters became pastoral again. All in all, one can pay tribute to the definite form of Cowen's work, its generally excellent orchestral effects, and its ingenious development, but it is too long for what it has to say, it is too graphic for pure music, and not specific enough for "programme-music", and its title is misleading.

Bizet's set of children's pictures was evidently intended as a foil to the symphonic character of the programme. If anything it erred in the direction of lightness, but we are glad to see every scrap of Bizet's legacy to the world made use of, just as we observe the weaker and the stronger parts of Keat's work as landmarks in the growth of a genius. And Bizet, like Keats, is an enormous "If" in the domain of art; one wonders what such a luxurious tropical plant (cut down so early) would have grown into. All through the little pictures there was piquancy, picturesqueness, and delicacy. There may have been a little too much of humor to have been in place in such proximity to Brahms, but even this was a failing that "leaned to Virtue's side".

Then came the solid part of the feast. Never did the first Brahms symphony sound better. This may have been largely because of a really virile performance, but we believe that the excellent custom of the intermission (and lobby promenade) brought most of the auditors to the work in an unjaded condition, and isolated the symphony to its advantage. The first movement is one of the hardest of nuts to crack; it is music that is not easily digested; it appeals to the analytical musician rather than to the poetic amateur. Yet it has an authoritative vein that compels attention. The Andante is also evidently great without being able to awaken a glow of ardent enthusiasm. Then matters change; we believe if one could listen to the Allegretto and the final Allegro of this symphony, without being forced to study the ascetic learning of the first two movements, the average auditor would agree with the more studious analyst, that Brahms is beautiful and sometimes grand in his expression.

The Allegretto was played with much taste and a perfect ensemble, the woodwind doing especially good work in the chief theme. But the glory of the performance (as the glory of the symphony itself) lay in the Finale. Not Beethoven himself has achieved a broader and more dignified ending of a lofty work. The making of it into an epitome of preceding portions of the symphony was an idea that could have been borrowed from the Ninth symphony, but the ease and power with which these reminiscences are developed, the mighty outburst of triumph in the Coda, the caprice of the pizzicato passages, and the effective melody of the themes,—these are touches that place the work upon an eternal pedestal. And the performance was a memorable one; again we had a great climax at the end of the concert, and a recognizant outburst of enthusiasm. Mr. Gericke and his men deserve unbounded praise for the manner in which this work was read and executed; we doubt whether such a performance of the difficult masterpiece would be possible anywhere in America except in Symphony Hall and with our present forces

Louis C. Elson.

MUSICAL NOTES.

The soloist at the Symphony concerts next week, Nov. 30 and Dec. 1, will be Mr. Harold Bauer, who comes to this country with a great reputation. Before becoming a pianoist Mr. Bauer was a master of the violin, and his admirers explain the peculiar expressional manner of his cantabile by the fact of his previous mastership of the gut-stringed instrument. He has toured through every country of Europe, awakening unvarying enthusiasm wherever he appeared, and there is no doubt but what he will find sympathetic audiences here. He will also appear in a recital on the afternoon of Dec. 8 in Steinert Hall.

To stop speculation in the 25-cent tickets to the second balcony only for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals of the Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall, it has been found necessary to adopt a new plan.

Beginning next week, for the public rehearsals on Friday afternoons no tickets will be sold. On Fridays, at noon, the Huntington Ave. entrance only will be opened. Precisely 505 persons will be admitted, giving each person a seat. Four lines in single file will be formed along the side corridors, beginning at the foot of each staircase. At 1:30, on the payment of 25 cents, admission will be given to the second balcony, where the seats will be "first come first served."

No money will be changed at the door, and a quarter of a dollar will be the only coin accepted.

BOSTON HERALD.
PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. LVIII., NO. 151.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 28, 1900.

"SHARKS" SHUT OUT.

No 25-Cent Symphony Tickets to Be Sold.

Abuse of the Privilege Has Aroused Management.

New Plan Adopted by Which Patrons Will Benefit.

The abuse of the 25-cent admission privilege to the Friday afternoon Symphony rehearsals has probably met its Waterloo. From now on there will be no tickets issued or sold, and the sidewalk speculator may as well shut up shop.

Through the considerateness of the management, some years ago, there was instituted the laudable custom of issuing for the Friday afternoon performances in the old Music Hall, admission tickets at 25 cents each. These were intended for the use of musical students and music lovers who were unable to pay the higher rates. Soon after its introduction, an abuse of this privilege started up in a small way. Speculators began buying up these admission tickets, and, as they were limited to the standing capacity of the hall, they were able to dispose of them at some profit.

As long as the practice was within reasonable bounds, and did not menace the general public, it was overlooked. But about two years ago it began to be a matter of some difficulty for legitimate patrons to get in ahead of the "sharks." And when the Symphony moved to its new home, this fall, the abuse immediately assumed alarming proportions.

The old hall has accommodated 800 "standees," representing as many 25-cent admissions. When Symphony Hall was opened, the management generously gave over the entire second balcony, which is provided with 505 chairs, to holders of 25-cent, regularly numbered tickets. Appreciating this limit to the supply of seats, the speculator stepped in early, while the harvest was ripe. Four seats only were allowed to each applicant. But when the box office opened Monday mornings, there was always a long line of speculators, or their agents, ahead of legitimate applicants.

Of course, every one bought the full limit of four seats, and it is a fact that many times there were more people turned away, after the 500 seats had been sold, than had secured tickets. For the disappointed ones the only recourse was to stay away or buy seats of the speculators, who lined up instantly and resold for $1 and $1.50 each the same tickets they had paid a quarter for less than an hour previous.

On one Monday there were no less than seven of these pedlers ranged along the sidewalk by the hall, crying their wares with plenty of gusto. When one of them was approached by an official of the hall, and was warned against selling these tickets, the fellow insolently pulled a pedler's license from his pocket, shook it in the man's face, and said: "Bring along the cop and have me arrested if you can." And unfortunately the speculator was acting within the law.

But perhaps the most regrettable phase of the whole business has been the wholesale traffic carried on by the respectable element in the community. Men and women who are not dependent on ventures of this sort for their livelihood have boldly bought up tickets and gone right out and sold them for four and five times what they paid for them. One woman has been doing a thriving business in this line. A bellboy from a neighboring apartment house has been a regular trafficker in tickets. But the limit of Shylock dealing was reached last week, when a well dressed, respectable looking matron bought in her four tickets, paying $1 for the four, then turned and went down the line and sold all but one for $1.50 apiece, right within sight of the ticket window, inside the hall.

This was perhaps the last straw. For now the management has arranged to have no tickets whatever issued. The only way now to get a seat is to bring a quarter of a dollar to the Huntington avenue door, which will be opened on Fridays at 12 o'clock noon, when patrons will be admitted singly up to the exact number of seats in the second balcony. When 505 persons have been admitted, the door will be shut.

Once inside, there will be two lines formed in each corridor—one facing the stairs leading to the side seats, the other heading for the stairway to the centre seats, in the balcony. When the lines have been formed, the ushers will pass along the line, collect the 25-cent piece from each person, and hand him a programme. At 1:30 the doors to the balcony will be thrown open, and the selection of seats will proceed on the "first come, first served" basis.

In the adoption of this scheme the management feels that it has found a way to circumvent the speculators. And in soliciting the co-operation of the music-loving public, patrons are reminded of two things—first, exactly 505 persons, and no more, will be admitted when the doors open at noon; and second, only a 25-cent coin will be taken. Nickels, dimes and coppers, even of the exact amount, will be refused.

[49]

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CVIII., NO. 154.

SATURDAY, DEC. 1, 1900.

NEW WAY TO SELL TICKETS.

Speculators Outwitted by the Symphony Management.

Just 505 Seekers After 25-Cent Seats Are Admitted Into Building and the Money Is Then Collected —Exact Change Demanded of the Purchasers.

The new method of admitting the public to the "rush" seats at the Friday afternoon rehearsals of the Symphony orchestra, without tickets, was tried yesterday for the first time. The result to the management was very gratifying, and the public seemed well satisfied. The only persons who felt bad over it were the shylocks who have been making a good thing out of the sale of tickets since the orchestra removed to its new home.

In its present quarters the 25-cent or "rush" seats are located in the second balcony. There are but 505 seats available, while in old Music Hall there were over 800. It was not long before the speculators, appreciating the limit to the supply of seats, stepped in, and began to reap a harvest. Four tickets were allowed to each person, and the speculators arranged it so that they, or their agents, always headed the line, and the moment the supply of seats had been exhausted at the box office, they went down the line selling their tickets for a good premium. Tickets were sold as high as $1.50 apiece.

To put an effectual stop to this, the method of yesterday was invented. At 12 o'clock the doors leading to the balcony were opened, and exactly 505 persons—the seating capacity limit of the second balcony—were admitted. The doors were then closed. The people inside were then formed in four long lines, two on each side of the corridor, beginning at the foot of the staircase. Shortly after 1 o'clock the ushers went down the line and collected the admission fee. When the plan of issuing no tickets was first outlined it was announced that each person must have a 25-cent coin. On this the management insisted. Of the crowd who sought admission yesterday only seven failed to have the 25-cent piece ready, and those seven said they had not been advised of that detail. With the money collected, programmes were distributed, and at 1:30 the doors leading to the seats were opened, and the four lines moved quietly into their places.

Only one drawback to the new method made itself apparent yesterday, and it will be at once remedied. The doors were opened yesterday at 12, but in deference to the almost universal request of patrons the hour will henceforth be 1 o'clock.

The quarter-in-slot Symphony rehearsal arrangement worked to a charm yesterday, I am told, and the 505 chosen ones got there without much extra palpitation of the heart. But let me warn the apopletic and weak-kneed sisterhood that running up stairs is not good for the health. It is a great pity that Symphony Hall is a cut above standees. They should have been considered in the construction, for, after all that is said to the contrary, in a fireproof building the presence of a standing crowd inspires a certain satisfaction, not merely in the box office, but with people who sit in high-priced seats. It gives an air of popularity to the occasion. What is more exciting, for instance, than to see the Boston Theatre on a crush opera night, every seat, every square foot of standing room occupied, and a surplus even out in the lobbies! Such an audience is an inspiration. But Symphony Hall is not to be "dropped into" unadvisedly or by "accident." There is no such thing as "a stand up seat" in its elegant scale of places.

It seems to be due to the Symphony concert management to say that it has handsomely beaten the ticket speculators in their scheme of lifting the price of the cheap seats in the upper gallery. It is a welcome achievement where it will do the most good for those who will best appreciate it.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

SYMPHONY FOR 25 CENTS.

The management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra put into operation yesterday afternoon, for the first time, the method of admitting the public to the 25-cent seats for the second balcony only at the Friday afternoon public rehearsals. The plan worked satisfactorily.

Four long lines were formed, two in each of the side corridors of the hall, beginning at the foot of the staircases. Of the 505 people admitted only seven failed to bring the 25-cent piece, which was the coin insisted upon by the management. At exactly 1:30 admission was given to the second balcony. The four lines moved quietly to their places.

To save an hour of standing in line, the Huntington avenue entrance only will be opened at 1 o'clock hereafter, instead of at 12, as originally announced.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.
The Official Paper of the State.
The Official Paper of the City.

SATURDAY MORNING, DEC. 1, 1900.

SPECULATORS THWARTED.

The new scheme of 25 cent admission to the symphony rehearsals, by which no tickets are sold until the afternoon of the concert, was put into effect yesterday afternoon, and successfully cut off the game which the speculators have practised.

Hitherto the tickets have been placed on sale early Monday morning, and early birds who did not go to bed Sunday night, but stood in line outside Symphony Hall, purchased as many tickets as they chose, four, seven, nine or 13. They obtained them at the rate of 25 cents each, and sold them on the street at $1.25 and upwards.

The officers of the hall go after the men who were doing this thing, but accomplished nothing, for the crafty fellows who were selling on the street at once dived into their pockets for the statute relating to pedlers, and challenged them to "call a cop and have us arrested if you want to."

Nothing could be done but to stop the selling of tickets on Monday morning. That was the rule adopted this week.

It was announced that the doors at the Huntington ave. entrance would be opened at noon, and that the crowd would be admitted to the number of 505, the capacity of the second gallery. Then the doors would be closed.

The crowd began to gather before 11 o'clock. When the doors were open at 12 there was a rush and before 12.30 the doors were closed. Scores and scores were turned away.

When the man with the tickets appeared each one who passed had to turn in a quarter. Nothing else was passable. Two dimes and a nickel would not go. The applicant for admission showed his quarter, was handed in return a programme and was passed in.

The management desire to call special attention to one change in the plan, in deference to the almost universal request of patrons. To save an hour of standing in line, the Huntington ave. entrance only will be opened at 1 hereafter, instead of at 12, as originally announced.

Boston Journal.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1900.

SYMPHONY REHEARSALS.

New Plan for Admitting Public to 25-Cent Seats in Second Balcony Works Well.

The management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra put into operation Friday afternoon for the first time, the new method of admitting the public to the 25-cent seats for the second balcony only, at the Friday afternoon public rehearsals. The plan appeared to work well. Four long lines were formed, two in each of the side corridors of the hall, beginning at the foot of the staircases. Soon after 1 o'clock the admission fee was collected, and it was remarkable that out of the 505 people admitted only seven failed to bring the 25-cent piece which was the coin insisted upon by the management, and these seven had not been advised of this detail. Programs were then distributed, and at exactly 1.30 admission was given to the second balcony. The four lines moved quietly and orderly to their places, without the slightest rushing or confusion.

The management calls attention to one change in the plan. To save an hour of standing in line, the Huntington Avenue entrance only will be opened at 1 o'clock hereafter, instead of at 12, as originally announced.

Boston Daily Globe.

SATURDAY, DEC. 1, 1900.

New Method at Symphony Concerts.

For the first time the management of the Boston symphony orchestra put into operation yesterday afternoon the new method of admitting the public to the 25-cent seats for the Friday afternoon rehearsals. The success of the plan was most satisfactory to the public and the management. In the future the Huntington av entrance will be opened at 1 o'clock, instead of at 12, as previously announced.

BOSTON POST.
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

SUNDAY MORNING, DECEMBER 2, 1900.
(Copyright, 1900, Post Publishing Company.)

SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The sixth Symphony concert, given last evening in Symphony Hall, introduced Mr. Harold Bauer, pianist, who made his first American appearance on this occasion playing Brahms's Concerto No. 1 in D minor.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.
The Official Paper of the State.
The Official Paper of the City.

MONDAY MORNING, DEC. 3, 1900.

The concert of Saturday began in Darkest Russia. The old Hellenic story of the troubles of the Atrides has been told in an overture by Sergei Taneyeff in a manner that is one of the most dramatic outcomes of the modern Muscovite school of composition.

That there is much of sensation in the overture entitled "The Oresteia" is but natural. The Atrides were one of the most uncomfortable of the old families of Greece; murder, incendiarism, robbery and lunacy ran rampant in their household, and the Erinnye police force were constantly called in to avenge some crime. Under these circumstances we can blame the constant use of deep brass and woodwind instruments, the incessant taps on the gong and clashes of the cymbals, to the subject rather than to the composer's morbid tendencies. Yet all the shuddering of the opening theme, all the phrases "big with fate", did not equal the introduction which Tschaikowsky gave to his "Symphonie Pathetique", an equally dark, but more effectively scored representation of gloom. Nevertheless the work was sustainedly graphic and interesting, even if its horrors lost something by constant repetition. And after the Orestean set had shuddered themselves to death, there was some ecstatic music, (probably picturing the Eumenidean force taking a much-needed vacation,) in which glissando passages upon the harp alternated with chimes upon the Glockenspiel.

We confess that we were not greatly in sympathy with the dark topic; the furies, dwelling in the darkness of Tartarus, with black bodies, hissing snakes for hairs, and blood-dripping eyes, have no charms for us, and the composer who tries to represent such frightful matters can scarcely hope to achieve what Aeschylus did when he sent his Athenian audience into hysterics (a few dying from fright) by the entrance of his fifty Eumenides.

The picture was, however, dramatic and intelligible enough to win the hearty applause of the audience, and it was an important work, well worth the hearing. Now followed a work which was of higher calibre and, although composed long ago, it also had the charm of novelty. Brahms's first piano concerto has never been heard in Boston with orchestra, although Mr. Carl Stasny performed the work at a memorial service to the composer, at the New England Conservatory of Music, a few years ago, with Dr. Jeffery at the second piano.

It is a most earnest work, one in which pathos and grandeur are nobly combined. It was a fitting number to follow the "Orestela", for its majestic vein did not clash with the terror of the preceding work, yet formed a good contrast. The opening Allegro possesses a development as subtle as that of Beethoven, and there is such an easy mastery of form apparent that one senses the work of a musical giant at once. The Adagio is somewhat long-drawn out; it has some touches of ineffable beauty, but its proplixity interferes with its full effect. In the Rondo finale Brahms has a rugged heartiness which is not without charm, and all through the work one feels that mere virtuosity has been set aside and symphonic effect aimed at.

Such a work is a true representation of the ideal form of the piano concerto,—first an orchestral, second a piano work. Liszt, Rubinstein, and above all, Chopin, have reversed this order, and it is pleasant to see it re-established. But such a symphonic structure demands a degree of self-abnegation on the part of the solo artist that ought to be especially dwelt upon by the reviewer, since the public can scarcely appreciate the self-obliteration in a grand ensemble.

Mr. Harold Bauer is a composite! Descended from Germans, born in England, residing in Paris, trained as a violinist, becoming finally a pianist, he is a combination of varied qualities and tendencies. He is (judging from this performance) first of all a musician, rather than a mere piano-virtuoso. One ought to acknowledge with gratitude that he does not attempt to astonish his audience, that he does not give his piano upper-cuts, or knock-out blows, but plays the music sincerely and with dignity. Only once was there a suspicion of a blur,—in the Adagio,—and in almost every part of the concerto his chief attention was directed to a good ensemble. At the close of the concerto he was recalled again and again,—a surprising result when the subtlety of the work and the discreet playing of the artist are considered. Possibly the blood-and-thunder school of piano-playing has been pushed to such an extreme that it is causing a revulsion in favor of more musicianly work.

We had been promised a Smetana work on Bohemia for the next number, but this was changed to a Liszt Hungarian Rhapsody, the Bohemian work being promised for the next concert. As Bohemia and Hungary both belong to Austria, the nominal nationality of the work was unchanged, but one could not help thinking how much better fruit Smetana's intense love of country has brought forth than Liszt's musical Paprika. There is more to the Hungarian music than Liszt has given to the world. Liszt was too much of a cosmopolitan to give great intensity even to his own national music; Smetana was above and before all else a Bohemian. In a Liszt rhapsody one gets the bizarrerie of the Hungarian music, but not the underlying sentiment, a curious blending of frenzy and sorrow, a laughter that has tears hidden in it. The present writer once went into Hungary simply because he had heard a strolling band of Tzigany in Vienna, and these peripatetic musicians told him (when they found that he really loved their music) that there were better bands in Buda-Pesth. If ever souls were swept by the tempest of music it is with these gypsies. Hungarians, Bo-[illegible] the gift of harmonized music [illegible] other races; only among these does one find a host of natural composers, and a true musician in almost every gypsy, peasant, or miner that one comes across.

All credit to Mr. Gericke for the absolute abandon with which he gave the Rhapsody; it had all the caprice of a Hungarian performance. But we still wish that Hungary had its Smetana.

At the end of the concert, after so much of sensation and subtlety, calmness and simplicity settled down in the shape of Beethoven's first symphony. It is a weak sister of the other eight, but it always delightful "per se". What a spicy challenge Beethoven threw down in the very first measure of his very first symphony, when he gave a cadence in F. in a composition in C! It was a startling leap into the world's musical arena. The symphony is all Haydn in spirit, however, except in its Minuet, which went far beyond any of the few hundred minuets which Beethoven's teacher had written. But if Beethoven had died after finishing this symphony (at the age that Schubert died) he would have been known only as a talented pupil of the great Haydn.

Louis C. Elson.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, DEC. 2, 1900.

Harold Bauer Soloist at Symphony Concert.

The sixth symphony rehearsal and concert program contained two novelties, an overture to "The Oresteia" of Æschylus, by Sergi Taneyeff, and the Brahms first concerto for piano, the latter work introducing as soloist Mr Harold Bauer, a pianist new to American audiences. Liszt's Hungarian "Rhapsody," No. 2, and Beethoven's first symphony completed the program. Mr Bauer evidently is an artist of high attainments, but his selection was not one in which his merits were shown advantageously. The Brahms concerto is mainly in the nature of an orchestral composition, the piano part not being prominent, excepting at infrequent intervals, in any movement but the last. There is a very long introduction by the orchestra, the piano entering accompanied by drums and brass instruments. In the second movement the themes by the piano are mostly variations on the principal themes given out by the orchestra, and it is not until the closing movement is reached that the pianist becomes a soloist in reality. Brahms indulges in many strenuous passages, and his work is uninteresting, and certainly does not appeal to musicians; hence its comparative omission from the repertory of pianists. Mr Bauer is an impassive player, and his emotions are not in evidence, but his technique is that of a capable artist, and his finger work in the lighter and brilliant passages was as clear and crisp as one could wish to hear. He has no mannerisms, and appears to sink his individuality to the demands of the score and interpret the composer in a conscientious and painstaking manner. Doubtless the artist will be heard under more favorable circumstances in his forthcoming recital, the miscellaneous program giving him greater scope than is found in the Brahms concerto. Mr Bauer's reception was very cordial.

The Taneyeff overture, a concert number based upon excerpts from "The Oresteia," is very heavily scored to harmonize with the grewsome plot of the libretto. The orchestra played splendidly, the heavier contingents being in perfect accord in tempo and harmony and preserving a tonal balance in the shadings which again demonstrated the wonderful team work of Mr Gericke's men. The pianissimo passages, by the united horns, flutes and clarinets were most delicate in performance and the same praise is due the harp, strings and woodwinds in the fifth theme, in which occurs the glissando scales and arpeggi.

The Liszt "Rhapsody," probably from its grotesque nature and familiarity, won the most applause; and it was well deserved, too, for the number was given with a fire and brilliancy that was irresistible. The concert closed with a fine interpretation of the Beethoven symphony. Special praise is due the players of the flute and oboe for their work in the first part and for the orchestra as a body in the playing of the third movement.

Mme Ternina will be the soloist this week, the program being as follows: Overture, "Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage," Mendelssohn; aria from "Catrina Cornaro," Lachner; excerpt from the symphonic poem, "My Country," Smetana; and from "Tristan and Isolde," Wagner; symphony No. 2, Goldmark.

...Pianist Makes His First Appearance in America at a Symphony Concert—New Overture by Taneieff—Dohnanyi's Second Recital in Steinert Hall.

...gram of the sixth Symphony ... was as follows:

...erture to "The Oresteia," of Aeschylus ... Taneieff
(First time in Boston.)
...concerto for piano No. 1 in D minor...Brahms
...garian Rhapsody No. 2.....Liszt
...(Scored by Mueller-Berghaus.)
...Symphony No. 1.....Beethoven

...Authorp in the program-book ... that the opera by Taneieff is ...tioned in the books both as a ...-act opera and as a musical ...logy." As a matter of fact, Taneieff's "Oresteia" is a "musical trilogy in ...ht scenes." Now Oresteia means the ...le of Orestes, the general name for ... trilogy of Aeschylus, viz.: "Agamemnon," "the Choephori," and "...." The librettist took his ... from this trilogy and used it in ... opera. Furthermore, the piece ...yed last night is the overture to ... opera and not merely a concert ...ece, as Mr. Apthorp suggests. An "Oresteia," by Max Schillings was produced in Berlin the 24th of last month. ... Taneieff was born Nov. 13, 1856; ... was a pupil of Nicolai Rubinstein and ...kowsky, and he is now professor ... theory at the Moscow Conservatory. ... "Oresteia" was first performed at ... Petersburg in October, 1895. He ... written several string-quartets. ... one in D minor, the one in B flat ... and the one in C major have been performed with much success in ... German cities and an orchestral ... was played by the Dresden Court ... under Schuch in 1898. He ... well as a pianist, and he has ... and revised posthumous works ... Tschaikowsky.

They say that his opera met only with ... success usually paid an estimable ... However this may have been, ... overture shows decided individuality and at the same time streaks of conventionalism. It is original chiefly ... daring and brilliant orchestration. ... opening is singularly impressive, ... of gloomy bodement, that suits the ...ful tale. Among the striking effects ... orchestration are a use of the violas ... their least characteristic register to ... a shrieking pungency to the theme ... a remarkable effect produced by ... dull muttering of the strings ... the solo violin wails in strange ... melody. The work abounds in curious ... orchestral detail. Taneiff has the reputation of being a master of counterpoint, and in this overture there are many instances of his contrapuntal as well as harmonic skill and daring. The finale is in the nature of an apotheosis. The theme itself is not strikingly original, but the treatment redeems the conventionality of the melodic thought. While the overture is unmistakably Russian in feeling, there are several curious hints at Gluck's antique mood. It is easy to say that this music is not Greek; for nobody knows what Greek music really was. Taneiff is a Russian and he naturally expresses himself as a Russian would, even when he deals with Greek tragedy. In this he showed good sense. A deliberate attempt to be Greek is but emptiness and confusion. The overture was received with hearty applause, and Mr. Gericke is to be thanked for producing it. For it is well made, it is tragic as well as dramatic, and it is interesting from beginning to end.

* * *

Mr. Harold Bauer made his first appearance in this country. He preferred to appear last night as an ensemble player rather than as a virtuoso, for the concerto was the first of Brahms, the one in D minor. The choice was a curious one. Is it true that Mr. Gericke urged, nay, insisted that he should play this concerto? Or was Mr. Bauer anxious to play a concerto by Brahms in this Brahms settlement?

After a man passes his 40th year he begins to look back on his past, and so delights in remembering boyish ... and loves and hates, school and ... days, famous men whom he has ..., dreary days and fearful dangers. ... shall, for instance, never forget Jan. ..., 1881, for on that night in Berlin I ... Johannes Brahms play his own ... minor concerto. He played it with ... enjoyment, and each of his ... was, apparently, or audibly, ... four inches broad. The admired ... played badly—in fact, like a ... That same night his symphony in ... was conducted by him from manuscript. There are delightful things in ... symphony, but, alas, on that occasion the concerto preceded it. And for ... last ten years in this city whenever ... have been bored at a concert, I have ... to myself: "Cheer up, old man; ... once were obliged to hear Johannes ... play his D minor concerto."

... I do not propose to discuss Mr. ... at present as a virtuoso. He ..., as I have said, as a consultative ensemble player, and as ... he displayed admirable qualities. ... the man says in Juvenal's satire, ... should I do in Brahmstown? I ... be." The concerto itself is a ... dismal thing, and yet the pianist ... me. He was one of the ... in a symphonic work. His ... was very musical, finely proportioned, never arrogant, never obsequious. His phrasing was thoughtful, intelligent; in a word, he played like a ... accomplished pianist who is also ... musician. The music ... calls for no display of fervid ... It is alternately contemplative ... Nor can I pass over ... the delightful repose ... twist. He played with unfailing ease, with the authority of a ... of his subject; never was he ... with the desire for self-display; ... did he force tone beyond the ... of his instrument. And his ... was of exquisite freedom and ...

... program book stated that this ... was then played for the first ... in Boston. Mr. Stasny played it ... second piano accompaniment at ... of the New England Con... and I am under the impression ... it was played with like accompaniment before Mr. Stasny appeared. ... has been played in New ... Conried Ansorge and one or ... that the performance is ... a difficult task.

... the program and

PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. CVIII., NO. 155.

SUNDAY, DEC. 2, 1900.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

A New Soloist Appears, and Is Received with Favor.

Mr. Harold Bauer Makes His Debut Under Disadvantages—The Taneyeff Overture Remarkable for Instrumentation — Brahms Concerto Another Novelty.

The programme for the sixth concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra in Symphony Hall last evening was:

Overture to "The Orestia," Op. 6...S. Taneyeff
Concerto for pianoforte, No. 1, in D minor ... Brahms
Hungarian Rhapsody, No. 2.....Berghaus-Liszt
Symphony No. 1.....Beethoven

Mr. Harold Bauer was the soloist.

The Taneyeff overture was new. In his introduction to his operatic version of the trilogy of Aeschylus, the composer has not troubled himself greatly about what might be understood as Greek local color in music, but has remained Russian, pure and simple, throughout. His work, however, is none the less strong, original and impressive, as far as orchestral effect is concerned.

Considered from a musical standpoint, it is not especially valuable, but from that of instrumentation it is quite remarkable in solidity, vigorous individuality and almost oriental splendor of color. It has a powerful dramatic force in conception, and the earlier part of the work is in a deep and genuine tragic vein, but by and by, when the composer changes to a gentler mood, he becomes conventional, and sinks to commonplaces that even richness of orchestral embroidery and a tremendous simulation of nobility of sentiment cannot disguise.

However, the overture, despite its frequent vagueness of meaning, kept the attention steadily interested by the skill, and often the daring newness and steady brilliancy of the orchestration. It was listened to attentively, and seemed to have made a strong impression.

The other novelty of the programme was the Brahms concerto, which, though it has been in existence over 40 years, has not been heard here in its entirety before—that is, with orchestra. It was played by Mr. Carl Stasny at the Brahms memorial concert given at the New England conservatory, but with the orchestral portion arranged for a second piano. In this form it has been performed in Boston several times. The work is far from genial, is stubbornly dry in the first and second movements, and only brightens up in the finale.

Why any player should wish to make a debut in this concerto, which, after all, has its chief interest in the orchestra rather than in the solo part, is not easy to understand. It would handicap any newcomer before an audience to which both himself and the work are strangers. Mr. Bauer sems to have a splendid technique; he bears himself modestly, plays with easy freedom and without any affectation either of style or of manner; and he does not abuse the instrument by attempting to force its tones. A better opportunity must be awaited to acquire a further knowledge regarding the higher artistic deservings of the young artist, who on this occasion was to all intents and purposes confined to ensemble work of no great interest, and forced to play for the most part against heavy orchestration, through which the playing of the soloist did not always penetrate. Mr. Bauer was cordially welcomed and very heartily applauded and recalled.

The Liszt Rhapsody was brilliantly read and played, but its cheapness was emphasized more than usual, owing to the solemnly serious and unflinchingly tuneless selections that came before it.

At the next concert the programme will be: Overture, "Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage," Mendelssohn; aria from "Catarina Cornaro," Lachner; symphonic poem, "My Country," Sonetana; Vorspeil and Lieberstod from "Tristan and Isolde," Wagner; Symphony No. 2, Goldmark. Miss Ternina is to be the soloist.

MONDAY, DECEMBER ...

Symphony Hall: Boston Symphony Orchestra

The programme of the sixth symphony concert, given in Symphony Hall last Saturday evening, was:

Taneyeff: Overture to "The Orestia," of Æschylus, opus 6.
(First time in Boston.)
Brahms: Concerto for Pianoforte, No. 1, in D minor, opus 15.
Liszt: Hungarian Rhapsody, No. 2.
(Scored by Karl Müller-Berghaus.)
Beethoven: Symphony No. 1, in C major, opus 21.
Mr. Harold Bauer was the pianist.

Æschylus is a ticklish fellow to have to do with musically; to put his name in the title of a composition is very like naming a child Siegfried Wagner—it leads you to expect a good deal. Carl Goldmark came pretty well to grief on this rock in his "Prometheus Unbound" overture; a decent composition enough, in its way, but in no wise suggesting anything like Æschylean greatness. Taneyeff may be said to come out of it considerably better in this "Orestia" of his. Not that the music rises quite to the sublimity of the old Greek dramatist, but that it has at least something of temperamental strength in it; it is not so far from the real thing but that a man who, like Swinburne, found "Æschylean grandeur" in a character like Victor Hugo's Guanamara, might, at a pinch, find something of the same stuff in this overture. This is, to be sure, not saying very much. The overture is genuinely dramatic, the initial theme has even something of old-time strength in it; the gradual passing from bloodshed to peace, from hereditary vendetta to the reign of justice, is vividly suggested, not without musical beauty. The final "apotheosis" is perhaps less suggestive of "Black Crook" tinsel than is usual with such things nowadays. Some of the composer's experiments in orchestration do not seem quite to pay their way; those passages, for instance, in which all the strings, double-basses included, play in altissimo "artificial harmonics," sound about like anything else; the novelty of means brings about no commensurate novelty of result. One wonders why the pianoforte-part was omitted (with a pianoforte standing ready on the stage, too); it is probably unimportant, but one would have liked to hear what it sounded like. The performance was admirable.

I have taken the note "First time in Boston" off the Brahms concerto in the above programme, because, after the programme books to the concert were printed, somebody told me that this first concerto by Brahms was played here "twenty years ago" by Marie Krebs at one of the Thomas concerts. I am not sure, however, that the note ought not to stay. Marie Krebs's first appearance in this city was at a Nilsson matinée on Saturday, Nov. 12, 1870; she certainly did not play a Brahms concerto on that occasion! On March 23 and 30 she played at the Harvard Musical Association's symphony concerts; but not a Brahms concerto. Her engagement with Mr. Thomas began (as far as concerns Boston) on Dec. 1, 1871, and ended on April 7, 1872; and she did not play a concerto by Brahms at any of his concerts here that season. She never appeared here again with Mr. Thomas, whose yearly visits to this city ended in 1878; and I much mistake if she has played here at all since April 7, 1872. I certainly cannot remember any performance of Brahms's first concert, in D minor, in Boston before last Friday afternoon. But Miss Krebs did play Rubenstein's concerto in D minor at Mr. Thomas's concert of Dec. 2, 1871; and this may be what my informant was thinking of. Mr. B. J. Lang thought once of playing the Brahms D minor concerto here some years ago; but gave up the idea, playing the second concerto, in B-flat major, instead.

After studying the score and hearing this D minor concerto, one sees clearly enough why pianists have given it the go-by; if ever there were a symphony with pianoforte obbligato, this composition is one. There are difficulties enough and to spare in the pianoforte part, but they are not of the showy order. Some wondrously beautiful pianoforte effects there are, too; but not of the barn-storming kind. The concerto is, upon the whole, what ninety-nine pianists out of a hundred would call an ungrateful one; the man who plays it must resign himself to doing what the Germans call a work of "Pietät." Yet the concerto, from first to last, seems to me to show Brahms in his most characteristic mood, in his very best vein. In the first movement he even attains to a certain quasi-Sardanapalian gorgeousness, which is, however, cleansed of any merely carnal suggestiveness by the prevailing stern, tragic atmosphere of the movement; the real gleam of light in this movement does not come with the shower of trills in the first theme, but rather with the subdued tenderness of the second theme. The Adagio is a dream of beauty; the closing Rondo, a masterpiece in its way. Upon the whole, I should call this decidedly the strongest pianoforte concerto that has been produced here since the same composer's No. 2, in B-flat major. 'T is a glorious work!

Mr. Bauer is a pianist of whom great expectations have been formed. And he fulfils them all! As a master of beautiful pianoforte tone, he can rank with Paderewski and De Pachmann at their best; he has even solved completely that troublesome problem of making Brahms's pianoforte-writing "sound well." Paderewski did this in the Paganini variations; but that was a peculiar case. To rise to the point of making this concerto "sound well" is tantamount to solving the problem for the whole of Brahms. Years ago I predicted that some day a pianist would come along and do this; now Mr. Bauer has come, and done it! Beside his ear-wooing beauty of tone, elastic, buoyant, resonant without a suspicion either of woodiness or of striking-through, clear and brilliant in pianissimo as in fortissimo, he plays with a sure sense of rhythm, with a comprehensive totality of conception, that bespeak the master. Of warmth of temperament he seems to have no lack; though, last Saturday evening he played with a certain noble reserve, well befitting Brahms's musical expression, there was something in him that made me feel that neither the com...

thorough technical control, mind you, but a complete artist. To play like that is to be one in ten thousand.

The Liszt rhapsody was played to perfection; no great pianist could have played the original version better, more exhaustively, than Mr. Gericke, and the orchestra played this orchestral version by Müller-Berghaus. One wished that Eduard Strauss could have heard it!

But, if you come to perfection in reading and playing, the performance of Beethoven's first symphony rose absolutely to the hors concours level. Of course, the last is always the best; but it really seemed to me last Saturday evening as if I had never heard anything quite so perfect from living orchestra. And how fresh the little symphony still is! What a marvel of scoring! Ah, those old boys knew a thing or two; our modern men have more colors in their orchestral palette, but none more beautiful.

The next programme is: Mendelssohn, overture, "Meeresstille und gluckliche Fahrt," opus 27; Lachner, aria from "Katharina Cornaro;" Smetana, symphonic poem, "From Bohemia's Groves and Meadows," from the cyclus "My Country," No. 4; Wagner, prelude and "Liebestod" from "Tristan und Isolde;" Goldmark symphony No. 2, in B-flat major. Madame Ternina will be the singer.

W. F. A.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CVIII., NO. 158.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 5, 1900.

A Boston correspondent writes, somewhat indignantly, regarding what Mr. Gericke said, according to the New York Herald, when interviewed on the death of Sir Arthur Sullivan, that "he did not know him personally, and was not familiar with his works, as he was not a symphony composer." My friend "Hub" says: "Remarks of this sort are what call forth from outside critics, and justly, slurring remarks about Boston. This city has been, as the Irishman remarked, my native place for the last twenty years, and I am proud to be known as a Bostonian, and I take umbrage at such a remark as Mr. Gericke makes use of, not only on account of the man of whom it is reported said, but that such an estimate as this should be deemed by the outside world as reflecting the opinion held by Boston people of Sir Arthur Sullivan. Perhaps Sullivan 'was not a symphony compeser,' but he wrote many things of as high order as some of the symphonies with which Mr. Gericke claims familiarity and it seems to me bordering on impudence, or, at least, showing a lack of musical knowledge, for him to make the remarks quoted." It may be that "Hub" is a little too sensitive about this reported interview, which, if correctly stated, reflects rather upon the narrow information of an individual than upon the musical knowledge of Boston. There are too many cultivated and intellectual musicians here who are broad and eclectic in their tastes for us to worry about Mr. Gericke's ignorance of Sir Arthur Sullivan's high musicianship.

THE MUSIC TRADE REVIEW

NEW YORK, DEC. 1, 1900.

The orchestral concerts all opened to good houses, and the Boston Symphony, under Gericke, seems (if such a thing were possible) to be in better form than ever. It had for soloists Dohnanyi, who played his own piano concerto, and Gertrude May Stein, who acquitted herself admirably in an aria from Raff's Traum Koenig, and Adriane's aria from Rienzi. As novelties the orchestra gave Karl Goldmark's Scherzo in A major and Massenet's Esclarmonde Suite. It is always superfluous to speak of the orchestra, because this magnificent organization is too well known to be second to none in the world.

[51]

...ston Journal.
...NDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1900.

HAROLD BAUER

The Pianist Makes His First Appearance in America at a Symphony Concert—New Overture by Taneieff—Dohnanyi's Second Piano Recital in Steinert Hall.

The programme of the sixth Symphony concert was as follows:

Overture to "The Oresteia" of Aeschylus ..... Taneieff
(First time in Boston.)
Concerto for piano No. 1 in D minor..Brahms
Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2.....Liszt
(Scored by Mueller-Berghaus.)
Symphony No. 1.....Beethoven

Mr. Apthorp in the program-book stated that the opera by Taneieff is mentioned in the books both as a three-act opera and as a "musical trilogy." As a matter of fact, Taneieff's "Oresteia" is a "musical trilogy in eight scenes." Now Oresteia means the tale of Orestes, the general name for the trilogy of Aeschylus, viz.: "Agamemnon," "the Choephori," and "the Furies." The librettist took his stuff from this trilogy and used it in one opera. Furthermore the piece played last night is the overture to this opera and not merely a concert piece, as Mr. Apthorp suggests. An "Oresteia," by Max Schillings was produced in Berlin the 24th of last month.

Serge Taneieff was born Nov. 13, 1856. He was a pupil of N. Rubinstein and Tschaikowsky, and he is now professor of theory at the Moscow Conservatory. His "Oresteia" was first performed at St. Petersburg in October, 1895. He has written several string-quartets. The one in D minor, the one in B flat minor, and the one in C major have been performed with much success in certain German cities and an orchestral suite was played by the Dresden Court Orchestra under Schuch in 1898. He ranks well as a pianist, and he has edited and revised posthumous works by Tschaikowsky.

They say that his opera met only with the success usually paid an estimable professor. However this may have been, the overture shows decided individuality and at the same time streaks of conventionalism. It is original chiefly in daring and brilliant orchestration. The opening is singularly impressive, full of gloomy bodement, that suits the awful tale. Among the striking effects of orchestration are a use of the violas in their least characteristic register to give a shrieking pungency to the theme and a remarkable effect produced by gong, dull muttering of the strings while the solo violin wails in strange melody. The work abounds in curious orchestral detail. Taneiff has the reputation of being a master of counterpoint, and in this overture there are many instances of his contrapuntal as well as harmonic skill and daring. The finale is in the nature of an apotheosis. The theme itself is not strikingly original, but the treatment redeems the conventionality of the melodic thought. While the overture is unmistakably Russian in feeling, there are several curious hints at Gluck's antique mood. It is easy to say that this music is not Greek; for nobody knows what Greek music really was. Taneiff is a Russian and he naturally expresses himself as a Russian would, even when he deals with Greek tragedy. In this he showed sound sense. A deliberate attempt to be Greek is but emptiness and confusion. The overture was received with hearty applause, and Mr. Gericke is to be thanked for producing it. For it is well made, it is tragic as well as dramatic, and it is interesting from beginning to end.

* * *

Mr. Harold Bauer made his first appearance in this country. He preferred to appear last night as an ensemble player rather than as a virtuoso, for his concerto was the first of Brahms, the one in D minor. The choice was a curious one. Is it true that Mr. Gericke urged, nay, insisted that he should play this concerto? Or was Mr. Bauer advised to play a concerto by Brahms in this Brahms settlement?

After a man passes his 40th year he begins to look back on his past, and he delights in remembering boyish deeds and loves and hates, school and college days, famous men whom he has seen, dreary days and fearful dangers. I shall, for instance, never forget Jan. 28, 1884, for on that night in Berlin I heard Johannes Brahms play his own D minor concerto. He played it with evident enjoyment, and each of his fingers was, apparently, or audibly, about four inches broad. The admired composer played badly—in fact like a pig. That same night his symphony in F was conducted by him from manuscript. There are delightful things in this symphony, but, alas, on that occasion the concerto preceded it. And for the last ten years in this city whenever I have been bored at a concert, I have said to myself: "Cheer up, old man; you once were obliged to hear Johannes Brahms play his D minor concerto."

Now I do not propose to discuss Mr. Bauer at present as a virtuoso. He appeared, as I have said, as a contemplative ensemble player, and as such he displayed admirable qualities. As the man says in Juvenal's satire, "What should I do in Brahmstown? I cannot be." The concerto itself is a dull, dismal thing, and yet the pianist interested me. He was one of the orchestra in a symphonic work. His playing was very musical, finely proportioned, never arrogant, never obsequious. His phrasing was thoughtful, intelligent; in a word, he played like a most accomplished pianist who is also an accomplished musician. The music itself calls for no display of fervid emotion. It is alternately contemplative or crabbed. Nor can I pass over without comment the delightful repose of the pianist. He played with unaffected ease, with the authority of a master of his subject; never was he restless with the desire for self-display; never did he force tone beyond the limitations of his instrument. And his technic was of exquisite freedom and polish.

The program book stated that this concerto was then played for the first time in Boston. Mr. Stasny played it with second-piano accompaniment at a concert of the New England Conservatory and I am under the impression that it was played with like accompaniment before Mr. Stasny appeared. It has been played in New York by Conrad Ansorge and one or two others. But the performance is never a grateful task.

* * *

The other pieces on the program are too familiar to demand discussion. It should be said, however, that the violas

SUNDAY HERALD.
PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. CVIII., NO. 155.
SUNDAY, DEC. 2, 1900.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

A New Soloist Appears, and Is Received with Favor.

Mr. Harold Bauer Makes His Debut Under Disadvantages—The Taneyeff Overture Remarkable for Instrumentation — Brahms Concerto Another Novelty.

The programme for the sixth concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra in Symphony Hall last evening was:

Overture to "The Orestia," Op. 6..S. Taneyeff
Concerto for pianoforte, No. 1, in D minor ..... Brahms
Hungarian Rhapsody, No. 2.....Berghaus-Liszt
Symphony No. 1.....Beethoven

Mr. Harold Bauer was the soloist.

The Taneyeff overture was new. In his introduction to his operatic version of the trilogy of Aeschylus, the composer has not troubled himself greatly about what might be understood as Greek local color in music, but has remained Russian, pure and simple, throughout. His work, however, is none the less strong, original and impressive, as far as orchestral effect is concerned.

Considered from a musical standpoint, it is not especially valuable, but from that of instrumentation it is quite remarkable in solidity, vigorous individuality and almost oriental splendor of color. It has a powerful dramatic force in conception, and the earlier part of the work is in a deep and genuine tragic vein, but by and by, when the composer changes to a gentler mood, he becomes conventional, and sinks to commonplaces that even richness of orchestral embroidery and a tremendous simulation of nobility of sentiment cannot disguise.

However, the overture, despite its frequent vagueness of meaning, kept the attention steadily interested by the skill, and often the daring newness and steady brilliancy of the orchestration. It was listened to attentively, and seemed to have made a strong impression.

The other novelty of the programme was the Brahms concerto, which, though it has been in existence over 40 years, has not been heard here in its entirety before—that is, with orchestra. It was played by Mr. Carl Stasny at the Brahms memorial concert given at the New England conservatory, but with the orchestral portion arranged for a second piano. In this form it has been performed in Boston several times. The work is far from genial, is stubbornly dry in the first and second movements, and only brightens up in the finale.

Why any player should wish to make a debut in this concerto, which, after all, has its chief interest in the orchestra rather than in the solo part, is not easy to understand. It would handicap any newcomer before an audience to which both himself and the work are strangers. Mr. Bauer sems to have a splendid technique; he bears himself modestly, plays with easy freedom and without any affectation either of style or of manner; and he does not abuse the instrument by attempting to force its tones. A better opportunity must be awaited to acquire a further knowledge regarding the higher artistic deservings of the young artist, who on this occasion was to all intents and purposes confined to ensemble work of no great interest, and forced to play for the most part against heavy orchestration, through which the playing of the soloist did not always penetrate. Mr. Bauer was cordially welcomed and very heartily applauded and recalled.

The Liszt Rhapsody was brilliantly read and played, but its cheapness was emphasized more than usual, owing to the solemnly serious and unflinchingly tuneless selections that came before it.

At the next concert the programme will be: Overture, "Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage," Mendelssohn; aria from "Catarina Cornaro," Lachner; symphonic poem, "My Country," Sonetana; Vorspeil and Liebestod from "Tristan and Isolde," Wagner; Symphony No. 2, Goldmark. Miss Ternina is to be the soloist.

Boston Transcript
MONDAY, DECEMBER 3, 1900

Symphony Hall: Boston Symphony Orchestra

The programme of the sixth symphony concert, given in Symphony Hall last Saturday evening, was:

Taneyeff: Overture to "The Oresteia," of Æschylus, opus 6.
(First time in Boston.)
Brahms: Concerto for Pianoforte, No. 1, in D minor, opus 15.
Liszt: Hungarian Rhapsody, No. 2.
(Scored by Karl Müller-Berghaus.)
Beethoven: Symphony No. 1, in C major, opus 21.
Mr. Harold Bauer was the pianist.

Æschylus is a ticklish fellow to have to do with musically; to put his name in the title of a composition is very like naming a child Siegfried Wagner—it leads you to expect a good deal. Carl Goldmark came pretty well to grief on this rock in his "Prometheus Unbound" overture; a decent composition enough, in its way, but in no wise suggesting anything like Æschylean greatness. Taneyeff may be said to come out of it considerably better in this "Oresteia" of his. Not that the music rises quite to the sublimity of the old Greek dramatist, but that it has at least something of temperamental strength in it; it is not so far from the real thing but that a man who, like Swinburne, found "Æschylean grandeur" in a character like Victor Hugo's Guanamara, might, at a pinch, find something of the same stuff in this overture. This is, to be sure, not saying very much. The overture is genuinely dramatic, the initial theme has even something of old-time strength in it; the gradual passing from bloodshed to peace, from hereditary vendetta to the reign of justice, is vividly suggested, not without musical beauty. The final "apotheosis" is perhaps less suggestive of "Black Crook" tinsel than is usual with such things nowadays. Some of the composer's experiments in orchestration do not seem quite to pay their way; those passages, for instance, in which all the strings, double-basses included, play in altissimo "artificial harmonics," sound about like anything else; the novelty of means brings about no commensurate novelty of result. One wonders why the pianoforte-part was omitted (with a pianoforte standing ready on the stage, too); it is probably unimportant, but one would have liked to hear what it sounded like. The performance was admirable.

I have taken the note "First time in Boston" off the Brahms concerto in the above programme, because, after the programme books to the concert were printed, somebody told me that this first concerto by Brahms was played here "twenty years ago" by Marie Krebs at one of the Thomas concerts. I am not sure, however, that the note ought not to stay. Marie Krebs's first appearance in this city was at a Nilsson matinée on Saturday, Nov. 12, 1870; she certainly did not play a Brahms concerto on that occasion! On March 23 and 30 she played at the Harvard Musical Association's symphony concerts; but not a Brahms concerto. Her engagement with Mr. Thomas began (as far as concerns Boston) on Dec. 1, 1871, and ended on April 7, 1872; and she did not play a concerto by Brahms at any of his concerts here that season. She never appeared here again with Mr. Thomas, whose yearly visits to this city ended in 1878; and I much mistake if she has played here at all since April 7, 1872. I certainly cannot remember any performance of Brahms's first concert, in D minor, in Boston before last Friday afternoon. But Miss Krebs did play Rubenstein's concerto in D minor at Mr. Thomas's concert of Dec. 2, 1871; and this may be what my informant was thinking of. Mr. B. J. Lang thought once of playing the Brahms D minor concerto here some years ago; but gave up the idea, playing the second concerto, in B-flat major, instead.

After studying the score and hearing this D minor concerto, one sees clearly enough why pianists have given it the go-by; if ever there were a symphony with pianoforte obbligato, this composition is one. There are difficulties enough and to spare in the pianoforte part, but they are not of the showy order. Some wondrously beautiful pianoforte effects there are, too; but not of the barn-storming kind. The concerto is, upon the whole, what ninety-nine pianists out of a hundred would call an ungrateful one; the man who plays it must resign himself to doing what the Germans call a work of "Pietät." Yet the concerto, from first to last, seems to me to show Brahms in his most characteristic mood, in his very best vein. In the first movement he even attains to a certain quasi-Sardanapalian gorgeousness, which is, however, cleansed of any merely carnal suggestiveness by the prevailing stern, tragic atmosphere of the movement; the real gleam of light in this movement does not come with the shower of trills in the first theme, but rather with the subdued tenderness of the second theme. The Adagio is a dream of beauty; the closing Rondo, a masterpiece in its way. Upon the whole, I should call this decidedly the strongest pianoforte concerto that has been produced here since the same composer's No. 2, in B-flat major. 'T is a glorious work!

Mr. Bauer is a pianist of whom great expectations have been formed. And he fulfils them all! As a master of beautiful pianoforte tone, he can rank with Paderewski and De Pachmann at their best; he has even solved completely that troublesome problem of making Brahms's pianoforte-writing "sound well." Paderewski did this in the Paganini variations; but that was a peculiar case. To rise to the point of making this concerto "sound well" is tantamount to solving the problem for the whole of Brahms. Years ago I predicted that some day a pianist would come along and do this; now Mr. Bauer has come, and done it! Beside his ear-wooing beauty of tone, elastic, buoyant, resonant without a suspicion either of woodiness or of striking-through, clear and brilliant in pianissimo as in fortissimo, he plays with a sure sense of rhythm, with a comprehensive totality of conception, that bespeak the master. Of warmth of temperament he seems to have no lack; though, last Saturday evening he played with a certain noble reserve, well befitting Brahms's musical expression, there was something in him that made me feel that neither the profound pathos of Beethoven's C minor nor the boisterous outspokenness of Tschaikowsky's B-flat minor would find him wanting. In a word, he plays in every way like a thorough and highly gifted musician, like a complete artist. To play like that is to be one in ten thousand.

The Liszt rhapsody was played to perfection; no great pianist could have played the original version better, more exhaustively, than Mr. Gericke, and the orchestra played this orchestral version by Müller-Berghaus. One wished that Eduard Strauss could have heard it!

But, if you come to perfection in reading and playing, the performance of Beethoven's first symphony rose absolutely to the hors concours level. Of course, the last is always the best; but it really seemed to me last Saturday evening as if I had never heard anything quite so perfect from living orchestra. And how fresh the little symphony still is! What a marvel of scoring! Ah, those old boys knew a thing or two; our modern men have more colors in their orchestral palette, but none more beautiful.

The next programme is: Mendelssohn, overture, "Meeresstille und glückliche Fahrt," opus 27; Lachner, aria from "Katharina Cornaro;" Smetana, symphonic poem, "From Bohemia's Groves and Meadows," from the cyclus "My Country," No. 4; Wagner, prelude and "Liebestod" from "Tristan und Isolde;" Goldmark symphony No. 2, in E-flat major. Madame Ternina will be the singer. W. F. A.

BOSTON HERALD.
PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CVIII., NO. 158.
WEDNESDAY, DEC. 5, 1900.

A Boston correspondent writes, somewhat indignantly, regarding what Mr. Gericke said, according to the New York Herald, when interviewed on the death of Sir Arthur Sullivan, that "he did not know him personally, and was not familiar with his works, as he was not a symphony composer." My friend "Hub" says: "Remarks of this sort are what call forth from outside critics, and justly, slurring remarks about Boston. This city has been, as the Irishman remarked, my native place for the last twenty years, and I am proud to be known as a Bostonian, and I take umbrage at such a remark as Mr. Gericke makes use of, not only on account of the man of whom it is reported said, but that such an estimate as this should be deemed by the outside world as reflecting the opinion held by Boston people of Sir Arthur Sullivan. Perhaps Sullivan 'was not a symphony compcser,' but he wrote many things of as high order as some of the symphonies with which Mr. Gericke claims familiarity and it seems to me bordering on impudence, or, at least, showing a lack of musical knowledge, for him to make the remarks quoted." It may be that "Hub" is a little too sensitive about this reported interview, which, if correctly stated, reflects rather upon the narrow information of an individual than upon the musical knowledge of Boston. There are too many cultivated and intellectual musicians here who are broad and eclectic in their tastes for us to worry about Mr. Gericke's ignorance of Sir Arthur Sullivan's high musicianship.

THE MUSIC TRADE REVIEW
NEW YORK, DEC. 1, 1900.

The orchestral concerts all opened to good houses, and the Boston Symphony, under Gericke, seems (if such a thing were possible) to be in better form than ever. It had for soloists Dohnanyi, who played his own piano concerto, and Gertrude May Stein, who acquitted herself admirably in an aria from Raff's Traum Koenig, and Adriane's aria from Rienzi. As novelties the orchestra gave Karl Goldmark's Scherzo in A major and Massenet's Esclarmonde Suite. It is always superfluous to speak of the orchestra, because this magnificent organization is too well known to be second to none in the world.

[51]

SUNDAY HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. LVIII. NO. 162.

SUNDAY, DEC. 9, 1900.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Mendelssohn's "Sea Calm" Is Performed Perfectly.

Sagacious Write-up of the Overture by Mr. Apthorp Would Make It a Marvellous Composition—Symphonic Poem by Smetana Is the Novelty of the Evening.

For the seventh concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra in Symphony Hall, last evening, the programme was:

Overture, "Sea Calm and Prosperous Voyage,".....Mendelssohn
Aria, "Dulde Schweige," from "Catharina Cornaro".....F. Lachner
Symphonic poem, from "Bohemia's Groves and Meadows," from "My Country." No. 4.....Smetana
Prelude and "Love Death," from "Tristan and Isolde".....Wagner
Symphony No. 2, in E-flat, op. 35....Goldmark

The soloist was Miss Ternina.

The overture is the least interesting of Mendelssohn's achievements in that class of composition, and since it was last heard here, it has aged considerably. Still it may have proved curiously attractive to those who are not familiar with it, and who followed the description given of the work in the programme book.

It is to be hoped that some of these will be able to give a satisfactory answer to Mr. Apthorp's query regarding the flute calls in the introduction, "Are they the cry of some solitary sea bird, or merely an eloquent expression of dead silence and solitude?" Perhaps it would be wise to decide in the direction of the sea bird, as flute calls to express dead silence would not be half as realistic as would be dead silence itself. The detection of the theme "suggestive of the gurgling and sparkling of the water along the ship's side" is a neat puzzle set by the programmist, especially as the gurgling must be audible and the sparkling purely a matter of vision. Then, too, watching and listening for the dropping anchor and waiting to recognize in the last three bars the ship coming up to the wharf were probably pleasing occupations, notably in view of the novelty of a vessel sliding into dock after she has dropped her anchor.

But, however this may be, the overture was perfectly read by Mr. Gericke and delightfully performed by the orchestra, even if they did not make quite clear Mr. Apthorp's claim that "there is not a note in the work that is not redolent of the ocean."

Of course, to pick out one particular note, and to request to be shown wherein its redolence of the ocean is discoverable, would be easy; but it is still easier to take the claimant's word for the veracity as well as the wise profundity, of his statement.

An exceedingly brilliant and interest performance was given of the Smetana poem, which was the novelty of the programme. One or two of the six movements of which the cyclus consists have been given here before. This movement is especially notable for its grace, its easy flow and its variety and charm of tone color, and the buoyancy and freshness of spirit that pervades it. The Goldmark symphony has not been heard here since it was produced 12 years ago by Mr. Gericke. Nor is there anything in it, except the third movement, that justified a revival of the work.

Miss Ternina sang in the Wagner selection with splendid dramatic power, largeness of vocal style and nobility of expression. The effort was the perfection of musical declamation, nor was it lacking in any high artistic essential. It stirred the audience immensely, and she was applauded and recalled with tremendous acclaim. The Lachner recitative and aria were scarcely worth taking down from the shelf and brushing the dust from them. The aria afforded the artist an opportunity to give a notable exemplification of the art of pure sostenuto singing, but even the admirable treatment it received failed to disguise its utter kappelmeister flavor. This performance also won for her a great outburst of enthusiasm.

The programme for the next concert is: Water music, Handel; "Festival of Pan," Converse; symphony No. 5, Tschaikowsky. The soloist is yet to be announced.

The third concert in the series by the Symphony orchestra at Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, was Thursday night, before a brilliant audience. Mr. Timothee Adamowski was the soloist. He played Dvorak's concerto for violin in A minor, and was recalled three times at the conclusion. Among those there were the Rev. and Mrs. Samuel A. Eliot, Mrs. A. L. Coolidge and Miss Coolidge, Prof. John K. Paine and family, Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Curtiss, Mr. George Riddle and Miss Riddle, Prof. and Mrs. Ames, Mr. and Mrs. William M. Richardson, Mr. S. Lothrop Thorndike and party, Mr. William P. Blake, Mrs. A. A. Carey and the Misses Carey, Miss Coues, Prof. James Mills Pierce, Mrs. E. C. Pickering, Prof. Moore, Mrs. Edgar Pierce, Mrs. J. W. Chamberlin, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Dorr, Miss Brown, Prof. Coolidge and a large delegation of Radcliffe College girls.

SYMPHONY HALL STATUARY.

Large Figure of Euripides Is to Be Placed in One of the Niches.

A statue of Euripides is to occupy the niche in the upper right hand balcony of Symphony Hall, directly opposite the recently acquired statue of Apollo. Euripides was cast from the marble statue in the vatican, by special permission of the pope. The reproduction is a faithful copy of the original and is, of course, of high merit as an object of art.

The statue is a very large one; representing the Greek in a standing pose, and it is probable that the 14 niches which yet remain to be filled will be occupied by standing figures.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.
The Official Paper of the State.

The Official Paper of the City.

MONDAY MORNING, DEC. 10, 1900.

The programme of last Saturday's concert presented decided contrasts, ranging as it did from the suave measures of Mendelssohn to the intense phrases of Wagner, and including the academic calm of Lachner, with the rhapsodic freedom of Smetana and the rich coloring of Goldmark.

The opening number, the "Sea-Calm and Prosperous Voyage" overture, seemed hardly impressive as a picture of old ocean, though it still charmed by its frankness and the direct sincerity of its harmonies. Yet despite the tameness of the picture an audience familiar with ocean liners and "Northeasters," there are still many points in this bit of programme-music that retain all their effectiveness. In depicting the dead calm, the long, sustained harmonies on the strings (is the subordination of the wind instruments premeditated?) still give a wonderful picture of the lazy monotony of a motionless sea; the flute-calls that end this scene of quietude may well be taken for the boatswain's whistle, while the lively measures of the main part of the overture and the final celebration of the coda give a portrayal of the happy voyage and safe arrival that is graphic enough in its way. But in spite of the fortunate absence of shipwreck and mal-de-mer, there is nothing in this work that can at all compare with the delicate, wavy grace of the "Hebrides" overture, that daintiest of Mendelssohn's many water-pictures.

Smetana's Symphonic Poem, "From Bohemia's Groves and Meadows," was heard for the first time in Boston. One of the set of six national works that have established the composer's fame, it displayed the power and simplicity of expression that we have learned to look for in his writings. But, on the whole, it seemed too lacking in coherency, and appeared not to have any very definite central idea or logical climax. The opening phrases for full orchestra, with their sudden alternations of major and minor, give the impression that the Bohemian landscape must be rather chaotic. The unexpected entrance of a frugal exposition seems to indicate that some learned Bohemian contrapuntist has retired to the fields to compose in peace, just as Beethoven used to write at times in a rustic seat in a tree at Schoenbrunn.

Another change in the music ushers in a noble and dignified theme on the brasses,—doubtless the Hymn of Nature referred to in the dedication of the score, but suggestive also of the simple and forceful beauty that underlies the Teutonic Folk-songs. With this the music loses its incoherence, and is wrought into a partial climax filled with the expressive power that we have learned to expect from Smetana.

The follows a revel of the peasants in Bohemia. But their mirth is far wilder than the rustic gayety we generally find in the world of music. Instead of enjoying themselves in the gentle rusticity of oboes and English horns, as symphonic peasants are expected to do, they indulge in wild outbreaks of the entire orchestra. More and more fiery does their mirth become, as in a Hungarian "Friska," until finally the gentle brass theme of earlier moments is decapitated by a fierce outburst, and the revels are ended.

Yet in spite of its many unexpected changes of character, the work as a whole has much to commend. If it does not give as definite a picture of forest life as the rich texture of Wagner's "Waldesweben", it still has many moments of legitimate orchestral beauty. The reviewer may be pardoned, however, for indulging in a shade of disappointment when this number is compared with Smetana's earlier works in the same set; for with all its beauties it is not so convincing as the measured rhythm of "Vltava" or the stately grandeur of "Vyschrad." It is needless to add that the orchestra, under Mr. Gericke's able hand, played the number with all the ease of technique and mastery of expression that is so largely due to their director's earnest and thorough work during his earlier sojourn in Boston.

Ternina was the soloist of the evening, and won her usual meed of long-continued applause. The Lachner aria, from "Catharina Cornaro," was conventional in the extreme, and was of little other service than to allow the soloist a chance to show her surety of intonation in recitative and her fluency in cantabile. That same perfection of intonation may again be emphasized as a model for those ultra-declamatory Wagnerian singers who at times appear to think the true key a matter of unimportance, and who avoid the pitch as though afraid of being defiled by its touch.

But it was in Isolde's "Liebestod" that the artist arose to her full height. Her dramatic powers and triumphs are too well known to need reiteration, or detailed description. A slight lack of force in the lower register, at times, was the only criticism that could be made, and this was lost sight of in the fervor of the final climax. There are many who find "Tristan" one of the dullest of Wagner's works; and (shall we confess it?) the prelude, with its too arbitrary leit-motiven, seemed just a trifle lacking in definite meaning. But the intense harmonies that form the background to Isolde's passionate rhapsody were given with their full power and significance, and singer and orchestra shared in a climax that won its deserved meed of applause.

The concert came to an end with Goldmark's second Symphony. More dignified than the "Rustic Wedding" Symphony, which is really a suite, this work displayed far less of attractive coloring than is usual in Goldmark's writings. The opening theme of the first movement augured well, but the promise was not fulfilled. The andante seemed exaggerated and bombastic, and even the dainty allegro, with its beautiful and well-played trumpet melody, did not succeed in investing this unequal work with more than a passing interest.

Arthur Elson.

Boston Sunday Globe.
SUNDAY, DEC. 9, 1900.

Miss Ternina Sings With the Symphony Orchestra.

Miss Milka Ternina was the soloist at the seventh of this season's concerts by the Boston symphony orchestra. The program was as follows:

Overture, Sea Calm and Prosperous Voyage, op 27.....Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
Recitative, Zwei Jahre sind dahin, and Aria, Dulde, schweige, from Catharina Cornaro .....Franz Lachner
Symphonic poem, from Bohemia's Groves and Meadows, from My Country.....Bedrich Smetana
Prelude and Love-Death, from Tristan and Isolde .....Richard Wagner
Symphony No 2, in E Flat major, op 35....Karl Goldmark

Conductor Gericke has not offered a more varied program or one of greater attractiveness this season, and the audiences at both the Friday afternoon rehearsal and last night's concert expressed appreciation in the most cordial manner. The instrumental numbers were exceedingly interesting, and of course the appearance of Miss Ternina was very welcome. This brilliant artist has not been heard in Boston very many times, and several of her promised appearances have been prevented by illness, but she has readily gained recognition as one of the foremost singers on the German grand opera stage. She is not only a splendid singer, but she is also one of the most convincing actresses who have ever interpreted Wagner's

She was in excellent voice yesterday, and sang both her selections with fine spirit and impressive fervor. Her voice is of glorious quality, rich and resonant throughout its extended range, and although her intonation last evening was not always perfect her singing was generally so wholly gratifying that there was good reason for the demonstrative applause bestowed on her by the delighted audience. Her first selection was the recitative and aria from the opera "Catherine Cornaro," a work of excellent merit, but comparatively unknown here. She sang this music of tragic import with admirable effect and thorough sincerity. In the familiar section from "Tristan and Isolde" she was heard with much pleasure. Aside from momentary departure from accuracy of intonation and an occasional unpleasant suggestion of overforcing the voice in hopeless rivalry with the thunderous sounds from the orchestra, her singing was magnificent, and provided as great an artistic treat as could well come from this class of music.

The symphonic poem, "From Bohemia's Groves and Meadows," which was played here for the first time, is the fourth of the cyclus of six symphonic poems grouped by Smetana under the title of "My Country." The music is distinctly descriptive, and is interesting for many fine orchestral effects and odd bits of contrasted tonal color, all strikingly suggestive of the gypsylike character of the people and the country of Bohemia.

The Mendelssohn-Bartholdy overture, "Sea Calm and Prosperous Voyage," is a series of as graphic and beautiful tone pictures as were ever written, and they were interpreted by Mr Gericke with fine effect, unsurpassed by any of the many previous performances of the work by his orchestra. Goldmark's second symphony concluded the performance, and this noble work was given worthy interpretation, than which greater praise cannot be written.

There will be no symphony concert this week. The program for the concert next week will include "Wasser-Musik," by Handel; the first performance of "Festival of Pan," by Converse, and symphony No. 5, by Tschaikowski.

Adele aus der Ohe is to come to America in February, and has been engaged as soloist for the February tour of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper OF NEW ENGLAND.

SUNDAY MORNING, DECEMBER 9, 1900.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The seventh Symphony concert of this season opened with the Mendelssohn overture "Sea Calm and Prosperous Voyage." The slow introduction (Adagio in D major 4-4 time) paints in tones a dead calm at sea. The main portion of the overture tells the story, or paints the picture, of the ship's prosperous voyage, and it is impossible not to realize the lazy, tranquil motion of the ship; one really feels it all. It is a most vivid and realistic tone painting. The motion of the water, the sparkle of the sunlight, are all depicted, and the brisk breeze carrying the ship safely into port. All through the overture to the final tone painting of the ship gliding into the dock, each episode of a prosperous and happy voyage is clearly shown, although it is said that the composer had scored this overture before he had even seen the sea.

The overture, the recitative and aria from "Catharina Cornaro," by Lechner, and the "Love-Death" song of Isolde from Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde," in the last two of which Ternina sang, were the favorites of the evening, if one may judge from the spirit in which they were received.

Miss Ternina was in excellent voice, and sang particularly well the recitative and aria. The repeated applause of both audience and members of the orchestra recalled the singer several times.

The other numbers were the Symphonic Poem, from "Bohemia's Groves and Meadows," from "My Country," by Bedrich Smetana, and the Symphony No. 2 in E flat major, op. 35, by Karl Goldmark. The "Symphonic Poem" is one of six in Smetana's "My Country," which is one of the composer's most important orchestral works.

The final selection was the Symphony of Goldmark, which was given for the first time in this country in the Boston Music Hall by the Symphony Orchestra, under Mr. Gericke, on April 7, 1888.

Boston Journal.
SUNDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1900.

The program of the seventh Symphony concert was as follows:

Overture "Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage" .....Mendelssohn
Aria "Dulde, Schweige," from "Catharina Cornaro" .....Lachner
Miss Ternina.
Symphonic Poem "From Bohemia's Groves and Meadows" .....Smetana
Prelude and "Liebestod" from "Tristan," .....Wagner
Isolde, Miss Ternina.
Symphony in E flat, No. 2.....Goldmark

The overture was well played, but why should this respectable piece by the genteel Mendelssohn be brought forward at this late day? Mr. Apthorp said in the program-book: "The ship's slowly and majestically sliding into the dock and coming up to the wharf, in the last three measures, may be called a gem of musical imagery in itself." I wish I had Mr. Apthorps faculty for finding such treasures in three measures. Mendelssohn wrote one great overture "Fingal's Cave," for this as a work of beauty and imagination is above the overture to "Midsummer Night's Dream"—but the one play last night reminds me of a trip to Nantasket on a Sunday boat; there are mothers with children and baskets; young men with girls and long cigars; and there is a boisterous scene at the landing.

Smetana's Symphonic-poem is not equal in power or interest to the three that precede; and yet it is a characteristic work. It was composed in 1875, after he began to suffer with the disease that finally ended in complete deafness, hallucinations, madness, death. He himself told Zeleny that the roaring introduction portrays the impression made on the wanderer who sees for the first time a Bohemian landscape; that the first passage in G major is as the walk of a naive village-maiden; that the three-four section describes the beauty of nature in the summer at high noon, with the sun at the zenith, with shadows and glimmerings of light in the forest, with twittering of birds. "I worked out the contrapuntal task," he said, "with ease, for I have practised such tasks diligently." The polka-finale is a harvest or village festival. This music is in certain ways naive; but the simplicity is that of a strong nature who can afford to be simple; it is never affectation. The more I hear of Smetana's music, the more I wonder at those who name Dvorák as the greatest of Bohemian composers.

Franz Lachner is an interesting figure today chiefly on account of his early association with Schubert and his determined opposition to what was known once as "music of the future." He was a solid musician of the good old days that, fortunately for art are no more. I wonder why Ternina chose the aria from "Catharina Cornaro," who would be the first to be bored by the tune if she were now alive. Neither Ternina's voice nor art nor majestic presence can rescue recitative or aria from the dust-bin of Time.

She declaimed the "Love-Deaths" from "Tristan and Isolde" superbly. She did not find it necessary to shriek or yell or turn the woman of noble birth into a red-faced virago.

Mr. Gericke's reading of the Prelude reminded me of an essay on Platonic Love.

The Symphony in E flat, which was first played at Dresden, Dec. 2, 1887, is not one of Goldmark's best works. Goldmark is happiest when he is seated on his camel.

Philip Hale.

Boston Transcript
SATURDAY, DECEMBER 8, 1900

Not in late years has the advent of a 'cellist caused such comment and talk, as does the advent of Hugo Becker, the distinguished German virtuoso, who is to be heard for the first time in this country with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston, on the 11th of January, 1901. In Europe he is known as the "Supreme master of his instrument." He is a true and rare artist. "Such playing as Becker's is only too seldom heard," says the London Morning Telegraph. "Let no one think he knows all that can be done with the 'cello as a legitimate and artistic instrument till he has heard Hugo Becker. He is the Rubinstein of his instrument." Becker is to be heard with the Thomas Orchestra, the Cincinnati Symphony Society, Pittsburg Orchestra, Cleveland Symphony, in addition to five concerts with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He will also be heard in a series of trio recitals, the other artists being Dohnanyi, the pianist, and Fritz Kreisler, the Austrian violinist.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CVIII., NO. 164.

TUESDAY, DEC. 11, 1900.

Fortunately, Symphony Hall didn't have to hang up its stocking for the statue of Euripides. The present gets there before Christmas. But what is Euripides doing in that galere consecrated to music? It seems to an ordinary observer, dear old Beethoven should be trotted back, and the greatest of classics given his place in the Public Library. Analogy between the poet of "soft tears" and the god of poetry and music may be patent to all, but one wonders who is to be the next to sit up aloft and watch over our tastes and intellects.

[52]

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, DECEMBER 10, 1900.

Symphony Hall: Boston Symphony Orchestra

The programme of the seventh symphony concert, given in Symphony Hall on Saturday evening, was:

Mendelssohn: Overture, "Meerestille und glückliche Fahrt," opus 27.
Franz Lachner: Recitative, "Zwei Jahre sind dahin," and Aria, "Dulde, schweige," from "Catharina Cornaro."
Smetana: Symphonic Poem, "From Bohemia's Groves and Meadows," from the Cyclus, "My Country," No. 4.
(First time in Boston.)
Wagner: Prelude and "Isoldens Liebestod," from "Tristan und Isolde."
Goldmark: Symphony No. 2, in E-flat major, opus 35.
Miss Termina was the singer.

"Meerestille und glückliche Faht55 may be said to hold something of a middle rank among Mendelssohn's concert overtures; if it fall behind the "Fingalshöhle" and "A Midsummer Night's Dream," it stands higher than the "Melusine" and the "Ruy Blas." Its vivid, picturesqueness never flags, not even in the rather bourgeois coda; it is a perfect tone-poem in its way. It is not a work to withstand the attrition of frequent performance; but this it does not get nowadays. Once in a not too short while it can be listened to with pleasure yet. Somehow it did not seem to me last Saturday evening that the performance was particularly good; I have heard the overture go with more snap before.

Misfortunes never come singly; on Monday evening came the Verhey Quintet; on Saturday comes Lachner's aria! O Miss Termina! how could you? Now that a decent period of mourning for the old Munich Kapellmeister has expired—he died last Jan. 20—why bring his memory back to us in this shape?

The evil that men do lives after them;
The good is oft interred with their bones!

Lachner was thirty-six when he wrote this hapless tune; he seems to have made the orchestra a repository for things to which he had got used in conducting Italian operas, and to have drawn his melodic inspiration from the male four-part songs dear to the Liedertafel of his native land, a sort of melody which always seems preternaturally dry when not bathed in beer. The thing is not without its humorous side, though! The orchestra begins with a figure, and Catharina forthwith sings: "Two years have now gone by;" two years? why, unhappy Catharina, it is now a hundred and fifty-nine years since Handel wrote that figure, and not anent a poor old man dying by slow poison, but to the words "Lift up your heads!"

After the rehearsal on Friday afternoon, everybody—that is, the everybody of tout Boston— was talking about the Smetana symphonic poem; I heard people fairly rave over it. One musician, who had not heard it, but had carefully read the score, was in a thrill of joyous expectation of the delights to come on Saturday evening. I had not read the score carefully, had merely glanced through it; but all these glowing reports set me agog. When I heard the composition, I must say that I was not tremendously impressed; I was even disappointed. Smetana is always genuine, there is not an ounce of affectation about him; he is generally genial, ingratiating, heart-warming. But the sonorous breeze he wafts from Bohemia's groves and meadows somehow leaves me cold. I could not but feel that here was music, written by a Bohemian for Bohemians—and for none else; there is a tremendous amount of "Vaterland" in it, but not my Vaterland. Not being under the influence of the poetizing force of association, I found myself a victim to the force of depoetizing association; a good deal in the music reminded me of things I had heard played under the sheltering roofs of pseudo-Oriental kiosques, to the accompaniment of drinkables and smokables. It seemed just a thought too naif, an uncomfortable reminder of my own sophistication. The performance seemed excellent, full of life and go.

The "Tristan" prelude was wonderfully played; here were clearness and accuracy together with a burning passionateness! And it is a dog's age since I have heard the "Liebestod" so given as it was by Miss Ternina and the orchestra. I even wonder whether I ever heard it given so entirely well. These wondrous pages have, as a rule, suffered sorely from being played again and again by orchestra alone—without the singer. Take away the singer, and you not only take away what in Wagner's mind was the principal part, but also the due dynamic balance wheel of the whole thing. With no singer to care for, conductor and orchestra are free to rage to the top of their bent, to produce what most tremendous and overpowering effect with the music they can. And they do not, as a rule, let the opportunity slip. Most of our public had, accordingly, got used to hearing the "Liebestod" worked up to a climax of sheer physical tremendousness that almost seeks its fellow in music. Now this may be all very well in its way; but I may be pardoned for saying that it is not Wagner's "Liebestod." Some of my readers may be surprised to hear that, in the original full score of this great finale to "Tristan und Isolde"—from the first words, "Mild und leise," to the end—there is only one single fortissimo-mark, and that comes in the harp part! None of the other instruments is anywhere marked more than forte; and this at only two points in the movement. The enormous exaggeration of dynamic force to which we have all become accustomed in purely orchestral performances of the "Liebestod" has, for the most part, been too little toned down when we have had the voice part sung; even when the orchestra has not overwhelmed the singer completely, even in those few performances where the singer could really be heard, the orchestra has still played with a force that threw the voice part into the second place, so that it seemed an unwelcome and musically incomprehensible intrusion. I have more than once heard people say that the voice part added, after all, nothing to the music, but really de- [illegible] this at once myself. It is quite true that, as this movement is too commonly given, the voice part says nothing. But Wagner knew better than anyone what he was about! It is only by Isolde's part, the voice part, being thrown prominently and unmistakably into the foreground that it can say anything; it must distinctly be the leading, dominant part, and the orchestra, merely the expressive, illustrative background of the picture. And this indispensable condition was fulfilled on Saturday evening, for the first time in my recollection. The result was that, instead of a submerging mœlstrom of physical tone, we got all the dreaminess, all the rapt ecstasy of the thing! It was a "Liebestod," a death through Love—not by strangulation. Only at the very last did we get that suggestion of submersion, of sinking beneath the waves of passion—which came, as it should, at the diminuendo and piu piano of "Ertrinken, versinken, unbewusst!" not at the forte of "In des Weltathems wehendem All!" And how royally, soulfully, poetically Miss Termina took the lead! That was great singing of great music!

What could have possessed Mr. Gericke to put Goldmark's symphony after the "Liebestod?" It was an error in judgment, and not an explicable one, at that.

When the symphony was first played here, in 1888, it made no very good impression; now it sounds still worse. I doubt if the work was worth much, when new; today it is considerably shopworn, faded and dusty. The most striking thing in it is where, in the trio of the third movement, the first trumpet gives a life-like imitation of a solo cornettist playing a popular tune at a summer hotel; as an imitation, it is perfect; as music, rot. In this symphony, too, as in Smetana's "Groves and Meadows," there is a deal of "Vaterland"—of the beer-thirsty sort. Upon the whole, in this year of grace, 1900, the symphony has no earthly claim to being heard anywhere outside of Vienna. We all like Goldmark's "Sakuntala," and thank him heartily for it; but, if his fatherhood of this one overture is to be made an excuse for forcing us to wade through all the disheartening mediocrity he has put upon music-paper, we shall begin to be sorry that he ever wrote it. It is presuming too much upon our gratitude. We are no Viennese, and the fact that a composition comes from the Austrian capital is no sort of a recommendation to us. Only medical students and a few Leschetitzki pupils (by proxy) have any associations with the place. We in Boston know our Goldmark tolerably well; we have no more curiosity about him. We love his "Sakuntala;" his "Penthesilea" and "Sappho" we are willing to put up with, now and then; we used to enjoy his "Ländliche Hochzeit," though it would be a bold man who should try to make us listen to it now; and, as for the rest of him, no, we don't want it! There are many Russians and Frenchmen, perhaps an Italian or two, whom we are longing to hear more from, or even to hear for the first time. There is Richard Strauss. His "Heldenleben" has just been given in New York: it is, as far as I know, not down on our list for this season, and is already two years old! To foist upon us this miserable old symphony of Goldmark's, the very week that the New Yorkers have been listening to the "Heldenleben," is—well, it is not nice! We have every right to kick.

W. F. A.

BOSTON POST.
SATURDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1900.

MRS. ROTOLI'S HAT LEADS TO RUMPUS AT RECITAL.

Usher Insistent, Lady Indignant, Husband Talkative, Hat Not Removed.

Another hat incident happened yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, during Mme. Sembrich's recital. This time it was not Mrs. Apthorp who figured in it, but Signor Rotoli and Signora Rotoli.

Just after the beginning of the third part of the programme, an usher approached Signora Rotoli and requested that she remove her hat. He had previously stood in the aisle and made signals to the lady, of which she had declined to take notice. Then, crawling in over the knees of half a dozen ladies, he got within hailing distance and, with a very red face, asked that the hat be removed.

Signora Rotoli objected to removing her very becoming white plume, and, in distinct terms, told the usher so.

The request was repeated, ending with the usher's saying: "Remove yourself or remove your hat." Great indignation on the part of Signora Rotoli. Greater indignation on the part of Signor Rotoli.

The usher retired. Signora Rotoli resumed at least an appearance of placidity. The portly signor, with true Italian vivacity, jumped to his feet and began addressing a young lady sitting two seats in the rear, who had evidently made the request for a wider range of vision.

"No hat could be smaller," said the signor, eloquently. "You do not need it to be removed that you may see. You do not need it. You do not need it." Great interest among the ladies and many comments.

Usher Appears Again.

By this time Mme. Sembrich had begun singing again; but it looked as if she might have to stop.

Presently the usher approached again, crawled over the six pairs of protruding knees, as before, and again spoke to the lady who wore the white hat. She removed her veil. "But do not take the hat off," said the signor; "you do not need to."

She did not.

The usher crawled back to his place by the door and summoned the head usher. Everybody felt uncomfortable, not knowing what would happen.

Signor Rotoli leaned over and patted his wife's white gloved hand, smiled at her reassuringly and held her hand in his for a few moments.

Sembrich finished and the Rotolis applauded heartily. Just before the last number they withdrew, and, walking straight to the office, the gallant signor complained of outrageously rude treatment received at the hands of the usher.

The head usher said, after the performance, that he should have felt obliged to enforce the ordinance to the end had not the incident happened so near the close of the programme.

The Recital.

Mme. Sembrich was assisted by Isidore Luckstone, accompanist. The programme was historical in character, beginning with Lotti, Paradies and other composers of the seventeenth century and extending to the present day, including some of the finest songs of Schubert, Schumann, Franz, Brahms and Tschaikowsky.

The two Brahms songs perhaps made the most vivid impression; after these Mme. Sembrich obligingly gave, as an extra number, an unfamiliar song by Richard Strauss. There was also another extra number at the close of the recital.

There was an immense audience.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY
—BY THE—
MUSICAL COURIER COMPANY.
(Incorporated under the laws of the State of New York.)

St. James Building, Broadway and 26th St., New York.
TELEPHONE: 1720 Madison Square.
Cable Address: "Pegujar," New York.

ESTABLISHED JANUARY, 1880.
No. 1081.

MARC A. BLUMENBERG - - EDITOR-IN-CHIEF.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1900.

The program of the seventh Symphony concert, December 8, was as follows:

Overture, Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage.....Mendelssohn
Aria, Dulde, Schweige, from Catharina Cornaro.....Lachner
Miss Ternina.
Symphonic poem, From Bohemia's Groves and Meadows..Smetana
Prelude and Liebestod, from Tristan.....Wagner
Isolde, Miss Ternina.
Symphony in E flat, No. 2.....Goldmark

The overture was well played, but why should this respectable piece by the genteel Mendelssohn be brought forward at this late day? Mr. Apthorp said in the program book: "The ship's slowly and majestically sliding into the dock and coming up to the wharf, in the last three measures, may be called a gem of musical imagery in itself." Sunbeams from cucumbers! Mendelssohn wrote one great overture, "Fingal's Cave," for this as a work of beauty and imagination is above the overture to "Midsummer Night's Dream"—but the one played last night reminds me of a trip to Nantasket on a Sunday boat; there are mothers with children and baskets; young men with girls and bad cigars; and there is a boisterous scene at the landing. Did you ever see the eminent play actor, John A. Stevens, in "The Unknown?" "Ta-tara-ta-tara ta." "What is that?" "'Tis the excursion boat on the river; but I will be your faithful dor-r-r-g-g-g-g!"

Smetana's symphonic poem is not equal in power or interest to the three that precede; and yet it is a characteristic work. It was composed in 1875, after he began to suffer with the disease that finally ended in complete deafness, hallucinations, madness, death. He himself told Zeleny that the roaring introduction portrays the impression made on the wanderer who sees for the first time a Bohemian landscape; that the first passage in G major is as the walk of a naive village maiden; that the 3-4 section describes the beauty of nature in the summer at high noon, with the sun at the zenith, with shadows and glimmerings of light in the forest, with twittering of birds. "I worked out the contrapuntal task," he said, "with ease, for I have practiced such tasks diligently." The polka finale is a harvest or village festival. This music is in certain ways naive; but the simplicity is that of a strong nature who can afford to be simple; it is never affectation. The more I hear of Smetana's music, the more I wonder at those who name Dvorák as the greatest of Bohemian composers.

Franz Lachner is an interesting figure to-day chiefly on account of his early association with Schubert and his determined opposition to what was known once as "music of the future." He was a solid musician of the good old days that, fortunately for art, are no more. I wonder why Ternina chose the aria from "Catharina Cornaro," who would be the first to be bored by the tune if she were now alive. Neither Ternina's voice nor art nor majestic presence can rescue recitative or aria from the dust bin of Time.

She declaimed the "Love Death" from "Tristan und Isolde" superbly. She did not find it necessary to shriek or yell or turn the woman of noble birth into a red faced virago.

Mr. Gericke's reading of the Vorspiel to "Tristan" reminded me of an essay on Platonic Love.

The Symphony in E flat, which was first played at Dresden, December 2, 1887, is not one of Goldmark's best works. Goldmark is happiest when he is seated on his camel. Witness the "Sakuntala" overture and "Die Königin von Saba."

Boston Symphony Orchestra in New York.

PROGRAMS.

NEW YORK THURSDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 13, 1900.

Symphony No. 1, in C minor, op. 68.....Brahms
Concerto for piano in A minor, op. 54.....Schumann
"From Bohemia's Groves and Meadows," from the Symphonic poem, "My Country".....Smetana
Overture to "Tannhäuser".....Wagner
Soloist, Ossip Gabrilowitsch.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 15.

Symphony No. 2, in E flat, op. 35.....Goldmark
Concerto for violin.....Brahms
(By a member of the orchestra.)
Overture to "The Oresteia" of Aeschylus, op. 6..Taneyeff
Hungarian Rhapsody, No. 2.....Liszt
(Scored by Karl Muller-Berghaus.)

Harold Bauer's Triumph

WITH BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA AND IN RECITAL.

Harold Bauer, the Pianist, played in Boston with the Symphony Orchestra on Saturday, December 1, and in Recital on December 8. The Boston Papers Printed the Following.

With Boston Symphohy Orchestra.

A New Soloist Appears and Is Received with Favor.

Why any player should wish to make a debut in this concerto, which after all has its chief interest in the orchestra rather than in the solo part, is not easy to understand. It would handicap any newcomer before an audience to which both himself and the work are strangers. Mr. Bauer seems to have a splendid technic; he bears himself modestly, plays with easy freedom and without any affectation either of style or of manner; and he does not abuse the instrument by attempting to force its tones. A better opportunity must be awaited to acquire a further knowledge regarding the higher artistic deservings of the young artist, who on this occasion was to all intents and purposes confined to ensemble work of no great interest, and forced to play for the most part against heavy orchestration, through which the playing of the soloist did not always penetrate. Mr. Bauer was cordially welcomed and very heartily applauded and recalled.—Boston Sunday Herald, December 2, 1900.

Harold Bauer, Soloist.

Brahms' first concerto for piano, the latter work introducing as soloist Harold Bauer, a pianist new to American audiences. Liszt's "Hungarian Rhapsody," No. 2, and Beethoven's first symphony completed the program. Mr. Bauer evidently is an artist of high attainments, but his selection was not one in which his merits were shown advantageously. The Brahms concerto is mainly in the nature of an orchestral composition, the piano part not being prominent, excepting at infrequent intervals, in any movement but the last. There is a very long introduction by the orchestra, the piano entering accompanied by drums and brass instruments. In the second movement the themes by the piano are mostly variations on the principal themes given out by the orchestra, and it is not until the closing movement is reached that the pianist becomes a soloist in reality. Brahms indulges in many strenuous passages, and his work is uninteresting, and certainly does not appeal to musicians; hence its comparative omission from the repertory of pianists. Mr. Bauer is an impassive player, and his emotions are not in evidence, but his technic is that of a capable artist, and his finger work in the lighter and brilliant passages was as clear and crisp as one could wish to hear. He has no mannerisms, and appears to sink his individuality to the demands of the score and interpret the composer in a conscientious and painstaking manner. Doubtless the artist will be heard under more favorable circumstances in his forthcoming recital, the miscellaneous program giving him greater scope than is found in the Brahms concerto. Mr. Bauer's reception was very cordial.—Boston Sunday Globe, December 2.

A Master of Beautiful Tone.

Mr. Bauer is a pianist of whom great expectations have been formed, and he fulfills them all. As a master of beautiful pianoforte tone he can rank with Paderewski and De Pachmann at their best; he has even solved completely that troublesome problem of making Brahms' pianoforte writing "sound well." Paderewski did this in the Paganini variations; but that was a peculiar case. To rise to the point of making this concerto "sound well" is tantamount to solving the problem for the whole of Brahms. Years ago I predicted that some day a pianist would come along and do this; now Mr. Bauer has come, and done it! Besides his ear-wooing beauty of tone—elastic, buoyant, resonant—without a suspicion either of woodiness or of striking throughout, clear and brilliant in pianissimo as in fortissimo, he plays with a sure sense of rhythm, with a comprehensive totality of conception, that bespeak the master. Of warmth of temperament he seems to have no lack, though last Saturday evening he played with a certain noble reserve, well befitting Brahms' musical expression. There was something in him that made me feel that neither the profound pathos of Beethoven's G major nor the boisterous outspokenness of Tschaikowsky's B flat minor would find him wanting. In a word, he plays in every way like a thorough and highly gifted musician, like a complete artist. To play like that is to be one in ten thousand.—Boston Evening Transcript, December 3, 1900.

In Recital.

The Bauer Recital.

The Artist Takes Rank with the Highest Among Pianists.

Yesterday afternoon Harold Bauer gave, in Steinert Hall, his first piano recital in Boston.

It did not take long to reach a conclusion regarding the rank to which this player is entitled among the able pianists who have visited us of late years, and there was not the slightest hesitation in according him a place by the side of the highest. He is an artist through and through, splendidly equipped in regard to technic, possessed of a wonderful touch, a faultless style, sincerity of musical feeling, and a manliness of expression that imparts a convincing aspect of dignity and of authority to all that he does. The keyboard has no secrets from him, but there are many of whom this can also be justly said, for the wonders of technic have been exhausted, and we are no longer surprised at finger gymnastics, but rather insist upon them at their extremest development, without as much as a "thank you" when they are displayed.

The feature of Mr. Bauer's playing may be speedily dismissed with the statement that no pianist who has preceded him has surpassed him in scope and perfection of technic. What is better is that Mr. Bauer is not a mere show player who seeks to win success by astonishing finger agility. He is a serious artist who makes no resort to empty display, who obtains sonority from the piano without abusing it, who plays with exquisite finish without loss of largeness of style or virility; who obtains with ease from the instrument every gradation of tone color of which it is capable. In brief, to dwell on this side of the subject would be only to reiterate praise until it becomes wearisome. It will suffice to say that his success was immediate and beyond question; that he won his audience completely, worthily and without resort to even the most pardonable form of trickery.

Very noble was his reading and playing of the sonata; indescribably delicate, polished and chaste his performance of the exquisite Brahms transcription of the dainty Gluck Gavotte, and wholly magnificent in spirit, color, rhythmic swing and high aspiring virtuosity his interpretation and playing of the Schumann "Carneval." Those who like to wonder were accorded ample opportunity by the amazing pace at which he took the supremely difficult "Islamey" and at the utter clearness with which, notwithstanding, it came from under his fingers. This whirled his hearers off their feet, and there was a tumult of shouts and plaudits until he returned and gave as an encore a fascinatingly fluent and pearly performance of Rubinstein's C major Etude.

But after all it is the deep musical quality of his playing that gives it its principal charm. That he will win enduring and deserved favor here seems beyond question, and it would appear not overbold to believe that he will wear well. He is to give his second recital within two weeks, the exact date to be yet announced.—Boston Herald, December 9.

Steinert Hall—Mr. Bauer's Recital.

Mr. Harold Bauer gave a piano recital in Steinert Hall on Saturday afternoon.

"Quod licet Jovi non licet bovi." Conversely, "Quod non licet bovi (saepe) licet Jovi." Which, being interpreted, meaneth that a pianist like Mr. Bauer can safely offer us a program which we should not care to hear from lesser players. Beethoven's opus 111, Chopin's F minor Fantasie, and Schumann's "Carneval" are pièces résistance which are getting a trifle old; but, whereas we prefer to hear most people play something else, when a man in the Jovian class, like Mr. Bauer, comes along they are just the sort of thing that we best like to hear from him. For, when such things as these have been staled by oft-repeated dinning, a great artist is just the one to make them new and fresh again.

Mr. Bauer kept up to the high level he set for himself in Brahms' D minor Concerto, at the sixth Symphony concert, and made good all the implied promises he then held out. Had his playing of the great Beethoven Sonata not been so exactly what one wished, it would have been what is commonly called a "revelation." But it was better than that; it recalled all the finest and best things we have heard great artists do in it, and wiped off all the stains put upon it by others. It was not superlative, musicianly piano playing; it was the sonata, the whole sonata, and nothing but the sonata. His playing had all Beethoven's fire, all his profundity of emotion and thought; all his noble reserve. Mr. Bauer so identified himself with the composer that—and this is a very curious and significant point!—he seemed to get to the end of his tether just where Beethoven himself did. There is one little place in the canzonetta (last movement) that is singularly characteristic of Beethoven. Do you remember how it was said of George Eliot that she killed Tom and Maggie (in "The Mill on the Floss") simply because she could not think of anything else to do with them? Well, at one point in this canzonetta, where the swell of the music has been growing and growing, and you find yourself led down deeper and deeper into the mysterious recesses of the human soul, Beethoven, all at once, seems to say: "Farther down into these depths is not given to flesh and blood to go!"—and he suddenly breaks off, with a gay thrill, and betakes himself blithely to virtuoso antics. The great man had got to the end of his tether; and preferred turning it off with an epigram to eking out his exhausted power with melodramatic thunder. Now, Mr. Bauer played this passage so as completely to reveal the fundamental, underlying idea in it; Beethoven could go no further, and if he had gone further, he could not have played him! A human touch like that is worth tons of tall talk. But this was only one fine point out of many; and finest of all was the constantly high level, a plane of thought and emotion so high that details seemed but a natural part of it, and lost their prominence. Here is a man who may fairly be said to have played this thrice great sonata exhaustively.

Equally fine was Mr. Bauer's playing of the Schumann "Carneval"—if in another direction. He carries the process of individualizing the separate movements further than any other pianist I can remember; and yet, somehow, he never gets out of the true Schumann atmosphere. Now and then he comes near the edge; as in the little sly Gallic wink, he gives the music in the "Arlequin"; but even here he keeps well on the right side of the line which divides Schumann from Offenbach. Upon the whole, he plays the composition with infinite charm; never oppressing you with too great a weight of meaning, never falling short of the composer's intellectuality.

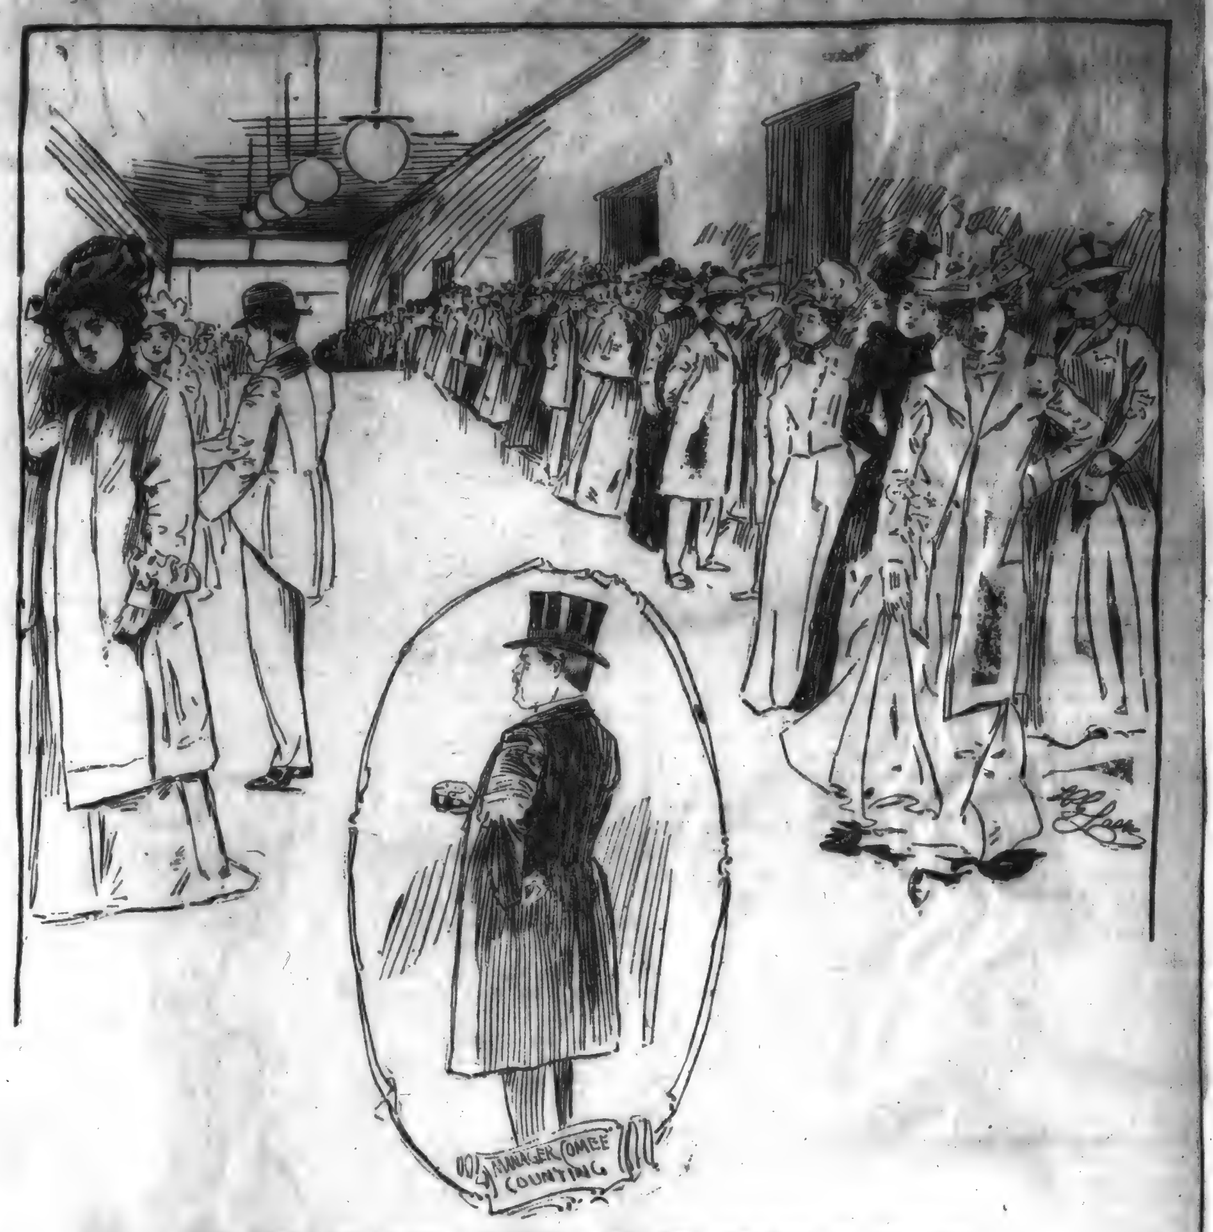
In the Chopin Fantaisie he pleased no less. It was very beautiful playing, but I am sure there is more in the work than it showed forth. Mr. Bauer agrees with Paderewski in what seems to me too fast a tempo in the introduction; I cannot imagine a composer meaning a tempo like that by "Grave." Perhaps the F minor Fantaisie is as dangerous a piece to play as any going; too much detail work may well obscure the main outlines and detract from due elemental vigor. But there is measure in all things, and I cannot but feel that the composition can be far more "détaillée" than it is by Mr. Bauer—or was by Paderewski, for matter of that—without doing it any harm. The only men who seemed to me to exhaust all the possibilities of this Fantaisie were Rubinstein and—Hyllested; two very different men, belonging even to quite distinct classes as artists. But Hyllested used to make an enormous deal out of that slow introduction, and without pulling it to pieces. Rubinstein was great all through.

Of Mr. Bauer's playing of the other things on the program, all that need be said is that it was ideal. One general point is, however, worth noting: although Mr. Bauer played at times with tremendous force, quite as loud as anyone we have heard here, he never once struck through his tone, never once "pounded." His tone was always elastic and buoyant, never degenerated into mere banging. Then, his sense of rhythm is impeccable; he fills Nietzsche's bill, of "feeling music in his heels, as well as in his head and heart!" There is no use in more talking; Mr. Bauer is plainly a great artist.—Boston Evening Transcript, December 10, 1900.

Boston Sunday Globe.
SUNDAY, DEC. 16, 1900.

SPECULATORS OUTWITTED.

Applicants for 25-Cent Seats at the Symphony Concerts Must Present the Exact Change in Person at the Opening of the Doors.



THE NEW RULE OF ADMISSION TO THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

A new and decidedly novel scheme was put to a working test last Friday by the management of the Symphony concerts.

The plan, as laid by the management, was to so arrange for admission to the second balcony for the Friday afternoon rehearsals that it would be impossible for speculators to profit at the expense of the public.

There are exactly 505 seats in the second balcony, and exactly that number of persons are allowed to pay for the privilege of occupying them.

No changing of place in line is allowed, and it is a case of "first come first served." Persons who present a bill or coin larger than a quarter in payment for admission are sure to be ignored, and the next one behind him attended to.

Last Friday by 11 o'clock quite a number had arrived and taken up a position in line, and their number rapidly increased as the noon hour approached. The crowd was composed almost wholly of women, although here and there could be seen a lonesome-looking male citizen, who tried to forget that he was in such a hopeless minority.

They came prepared to spend the day, many of them bringing their luncheon. To drop out of line would be fatal to their chances of admission, or at least the chance of getting a good seat, so they calmly made the best of the situation and sat themselves down in line as they were, and began to munch at the usual girl's lunch, composed wholely of pastry and confections.

From the Huntington av entrance the line extended away round the corner and along Massachusetts av to the entrance located on that side. At 1 o'clock the doors were thrown open and the work of handling the great throng and the testing of the new system was at hand.

Mr Comee, the assistant manager, stood just inside the door with an automatic counter in his hand, and checked the people one by one on this machine in order to see that only 505 people were admitted and so not overtax the capacity of the gallery.

When the counter registered nearly the capacity of the balcony he made a careful count of those who had been admitted into the corridors to be sure there was no mistake in the count.

It would have been an easy matter for the management to have sold at handsome premiums these seats for the Friday afternoon rehearsals on the same plan that the seats for the evening performance are sold. But it was felt that this much at least should be granted the music lovers of the city, and the unselfishness of the management is meeting with many words of commendation on every hand.

played this passage so as completely to reveal the fundamental, underlying idea in it; Beethoven could go no further, and if he had gone further, he could not have played him! A human touch like that is worth tons of tall talk. But this was only one fine point out of many; and finest of all was the constantly high level, a plane of thought and emotion so high that details seemed but a natural part of it, and lost their prominence. Here is a man who may fairly be said to have played this thrice great sonata exhaustively.

Equally fine was Mr. Bauer's playing of the Schumann "Carneval"—if in another direction. He carries the process of individualizing the separate movements further than any other pianist I can remember; and yet, somehow, he never gets out of the true Schumann atmosphere. Now and then he comes near the edge; as in the little sly Gallic wink, he gives the music in the "Arlequin"; but even here he keeps well on the right side of the line which divides Schumann from Offenbach. Upon the whole, he plays the composition with infinite charm; never oppressing you with too great a weight of meaning, never falling short of the composer's intellectuality.

In the Chopin Fantaisie he pleased no less. It was very beautiful playing, but I am sure there is more in the work than it showed forth. Mr. Bauer agrees with Paderewski in what seems to me too fast a tempo in the introduction; I cannot imagine a composer meaning a tempo like that by "Grave." Perhaps the F minor Fantaisie is as dangerous a piece to play as any going; too much detail work may well obscure the main outlines and detract from due elemental vigor. But there is measure in all things, and I cannot but feel that the composition can be far more "détaillée" than it is by Mr. Bauer—or was by Paderewski, for matter of that—without doing it any harm. The only men who seemed to me to exhaust all the possibilities of this Fantaisie were Rubinstein and—Hyllested; two very different men, belonging even to quite distinct classes as artists. But Hyllested used to make an enormous deal out of that slow introduction, and without pulling it to pieces. Rubinstein was great all through.

Of Mr. Bauer's playing of the other things on the program, all that need be said is that it was ideal. One general point is, however, worth noting: although Mr. Bauer played at times with tremendous force, quite as loud as anyone we have heard here, he never once struck through his tone, never once "pounded." His tone was always elastic and buoyant, never degenerated into mere banging. Then, his sense of rhythm is impeccable; he fills Nietzsche's bill, of "feeling music in his heels, as well as in his head and heart!" There is no use in more talking; Mr. Bauer is plainly a great artist.—Boston Evening Transcript, December 10, 1900.

Boston Sunday Globe.
SUNDAY, DEC. 16, 1900.

SPECULATORS OUTWITTED.

Applicants for 25-Cent Seats at the Symphony Concerts Must Present the Exact Change in Person at the Opening of the Doors.

THE NEW RULE OF ADMISSION TO THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

A new and decidedly novel scheme was put to a working test last Friday by the management of the Symphony concerts.

The plan, as laid by the management, was to so arrange for admission to the second balcony for the Friday afternoon rehearsals that it would be impossible for speculators to profit at the expense of the public.

There are exactly 505 seats in the second balcony, and exactly that number of persons are allowed to pay for the privilege of occupying them.

No changing of place in line is allowed, and it is a case of "first come first served." Persons who present a bill or coin larger than a quarter in payment for admission are sure to be ignored, and the next one behind him attended to.

Last Friday by 11 o'clock quite a number had arrived and taken up a position in line, and their number rapidly increased as the noon hour approached. The crowd was composed almost wholly of women, although here and there could be seen a lonesome-looking male citizen, who tried to forget that he was in such a hopeless minority.

They came prepared to spend the day, many of them bringing their luncheon. To drop out of line would be fatal to their chances of admission, or at least the chance of getting a good seat, so they calmly made the best of the situation and sat themselves down in line as they were, and began to munch at the usual girl's lunch, composed wholely of pastry and confections.

From the Huntington av entrance the line extended away round the corner and along Massachusetts av to the entrance located on that side. At 1 o'clock the doors were thrown open and the work of handling the great throng and the testing of the new system was at hand.

Mr Comee, the assistant manager, stood just inside the door with an automatic counter in his hand, and checked the people one by one on this machine in order to see that only 505 people were admitted and so not overtax the capacity of the gallery.

When the counter registered nearly the capacity of the balcony he made a careful count of those who had been admitted into the corridors to be sure there was no mistake in the count.

It would have been an easy matter for the management to have sold at handsome premiums these seats for the Friday afternoon rehearsals on the same plan that the seats for the evening performance are sold. But it was felt that this much at least should be granted the music lovers of the city, and the unselfishness of the management is meeting with many words of commendation on every hand.

Boston Journal.
SUNDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1900.

VERY RUDE.

Mr. Rotoli Says That the Usher Was.

His Version of the Hat Episode.

His Wife Ordered to Remove It.

"All I want is to have the facts about that little affair in Symphony Hall Friday afternoon told as they really exist," said Signor Augusto Rotoli to a Journal reporter last evening.

"I read the statement made by the head usher, Mr. Hartshorn, to the Journal. He is wrong when he says the young usher who ordered my wife to remove her hat was not impertinent. The young man was not only impertinent, but he spoke in a loud voice and was very rude.

"Just look at the circumstances. My wife and I occupied seats a number of rows back from the front. There must have been 200 or more people sitting between us and the stage," and Signor Rotoli waved his hand in front of him to illustrate.

"Many of the women, in fact, nearly every one of them, wore large hats. The hats were much larger than the one worn by my wife, and any one of them would partially obstruct the view of the person sitting back of them.

"Not one of these women was asked to remove her hat. I called the usher's attention to this fact, but he paid no attention to what I said."

Very Impertinent.

Signora Rotoli, who was present when Signor Rotoli made his statement to the Journal, nodded her head in assent. "That is all true," she said. "The usher was very impertinent, and I confess it angered me to have him speak as he did to me."

The Rotolis were found at their attractive flat at the corner of Cumberland Street and Huntington Avenue.

Continuing, Signor Rotoli said: "We went to Symphony Hall Friday afternoon, my wife and I, for the purpose of attending the Sembrich recital. Madame Sembrich, whom we know very well, was to sing. We went to the box office to buy seats, but were informed that Madame Sembrich had had seats saved for us. We therefore attended the concert as her guests.

"It was near the end of the concert when the usher came to us. He stood in the aisle at our side and said to my wife: 'Madam, you will have to remove your hat.'

"Why do you ask my wife to remove her hat?" I asked him.

"It says on the program that all ladies shall do so," replied the young man.

Not On the Program.

"I see nothing of the kind here," I said, examining the reading matter upon the program, minutely. "I have a program here, just look it over and tell me if you see any such rule," remarked Signor Rotoli, handing it to the Journal reporter.

Certainly nothing appeared upon the program relative to the removal of hats.

"Then the young man said: 'It is a rule of this hall that ladies shall remove their hats.'

"Why don't you speak to all those sitting in front of us there with large hats? Why don't they remove their head coverings?" I asked him.

"There is a lady sitting back of you that has complained of your wife's hat to me," said the usher. "That is why I have asked her to remove it."

"We found out afterward that the party who spoke to the usher was sitting two rows back of us," said Signor Rotoli. "Immediately in front of her sat a woman with a hat much larger than the one my wife wore. It was one of these very wide brimmed affairs. Why that woman was not requested to remove her hat we could not understand.

"The usher went away, but later returned and renewed his demand for my wife to take off her hat. We again refused."

Spoke Very Harshly.

"He spoke very harshly," said Signora Rotoli. "I think all the people sitting about us were disturbed and annoyed almost as much as we were. My husband told him again to go away and leave us alone. And finally he did.

"Several of those sitting nearby said to me afterward that I did just right in refusing to accede to the young man's demand."

"Perhaps you would like to see the hat that caused so much trouble," suggested Signora Rotoli, with a smile. She stepped into the hallway for a moment and returned with a flat-topped hat. It certainly looked quite small to the Journal reporter, and had little protective decoration either on top or at the sides. Indeed, it looked very much like a bonnet of medium size. When its owner tried it on it was seen to fit the head very closely.

It is difficult to understand how such a head covering could have obstructed the view of anyone.

Usher Hartshorn's Story.

Mr. Mudgett of Symphony Hall said he had not heard of the incident until after the concert, and by that time it was too late to do anything. Signor Hartshorn, who is probably better known in Boston than anybody else concerned, is the head usher at Symphony Hall, as he is at most other places of amusement in this city outside of the theatres. He was amused at the happening, though he was for a moment in an embarrassing position.

"After the performance was over, Signor Rotoli said to me that the usher had been discourteous," says Signor Hartshorn. "I thought, and said so, that this must be a mistake, as the usher in question is a most gentlemanly young fellow, the most courteous one I have. While I was still talking over the thing with Signor Rotoli, a lady who had sat next to him came out, and a moment later she told me that the usher was perfectly gentlemanly. When the objection was first made, by a lady who sat behind the Rotolis, he asked that the hat be taken off. His request was not granted, and he came to me. I sent him in to repeat it, and then, when that did no good, I went myself. Signor Rotoli waved his hands at me for me to go away. But I didn't go. It was so nearly the end of the concert that we did nothing further, but it was embarrassing. To have insisted or to have called an officer would have made a disturbance. But if people will insist on disobeying the law, I don't see what other recourse we have."

THE SUN, BALTIMORE,
DECEMBER 12, 1900.

BOSTON SYMPHONY AT ITS BEST

The Second Concert At Music Hall Proves A Brilliant Success.

The second concert of the series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given last night at Music Hall with the following program:

Johannes Brahms—Symphony No. 1, in C minor, op. 68.
Karl Marie von Weber.....Overture to "Euryanthe"
Mozart.....Aria from "Cosi fan tutti"
Bedrich Smetana—Symphonic Poem, "From Bohemia's Groves and Meadows;" from the Cyclus, "My Country," No. 4
Richard Wagner.....Prelude and Isolde's Love-Death From "Tristan and Isolde"
Isolde.....Miss Ternina

It was in no sense a conventional offering, nor was it to be received thoughtlessly or unpreparedly. Every number had an individual meaning and importance which appealed most strongly to the cultivated musician, while the amateur could not fail to be inspired by the extraordinary program.

As originally announced, the symphony was placed at the close of the evening, but the direction very thoughtfully yielded to the wishes of the Baltimore public, frequently expressed in THE SUN, in presenting the most important number directly at the commencement.

This was most appropriate last night, because after the selection from "Tristan and Isolde" anything must have produced an anti-climax. This does not necessarily detract from the value or inspiration of the Brahms symphony, but this composition is one which displays intellectuality of such a type that the emotional excitement it produces is in no sense thrilling.

The finale of Wagner's music drama, on the other hand, is the most intense, the most violent and the most impassioned musical climax which has ever been wrought. The unusual sensational effects are not gotten solely through the music, but they are none the less tremendous.

The personal interest in the concert was also deep and genuine. A notable singer, a great Wagnerian artist, one of the most thoughtful vocalists now before the public, was announced to sing solos, so that the concert, considered from every point of view, was extraordinary.

The selection of a soloist for a great concert by an orchestra of artists is most difficult. It would never do to inject an element of flippancy and prima-donna-like impertinence into a concert of such seriousness as those of the Boston Orchestra. But the public clamors for singers and Ternina fulfills the demands of both the concert givers and hearers.

She is more thoughtful than dexterous and therefore a greater artist than singer. Ordinarily speaking Mozart is very far from her genre, but she chose for last night one of the more dramatic arias, which gave her an opportunity to show her splendid power of declamation. But the Isolde aria (if it may be so called) gave her her fullest opportunity and herein she was superb.

In the orchestral part of this selection Mr. Gericke was least happy. The music, of course, "plays itself," but the rhapsodical excitement of "Tristan" seems rather far from his temper.

His reading of the Brahms symphony was very sympathetic and showed deep insight into the spirit and significance of the work. His power to illustrate his ideas in his orchestra seemed to increase as the symphony progressed.

The ordinary hearer, it must be confessed, remains cold and unmoved after this symphony, but a feeling is always present that he would like to hear it again. It is most imposing, but it must be known fully to appreciate the fullness of its power.

Mr. Gericke's proximity to Brahms in Vienna must have assisted greatly his understanding of the composer's works. Although this was his first symphony, it will always stand as thoroughly characteristic of Brahms in his maturest period.

Smentana was represented by a selection which bordered on the bizarre, but which certainly proved diverting, if not altogether impressive.

The intermission which is being made in the middle of the concerts this year is very generally appreciated and ought to be permanently adopted in all orchestral concerts.

BALTIMORE MORNING HERALD
WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 12

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA LAST NIGHT

Mr. Gericke is not the best of programme-makers. He usually cares little for symmetry or contrast, but the programme he gave Baltimore last night was exceptionally well chosen. It was as follows:

Symphony No. 1, in C minor, op. 68.....Brahms.
Overture to "Euryanthe".....Weber.
Aria from "Cosi fan tutti".....Mozart.
Symphonic poem, "From Bohemia's Groves and Meadows," from the cyclus "My Country," No. 4.....Smetana
Prelude and Isolde's Love-Death, from "Tristan and Isolde".....Wagner.
Isolde, Miss Ternina.

It was disappointing that such a programme and the assistance of the most satisfactory singer Germany has sent us in a decade should not have filled Music Hall. The Brahms symphony showed the Boston Orchestra under its present conductor at its best. In the fine web of Brahms' counterpoint every thread must be perfect. The splendid technical equipment of the orchestra and Mr. Gericke's command of nuance were most strikingly illustrated. Moreover, the eternal gray of Brahms is akin to Mr. Gericke's temperament as a conductor. A more finished performance or a more perfectly poised conception of this lovely work is hardly a possibility. The andante, which bears the same relation to the other parts as Berlioz's "Scene au Champs" does to the other movements of the "Fantastique," had that perfect sense of repose that comes of long familiarity and perfect understanding.

After the symphony Mr. Gericke was on less congenial ground, and his version of the Liebestod emphasized in an extraordinary degree his lack of the emotional qualities necessary in these neurotic days of Wagner and of Richard Strauss. The proportions were there, but there was not a suggestion of that persistent and unrestrainable passion which breaks all bonds at the close.

Frau Ternina sang it with breadth and fervor. Her work was a rebuke to those who deny that Wagner and pure vocalization can go hand in hand. The soundness and catholicity of her art were shown in the Mozart aria.

In the Euryanthe overture Mr. Gericke was exact, dry and unromantic. There were also many lost dramatic possibilities in the Smetana symphonic poem.

R. I. C.

PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER
DECEMBER 11, 1900

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Its Third Concert for the Season at the Academy of Music Last Evening

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. William Gericke, gave the second concert in its first series, or its third concert for the season, at the Academy of Music last evening before the crowded and distinguished audience which is invariably attracted on these occasions. A more than ordinarily interesting program was presented. It included Mendelssohn's graceful and melodious overture, "Calm Seas and a Prosperous Voyage," a movement from Smetana's cyclus, "My Country," and a symphony by Goldmark, which had not within the knowledge of the writer previously been heard in this city. Thus the concert comprised two important novelties, each of which was a source of great enjoyment.

The Smetana music was distingnished in a high degree by the characteristic traits of its composer, by absolute freedom of form, an abundant wealth of ideas, extraordinary fervor of emotion and eloquence of expression and an absolute command of all the resources of the modern orchestra. It is not music of a kind whose full significance can be apprehended at a first hearing nor do all its varied beauties lie upon the surface. Parts of it are turgid and obscure, and there are moments when the listener wishes for the lucidity of the classical school, but it is a work of incontestable vitality and power and played as it was last evening, the impression which it produced was deeply favorable. The Goldmark symphony is also a considerable and interesting work. Its melodies are scarcely so obvious or its rhythms so emphatic and fascinating as those of the composition by which Goldmark is chiefly known to music lovers in this locality, but it is extraordinarily sensuous and picturesque and its performance—a performance which did full justice to its beauties and interpreted every shade of its meaning with subtle apprehension and splendid sufficiency—was followed with every evidence of interest and pleasure.

The soloist was Miss Milka Ternina, whose lovely voice and noble method were finely illustrated in the air which she gave from the old opera of "Katerina Cornaro," and to an even higher degree in the "Love-Death" music from Tristan and Isolde, which she delivered with an extraordinary dramatic eloquence and the most communicative pathos and passion. It missed something of its due effectiveness in the absence of the stage environment, but not much, so great was the imaginative mastery of the artist. The orchestra will give another concert to-morrow evening, when Beethoven's fifth symphony will be played.

BALTIMORE AMERICAN
DECEMBER 12, 1900.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA'S CONCERT.

Mr. Gericke Makes Some Slight Changes in His Program—Beautiful Effects.

Mr. Gericke made some slight changes in his program of the second concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra given last night in Music Hall. As at first arranged, Brahms' first symphony was placed last. Last night Mr. Gericke played it first, and instead of a song by Lachner he substituted an air from Mozart's "Cosi fan Tutti," which is a favorite with some singers. It was a good idea to tackle Brahms' symphony while the men were fresh, for, although the band has played it elsewhere this season, it is a difficult work, and demands good artists to do it justice. It is not a symphony for an ordinary orchestra to attempt, but the Bostons shrink from nothing, and the rendering the work received last night could not be surpassed.

Brahms is one of the great intellectual composers of these later days, and his learning displays itself in all its works, and certainly with powerful prominence in this symphony. The first movement is so constructed as to be interesting chiefly to the scientific analyst. The audience was not enthusiastically stirred by its rendition, splendid though it was, and did not warm up until at the close of the andante, when the house broke out into very cordial applause. The finale made the best impression, and revealed Brahms as a great master in orchestration. Throughout the whole symphony all the resources of the orchestra are availed of, the result being at times wonderfully beautiful effects. It is peculiar that the trombones are used only in the last movement. The symphony compels admiration by reason of the great skill and learning of the composer, and if there was a large infusion of the emotion that Beethoven exhibited so generously in his symphonies, Brahms' work would be even greater than it is.

The other orchestral numbers were Weber's overture to Euryanthe, which the orchestra played with fine finish, and a novelty here. Smetana's symphonic poem, "From Bohemia's Groves and Meadows," from the Cyclus, "My Country." It attempts to depict life in the country under favorable conditions, and is graceful and melodious, as descriptive music dealing with such subjects is suposed to be.

Miss Melka Ternina, the accomplished soprano, was the soloist. She sang the Mozart air beautifully, the fine quality of her voice, her intelligence and excellent method producing the best effect.

In the great Love-Death song from "Tristan and Isolde" she had the support of the splendid orchestra, Mr. Gericke giving the singer full scope, nowhere overpowering the voice, a difficulty singers frequently have to contend with in this selection. Miss Ternina has sung the part of Isolde so often that it goes without saying she did ample justice to the great song. The attendance was large, but the house was not crowded.

LEDGER—PHILADELPHIA
DECEMBER 11, 1900.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Fraulein Ternina Is Cordially Welcomed Back to Philadelphia.

The second concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Monday evening series was given last night in the Academy of Music to an audience which, as usual, filled every seat in the house. The orchestra has seldom, if ever, while under Mr. Gericke's direction, played better. The programme, which speaks for itself, was as follows:

Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy,
Overture, "Sea Calm and Prosperous Voyage," op. 27.
Lachner.....Aria from "Katarina Cornaro"
Fraulein Milka Ternina.
Bedrich Smetana,
Symphonic Poem, "From Bohemia's Groves and Meadows," from the Cyclus, "My Country," No. 4.
Richard Wagner,
Prelude and "Isolde's Love Death," from "Tristan and Isolde."
Isolde—Ternina.
Intermission of ten minutes.
Karl Goldmark,
Symphony No. 2, in E flat, op. 35.

With the exception of the "Tristan and Isolde" number, the rest of the programme had the charm of novelty for most of those present. The least known, and, as it happened, quite the least interesting, was the Lachner aria, which not even the rich and velvety tones of Ternina could make other than old fashioned and insipid, though it must be confessed she hardly did full justice to the aria. To make up for it, however, she sang Isolde's delirious death song over Tristan most beautifully. But in the Wagner atmosphere Ternina is at home, and her last winter's exquisite performance of the ill fated Isolde is hardly out of mind yet. The "love death," as it has been called, was preceded by the prelude to act 1, taken at an unusually slow speed by Mr. Gericke, but exquisitely played by the orchestra as regards purity of tone and loveliness of expression. It and the song together proved the most interesting and delightful number of the evening.

The Sea-calm overture, with its lovely descriptive writing, was beautifully played, as was the excerpt from Smetanana's symphonic poem, "My Country," though the latter is interesting principally on account of the ingenuity of the orchestration and its wealth of color.

Putting the symphony at the end of the programme did not, in Goldmark's case, matter greatly, since the principal charm of his work lies in the last two numbers, the allegro quasi presto and andante assai; airy, dainty music, suggestive of nothing heavier than fairies frisking on the green that came as a delightful surprise after the first two not particularly inspiring numbers, and sent every one away refreshed. The orchestra excelled themselves in its interpretation, especially in the rapid passages for the strings, where their precision, their delicacy of utterance and the purity of their intonation was simply delightful.

---

[57]

NORTH AMERICAN. PHILADELPHIA
DECEMBER 11, 1900.

FINE RENDERING OF SMETANA'S CYCLUS

Boston Symphony Orchestra Shows Itself Thoroughly in Spirit With the Music of the Fourth Poem

The third concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music last night brought forward for the first time in Philadelphia the fourth symphonic poem in Smetana's cyclus, "My Country," and entitled "From Bohemia's Groves and Meadows." Founded on Bohemian folk melodies, like the balance comprising it, and even more national in character than some others among them, especially in point of rhythm, the work abounds in figures bizarre and attractive.

The short programme on which the number is based is not rich in imaginative possibilities in the same degree with other sections of the work, but fastens attention none the less through its inherent beauties. The orchestra at no time during the season has shown itself so thoroughly in spirit with a work placed no near the beginning of the programme, and on the interpretative side was admirably accomplished under Mr. Gericke's direction. The occasion also marked the first appearance in this city this season of Mme. Teruina, who was heard in an aria from Sachner's "Katrina Cornaro," which she gave with great charm and simplicity, and in Isolde's "Love Death," in which latter she was not nearly so successful.

There is no excerpt from Wagner's music dramas more dangerous of translation from its original surroundings to the concert room than this same "Love Death." To be called upon to picture the figure of Isolde above the dead body of Tristan, and to see before one, as was the case last night, a lady in an Empire gown scanning the notes in a climax that preceded her end, is harrowing in other than the dramatic sense. The notes, and possibly the Empire gown, to those who are able to judge, were both excellent things, and such consciousness of the latter would not have impressed itself had it not been for Mme. Ternina's consciousness of the former. Assuredly, she knows the excerpt sufficiently well after her years of routine to have held her notes in case of possible emergency and not to have intruded them upon the observation.

To give an unbiased view of her performance of the "Love Death" it must be heard without such disturbing conditions conditions which this singer's accomplishments on many previous occasions would not have led one to expect. The dignity of the scene, epic in its demands in delivery, require other methods, even in the concert room, where to die scanning the notes may suit the old Italian, but not the Wagnerian ideas of propriety. The work of the orchestra in this number and the prelude did not attain to a satisfaction given at other points in the evening.

The concluding half of the concert, Goldmark's Symphony, No. 2, E flat, op. 25, and from which better things might have been awaited from the violins in the Andante, gained a climax of great delicacy and charm in performance in the third movement Allegro quasi Presto.

WILLIAM ARMSTRONG.

PHILADELPHIA RECORD.
DECEMBER 11.

Boston Symphony Concert—Academy of Music.

Local music-lovers had a treat last evening in the singing of Milka Ternina, the special feature of the Boston Symphony Concert at the Academy of Music. An artist in the true sense of the word is this accomplished vocalist, her method simple and natural, her voice beautiful in its purity. Her selections comprised an aria from "Katarina Cornaro," by Lachner, and the familiar "Isolde's Love-Death," from Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde." It was in the difficulties of the latter that Miss Ternina showed her artistic ability at its best. There was no evident straining after theatrical effect, yet this wonderful dramatic speech in musical garb was a thing of intense emotion. The piano passages were particularly well rendered and the singer's enunciation unusually clear. Another interesting feature of the programme was the symphonic poem, "From Bohemia's Groves and Meadows," by Bedrich Smetana, full of local color and instrumental beauties. The concert closed with Karl Goldmark's symphony in E flat. At the Boston Symphony's next concert, which will take place on Wednesday evening, December 12, the soloist of the evening will be George W. Proctor, a young Bostonian virtuoso, who will be heard in the Tschaikowski concerto in B-flat minor, played by Gabrilowitsch at the recent concert of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra. In addition to this the programme will include Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, a suite by Bizet and the familiar Tannheuser overture. Last night's "Isolde" number was, perhaps, the best Wagnerian interpretation yet given here by Conductor Gericke.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS
DECEMBER 11, 1900.

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT.

A Week of Music Ushered in in Agreeable Fashion.

What would have seemed years ago a week of music that would have been termed a festival occasion and would have required unusual effort to get public interest aroused comes as a matter of course even if somewhat fortuitously these days. As the physicians would say, we have increased our "tolerance." Our esthetic capacity is as catholic as that of the ostrich. We can digest Teuton and Slav, and a Wagner excerpt, once the piece de resistance, is now little more than an omelet souffle to those who have tasted the symphonic music of Richard Strauss, and know the difference between "Till euenspiegel's lustige streich" and "Zarathustra's" in a talkative mood.

Last night the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the Academy of Music, read a superb program, as it alone can do. To-morrow night we shall again sit at its feet, on Friday night the Philadelphia Orchestra is heard and on Saturday night choral and orchestral harmonies intermingle in the Mendelssohn Club concert. The week promises well, and was splendidly ushered in last evening not only by reason of the reappearance of Ternina, but by the first hearing of Goldmark's second symphony in E flat and the first hearing of the fourth of Swetana's symphonic poems in the cyclus of "My Country." Hungary and Bohemia thus were pitted against each other, as it were, Magyar and Czech, and yet the dominating feature after all was the wonderful "Tristan" "Liebestod" music of Wagner, which seemed never to have been so well rendered, never interpreted with such spirit and such a sense of the climacteric on the part of Gericke, while Fraulein Ternina soared above the crushing harmonies and revealed a vocal art that was irresistibly appealing in its great moments. The singer was in splendid voice, and in the little-known aria of Lachner's from "Katarina Cornaro" gave all a pleasing surprise, for there was a quaintness and old-time flavor in the music and sentiment that was very enjoyable and was most tenderly expressed by the singer, the voice part being very agreeable and the accompaniment piquant and delightful.

Swetana's symphonic poems have in them much that is obvious, so far as program music goes, and much that is purely arbitrary, one label doing as well as another. The section given last evening is picturesque and was in striking contrast to the elegance and even beauty of Mendelssohn's lovely overture, "Sea-calm and Prosperous Voyage," which opened the concert. For the close after the welcome wait that gives the needed opportunity of rest for ear and thoughts came Goldmark's symphony, which is a bright, blithe composition, more compact and better balanced than the "Country Wedding" symphony, with a very clever scherzo, as elf-like and jocose at times as the truest of scherzi, though labeled allegro quasi paesto, and a finale that had a distinct swing and rush as well as color and melody. To-morrow night the program includes Beethoven's fifth symphony, Bizet's suite, "Children's Games," Wagner's Tannhauser's overture and Tschaikowski's concerto for pianoforte in B flat minor, with Mr. George W. Proctor at the piano.

The Times
PHILADELPHIA, DECEMBER 11, 1900.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the second concert of its regular series at the Academy of Music last evening with a bright and interesting if not very important programme. It opened with Mendelssohn's beautiful "Meeresstille" overture, which was played with the utmost suavity and with a very delicate expression of its varied tone-pictures. The other orchestral numbers were modern, a movement from Smetana's cycle of symphonic poems, "My Country," entitled "Bohemia's Groves and Meadows"—a title suggestive of its moods rather than of any direct description—and Goldmark's very musical and warmly-colored symphony in E flat. The soloist was Madame Ternina, who sang an aria from Franz Lachner's "Katarino Cornaro," unfamiliar here because the Munich composer's operas have never traveled this far, and the great scene of Isolde's Love-Death, in which the orchestra played exquisitely and the great singer displayed so much of her dramatic sense that one regretted that she was not in the opera. There will be a concert in the second series to-morrow, with George W. Proctor as the soloist.

THE WORLD: FRIDAY DECEMBER 14, 1900.

BOSTON MEN PLAY FINELY.

Second Concert of Symphony Orchestra--Gabrilowitsch Diappointing.

Lickily for Ossip Gabrilowitsch, soloist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's second concert at Carnegie Hall last night, he has been heard in New York before. If that was his first apearance his artistic stature in this community would be considerably less. Schumann's concerto in A minor was the choice of the young Russian pianist for the display of his power, but its beauties were not disclosed by him. He played in a dull, hard way that was void of inspiration and sympathy. Hitherto, these qualities have not been lacking in him. As it was, nothing could dim the purity of his tone, and it must be said he was recalled half a dozen times.

It is doubtful if a better band of musicians than this Boston orchestra is to be found anywhere; so the comparitive success of the soloist is of minor importance. Mr. Geriche's programme for last night, in addition to the piano concerto, consisted of Brahms's symphony No. 1 in C minor; Smetana's symponic poem, "From Bohemia's Groves and Meadows," taken from his cycles, "My Country," and Wagners "Tannhauser" overture. The Brahms work was interpreted in a lofty spirit, befitting its impressive character. The finish of the players was never more in evidence. The tone was splendidly sonorous, as well as exquistie. There was ipeccable precision, and the shadings are marvels of daintiness and delicacy.

Full of color and contrasts was the poem of Smetna, with its vivid suggestions of the open air and woods and fields. There was a breezy swing to the dance and a lilting spirt in the song that permeated it.

In the "Tannhauser" overture there was too much perfeation. If McGericke would only let himself go for once, what a thrill he could produce in the climax.

There was a good house that held much of the fasion as well as the music-lovers of the town. It is a pleasure to note the growing interest of New Yorkers in this unrivalled body of musicians.

The programme for the second matinee of the season, on Saturday afternoon, includes Goldmark's symphony No. 2, in E flat, major. Franz Kneisel, the soloist, will play Brahms's violin concerto in D major. SYLVESTER RAWLING.

PHILADELPHIA RECORD
DECEMBER 13, 1900

Boston Symphony Concert.

The second concert of the special series of Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts delighted a large audience at the Academy of Music, last evening, a peculiar interest lying in the fact that the Fifth Symphony of Beethoven and the Tschaikowski Concerto in B-flat minor played at the recent Philadelphia Orchestra concert were repeated. George W. Proctor, the soloist of the occasion, is a sterling pianist, and interpreted the Tschaikowski opus with admirable technique. He is by no means as brilliant nor inspiring in style as the young Russian pianist. The work itself grows on one in its melodic beauty and almost symphonic treatment. As for the Beethoven Symphony, it was given a fine, straightforward reading by Conductor Gericke, who seldom reveals any temperamental originality. The Bizet suite, "Children's Games," pleased the listeners immensely, to judge by their applause. The "Little Husband, Little Wife" duet is truly charming. Wagner's Tannhaeuser" Overture was given a solid, but not particularly emotional, rendering.

LEDGER PHILADELPHIA
DECEMBER 13, 1900.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Second of the Wednesday Evening Series of Concerts.

The Wednesday evening concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are very very much in the nature of a continuation of the Monday ones; an overflow meeting in effect. As a rule there is little to choose between them in point of interest and none at all in point of quality; it is usually the soloist who is the determining influence. Last night the orchestra was in the same magnificent form as on Monday, but the programme, which is given below, was an infinitely more interesting one:

Symphony No. 5, in C minor, Op. 67, Ludwig van Beethoven.
Intermission.
Concerto for pianoforte, No. 1, in B flat, minor, Op. 23, Peter Hyitch Tschaikowsky.
Little Suite, "Children's Games," Op. 22, Georges Bizet.
Overture to "Tannhauser," Richard Wagner.
Soloist, Mr. George W. Proctor.

It will be seen that the first two numbers are identical with two on the programme of the orchestra which played under Mr. Scheel on the 17th of November last. The comparison, which seems especially to be invited in the case of Mr. Proctor's individual work in the Tschaikowsky concerto is not favorable to the Boston pianist; his touch is beautiful, and he gave a very admirable interpretation of the piano score, but in point of technical finish he falls considerably short of his Russian rival, Mr. Qssip Gabrilowitsch. He had the advantage, however, or, perhaps, it would be truer to say that the audience had the advantage of a splendid orchestral accompaniment, and since the score is fairly divided between piano and orchestra it meant a great deal.

It would be superfluous to compare the respective merits of the orchestras in the fifth symphony. It is enough to say that the Boston men played it magnificently. It was a relief to hear once more Mr. Gericke's masterly reading of the symphony; the stirring appeal of those insistent rappings; Beethoven in his most vigorous and imperative mood; no slow and sentimental slobbering, but beats to set the heartstrings vibrating and the blood coursing. And beyond—in the lovely andante con moto, the delightful pizzicati of the trio, and the splendid breadth and triumphant grandeur of the last movement, the whole symphony was read and given with a breadth, a freedom and a finish not to be surpassed.

But if the Beethoven number was magnificent, what shall be said of the "Tannhauser" overture? It was worth coming a hundred miles to listen to. It made one ask oneself, Where and on what occasion have I ever heard it better played? and that without any very distinct recollection of such an occasion occurring. The fact is that the orchestra was, as we said above, in exceptionally good form, perhaps the bracing weather of the past few days may have had something to do with it.

Before closing this brief notice, mention of Bizet's delightfully quaint and memoron suite of Children's Games must not be omitted. They remind one in an elaborately orchestrated form of just such charming ideas as are found in Scott Gatti's songs for children. Needless to say they were exquisitely played.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS
DECEMBER 13, 1900

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Beethoven's Fifth Symphony and Tschaikowski's Concerto Once More Interpreted.

Comparisons are—well, it is perhaps just as well not to make them for they would cut both ways; so pretending the Fifth Symphony of Beethoven and Tschaikowski's piano concerto in B flat minor were not heard this season until they were given last night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music, it is worth while noting that if the orchestra gave profound delight in the symphony the same cannot be said for the pianist in the concerto.

Some one has said that there is a great distinction between "real geniuses" and "Boston geniuses." Doubtless And there is quite as nice a distinction between talent as the world knows it and talent as Boston's bespectacalled, sees it. The soloist of last evening, Mr. George W. Proctor, has talent—as Boston acclaims it. He has also the Leschetitshi hall mark, but really this is getting to mean nothing since there is no certainty that because you go in one end of the Leschetitshi hopper you come out the other end a Paderewski. You don't. Mr. Proctor didn't, and in consequence, it cannot be said that his work in the concerto was satisfactory. Here was an attitude of energy without forceful results, a suggestion of temperament without deep expression and digital dexterity without poetic grace. There were other features that robbed the solo work in the concerto of much of its beauty and it is more pleasant to remember Mr. Gericke's reading of the symphony, for here the unrivalled ability of the orchestra to voice to the fullest the meaning of this great work did not send one hungry away.

In the lighter episode of the program came Bizet's clever and very Bizetian suite of five brief pieces, "children's games" and for the conclusion Wagner's "Tannhauser" overture. This was finely done though Mr. Gericke was not as much in the Wagner mood as when he read the "Tristan" Prelude on Monday night. Of course, there is a concert Wagner and a Wagner of the music drama and it was the former that was heard last evening.

PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER

DECEMBER 13, 1900

MUSIC AT THE ACADEMY

Second Concert in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Second Series a Great Success

Comparisons are always dangerous as well as odious, but it is safe to say that the concert which was given at the Academy of Music last evening by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, was one of the most enjoyable that has taken place here during the present season. There were only four numbers on the program, but each was a source of unalloyed delight. First came the Fifth Symphony of Beethoven, that in C minor, if not the finest, at least the most widely and warmly appreciated composition of its class. This was followed by Tschaikowsky's beautiful pianoforte concerto in B flat minor. By way of a contrast and a rest came the "Children's Games" suite of Bizet, and that most popular of overtures, the overture to Tannhauser, brought a very enjoyable occasion to an impressive close.

As regards the orchestra it is easy to imagine the result of this combination. There is possibly some lack of breadth and power in Mr. Gericke's interpretation of the symphony. In some respects the writer preferred the reading lately given by Mr. Scheel. But after that has been said there is room for nothing else than praise. The perfect lucidity with which the complexities of the score were presented, the incomparable tonal beauty of the playing, the exquisite sense of proportion which was exhibited throughout, the sanity, the sympathy, the appreciative insight with which the significance of the music was apprehended and conveyed; the extraordinary justness of symmetry which Mr. Gericke unfailingly preserved, the emotional eloquence of the whole thing, the way in which the poetry and pathos and passion of the music were expressed, in which each of its varying moods was reflected and made apparent; all these qualities combined to render the performance in a high degree illuminative and convincing. It is recorded that at the first production of this symphony in Paris, during the days of the great Napoleon, a veteran rose in his place at the climacteric outburst of the finale and shouted, "Vive l'Empereur." Such a performance as that of last evening is enough to make this story credible.

The other salient feature of the evening was the playing of the Tschaikowsky concerto by Mr. George W. Proctor, a young American artist who had not before been heard in this city. Technical efficiency is to be assumed of any soloist with whom the Boston Symphony Orchestra is associated. Mr. Proctor has that in abundance. But he has more than that. He has taste and feeling and intelligence and temperament and his rendering of the lovely music of the composition which he played was of a kind which did full justice to its many beauties. It is reasonable to believe that this young artist has a brilliant future before him.

PHILADELPHIA TIMES

DECEMBER 13, 1900.

SYMPHONY CONCERTS

The Boston Orchestra in a Familiar Programme, With George W. Proctor.

In the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music last evening Mr. Gericke complimented Mr. Scheel by copying the main part of the programme of last month's concert of the Philadelphia Orchestra. The Tschaikowsky piano concerto was doubtless selected by the soloist, but the reason for the repetition of the C minor symphony at this short interval is not so apparent. If it was intended to invite comparison, it was a mistake. Though Mr. Gericke commands at present the superior instrument, the value of a performance of a Beethoven symphony depends more upon the temperament of the interpretation than upon orchestral virtuosity, and such a comparison is not to the advantage of the Boston conductor. The difference between two interpretations of the concerto by two pianists of admitted technical accomplishment is also a matter mainly of personal temperament. Mr. Proctor plays it with understanding and skill. So did Gabrilowitsch. They are different artists, and it is not necessary here to determine whether or why one is better than the other. The remainder of the programme included Bizet's little suite of children's dances, which Mr. Paur introduced a couple of seasons back, and the familiar "Tannhauser" overture.

The second concert of the Philadelphia Orchestra occurs at the Academy to-morrow evening. The symphony is one of Brahms', and the soloist is Lilian Blauvelt.

NEW YORK HERALD

NEW YORK, FRIDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1900.

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The dominant note of the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night at Carnegie Hall was cheerfulness, and perhaps because of this a big audience, about four times the size of that which listened to the last concert were present.

The number which stood out from the rest of the programme as most exquisitely rendered, a poem of melody, was "From Bohemia's Groves and Meadows," of Bedrich Smetana. The accompaniment also of Schumann's concerto in A minor was performed with more brilliancy and distinction by the orchestra under Mr. Gericke than was the piano solo of Ossip Gabrilowitch. His playing is thoroughly musical but does not "invite the soul" like that of Paedrewski.

The Brahms Symphony left much to be desired, but the "Tannhauser Overture," while not revealing the delicious nouances brought out under the magic baton of Von Schuck, was nevertheless very beautifully rendered.

An enthusiastic audience recalled the soloist half a dozen times or more, while Mr. Geucke received also hearty applause.

THE SUN, FRIDAY,

DECEMBER 14, 1900.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The Second Concert a Brilliant Affair—Gabrilowitsch Plays.

It is not the "Tenth" symphony, and it is not Beethoven, as some would have us believe, the wonderful C minor symphony of Johannes Brahms, played last night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall. It is the first symphonic work of its composer, despite its high opus number. But Brahms, like Flaubert and Tolstoi, waited until the wisdom of the middle years before he attempted masterpieces) And this C minor symphony is a masterpiece! And it owes more to Brahms than to Beethoven! The composer was unfortunate enough to fall upon critical times, when he was set up as a straw man by the Wagnerites and as an icy statue of perfection by the classicists. He belongs to neither party.

The opening of this symphony—surely one of the most poignant pages in symphonic literature, and one that Tschaikowsky did not fail to profit by in the sombre last movements of his sixth symphony—this same introduction should prove to all who have ears and imaginations that another great romanticist is born. And it is the irony of the years, that Brahms and not Schumann—his forerunner—should bear the Beethovian sceptre.

Emotionally intense is that great first allegro, but above all its emotion rules the omniscient brain of its creator. The passion is less intinate than epical; yet it conforms sufficiently to the larger symphonic types in being both individual and typical. In no one bar is there a hint of the academic, of fugue fiddling, of dreary development for the sake of mere music-making. Brain, heart and temperament rule this work, which melodically, rhythmically, intellectually and emotionally is the profoundest of Brahms—with the possible exception of the fourth symphony in E minor.

But critically tag a composer and he becomes like the dog with the bad name. Brahms—even by musicians who should be better critics—is labelled dry, when the great heart and throat of the man is bursting with melody, fresh, noble, serene, melody, melody as green as Earth in spring time. Weingartner, who adores the externalism of Berlioz, finds Brahms scholastic. But Weingartner is a virtuoso conductor who must make his points brilliant with an orchestra, else become dull. Those who love the strong meat and drink of music will go to Brahms for nourishment, nourishment denied them at the Barmecide's feast of the color-hysteria school. And Brahms, the Brahms of the C minor syphony, is not Boethoven, formally or thematically, despite the occasional resemblances.

The next most interesting symphonic number was an orchestral poem by Bedrich Smetana, Bohemia's greatest composer, and the master of Dvorak and Fibich. The late Anton Seidl made our public famaliar with several excerpts from Smetana's "My Country," "Vyeehrad" and "Vltava" have been heard here—if memory is not at fault. The selection Mr. Gericke read last night was the fourth of the set. It is called "From Bohemia's Groves and Meadows" and proved to be a fascinating mosaic of melodies, strongly tinged by Czech color and rhythms Here one may fairly revel in the atmosphere of a lovely romantic land.

There is almost a bacchanalian energy present and the large sweet picture is framed by a never-ceasing ryhthmic life and a flow of pure pastoral tunes. One begins to understand the genesis of much that was believed to be virginal with Dvorak. There is the same naiveté, rich, harmonic sense and an orchestral eloquence that is positively haunting. The composition does not aspire to the higher symphonic forms; it is all free, though a definite pattern is felt throughout.

The solo performer of the evening was Ossip Gabrilowitsch, who played the piano part of Schumann's charming concerto in A minor for piano and orchestra. The young Russian virtuoso was in the best of moods and gave his audience a most poetic and finished interpretation of the favorite composition. The last time it was played here was when Theodore Thomas visited New York with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Rafael Joseffy took the solo part on that occasion. Yet this concerto is of such musical magnitude that it could be heard every season without palling.

It need not be added that M. Gabrilowitsch accorded to its poetic and fantastic measures full justice. Despite three or four slight technical slips his playing was characterized by refinement, delicacy, deep feeling in the intermezzo and brilliancy in the vivacious finale. He was recalled half a dozen times, but wisely refused an encore.

The "Tannhauser" overture—which is now of such artistic age that it sounds better in concert than in opera—was just one number too many in a programme packed with good things. It was sonorously played. Indeed Mr. Gericke and his band from Boston set a new standard for themselves. The orchestra was vital from beginning to end, and what with the intellectual variety and absolutely sensuous beauty of tone displayed the entire concert may be set down as one of the most brilliant ever given by this organization in New York. The second concert of the week occurs to-morrow afternoon.

The [illegible]

"All the News That's Fit to Print."

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.

NEW YORK, FRIDAY, DEC. 14, 1900.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA.

Second Concert of Its Fifteenth Season in This City.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the second concert of its fifteenth season in this city at Carnegie Hall last night. The audience was one of that kind which is now familiar at these concerts. It comprised the best elements of musical appreciation to be found in this metropolis, and when those elements are assembled they make something worth consideration even by those other cities which regard New York as the unmentionable place. The programme performed last evening was one characteristic of the catholic taste of Mr. Gericke and the adaptability of his men. It consisted of the first symphony of Brahms, the piano concerto of Schumann, the fourth part of Smetaña's cycle of symphonic poems descriptive of his native land, the part entitled "From Bohemia's Groves and Meadows," and the overture to "Tannhäuser." The solo performer in the piano concerto was young Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the Russian.

That this programme afforded a fine and stimulating variety of styles must be apparent to the merest tyro in musical art. Yet it was all of the romantic epoch, and so kept the hearer constantly in the receptivity of a succession of emotional states. At the same time, it cannot be said that there was no appeal to the intellect, for the Brahms symphony is not to be heard with comfort by the light-minded. It is a profound work, and it has its puzzling passages. The last movement, for example, is not to be grasped with facility at a single hearing. But these are not the days of puzzles in Brahms. Most of his great works are thoroughly well known to this public, and at a Boston Symphony concert one may count upon finding all the "Brahmsianer" in their purple and fine linen.

They had a feast of reason and a flow of soul last night. The orchestra has never played anything better here than it played the symphony. Its tone was full of lush mellowness, while at the same time it was so sonorous and so rich in muscularity that it quite satisfied the tonal sense. In phrasing, attack, precision, and unanimity the orchestra was at its best in the performance of the first number. The finale was genuinely inspiring. And what a lovely, sympathetic, and poetic reading it was that Mr. Gericke gave us! Sometimes we have little joy of this conductor's meditative interpretations, but he was filled with the divine afflatus when he studied this C minor symphony of Brahms, a work which must lie close to his heart, or he could never have breathed the breath of life into his reading as he did last night. The audience was quick to perceive the excellence of his work, and the applause for it was loud and long.

The Smetana composition has not been heard here very recently, and not often at any period. It is a rich color picture, in which the composer lets loose the pigments of the modern orchestral palette upon a set of themes evidently borrowed from the National storehouse or made in imitation of some of its contents. It is a bright, genial, highly tinted work, sunny in mood, and easy to hear because it calls for no penetrative analysis. Such music, music of the mead, the dance, and the holiday faring, gives a most effective contrast when two such introspective numbers as the Brahms symphony and the Schumann piano concerto are on the programme. The work was admirably played, but the performance of it did not efface the impression made by that of the Brahms music.

In the Schumann concerto Mr. Gabrilowitsch was heard at his best. Honesty compels the addition that he was also heard at his worst. His conception of the entirety of the composition was Mendelssohnian. It was most polite and gentlemanlike. There was nothing in it to "bring the blush of shame to the cheek of modesty." Certainly not many listeners could ever before have heard such a tame and deliberate performance of the last movement. The first movement was better done, and parts of it the young man played excellently, for example, the cadenza, which, though devoid of the proper brilliancy, was done with intimacy of detail and a nice appreciation of its song-like quality. The slow movement was read commendably, but there was a want of atmosphere in it. The corners of the nuances were too much in evidence. The thing did not flow; it did not sing. But this methodic articulation of a melody is one of Gabrilowitsch's idiosyncracies. He may get over it when he assumes more authority. The orchestra and he were at odds not a little of the time in the concerto, and this made the entire performance deficient in smoothness.

Telegram.

The number of copies of the Evening Telegram printed yesterday was 128,400

NEW YORK, FRIDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1900.

Boston Symphony Concert.

Conducted by Mr. William Gericke, the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its second concert of the season in New York at Carnegie Hall last night.

There was a large and enthusiastic audience to give the usual royal welcome to Mr. Gericke and the orchestra, all of whom are as popular here as in the Hub. Special favorites in the orchestra were singled out for nods of recognition, responded to by answering nods or the abrupt little wave of the hand known as the "Roosevelt."

The concert opened with Brahms Symphony No. 1, in C minor, with which all music lovers are familiar.

It is said to be this symphony which brought Brahms fame. It is very profound and in his most characteristic vein, in spite of which, or because of which, no doubt, it is sometimes called "the tenth symphony," in allusion to Beethoven's nine.

Under Mr. Gericke's able direction the orchestra gave it a most artistic and sympathetic rendering.

In contrast to this heavy symphony was the delicate and fascinating symphonic poem, "From Bohemia's Groves and Meadows," by Bedrich Smetana. As the name suggests, the orchestration is all sunshine and flowers, lisping leaves and singing birds—a joyous, ecstatic hymn of nature.

The soloist of the evning was Mr. Ossip Gabrilowitsch, who, accompanied by the orchestra, played the Schurmann Concerto in A minor.

Mr. Gabrilowitsch was warmly received and enthusiastically recalled half a dozen times at the end.

He is quite the latest musical importation and a protege, it is alleged, of Mark Twain, who "discovered" him in Europe and saw a future for him here. He was presented last night, after his third or fourth recall, with a large laurel wreath, the gift, it was said, of "Mrs. Mark Twain."

Mr. Gabrilowitsch is not a second Paderewski but his wonderful technique is enhanced by great delicacy of touch and a sympathetic one-ness with his composer, which is somewhat rare and indicative of true musical insight. His personality is interesting and makes itself felt. He aroused the greatest enthusiasm and is destined to have a vogue.

The concert ended with the overture to "Tannhauser."

At the next concert, announced for Saturday afternoon, December 15, Mr. Franz Kneisch will be the soloist.

New-York Daily Tribune.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1900.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Mr. Gericke disclosed his conservative disposition not only in the readings which he gave to the music at the second concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall last night, but in the choice of the music itself. There was only one quasi novelty on the programme (No. 4 of the set of symphonic poems with which Smetana attempted to give musical delineation and celebration to the glories of his native Bohemia); the rest was extremely familiar—Brahms's C minor symphony, Schumann's pianoforte concerto and Wagner's "Tannhäuser" overture. These pieces, like the poor, we have always with us; but, unlike the poor, they presented themselves last night in raiment, the colors and fit of which compelled admiration, even if there was nothing novel in the cut. Perhaps there is a better and lovelier mission for a model concert organization than to present lay figures for new fashions in old garments. It would not be a grievous thing were we compelled to note a willingness on the part of both artists and public to practise greater deliberation in musical matters than has characterized the last decade of the nineteenth century. Indeed, if there should be a general agreement to "make haste slowly" at the opening of the twentieth, it would be a cause for rejoicing, rather than complaint.

Mr. Gabrilowitsch, of whom we are hearing unusually much, played the solo part of the Schumann concerto. It offered him no opportunities for heaven storming, as did the concerto with which he added to the disturbances of our continually agitated musical waters when first he came, nor did it deepen appreciation of his powers of poetical expression; but it was played with admirable lucidity and nice understanding of its literal (or tonal) contents. A fine audience paid gracious tribute to Mr. Gericke and his men.

[57]

ELEGRA[illegible] NEW [illegible]

DECEMBER 16, 1900.

GABRILOWITSCH SCORED A TRIUMPH

Feature of Concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

HE PRAISES AMERICAN GENIUS

He Found the Everett Piano the Most Satisfactory Instrument He Has Used in This Country.

Ossip Gabrilowitsch, seated at an Everett piano, was the feature of the concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall last Thursday evening.

The eminent Russian was engaged as soloist on that occasion in accordance with the policy of the premier musical organization of the Hub to present at each performance a virtuoso who is not one of its members.

Franz Kneisel, the violinist, was presented in accordance with this plan at the concert yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Gabrilowitsch played the piano part in Schumann's A minor concerto, one of the most difficult works of the German composer, one which tests the inspiration, both of the pianist and his instrument. Neither fell short Thursday evening.

Responded to Every Effort.

Mr. Gabrilowitsch's fingers were at their most agile, his musical perception at its most delicate, while the Everett before him responded to his every effort, echoed his every emotion. Many of the audience were moved to remark that never before did piano so express what was evidently desired of it by composer and player.

The Russian has become noted for his "singing tone." He has been called the equal of Paderewski in drawing out the mellow vibrance of notes in flowing, pianissimo passages. In none of his previous appearances here was he so successful in this as on Thursday.

The piano under his fingers must be given much of the credit for this. No matter what the skill and soul of an artist, he cannot produce this effect in its greatest beauty save with aid of a perfect instrument.

When playing forte Mr. Gabrilowitsch revealed another portion of his art in which he is unsurpassed. In the climaxes, when the harmonies had swelled up into a mighty wave of sound, the piano was heard above the crash of the orchestra, but just distinctly enough to give its tones their proper value in relation to the whole.

One of the Great Difficulties.

Accomplishing this is one of the great difficulties in playing a concerto, and unless the soloist has a piano of exact reliability he does not succeed in doing it. Remarks to this effect were numerous at Carnegie Thursday, and there was applause for Gabrilowitsch's piano as well as for himself—something quite unusual in this day, when adoration of foreign masters of the keyboard generally makes the audiences forget everything save the personality or eccentricities of the performers.

Mr. Gabrilowitsch will take with him on his trip to the large cities the piano used Thursday. He has said it is not unlikely that he will let it or one like it accompany him back to St. Petersburg.

NEW YORK

DECEMBER 16, 1900.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA.

The Second Afternoon Concert Given at Carnegie Hall.

The second afternoon concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra took place yesterday at Carnegie Hall. The programme consisted of Goldmark's second symphony, the Brahms concerto for violin and orchestra, Sergei Taneyeff's overture to the "Oresteia" of Aeschylus, and Liszt's second Hungarian rhapsody, orchestrated by Müller-Berghaus. The solo performer was Franz Kneisel, the concert master of the orchestra. The Goldmark symphony is an unfamiliar work, though it dates from 1887. It was first performed in this country by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Mr. Gericke, in Music Hall, on April 7, 1888, and was made known to New Yorkers by the Philharmonic Society, under Theodore Thomas, at the Metropolitan Opera House, on Nov. 16 of the same year.

On that occasion we remarked that "not even the remarkable fact that the second movement is written in the awe-inspiring key of A flat minor will save the symphony from oblivion." But we had not counted on Mr. Gericke's early affection lasting all these years and bringing it back to us now. It was worth hearing again, if only for renewing the old impression that the composition shows a native commingling of Hungarian peasant melodies with the splendid coloring and Hebraism of the composer's operatic music. There is a touch of the Czardas in the second movement, and a frank employment of popular melody and popular instrumentation in the trumpet solo of the trio of the scherzo. This solo, by the way, was beautifully played yesterday. The scherzo is decidedly the best movement of the work. The first movement is well made, but too long in the working out; the second is tiresome, and the third is deficient in ideas. But the coloring is fine, and it is a pleasure to hear such good scoring.

The Taneyeff composition was heard for the first time here. The work is the prelude to a trilogy, the libretto, of course, being taken from the trilogy of Aeschylus. The composer's scheme is easily discerned. The first part of his overture depicts the remorse of the avenger Orestes, who has slain his mother for the murder of his father, and his torture by the Eumenides. Then comes the stroke of vengeance upon him. All this is painted by stormy music of the darkest and most foreboding kind, closing with one of those explosive climaxes used so often when a blow has to fall. Then comes a musical delineation of the new era of peace and justice under the tribunal of the Ephors, established by Apollo and Athene. This gives the composer opportunity to let loose the riches of his upper strings and his harp glissandos. The work is well made, richly and eloquently instrumented, large in its mood pictures, and lacks only the incisiveness of two or three commanding thematic ideas to make it great. But, alas! the deficiency is vital. The composition was splendidly read and played.

It is not necessary now to enter upon extended comment on Mr. Kneisel's interpretation of the Brahms concerto. Few in the audience knew that the artist was suffering intensely yesterday from a headache and fever, for he played with his customary surety of intonation, beauty of tone, and sympathy with this music. He was loudly and frequently recalled for the performance.

New-York Daily Tribune.

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1900.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

There were two peculiarly delightful features in the second afternoon concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which took place in Carnegie Hall yesterday. In the first instance, the delight was caused by the manner in which familiar music was performed—Mr. Kneisel played the solo part of Brahms's concerto for violin with such distinction of style, such loftiness of conception, beauty of tone and exquisite finish, and was accompanied by the orchestra with such lovely sympathy and precision that the performance must go on the records as one of the finest achievements of the season. In the second instance it was a new composition which gave the special pleasure. Mr. Gericke anticipated the Philharmonic Society in the production of an overture by a Russian composer who had hitherto been a stranger to local concert rooms, but who, by a coincidence, will have two hearings within a week. He is Sergei Taneyeff (or Taneiw—the transliteration of these Russian names will soon have to be reduced to a uniform system, unless we are to get into a hopeless muddle), professor of composition at the conservatory in Moscow. Mr. Apthorp, the official commentator of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is in doubt whether the work was written as an introduction to the composer's lyric tragedy, "The Oresteia," which has been performed in Russia, or as an independent illustration of the trilogy on the gloomy story of the Atridæ written by Æschylus. In any event, the themes of the overture were drawn from the opera, and they proved to be full of significant expression and gorgeous coloring. It was an eloquent performance, and the interpretation by the Philharmonic Society will be awaited with heightened interest by those who heard the music yesterday.

The concert was opened with Goldmark's symphony in E flat, which has been very properly permitted to sleep in New-York since it was brought forward by our Philharmonic Society on November 17, 1888, under the direction of Theodore Thomas. Considering the many excellent productions of its composer, it is a singularly commonplace and trivial work. A brilliant close for the afternoon's music was provided by Liszt's second Hungarian Rhapsody, as transcribed for orchestra by Müller-Berghaus.

NEW YORK

DECEMBER 16, 1900.

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Mr. Gericke's offerings at yesterday's Boston Symphony Orchestra concert, at Carnegie Hall, and the manner in which he presented them induced some unbidden comparison with the things of other days. He made a noble banquet of choicest substance, prepared with faultless care by the deftest hands, and yet brought some of his viands cold to the table.

It is to be accounted something for regret that the voice of this splendid orchestra should be so seldom heard in tones of true passion, and that the fine brain which animates it should use it almost wholly in the service of the intellect and almost never in that of the heart.

The subject matter of the programme was admirable, and its manner of performance impeccable. The most important offering was a concert overture of Sergei Taneyeff, professor of composition in the University of Moscow, written upon the themes in his opera, "Orestela," the libretto of which is built upon the drama of Aeschylus. For the rest there was Goldmark's E flat major symphony, Brahms' concerto for violin in D major, and the second Hungarian rhapsody of Liszt.

The orchestra's reading of the Goldmark symphony was a fine exposition of intellectual power and breadth of ensemble from beginning to end. The Mendelssohnian third movement, in 6-8 time, was a marvel of delicacy and lightness and refinement, and a revelation in the things made possible by the frequent rehearsing of a permanent orchestra. This last matter was again forced upon the mind during the most precise and judicious accompaniment furnished to the Brahms concerto.

That artist, Franz Kneisel, gave to his audience a very beautiful hearing of the concerto. His tone seemed unusually pure and transparent, his manner more than ever reposeful and confident. Yet in his work, as in that of the orchestra, resided to some extent the exaltation of scholarship and the repression of emotion.

An adequate consideration of the Taneyeff overture is unfortunately impossible at this time. The composition, numbered opus 6, is the work of an accomplished contrapuntist, in the prime of vigor, who is also a master of all the mechanism of the most modern instrumentation. The score shows, coupled with the distinctive marks and color of the new Russian school, a decided sympathy with the mannerisms of Wagner and Liszt. The course of the overture is taken under sombre skies, among dark deeds, to a tragic end.

It was in its performance of this work that the orchestra, faultless as its technique was, gave cause for the reflections I have mentioned.

PROVIDENCE JOURNAL.

PUBLISHED BY THE PROVIDENCE JOURNAL COMPANY, Nos. 200 and 212 Westminster St.

DAILY JOURNAL—Mornings, $6.00 per annum. $1.50 for three months, 50 cents one month.

SUNDAY JOURNAL, $2.00 per annum.

MANUFACTURERS AND FARMERS JOURNAL (Mondays and Thursdays), 10 Pages, $1.00 per annum in advance.

THE EVENING BULLETIN, $6.00 per annum.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 20, 1900.

SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Debut of a Young American Pianist the Principal Feature.

The second concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given in Infantry Hall last evening. The programme offered fell something short in point of interest as compared with the high average usually maintained at these concerts, notwithstanding the presence on the list of famous and honored names. A young American pianist, Miss Edith Thompson, appeared as the soloist of the evening and produced a most favorable impression. The order of the programme was as follows:

Overture, "Sea-Calm and Prosperous Voyage," Op. 27....Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
Concerto for Pianoforte in A minor, Op. 16.....Edvard Haverup Grieg
I. Allegro molto moderato (A minor).
II. Adagio (D-flat major).
III. Allegro moderato molto e marcato (A minor).
Symphonic Poem, "From Bohemia's Groves and Meadows," from "My Country," No. 4.....Bedrich Smetana
Symphony No. 5, in C minor, Op. 67.....Ludwig van Beethoven
I. Allegro con brio (C minor).
II. Andante con moto (A-flat major).
III. Allegro (C minor). Trio (C major).
IV. Allegro (C major).

The value of so-called "programme music" has often been called in question, but the argument has never arrived at any satisfactory conclusion. Modern composers indulge more freely in this style of composition than those of the olden time, but as a rule they prefer the obviously safer plan of attempting to illustrate moods, to give a hint or two and let the hearer's imagination supply the rest. In Mendelssohn's day the writer of "programme music" felt called upon to depict something concrete, with the result that, the label once taken away, the musical picture might stand equally well for something which was never in the composer's mind at all. The overture, "Sea-Calm and Prosperous Voyage," is a fair sample of these undertakings, and is besides, viewed simply as a musical composition, about the weakest thing that Mendelssohn ever wrote.

Smetana's "From Bohemia's Groves and Meadows," one of a cyclus of six "symphonic poems" under the general title, "My Country," is another case in point. According to the score the hearer should perceive the "lovely scent of flowers;" "cool breezes" should "fill us with inspiration;" "the lisping of leaves and twigs," "woodland echoes," "the festal tones of country merry-making," etc., are all to be found in the music—if perchance you have not already found them and dubbed them something else. Smetana's music, however, is appropriately national in character, and, entirely aside from any question of tone-pictures, has a melodic and rythmical significance which Mendelssohn's lacks.

Beethoven's great C minor symphony came as a welcome change after all this straining and striving. The performance was hardly up to the standard of the orchestra. There was impure intonation at times, notably in the brass, and a lack of that superb unanimity of feeling which ordinarily characterizes the playing of this great band. But players are but mortals, after all, and cannot be always at the point of perfection.

Miss Edith Thompson, the soloist, came unheralded and unknown. Nor can it be said that the concerto by Grieg, in which she chose to make her debut, is a work calculated to please the average hearer. Nevertheless, she made a fine impression, her playing being really the feature of the concert. It is interesting to note, in these days when the hall-mark of foreign study is thought to be indispensable, that this young player is entirely a product of America. She is a pupil of Edward MacDowell, the famous composer-pianist, and a credit to the guidance of that eminent American musician. While something more of power might be wished for in the performance of such a work as Grieg's, her tone is always clear and musical, he finger-work admirably even and smooth, and her whole performance was redolent of musical intelligence and poetic feeling. She was recalled several times at the close of the concerto.

There was a large attendance, and, as at the first concert, many late comers. It is evidently not yet fully understood that the concerts this season begin at 7:45, instead of at 8, as in years past. The third concert of the series will be given on Wednesday evening, Jan. 23.

[60]

Boston Journal.

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 23, 1900.

SYMPHONY NIGHT.

First Performance of Mr. F. S. Converse's "Festival of Pan," a Romance for Orchestra—Tiresome Music by Handel.

The program of the 8th Symphony concert, which was given last night in Symphony Hall, Mr. Gericke, conductor, was as follows:

Water Music.....Handel
"The Festival of Pan".....F. S. Converse (New.)
Symphony No. 5.....Tschaikowsky

Mr. Apthorp says in the Program-Book that the date of Handel's "Water Music" is not known. "It was either 1715 or 1716." He admits that it was "played on the Thames, in boats, at a water party given by the King."

As a matter of fact, both Chrysander and Schoelcher give the probable date as Aug. 22, 1715. James Peller Malcolm thus describes the festivity in his "Anecdotes of the Manners and Customs of London During the 18th Century":

"The King, the Prince and Princess of Wales, and a large party of nobility, went in barges with music from White Hall to Limehouse. When they returned in the evening the captains of shipping suspended lanterns in their rigging, and the houses on both sides of the river were illuminated, and incredible number of boats filled with spectators attended the royal party, and cannons were continually fired during the day and evening." Hanslick gives 1717 as the date, but does not name his authority. He is mistaken, because in 1717 Handel was not in England. The Water Music, however, may have been repeated that year.

I do not like to keep picking at my friend, Mr Apthorp, all the time, but inasmuch as he is the compiler of the Program-Book, which is advertised as for sale and to be sent by mail each week to any subscriber, he has a high and holy mission; and he should take more pains in his statements of fact. Thus, I find this sentence in the same Program-Book: "The passage quoted refers to the horn, the instrument often known (and Heaven only knows why!) as the 'French horn'."

Heaven probably does know; but there are others. Thus, I read on page 238 of Stainer & Barrett's "Dictionary of Musical Terms," a book that is within reach of the humblest: "The horn, sometimes called the French horn, to distinguish it from the English horn (cor Anglais), which is altogether a different instrument." And yet Mr. Apthorp, in the same paragraph, complains of the insufficiency of dictionaries!

This Water music, they all say, made peace between George I. and Handel, who had treated the King when he was only Elector of Hanover in a shabby manner The go-between was the Baron Kilmanseck—who was possibly a forbear of Miss Kilmansegg of the precious leg. He requested Handel to write some music for the King's water-picnic. The monarch heard the music, and he exclaimed: "Vot a surprise!" At any rate his heart was touched, and he forgave Handel.

You perhaps remember the inscription written by Thackeray for a statue of George I.

"He preferred Hanover to England,
He preferred two hideous mistresses
To a beautiful and innocent wife.
He hated Arts and despised Literature;
But he liked train-oil in his salads,
And gave an enlightened patronage to bad oysters.
And he had Walpole as a Minister:
Consistent in his Preference for every kind of Corruption."

Pray, what was Mr. Gericke thinking of when he pulled down from the shelf and dusted this tiresome, barren music? This is Christmas week, and even last evening somewhere bands were playing and somewhere hearts were light. One antiquarian tells us that this Water music is the first work by Handel in which the French horn is to be met with; but even this fact—if it be a fact—did not console me. Handel is one of the most imposing figures in the history of music. Master of choral effects, and one of the few great melodists, his genius was not shown in orchestral writing except in some queer experiments that were far ahead of his time. But who was writing orchestral music in 1715 that would be tolerable today save in the way of curiosity? Bach was then a court musician at Weimar. Mr. Gericke may have put this Water music on the program to serve an educational purpose, to show how orchestral music had developed; or perhaps as a study in tonic and dominant; or possibly out of kindness to Mr. Converse, whose piece came next.

* * *

Mr. Converse's Romance is one of three Scenes for orchestra. He was prompted to this music by Keat's "Endymion." The Scene played last night is entitled "The Festival of Pan." Mr. Apthorp says "the composer has kept to himself what parts of Keat's poem he has taken his inspiration from." This reminds me of the old story of the Cambridge (England) undergraduate who in a spirit of scientific investigation asked "What are Keats?" And yet there are allusions to Pan in the poem, and there is a choral hymn to Pan that has been admired.

This piece is a marked advance on the excerpt from Mr. Converse's symphony that was played at a preceding concert and also on his sonata for violin and piano, which he was rash enough to publish. "Rash"—because the sonata is distinctly pupil's work. The Romance is interesting throughout; it is full of color; it shows feeling, yes, imagination. The themes are not of striking originality, and here and there is a Siegfried mood, a Tristan mood; but the composer has plenty to say for himself; in fact, it is surprising that there is not more constant reminiscence. For in music as in literature, the young man has his idols to whom he pays the honest tribute of imitation. For a long time, try as he would, Robert Louis Stevenson could not forget Montaigne, Sir Thomas Browne, or Walt Whitman. Their words, their manner of expression had become a part of him. In Mr. Converse's Romance there is much that is suggestive of out-doors, of sun and field, and cave and forest and rough rejoicing. There are pages of true beauty; there is, throughout the work, the expression of a refined and vigorous thinker. He is not afraid to employ the resources of the full orchestra, [illegible] he does not find it should be constantly chattering. There is more in the Romance than the parochial thought of a German music-school; the composer has even crossed the boundaries of Germany. I believe that Mr. Converse will write still more authoritative music; that he will speak thematically with greater self-confidence. Then when he writes in romantic spirit, he will not find it necessary to hint at the fugal form; his scholarship will be taken for granted. And then he will knit his episodes closer together. He has color and imagination; and these are two most desirable qualities.

* * *

Tschaikowsky's fifth symphony was for a long time in Russia placed below the fourth, which is more distinctively Russian in feeling. Not till Mr. Nikisch led it in St. Petersburg was it regarded at its true value, and it was Mr. Nikisch who first brought it out in Boston. Afterward it was led by Mr. Paur and Mr. Kneisel. Last night it was played with dramatic spirit as well as with finesse. Mr. Gericke read it sympathetically, and with an intensity of emotion, especially in the second movement, that often has been absent in his interpretation of works of the ultra-modern school.

Berezovsky claims that the symphony treats of "some dark spiritual experience, some heavy condition of a mind torn by importunate memories which have poisoned existence;" but that the finale is as though "the heart had cast off a load of suffering and God's world shone out bright once more." It is not necessary to accept this program for enjoyment. The symphony is crowded with haunting themes, with beauties of detail; and there are pages of defiant, irresistible passion. There are also marvelous effects gained by the simplest means. There are spectral bassoons and clarinets, as melancholy shapes standing by some black and slimy pool.

Philip Hale.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, DEC. 23, 1900.

EIGHTH SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The novelty on the eighth Symphony program was a romance for orchestra, entitled "The Festival of Pan," written by a Boston composer, Mr F. S. Converse, who previously had found representation at the Symphony concerts in January, 1899, when Mr Gericke conducted a movement from Mr Converse's D minor symphony. The newer work is the first of three romances suggested by portions of Keats' "Endymion" and shows in musical form the contrast between the sadness of Endymion and the joyous festival of Pan. It may be called an extreme contrast in tonal coloring and the boldness of the orchestration strikes one at first as being almost uncanny. The composer has utilized nearly all the resources of the modern orchestra in depicting the orgies of Pan, and the effect upon the ear is certainly that intended by the writer.

It is a Bacchanalian festival, without a doubt, interrupted at intervals by the more lucid melodies and the somber themes, illustrating Endymion's melancholy, and from the nature of the romance it is difficult, after a single hearing, to analyze the work. The orchestration is very full, and shows a comprehension of the capabilities of the different instruments, each contingent being skilfully handled in the score. Mr Converse is never trivial, although he may not at all times be lucid; but his composition evidently is one of merit, and should prove interesting to musicians of the higher order. The audience was very demonstrative in applause, and deservedly so, for the young man gives promise of adding his name to the list of scholarly American composers.

The "Water Music" of Handel sounded old-fashioned, and aside from the splendid team work of the symphony men calls for no special mention. The duets and "conversations" given to the different instruments were splendidly played, the harmony being perfect, with the lights and shades in accord and the rhythm is true unison. The Tchaikowsky fifth symphony was very impressive, and from the slow introduction of the first part up to the fortissimo finale, with its great staccato chords, the interpretation was up to the orchestra's standard.

Mr Franz Kneisel will be the soloist this week, playing Brahm's D major concerto for violin. The other numbers will comprise Beethoven's overture, "Coriolanus," "Mephisto Waltz," Liszt and Mozart's second symphony.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

Established 1813.

The Official Paper of the State.

The Official Paper of the City.

MONDAY MORNING, DEC. 24, 1900.

The concert of Saturday began with six numbers from Handel's "Water Music". The concert was purely orchestral and these antiques occupied one-third of the programme. They were read in a duly conservative manner, and contrasted strangely with the ultra-modern music which followed. This music was written with a view to the reconcilation of the king, George I., with his truant composer, Handel, who had left his service in Hanover, on furlough, and found England so pleasant that he did not return. We can imagine the musician's feelings when his former master was suddenly placed upon the English throne. Handel's friend, Baron Kilmanseck undertook to rearrange matters, and on the king's making a pleasure trip up the Thames, contrived to have a boat near the royal barge discoursing original and beautiful music. The king's attention was attracted, he was charmed with the mellifluous numbers, invited the composer to the barge and forgave him his desertion.

Possibly if we were upon an East Boston ferry-boat, with the entire symphony orchestra following us across the harbor in a commodious scow, playing this music, we might be similarly impressed, might send for Mr. Gericke and forgive him for playing Cowen's Idyllic Symphony and fall upon his neck with deep emotion; but under ordinary cumstances, in Symphony Hall, with a lot of modern compositions waiting for a chance to appear upon the programmes, we found the numbers rather tepid and unnecessary.

It was interesting, in the "Water Music", to note the prominent use made of the horn; this was because the music was intended for an out-door festival; at that time the horn was deemed a rough instrument, not at all suited to the concert room, and when Handel subsequently used it in regular concerts he was attacked roundly for using such a vulgar effect,—which all seems very strange when the tender and romantic tone-color of the instrument is remembered. Of course there was a large amount of oboe-playing in the work, for this double-reed instrument was overused by the 17th and 18th century composers.

Now followed a romance for the orchestra, entitled "The Festival of Pan", by a resident composer, Mr. Frederick Shepherd Converse. If anyone imagined that because Pan was celebrated there was to be a large degree of sylvan music, pandean pipes, oboes, musettes, etc., they were soon deceived, for there was broad and heavy scoring and there were mighty climaxes which showed the modern master. But there was also a degree of vagueness that made parts of the composition difficult to follow, nor could we quite understand Endymion voicing his melancholy in a fugato (the work was inspired by "Endymion"); as well expect mathematics in Swinburne as counterpoint in Keats. Yet the dignity of the work reflects well the stately invocation of the poet,—

"Oh thou whose mighty palace-roof doth hang
From jagged trunks, and overshadoweth
Eternal whispers, glooms, the birth, life, death
Of unseen flowers in heavy peacefulness;
Who lovest to see the hamadryads dress
Their ruffled locks where meeting hazels darken;
And through whose solemn hours dost sit and hearken
The dreary melody of bedded reeds—
In desolate places, where dank moisture breeds
The pipy hemlock to strange overgrowth,
Bethinking thee how melancholy loath
Thou wast to lose fair Syrinx—do thou now,
By thy love's milky brow,
By all the trembling mazes that she ran,
Hear us, Great Pan!"

The whole great hymn to Pan is Wagner's "Waldesweben" in poetry, and one might wish to have it quoted entire on every programme when that sylvan work is given. Yet Mr. Converse has given a stately picture without copying Wagner, and has joined to the majesty of the festival the melancholy of Endymion, in worthy fashion. The composer is yet young, but has already achieved such mastery of the orchestra that important works may be confidently expected from him; he will gain in terseness and coherency, and will perhaps become more directly melodic. Mr. Converse was called to the stage to bow his acknowledgments amid great enthusiasm.

Then came the crown of the concert, in the shape of Tschaikowsky's E minor symphony (No. 5) which received the best reading it has ever had in Boston. Never have we seen Mr. Gericke exhibit such abandon or glow with such romance! We adhere to our opinion, frequently expressed, that Tschaikowsky is the greatest musical product of that musical country,— Russia; his effects are always accomplished with a surety that makes his imitators seem petty. The utter darkness of that introduction, produced by the wood-wind in deepest register, has been copied by Taneyeff in his "Orestaia", but not with such thrilling power: and just this effect is again present in the "Pathetic" symphony where the weirdest results are obtained from clarinettes in pianissimo (the composer marks "pppp", over and over again) not to speak of the growls of the divided contrabasses. And the glory of it all is that it is not the modern hysterics, not the neurotic pessimism which is the blemish of so much of the music of today, but that nobler "Weltschmerz", that sorrow for wretched humanity, that has existed ever since the days of Sophocles.

Unlike the "Symphonic Pathetique", this work does not end at the tomb but comes to its conclusion with that sturdier spirit which one finds so often in the works of Beethoven, who by the way, never gave a picture of utterly inconsolable sorrow.

The highest music is always that in which emotion and intellect combine; and in this symphony there is a degree of figure development, particularly in the last movement, that proves that musical logic is not sacrificed to dramatic effect. It may have been the effect of mood, and appreciation of music is so dependent upon mood that criticism itself can never approach to being an exact science, but every note of the work appealed to the reviewer on this occasion, and he began to wonder what Brahms might have been had he possessed the emotion of a Tschaikowsky.

[6]

SUNDAY HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. LVIII. NO. 176.

SUNDAY, DEC. 23, 1900.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Handel's "Water Music" Is Heard and Enjoyed.

Score Read with a Fine Apreciation of the Spirit of the Music—"Festival of Pan" Beautifully Played — Splendid Interpretation of Symphony No. 5.

The programme for last evening's concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, in Symphony Hall, was:

Water Music.....Handel
"Festival of Pan," romance for orchestra, op. 9.....F. S. Converse Symphony No. 5, in E-minor.....Tschaikowsky

The account given of the "Water Music" in the programme book by Mr. Apthorp has several errors, the most glaring of which is the statement that Handel went from Hanover to England on leave of absence in 1810. The next error is that after his return to Hanover Handel made a second visit to England, apparently without leave.

On the contrary, he obtained, in 1712, permission from the elector to make a second visit, on condition that he engaged to return within a reasonable time. He was still in London when the elector, then King George I. of England, arrived there more than two years later. After such a breach of duty, the composer could not present himself at court, and by the advice of two noblemen he wrote the Water Music and had it played under his own direction on Aug. 22, 1715, upon a boat in which he followed the royal barge; and not, as Mr. Apthorp says, at a water party given by the King and at a date not known. The King was delighted, and forgiveness followed. Mr. Apthorp says that in 1809 Handel "had accepted the post of kapellmeister to the elector of Hanover," but other authorities place the date in 1710.

These discrepancies are trifles in themselves, especially in the Symphony programme books, which are becoming somewhat noted for similar slips; but it is just as well to disseminate exact information on such points, even down to so simple a formality as spelling Hanover according to the prevailing method. It is scarcely wise to pronounce so brainy a man as Rheinberger a duffer, and then to go vigorously and successfully on a thoughtless career of persistent duffering one's self.

It was a pleasure to hear the seven numbers out of the 21 of which this Water Music consists. It is remarkable how fresh the greater part of it is, and how solid and admirably colored the composer has made the orchestration with the materials he has used. Mr. Gericke read the score with a fine feeling for the distinctive spirit of the music, and with an absence of stiffness in phrasing that might be wisely followed more frequently in interpreting the masters of the Handel period generally.

The romance by Mr. Converse was, it seems, suggested by scenes in Keats' "Endymion," and is intended to emphasize the contrast between the melancholy of Endymion and the joyous pomp of the festival of Pan.

Beyond this no more intimate glimpse of the composer's intention is given. But the work can be listened to intelligently without thought of it in any aspect of programme music. It has much of genuine poetic feeling, is ample in graces of fancy and imagination, is abundant in well devised contrasts of melody and effect,—is strong, richly colored and solid in its orchestration, and on the whole is not without a certain refreshing independence of hackneyed models, while now and then it shows something closely resembling a marked original individuality.

It is in every way creditable to the composer, especially in the realization it gives of the larger grasp on his art of which his earlier work gave such decided promise. The composition was beautifully played, was listened to attentively, and at its close, applauded with great force and sincerity, the audience calling Mr. Converse forward twice with much fervor.

The Symphony, with its lavish abundance of graceful melody, not invariably dignified in itself, but always pleasing and made delightfully interesting by the ingeniously varied and charming treatment, contrapuntal and instrumental, to which it is subjected. The interpretation of the work was one of Mr. Gericke's most brilliant successes of the season, and its performance throughout left absolutely nothing to desire.

The programme for the next concert is: Overture, "Coriolan," Beethoven; concerto in D major for violin, Brahms; "Mephisto" waltz, Liszt; symphony, G minor, Mozart. Mr. Franz Kneisel is to be the soloist.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT

MONDAY, DECEMBER 24, 1900

Symphony Hall: Boston Symphony Orchestra

The eighth Symphony Concert was given in Symphony Hall last Saturday evening, the programme being as follows:

Handel: Water Music (seven movements).
Frederick S. Converse: "The Festival of Pan," Romance for Orchestra, opus 9. (New.)
Tchaikovsky: Symphony No. 5, in E minor, opus 64.

Nothing of Handel's "Water Music" had been heard here since 1887-88. Hearing the seven selections given on Saturday evening once more brought to mind that old, old question of the advisability of giving old compositions of that sort at concerts nowadays. Some of the most ardent and profound students of Bach and Handel have been of the opinion that it is never well to give any of their orchestral, or clavier, suites entire; that it is even well to cut down the "repeats" in their da capo arias as much as possible. If there is one element in the old suites and partitas, in the old da capo arias, which more than any other belongs exclusively to their own day, and is tiresomely antagonistic to the musical habits of our time, this element is their extreme length and tonal monotony. In this respect, they are akin to the old colonial three-hour sermon—once dear to our leisurely great-grandfathers, but manifestly impossible today.

Extreme length is, to be sure, not in itself peculiarly characteristic of the old suites and partitas; our modern composers are surely not in the habit of stinting themselves in the matter of time, and some of the compositions they put forth are by no means short. But in such modern works there is, as a rule, a certain continuity of development which keeps the attention fixed, and prevents the length of the development from seeming tiresome. Moreover, they contain many elements of variety which the old suites lacked; variety of tonality, of rhythm, above all, of instrumental coloring. The old suites were nothing more than series of short pieces which had really nothing to do with one another, save that they were for the most part in the same key; they gave one no sense of climax, one movement did not prepare the ear for the next one, their great length was simply length, without any internal logical reason therefor. And it is this monotony, this length without interior justification, that make them tedious to us today.

All this may seem to apply but ill to what was given of the "Water Music" last Saturday; the whole compositon comprises twenty movements, and only seven of these were played. But seven movements would make a good, able-bodied suite; and the objection holds good with these seven, as well as with the whole of an ordinary suite or partita. The thing is too long, runs too much on the tonalities of F major and its relative D minor. We can in no wise afford not to hear music of this sort today; much of it is very great and beautiful indeed. But it should be given in small doses, as little tid-bits of hors d'œuvre, to produce its full effect upon our modern ears; the time is past for making a pièce de résistance out of it. The upshot of all of which is: Verb. sap.

Mr. Converse's new "Festival of Pan"—suggested to the composer by certain scenes in Keats's "Endymion"—is one of the few works I have heard lately that made a distinct impression at the first hearing. Here Mr. Converse has well emerged from that rather academic atmosphere which compassed the movement from his symphony in D minor that Mr. Gericke gave us in 1898-99. Not only is the work thoroughly modern—even ultra-modern—in feeling and expression, but the composer seems to have fallen into this vein quite naturally, by instinct, and not merely with malice prepense. You feel that there is no artifice about it, but that, instead of the Hochschule graduated, you now have Mr. Frederick Shepherd Converse himself. The thing shows great spontaneity, fertile melodic inventiveness, a secure mastery over musical plastics. This, at least, is my first impression of it. As for its ideal, poetic value, I am still in considerable doubt, owing to one circumstance; I have, to be sure, a shrewd suspicion that there is really a very glowing poetic imaginativeness shown here, not to mention true warmth of temperament; but I am not sure of it yet. What makes me in doubt is that I have also a suspicion that Mr. Converse has not said quite what he meant to, at least not in the way he meant to say it. In a compositon of this sort, the coloring is an element of immense importance; and, in this "Festival of Pan," the coloring seems to me all askew. In other words, the orchestration seems singularly and ruinously inadequate. Mr. Converse has here brought a very large orchestra into play; but he seems to fail to take any real advantage of it. He produces a series of singularly gorgeous hues and nuances, but in a way to veil, rather than intensify, the musical outlines. When Dvorak's "Heldenlied" was played here last winter, I said that the several groups of instruments in the orchestra did not seem to aid, abet and reinforce one another, but, as it were, to scream down one another's throats, and well-nigh cancel one another. I must say that the instrumentation of Mr. Converse's "Festival of Pan" produces much the same impression upon me. The rich, sensuous, gorgeous coloring seems all background; the color is not sufficiently massed upon significant phrases to throw the plastics of the music into relief. The whole picture is seen but vaguely, as if through a sunny haze—à travers une poussière de soleil, as Zola has it—and the eye has to grope for its meaning. Accordingly, though I feel that I am in a truly poetic atmosphere, I am by no means sure of the poetic significance of what Mr. Converse has to say. The composition was very enthusiastically received by the audience, and the composer suggest graphic pictures to me. It is my misfortune that, whenever Tchaikovsky does suggest a picture to me, it is hardly ever a pleasant one." But that is of minor moment. I am not Bouguereu-mad, and it is the vividness and force of the picture I most care about. That finale is simply wonderful; a march of determined, half-savage hordes across boundless steppes, through snow and storm, defying fate with hot curses and ribald jokes, keeping out the cold with Vodka galore, but with eyes unflinchingly fixed upon the final victory! Pity only that the major 3d and 6th take half the vice out of the great theme, and make it sound rather abashed and sheepish when the victory has been won. This movement, too, was superbly, wonderfully played.

I think more might have been made out of the first Allegro con anima; I felt all the while that the thing could have been made to sound quite otherwise, and better. The strumming second theme stood out boldly, with none of its pungency lost; but there were frequent moments in other parts of the movement where unbridled fury seemed misconstrued as inexorable sternness. The rhythm seemed too strict, the great strokes lacked vim. I have an idea that I should like this movement as well as the finale, could I hear it differently played.

The second and third movements leave me colder. In the Andante cantabile, I am still beset by the rather humorous impression of Tchaikovsky's having ordered a Goldmark theme of Raff—as one would order a French waistcoat of an English tailor; the Goldmark part of it is not so bad, but Raff is one of the men one does not care to be reminded of. And, by the way of this, would that Tchaikovsky did not remind one so often of Meyerbeer!—not in this particular movement, but in general. Of all the great men who did the Art of Music doughty service in their day, Giacomo Meyerbeer is the one whom one is most anxious to forget now. Still, to return to the Andante, there is much emotional force in the movement, and no little beauty. The two great interruptions by the whole orchestra are simply stunning; you seem to see Tchaikovsky tearing up his MS. and stamping on it in blind rage (as if the Goldmark theme delivered by Raff had "ceased to please," as the French say)!

As for the Waltz (third movement), O Lord! These Russians have a fine knack at melancholy. When it is melancholy pure and simple, the mere Asiatic blues, one can follow them not unwillingly; but when they try to smile and make the best of it, then the gloom becomes positively inky. This (upon the whole, rather graceful) waltz sounds as if it were danced by a dyspeptic cavalier and a lady with the toothache; it is the very tragi-comedy of "Grin and bear it!" But it is well to play this symphony again and again; if not made of such great stuff as the "Pathétique" (No. 6), it seems to be made of more durable; you do not feel that it will wear out so soon. Perhaps the greatness of the "Pathétique" lies too much on the surface; what is great in this fifth, in E minor, seems to lie farther down, where the tooth of time can get less hold upon it.

The next programme is: Beethoven, overture to "Coriolan," opus 62; Brahms, concerto for violin, in D major, opus 77; Liszt, "Mephisto-Waltz;" Mozart, symphony No. 40, in G minor (Koechel, No. 550). Mr. Franz Kneisel will be the solo violinist.

W. F. A.

The Concert-Goer

MUSIC IN NEW YORK.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Brahms' Symphony No. 1, in C-minor, was the strong meat in the offering of the Boston band at Carnegie Hall last week, Thursday evening. Brahms was surely in no amiable, gracious mood when he wrote this work. It is wrought out of cold steel; the marks of the hammer are still on it. It is strong and solid and massive, the product of a strenuous brain. And yet I repent having accused Brahms of unamiability when I remember the noble, dignified Andante and the beautiful opening Adagio of the Finale. Mr. Gericke read the work magnificently; it was clear, symmetrical, scholarly, yet warm with glowing vitality. The tone of the band never sounded more luscious and entrancing.

Smetana's Symphonic Poem, "From Bohemia's Groves and Meadows" (No. 4 of his cyclus "My Country,") the "Tannhäuser" Overture, and Schumann's A-minor concerto for piano completed the program. The symphonic poem is a genial, highly-colored work, less remarkable for weighty substance than for picturesque and original diction. The concerto was played by Ossip Gabrilowitsch. Again this young pianist's beautiful tone, admirable technic and nervously accentuated rhythms were in evidence; but his reading of the concerto was, on the whole, disappointing. The work was not grasped with confidence, and the dominant note was of an un-Schumannesque sentimentality. The audience was unreservedly enthusiastic.

At the Saturday afternoon concert Mr. Kneisel played the Brahms violin concerto. Technically the performance was as near perfection as seems possible; emotionally there was perhaps less to satisfy. The beautiful contour of the work (one of the most symmetrical and finely modelled of all concertos) became hardened and at times angular. But the Adagio was played with warmth; and the Finale was brilliant in the extreme. It was a notable performance because of many good qualities.

The orchestra played Goldmark's 2nd symphony (an achievement of doubtful value), a new Overture to "The Oresteia" of Aeschylus, op. 6, by Sergei Tanayeff, and Liszt's 2nd Rhapsody. The new work is conceived and executed after the fashion of the young Russian writers, and has its impressive moments, but even with the printed notice as clue it is difficult to determine what it is all about. Perhaps the composer was foredoomed to failure (relatively at least) in attempting an exposition in music of the Titanic struggles which inspired the "Orestes" Trilogy.

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, DECEMBER 24, 1900

Symphony Hall: Boston Symphony Orchestra

The eighth Symphony Concert was given in Symphony Hall last Saturday evening, the programme being as follows:

Handel: Water Music (seven movements).
Frederick S. Converse: "The Festival of Pan," Romance for Orchestra, opus 9. (New.)
Tchaikovsky: Symphony No. 5, in E minor, opus 64.

Nothing of Handel's "Water Music" had been heard here since 1887-88. Hearing the seven selections given on Saturday evening once more brought to mind that old, old question of the advisability of giving old compositions of that sort at concerts nowadays. Some of the most ardent and profound students of Bach and Handel have been of the opinion that it is never well to give any of their orchestral, or clavier, suites entire; that it is even well to cut down the "repeats" in their da capo arias as much as possible. If there is one element in the old suites and partitas, in the old da capa arias, which more than any other belongs exclusively to their own day, and is tiresomely antagonistic to the musical habits of our time, this element is their extreme length and tonal monotony. In this respect, they are akin to the old colonial three-hour sermon—once dear to our leisurely great-grandfathers, but manifestly impossible today.

Extreme length is, to be sure, not in itself peculiarly characteristic of the old suites and partitas; our modern composers are surely not in the habit of stinting themselves in the matter of time, and some of the compositions they put forth are by no means short. But in such modern works there is, as a rule, a certain continuity of development which keeps the attention fixed, and prevents the length of the development from seeming tiresome. Moreover, they contain many elements of variety which the old suites lacked; variety of tonality, of rhythm, above all, of instrumental coloring. The old suites were nothing more than series of short pieces which had really nothing to do with one another, save that they were for the most part in the same key; they gave one no sense of climax, one movement did not prepare the ear for the next one, their great length was simply length, without any internal logical reason therefor. And it is this monotony, this length without interior justification, that make them tedious to us today.

All this may seem to apply but ill to what was given of the "Water Music" last Saturday; the whole compositon comprises twenty movements, and only seven of these were played. But seven movements would make a good, able-bodied suite; and the objection holds good with these seven, as well as with the whole of an ordinary suite or partita. The thing is too long, runs too much on the tonalities of F major and its relative D minor. We can in no wise afford not to hear music of this sort today; much of it is very great and beautiful indeed. But it should be given in small doses, as little tid-bits of hors d'œuvre, to produce its full effect upon our modern ears; the time is past for making a pièce de résistance out of it. The upshot of all of which is: Verb. sap.

Mr. Converse's new "Festival of Pan"—suggested to the composer by certain scenes in Keats's "Endymion"—is one of the few works I have heard lately that made a distinct impression at the first hearing. Here Mr. Converse has well emerged from that rather academic atmosphere which compassed the movement from his symphony in D minor that Mr. Gericke gave us in 1898-99. Not only is the work thoroughly modern—even ultra-modern—in feeling and expression, but the composer seems to have fallen into this vein quite naturally, by instinct, and not merely with malice prepense. You feel that there is no artifice about it, but that, instead of the Hochschule graduated, you now have Mr. Frederick Shepherd Converse himself. The thing shows great spontaneity, fertile melodic inventiveness, a secure mastery over musical plastics. This, at least, is my first impression of it. As for its ideal, poetic value, I am still in considerable doubt, owing to one circumstance; I have, to be sure, a shrewd suspicion that there is really a very glowing poetic imaginativeness shown here, not to mention true warmth of temperament; but I am not sure of it yet. What makes me in doubt is that I have also a suspicion that Mr. Converse has not said quite what he meant to, at least not in the way he meant to say it. In a compositon of this sort, the coloring is an element of immense importance; and, in this "Festival of Pan," the coloring seems to me all askew. In other words, the orchestration seems singularly and ruinously inadequate. Mr. Converse has here brought a very large orchestra into play; but he seems to fail to take any real advantage of it. He produces a series of singularly gorgeous hues and nuances, but in a way to veil, rather than intensify, the musical outlines. When Dvorak's "Heldenlied" was played here last winter, I said that the several groups of instruments in the orchestra did not seem to aid, abet and reinforce one another, but, as it were, to scream down one another's throats, and well-nigh cancel one another. I must say that the instrumentation of Mr. Converse's "Festival of Pan" produces much the same impression upon me. The rich, sensuous, gorgeous coloring seems all background; the color is not sufficiently massed upon significant phrases to throw the plastics of the music into relief. The whole picture is seen but vaguely, as if through a sunny haze—à travers une poussière de soleil, as Zola has it—and the eye has to grope for its meaning. Accordingly, though I feel that I am in a truly poetic atmosphere, I am by no means sure of the poetic significance of what Mr. Converse has to say. The composition was very enthusiastically received by the audience, and the composer was twice called out.

sky's fifth symphony! It is beginning to suggest graphic pictures to me. It is my misfortune, that, whenever Tchaikovsky does suggest a picture to me, it is hardly ever a pleasant one. But that is of minor moment. I am not Bouguereu-mad, and it is the vividness and force of the picture I most care about. That finale is simply wonderful; a march of determined, half-savage hordes across boundless steppes, through snow and storm, defying fate with hot curses and ribald jokes, keeping out the cold with Vodka galore, but with eyes unflinchingly fixed upon the final victory! Pity only that the major 3d and 6th take half the vice out of the great theme, and make it sound rather abashed and sheepish when the victory has been won. This movement, too, was superbly, wonderfully played.

I think more might have been made out of the first Allegro con anima; I felt all the while that the thing could have been made to sound quite otherwise, and better. The strumming second theme stood out boldly, with none of its pungency lost; but there were frequent moments in other parts of the movement where unbridled fury seemed misconstrued as inexorable sternness. The rhythm seemed too strict, the great strokes lacked vim. I have an idea that I should like this movement as well as the finale, could I hear it differently played.

The second and third movements leave me colder. In the Andante cantabile, I am still beset by the rather humorous impression of Tchaikovsky's having ordered a Goldmark theme of Raff—as one would order a French waistcoat of an English tailor; the Goldmark part of it is not so bad, but Raff is one of the men one does not care to be reminded of. And, by the way of this, would that Tchaikovsky did not remind one so often of Meyerbeer!—not in this particular movement, but in general. Of all the great men who did the Art of Music doughty service in their day, Giacomo Meyerbeer is the one whom one is most anxious to forget now. Still, to return to the Andante, there is much emotional force in the movement, and no little beauty. The two great interruptions by the whole orchestra are simply stunning; you seem to see Tchaikovsky tearing up his MS. and stamping on it in blind rage (as if the Goldmark theme delivered by Raff had "ceased to please," as the French say)!

As for the Waltz (third movement), O Lord! These Russians have a fine knack at melancholy. When it is melancholy pure and simple, the mere Asiatic blues, one can follow them not unwillingly; but when they try to smile and make the best of it, then the gloom becomes positively inky. This (upon the whole, rather graceful) waltz sounds as if it were danced by a dyspeptic cavalier and a lady with the toothache; it is the very tragi-comedy of "Grin and bear it!" But it is well to play this symphony again and again; if not made of such great stuff as the "Pathétique" (No. 6), it seems to be made of more durable; you do not feel that it will wear out so soon. Perhaps the greatness of the "Pathétique" lies too much on the surface; what is great in this fifth, in E minor, seems to lie farther down, where the tooth of time can get less hold upon it.

The next programme is: Beethoven, overture to "Coriolan," opus 62; Brahms, concerto for violin, in D major, opus 77; Liszt, "Mephisto-Waltz;" Mozart, symphony No. 40, in G minor (Koechel, No. 550). Mr. Franz Kneisel will be the solo violinist.

W. F. A.

The Concert-Goer

MUSIC IN NEW YORK.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Brahms' Symphony No. 1, in C-minor, was the strong meat in the offering of the Boston band at Carnegie Hall last week, Thursday evening. Brahms was surely in no amiable, gracious mood when he wrote this work. It is wrought out of cold steel; the marks of the hammer are still on it. It is strong and solid and massive, the product of a strenuous brain. And yet I repent having accused Brahms of unamiability when I remember the noble, dignified Andante and the beautiful opening Adagio of the Finale. Mr. Gericke read the work magnificently; it was clear, symmetrical, scholarly, yet warm with glowing vitality. The tone of the band never sounded more luscious and entrancing.

Smetana's Symphonic Poem, "From Bohemia's Groves and Meadows" (No. 4 of his cyclus "My Country,") the "Tannhäuser" Overture, and Schumann's A-minor concerto for piano completed the program. The symphonic poem is a genial, highly-colored work, less remarkable for weighty substance than for picturesque and original diction. The concerto was played by Ossip Gabrilowitsch. Again this young pianist's beautiful tone, admirable technic and nervously accentuated rhythms were in evidence; but his reading of the concerto was, on the whole, disappointing. The work was not grasped with confidence, and the dominant note was of an un-Schumannesque sentimentality. The audience was unreservedly enthusiastic.

At the Saturday afternoon concert Mr. Kneisel played the Brahms violin concerto. Technically the performance was as near perfection as seems possible; emotionally there was perhaps less to satisfy. The beautiful contour of the work (one of the most symmetrical and finely modelled of all concertos) became hardened and at times angular. But the Adagio was played with warmth; and the Finale was brilliant in the extreme. It was a notable performance because of many good qualities.

The orchestra played Goldmark's 2nd symphony (an achievement of doubtful value), a new Overture to "The Oresteia" of Aeschylus, op. 6, by Sergei Tanayeff, and Liszt's 2nd Rhapsody. The new work is conceived and executed after the fashion of the young Russian writers, and has its impressive moments, but even with the printed notice as clue it is difficult to determine what it is all about. Perhaps the composer was foredoomed to failure (relatively at least) in attempting an exposition in music of the Titanic struggles which inspired the "Orestes" Trilogy.

KREISLER IN BOSTON.

Since Kreisler's Appearance in Boston on the 18th He Has Been Invited to Perform the Beethoven Concerto in D Major with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston on February 8 and 9.

MR. KREISLER is certainly a violinist of amazing technic. His clearness and purity in scales, double notes, octaves, flageolet tones are remarkable. His tone is sympathetic, and he sings a cantilena delightfully. He is inclined to take his allegros at great speed, but we have had so much of the "slow allegro" here in Boston that a true allegro is a treat as well as an excellent object lesson to young violinists. If his left hand is nimble and sure; his bowing, easy and graceful and brilliant, also excites admiration. Nor does his extraordinary technic ever lead him into mad extravagance for the sake of making the audience sit up. Mr. Kreisler is always the musician.

It is to be hoped that this master of the violin will be heard here at a Symphony concert.—Journal, December 19.

Fritz Kreisler, the Austrian violinist, gave a recital in Steinert Hall last evening, assisted by J. Wallace Goodrich, accompanist. The program included a Bach Suite, concerto for violin No. 2, by Vieuxtemps; Tartini's "Devil Trill" sonata and Paganini's "Non Piu Mesta," transcribed by Kreisler.

He has a tone of great volume and of wonderful purity, his intonation is absolute and his mastery of harmonics, double stopping and other violin virtuosic tricks is complete. In these respects he seems to be without a superior. The higher artistic qualities were admirably displayed in the Bach number, also in the concerto.

The other numbers served to display all the violin pyrotechnics known to modern artists, and Mr. Kreisler received an immense ovation at the close of the recital. Two extra numbers were added as the result of numerous recalls. In a word Mr. Kreisler has demonstrated his fitness to be classed with the few great violin masters that have appeared in Boston within recent years.—The Post, December 19.

Steinert Hall: Mr. Kreisler's Recital.

Fritz Kreisler, the violinist from Vienna, had a striking success last evening at his concert in Steinert Hall. He played, accompanied by J. Wallace Goodrich, a Bach Suite, Vieuxtemps' F sharp minor Concerto, the Tartini Sonata, and a piece by Paganini, "Non Piu Mesta," in the arrangement of which he himself apparently had a hand.

Of a violinist's technic only a violinist may speak with authority. To a non-violinist, however, it appeared as though Mr. Kreisler were performing incredible feats of virtuosity. In the Paganini piece, for example, there was a bewildering display of fireworks, indeed amazing. His tone in bravura passages is very large, and in melodies it sounded full and at the same time sweet. The intonation was pure, and there was always an effect of admirable freedom.

To turn to the musical side of the matter, Mr. Kreisler played what was of musical worth very beautifully indeed. He did the Bach Suite admirably, nobly, and the concerto he made sound worth while; he was always simple and unaffected. Brilliant he was, too, to a high degree; however, it was all very beautiful playing, well deserving the enthusiastic applause it got from a large audience.—Evening Transcript, December 19.

Fritz Kreisler's Recital.

Distinguished Young Austrian Violinist Heard in Steinert Hall.

Fritz Kreisler, who recently returned to America after an absence of twelve years, gave a recital in Steinert Hall last evening. When Mr. Kreisler was last heard here he was a very small boy, and his playing was then regarded as something extraordinary for one of his years. He is now no longer an infant phenomenon, but a very sturdy young man, possessed of an excellent musical equipment.

He was welcomed heartily by the audience, and a great deal of applause was bestowed on his performance of a program consisting of the following selections: Suite, by Bach; Concerto, F sharp minor, No. 2, by Vieuxtemps; Sonata, "The Devil's Trill," by Tartini, and "Non Piu Mesta," by Paganini-Kreisler.

Mr. Kreisler is easily the master of all requirements of techine, especially those concerning the left hand; his tone is pure; he plays with freedom and surety and with fine expression and sincerity—in brief, he is a violinist of much more than common ability, and his playing is a source of much artistic gratification.

He gave an intelligent and well executed performance of the Bach Suite, and the brilliant Vieuxtemps Concerto was played with splendid dash and fine finish. Ample opportunity was provided by Tartini's famous Sonata for display of his brilliant virtuosity, and he readily met the demands of this exacting composition. His own arrangement of Paganini's "Non Piu Mesta" is a very showy work, fairly bristling with amazingly difficult passages for bowing and fingering, but none so difficult that he did not play them with great swiftness and faultless intonation. His playing of the harmonics in this composition was really superb in delicacy of execution and beauty of tone. —Globe, December 19.

With Fritz Kreisler at Steinert Hall, and the Longy Club at Association Hall, it was but natural that the reviewer should sigh:

> How happy could I be with either,
> Were t'other dear charmer away.

We began therefore, in Steinert Hall, with the Kreisler concert. The new violinist gave a recital which displayed him in every domain of the instrument. The solid classical school, the vein which is often called the "German" school, was present at the very beginning in a Bach work, a suite for four movements.

Mr. Kreisler had the advantage of an excellent accompanist, J. Wallace Goodrich, a thorough Bach scholar and a fine ensemble player. The result was something to be remembered and to grow enthusiastic over. Not a bit of sensationalism, not a trace of overforcing was evident, but a refreshing and musicianly interpretation of the pure style of the old master which was beyond criticism.

Directly after this there came the "Belgian" school; the vein of pyrotechnics and of technical display, as represented by a work of Vieuxtemps. In this vein the artist showed himself as effective as in the higher reaches.

Kreisler has the breadth of an Ysaye, and when he achieves the larger bowing of that artist he will rank with anyone in the world. He is a giant of the violin as it is, and one does not need to apply the stereotyped phrasing of "good intonation," "clear double stopping," &c., to him; he has passed all that long ago. He is a musicianly player and an electrifying one—a rare combination.

To play three and four voiced passages in harmonics is something rare in violin work, something that one associates only with that violin demon, Paganini. Mr. Kreisler not only achieved this, but a great many other points of thorny technic, and led his audience up to a fever heat of enthusiasm. The fantaisie on "Non piu Mesta" was an overwhelming exhibition of technic, partly evolved by Paganini, partly by the young violinist himself, and was so phenomenal that the audience demanded more with something like frenzy.—Advertiser, December 19.

A Great Violinist.

In Steinert Hall, last evening, before a large and highly interested audience, a violin recital was given by Fritz Kreisler, the Austrian violinist.

Mr. Kreisler played in Boston with Rosenthal in 1888, but it is safe to say that most concertgoers' recollections of him were rather indefinite. This they can never be again, for he proved himself last night to be one of the great players of the world, by far the most notable man since Ysaye, and in some respects superior to that master of the violin. Kreisler has, in the first place, a technical skill of amazing and phenomenal brilliancy; nothing is too difficult, and everything appears to be done with the utmost ease—the true test of virtuosity. He has a broad, strong, eloquent tone, and above all a deep and potent something that stirs and thrills the emotions as no player of late has been able to do. In short, he stands among the first in the world.

Kreisler is not merely a player of astounding technic and fiery emotion. He is, too, a musician of solid and dignified attainments, as his noble playing of the Bach Suite gave ample evidence. The Vieuxtemps Concerto showed him in a poetic and fascinating style, while his superb mastery over the frightful difficulties of the "Devil's Trill" was something never to be forgotten. As if to pile Ossa on Pelion, he gave still further evidence of consummate virtuosity in his own arrangement—I was about to say difficultization—of Paganini's "Non Piu Mesta." In response to most enthusiastic applause Mr. Kreisler played two movements of a Sonata by Nardini. Let me repeat, however, that Kreisler, wonderful technicist though he be, is first of all a musical artist of worth and dignity.—Traveler, December 19.

BOSTON, December 23, 1900.

GABRILOWITSCH played at Symphony Hall last Sunday night (December 16) with orchestra Tschaikowsky's B flat minor Concerto and Liszt's Hungarian Fantaisie. He was assisted by Mrs. Juliette Corden, soprano, and Edwin Isham, baritone. B. J. Lang conducted. Why?

Perhaps Mr. Lang was chosen as an item of historical interest, for he was the conductor when Von Bülow played the concerto for the first time in Boston—the very first performance of the work. There is a pathetic tale of how Von Bülow congratulated Mr. Lang in the sight of the people, and this tale is repeated often by the disciples of Mr. Lang—but Von Bülow was always a mad wag.

I was sorry for Mr. Gabrilowitsch that he was obliged to enter into history with this tradition, for more than once the pianist was seriously handicapped by the inability of the conductor. Had not the players been members of the Symphony Orchestra who are familiar with the concerto, there might have been awkward standstills and re-beginnings. Furthermore, the concert began with the overture to "St. Paul" for "orchestra and organ," and Sullivan's "In Memoriam" overture was on the program. Sullivan wrote it to forget his grief over the death of his father; but it is funnier music than any number in "The Mikado" or "Iolanthe."

Mrs. Corden sang the Prayer from "Tannhäuser" admirably, and it is a most trying concert piece. She was a brave woman to leave the operetta stage when she was young and at the height of her popularity. But she was ambitious to show that she was capable of still better work. That she has worked faithfully and intelligently was proved by her performance of this air, an instance of beautiful sustained singing. While she did not step over the limits of concert emotion, she suggested the pathos, the tragedy of the scenic situation.

Mr. Gabrilowitsch will give a recital here next week, when he will be free from anxiety over the flounderings and perplexities of a conductor. His playing then will probably dispel some doubts that might now be entertained concerning the precise nature of his temperament.

There is no doubt at present, however, about the beauty of his touch, the liquid charm of his melodic phrase, the crystal clearness of his runs, the brilliance of his ornamentation. His rhythmic sense is well developed, and, the Lord be praised! he knows that noise is not the inevitable synonym of sound. In him the peculiar melancholy of Tschaikowsky, the melancholy that has been described so characteristically by Vernon Blackburn and "Israfel," finds a sympathetic interpreter. The second movement of the concerto was played with true romantic feeling. The chief doubt to which I have alluded is this: there was at times a strange deliberation in the preparation of a musical sentence, as well as a curious way of treating the sentence; an investigating, an analytical manner, when you might naturally expect loosened reins, if not absolute abandon. It is true that Tschaikowsky—and this is also true of several great composers—occasionally approaches vulgarity. Mr. Gabrilowitsch seems to be a young man of unusual refinement; perhaps he feels this streak disagreeable, and yet in admiration of the composer tries to reconcile it with his own musical nature. Hence his unwillingness to crack the whip and join the demon of Tschaikowsky in the chase.

He is an uncommonly interesting pianist, in what he does not do as well as in what he does. He is something more than a man of twilight moods; nor is he merely finical. He, too, is a colorist; but as yet he has revealed himself chiefly as delighting in quiet hues and nuances that are of close kin.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 26, 1900.

The program of the eighth Symphony concert was as follows:

Water Music.....Händel
The Festival of Pan (new).....Converse
Symphony No. 5.....Tschaikowsky

Mr. Apthorp says in the Program Book that the date of Händel's "Water Music" in not known. "It was either 1715 or 1716." He admits that it was "played on the Thames, in boats, at a water party given by the King."

As a matter of fact, both Chrysander and Schoelcher give the probable date as August 22, 1715. James Peller Malcolm thus describes the festivity in his "Anecdotes of the Manners and Customs of London During the Eighteenth Century":

"The King, the Prince and Princess of Wales, and a large party of nobility, went in barges with music from White Hall to Limehouse. When they returned in the evening the captains of shipping suspended lanterns in their rigging, and the houses on both sides of the river were illuminated, and an incredible number of boats filled with spectators attended the royal party, and cannons were continually fired during the day and evening." Hanslick gives 1717 as the date, but does not name his authority. He is mistaken, because in 1717 Händel was not in England. The Water Music, however, may have been repeated that year.

I do not like to keep picking at my friend, Mr. Apthorp, all the time, bu. inasmuch as he is the compiler of the Program Book, which is advertised as for sale and to be sent by mail each week to any subscriber, he has a high and holy mission; and he should take more pains in his statements of fact. Thus, I find this sentence in the same Program Book: "The passage quoted refers to the horn, the instrument often known (and Heaven only knows why!) as the 'French horn.'"

Heaven probably does know; but there are others Thus, I read on page 228 of Stainer & Barrett's "Dictionary of Musical Terms," a book that is within reach of the humblest: "The horn, sometimes called the French horn, to distinguish it from the English horn (cor Anglais), which is altogether a different instrument." And yet Mr. Apthorp, in the same paragraph, complains of the insufficiency of dictionaries!

This Water Music, they all say, made peace between George I. and Händel, who had treated the King as Elector of Hanover in a shabby manner. The go-between was the Baron Kilmanseck—who was possibly a forbear of Miss Kilmansegg of the precious leg. He requested Händel to write some music for the King's water picnic. The monarch heard the music, and he exclaimed: "Vot a surbrise!" At any rate his heart was touched, and he forgave Händel.

You perhaps remember the inscription written by Thackeray for a statue of George I.

He preferred Hanover to England,
He preferred two hideous Mistresses
To a beautiful and innocent Wife.
He hated Arts and despised Literature;
But He liked train oil in his salads,
And gave an enlightened patronage to bad oysters.
And He had Walpole as a Minister;
Consistent in his Preference for every kind of Corruption.

Pray, what was Mr. Gericke thinking of when he pulled down from the shelf and dusted this tiresome, barren music? This is Christmas week, and even last evening somewhere bands were playing and somewhere hearts were light. One antiquarian tells us that this Water Music is the first work by Händel in which the French horn is to be met with; but even this fact—if it be a fact—did not console me. Händel is one of the most imposing figures in the history of music. Master of choral effects, and one of the few great melodists, his genius was not shown in orchestral writing except in some queer experiments that were far ahead of his time. But who was writing orchestral music in 1715 that would be tolerable to-day save in the way of curiosity? Bach was then a court musician at Weimar. Mr. Gericke may have put this Water Music on the program to serve an educational purpose, to show how orchestral music had developed; or perhaps as a study in tonic and dominant; or possibly out of kindness to Mr. Converse, whose piece came next.

Mr. Converse's "Romance" is one of three scenes for orchestra. He was prompted to this music by Keats' "Endymion." The scene played last night is entitled "The Festival of Pan." Mr. Apthorp says "the composer has kept to himself what parts of Keats' poem he has taken his inspiration from." This reminds me of the old story of the Cambridge (England) undergraduate who in a spirit of scientific investigation asked "What are Keats?" And yet there are allusions to Pan in the poem, and there is a choral hymn to Pan that has been admired.

This piece is a marked advance on the excerpt from Mr. Converse's symphony that was played at a preceding concert, and also on his sonata for violin and piano, which he was rash enough to publish. "Rash"—because the sonata is distinctly pupil's work. The romance is interesting throughout; it is full of color; it shows feeling, yes, imagination. The themes are not of striking originality, and here and there is a Siegfried mood, a Tristan mood; but the composer has plenty to say for himself; in fact, it is surprising that there is not more constant reminiscence. For in music, as in literature, the young man has his idols, to whom he pays the honest tribute of imitation. For a long time, try as he would, Robert Louis Stevenson could not forget Montaigne. Sir Thomas Browne or Walt Whitman. Their words, their manner of expression, had become a part of him. In Mr. Converse's romance there is much that is suggestive of out doors, of sun and field, and cave and forest and rough rejoicing. There are pages of true beauty; there is, throughout the work, the expression of a refined and vigorous thinker. He is not afraid to employ the resources of the full orchestra, but he is not brutal; he knows the value of discretion. There is more in the romance than the parochial thought of a German music school; the composer has even crossed the boundaries of Germany. I believe that Mr. Converse will write still more authoritative music; that he will speak thematically with greater self-confidence. Then, when he writes in romantic spirit, he will not find it necessary to hint at the fugal form; his scholarship will be taken for granted. And then he will knit his episodes closer together. He has color and imagination; and these are two most desirable qualities.

Tschaikowsky's Fifth Symphony was for a long time in Russia placed below the fourth, which is more distinctively Russian in feeling. Not till Mr. Nikisch led it in St. Petersburg was it regarded at its true value, and it was Mr. Nikisch who first brought it out in Boston. Last night it was played with dramatic spirit as well as with finesse. Mr. Gericke read it sympathetically, and with an intensity of emotion, especially in the second movement, that often has been absent in his interpretation of works of the ultra modern school.

Berezovsky claims that the symphony treats of "some dark spiritual experience, some heavy condition of a mind torn by importunate memories which have poisoned existence"; but that the finale is as though "the heart had cast off a load of suffering and God's world shone out bright once more." It is not necessary to accept this program for enjoyment. The symphony is crowded with haunting themes, with beauties of detail; and there are pages of defiant, irresistible passion. There are also marvelous effects gained by the simplest means. There are spectral bassoons and clarinets, as melancholy shapes standing by some black and slimy pool.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.
The Official Paper of the State.
MONDAY MORNING, DEC. 31, 1900.

The Symphony Concert of Saturday presented a programme which was not new but was nevertheless very enjoyable. It was to have begun with the "Coriolanus" overture and have included Liszt's "Mephisto Waltz"; but the lamentable death of Roger Wolcott turned the first number into a memorial tribute, and the "Mephisto" was omitted, the "Coriolanus" overture placed further down the programme, and the concert begun with Schubert's "Funeral March" in E flat minor, as distorted by Franz Liszt. It was most fitting to pay a musical tribute to the memory of one of the best-beloved men of the Commonwealth, but we wish that some other than this feeble music had been chosen for the purpose. This is not one of the gems of mortuary music.

The leading works in this field are the march from the "Heroic" symphony, the Siegfried funeral music (scarcely to be called a "march"), the slow movement of Schumann's Piano Quintette, Op. 44, and the Chopin March for piano, the funeral march which had its trio stolen to make a popular song,—"Somebody's coming when the dewdrops fall". Even Mendelssohn's Funeral March, scored from one of his "Songs without Words" by Moscheles, might have made a better effect than this prolix effort.

Now followed Brahms's Violin Concerto, with Mr. Franz Kneisel as the soloist. What authority has the programme-book for stating that this work was composed about 1888-9? And on what grounds does it base its oft-repeated assertion that Mozart died at Salzburg?

Mr. Kneisel was received with a most cordial welcome on the part of the audience, a compliment which he at once proceeded to justify by a most masterly performance. All the technical difficulties melted away as if by magic under his wizard's bow. One can wish for more of emotional power in this artist's work, but from the techincal standpoint there is nothing to criticize,—all is perfection. There is little to say about the work itself, for it has been heard before and played by the same artist; like all of Brahms's concertos it is orchestral in its conception and the soloist must needs be more than a virtuoso if he wishes to do justice to such an intricate web of musical development.

It cannot be called the equal of either of the two piano concertos by Brahms, nor can it hold its own beside the great violin concerto by Beethoven. But it is a work which needs repeated hearing for the auditor to become at all familiar with its subtle beauties, and it needs a musician of Mr. Kneisel's high rank to make the meaning clear by good phrasing, by careful attention to ensemble.

The second movement is the most beautiful and has some exquisite orchestral touches, particularly in the oboe part, which at first becomes the rival of the violin in its obbligato work, and its excellent execution on this occasion demands an especial word of praise.

The double-stopping which is so prominent in the finale, although very difficult, scarcely impresses one as so, and it seemed simple enough, as Mr. Kneisel played it. The final climax was well worked up, and at the close of the work the voilinist was recalled again and again, and was given a wreath of laurel of immense proportions.

The dignified style that had characterized the entire concert thus far was kept up by that stately and heroic overture, the "Coriolanus", by Beethoven. Although the work is not founded upon Shakespeare's play, but inspired by Collin's tragedy on the same subject, it fits well enough to the English bard's theme. Possibly the work by Collin suited the composer better for the terse composition which he desired to evolve, for Shakespeare's version gives more importance to Volumnia and Virgilia, the hero's mother and wife, than Beethoven had room for.

It is a pity, however, that Beethoven did not come under the spell of our great poet, that Eleonora von Breuning when she taught him to appreciate the poets, did not impress the glorious German translations upon him sufficiently to have them transmuted into tones during his later career. As it is, France, which has mangled the literary work of Shakespeare almost beyond recognition, has yet given (through Berlioz) some of the most remarkable tonal interpretations of the poet, and Germany cannot overtop the "Romeo and Juliet" symphony, or the "King Lear" overture.

The overture seemed to continue the memorial service, for the sketch of the great Roman patrician suggested the death of our own, although the latter-day hero was neither scornful of plebeians nor glorying in war, not the "eagle in a dove-cote" that Beethoven pictures, but something better. The overture was read with fire and emphasis that consorted well with its theme. It was the most exciting number of the evening.

A beautiful and most fitting contrast was afforded by the G minor symphony that followed; "The" G minor symphony by Mozart! Not all the military grandeur in the world, not all the modern gusts of passion, the latest dissonances, the newest fashions in orchestration, will ever abolish the charm of Mozart; as well let Swinburne, or Maeterlinck, abolish Wordsworth! To us this G minor symphony always seems more valuable than the "Jupiter" symphony, contemporaneously with which it was composed.

Other composers might have achieved the contrapuntal skill of that symphony in C, others might have written that fugue which so loftily begins it, but no one else in the world could have composed that tender chief theme in G minor, that laughs coyly even in the minor key, or that finale which seems as healthy as a child at play. The reading was all that could be desired, it did not exaggerate, it did not endeavor to find more in the simple work than was really intended by the composer, it did not astonish,—it charmed. And thus the programme ended pleasantly; it gave nothing new (unless the weak funeral march be called a novelty), but it presented the old in well-contrasted and well-executed manner, and therefore the 19th century reviewer ceases his functions amiably.

Louis C. Elson.

Boston Journal.
SUNDAY, DECEMBER 30, 1900.

NO NOVELTY.

A Familiar Program Presented at the Ninth Symphony Concert—A Funeral March Played in Memory of Roger Wolcott.

The program of the 9th Symphony concert given last evening in Symphony Hall, Mr. Gericke, conductor, was as follows:

Funeral March in E flat minor.....Schubert
(Scored for orchestra by Franz Liszt.)
Concerto for violin in D major.....Brahms
Overture to "Coriolanus,".....Beethoven
Symphony in G minor.....Mozart

The program-book made some singular statements, which were possibly typographical errors. For this was the last symphony concert of the 19th century, therefore let us all be good-natured and generous.

Thus the program book of Nov. 24, 1900, announced the fact that Brahms is dead; but the program book of last night said merely that he was born in Hamburg on a certain date. Possibly the compiler has received from Vienna a denial of the first report.

The book stated that Brahms's violin concerto was written "about 1888-89." Then Joachim must be the most wonderful violinist that ever lived, for he played this concerto in a spirit of prophecy early in 1879. As a matter of fact, the concerto was composed in 1877 or 1878.

The book also stated that Mozart was born at Salzburg, and "died there on Dec. 5, 1791." Mozart was thoughtless enough to die at Vienna.

* * *

This concert is one that demands only a passing notice, for the pieces played are familiar to all, and the performance of them was highly respectable. The Funeral March of Schubert was scored for orchestra by Liszt, with other marches, for Johann Herbeck, about 50 years ago. It was played last night in memory of Roger Wolcott. The purpose was eminently praiseworthy, but could not a more impressive dirge have been chosen? The march by Schubert is without any true depth of expression. When it is not dull and commonplace, it is smugly lyrical.

Mr. Kneisel had played the concerto by Brahms three times at these concerts before he appeared last night as soloist. He is evidently fond of it. His performance was characterized, as ever, by smoothness, fluency, elegance, scrupulous attention to beauty of tone, and care in phrasing. He was most heartily applauded, and to him was given the victor's wreath.

The overture to "Coriolanus" was read frankly, without the affections of nuance so dear to Mr. Nikisch. In the performance of the symphony by Mozart, the score that includes clarinets was used.

Philip Hale.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.
SUNDAY MORNING, DECEMBER 30, 1900.
(Copyright, 1900, Post Publishing Company.)

SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The Programme Devoted to a Memorial of the Late Roger Wolcott.

The concert of the Symphony Orchestra last evening was devoted to a memorial of the late ex-Governor Roger Wolcott. In consequence the numbers were of a funereal nature, and while somewhat solemn were grand and impressive. It proved a fitting tribute to the man who had done so much for Boston and the State he so ably governed.

The selections were as follows: Funeral march in E flat minor of Schubert, scored for orchestra by Liszt; Brahms's violin concerto in D major; Beethoven's "Corrolanus" overture, and Mozart's Symphony in G minor. The Schubert Funeral March, an appropriate selection for a memorial programme, was most impressively performed.

The "Corrolanus" overture and Mozart's G minor Symphony are both familiar works at these concerts, and there is nothing to be said of them further than both were admirably performed and were much enjoyed by the audience.

Franz Kneisel was the soloist at this concert, and he was heard in Brahms's concerto for violin, op. 77, which was, like the Dvorak concerto, heard at a recent concert, dedicated to Joseph Joachim. Brahms's concerto was probably written some twenty-five years ago, but the programme book gives the date nearly ten years later, which is evidently an error. This same book also omits the date of Brahms's death, though it gives the date of his birth. This is a discrepancy rather misleading to those who may not be aware that Brahms has been dead nearly four years.

Mr. Kneisel gave a superb performance of the concerto, especially the slow movement, and he was enthusiastically applauded at the close of the performance.

The programme of the next rehearsal and concert will include Weber's "Jubilee" overture, Brahms's serenade in D, the "Waldweben" from Wagner's "Siegfried" and a new Symphony by Glazounow. No soloist is announced.

SUNDAY HERALD.
PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. CVIII. NO. 183.
SUNDAY, DEC. 30, 1900.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Funeral March Performed in Memory of Ex-Gov. Wolcott.

Mr. Franz Kneisel Heard in the Brahms Concerto for Violin—His Interpretation, as Usual, Characterized by Elegance of Style and Beauty of Expression.

The ninth concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra in Symphony Hall was given last evening, with this programme:

Funeral march, E-flat minor....Liszt-Schubert
Concerto for violin in D, op. 77.....Brahms
Overture to "Coriolanus".....Beethoven
Symphony in G minor.....Mozart

Mr. Franz Kneisel was the soloist.

The Liszt arrangement of the Schubert march was performed in memory of Roger Wolcott. There was no novelty on the programme, and the selections are so familiar that it would be superfluous to dwell at length upon them. Mr. Kneisel had been heard in the Brahms concert before. On this occasion, as in the past, his interpretation of the work was characterized by sincerity of feeling, devotion to the composer, elegance of style and beauty of expression. Of the exquisitely pure intonation, the perfect technique and the easy grace and flow of Mr. Kneisel's playing, there is no need to discourse at this late date. He was received with great acclaim, and at the close of his performance was applauded and recalled twice with immense enthusiasm.

It would be interesting to know why an error concerning the place of Mozart's death should be perpetuated season after season by the programme book, in which it is stated that the composer died in Salzburg, when Vienna was in reality the scene of the sad and untimely event. Another thing of quite as general interest and well worth knowing would be the date, either exact or approximately, by which the ventilating machinery of the hall may be expected to do its work properly, instead of pouring in blasts of chilly air that compel those within its path to have recourse to their wraps and coats for protection.

The programme for the next concert is: "Jubilee" overture, Weber; serenade in D major, Brahms; "Waldweben" from "Siegfried," Wagner; symphony No. 5, in B-flat, Glazouloso, first time.

The ninth symphony rehearsal Friday afternoon was made an exceedingly impressive occasion as the programme was in memory of Roger Wolcott. There was an undercurrent of deepest feeling pervading everywhere. A large wreath of laurel was on the front of the organ. The opening number was Schubert's funeral march, which was played with notably fine effect. Mr. Kneisel was the soloist, playing Brahm's concerto in D major. Mrs. George Henschel and her mother, Mrs. Bailey, were especially noted in the front of the house, near the platform, and held quite a reception after the concert when their old friends gathered around them. Mrs. Henschel was looking exceedingly well and as young as when she was last here. Her pleasure of getting back to her old home is evidently very genuine. Others there whom we noted were Mrs. Hall Curtis, Mrs. William Hooper, Mrs. Robert Heaton, the Hon. Charles F. Sprague, Mrs. Albert Nickerson, Mr. Frank Sturgis, Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Stearns, Mrs. Frederic Tudor with her daughter, Mrs. Frederic Converse, Mr. E. Royall Tyler and Miss Edith Tyler, Miss Baldwin, Miss Kenney, Miss Lowell, Mrs. Robert Hooper, Mrs. Zerrahn, Mrs. John Osborn, Mr. and Mrs. William Bassett, Dr. Bigelow and Mr. and Mrs. William H. Allen. There was an especial interest for the Tudor family and their friends the week before, as Mr. Frederic Converse, who married Emma Tudor, had one of his compositions played, which was very well received. There will be no soloist this week.

Boston Sunday Globe.
SUNDAY, DEC. 30, 1900.

NINTH SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The program for the ninth symphony concert was in memory of the late Roger Wolcott and consisted of Schubert's funeral march in E flat minor, the Brahms D major concerto for violin, overture to Beethoven's "Coriolanus" and Mozart's G minor symphony. Mr Franz Kneisel was soloist. A strictly classical program and one which was thoroughly in harmony with the dignity of him to whom tribute was paid. At the rear of the stage under the organ there was a large wreath of laurel tied with the colors of Harvard college. The majestic march by Schubert appeared to reveal added beauties by reason of its new and appropriate suggestiveness and the performance was as sympathetic and impressive as could be desired, every portion of the wonderful score receiving a masterly interpretation. The mournful leading theme by the lighter strings, woodwinds and horns was sung with splendid effect, the trio was given with touching solemnity and the whole work sounded as if Mr Gericke and his men had put forth their best efforts to pay fitting homage to the memory of our beloved citizen.

Mr Kneisel's ideals are so artistic that his appearance, either as soloist or with his quartet, is always a welcome event and this popularity has been gained by his strict adherence to the interpretation of the higher forms of music and by his great skill as a performer. The Brahms concerto affords unusual opportunities for the more delicate work of the violinist and in this line Mr Kneisel is splendidly equipped, his tone being faultless, his fingering impeccable and his sense as to lights and shades notably acute. In his performance, all of which was of a high order of merit, the second movement is entitled to the greater praise, its brilliancy, passion and exquisite cantible being particularly noticeable. The cadenzas were potent factors, too, in the artist's success, their difficulties presenting no obstacles to the player. In the third movement, at the close, Mr Kneisel also showed splendid finger work in the arpeggis and scale passages. He was warmly applauded by his associate players and audience and recalled many times to the platform. The orchestra gave him splendid support.

The Beethoven overture was given with proper dramatic effect throughout the body of the movement and the finale was also a capital example of the pianissimo work of so large a group of players. Mozart's great symphony needs no special comment now, for this orchestra played it, as before, with a precision and effect well known to those who attend these concerts. The more intricate parts in the second movement and the varying themes and phrases in the fourth movement were, possibly, the features in the performance.

This week's program will comprise the Weber overture to "Jubel," serenade in D, by Brahms, "Waldweben" from Wagner's "Siegfried", and Glazoulow's fifth symphony, first time.

—But few, perhaps, in the audience Sunday night, at the performance of the Messiah in Symphony hall, knew that seated among them was Mrs Annie Louise Cary Raymond, who was formerly a great favorite with the Boston public in oratorio, and whose voice was indeed one of the best this country has produced. Many who were present have heard her noble rendition of the contralto music of the Messiah, as they have admired her in opera and concert. In former days Annie Cary's name on a program was sufficient to secure a large audience at any performance. Seated near her on Sunday night was another singer, with whom Bostonians have been familiar, Miss Edith Abell, who had a splendid career in the leading parts in many Italian operas, both in Europe and America, the Boston theater being the scene of many of her triumphs. It was Miss Abell to whom Sir Arthur Sullivan taught his rendition of "The Lost Chord," when she was in London at the time of its publication, Sir Arthur saying he wished to hear one woman sing it as he intended it should be sung, and those who have heard her sing it have felt the power, impressiveness and the deeper meaning of that well-known song as they had not before. Miss Abell has also sung with the Handel and Haydn society—one notable occasion being when Sir Arthur Sullivan was here, and conducted his oratorio of "The Prodigal Son," and also in Bach's Passion music as well as in various concerts.

[65]

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, DECEMBER 31, 1900

Symphony Hall: Boston Symphony Orchestra

The programme of the ninth Symphony concert, last Saturday evening, was as follows:

In Memory of Roger Wolcott:
Schubert: Funeral March in E-flat minor. (Scored for Orchestra by Liszt.)
Brahms: Concerto for Violin, in D major, opus 77.
Beethoven: Overture to "Coriolan," opus 62.
Mozart: Symphony No. 40, in G minor (Koechel, No. 550).

Mr. Franz Kneisel was the solo violinist.

The playing of Liszt's orchestral version of Schubert's funeral march was perhaps as fitting a tribute to the memory of the noble man we have so recently lost as anything else could have been. It was well in the spirit of quiet sincerity and unostentation in which his funeral rites themselves were conducted, the spirit of all others best in harmony with his own. The modest, very intimate little march, full of Schubert's peculiar tenderness and Gemüth, seldom suggesting anything like pomp or "official" circumstances, seemed to invite us all to forget, for the moment, the ex-governor, and lovingly remember only the man. And, if any one felt the lack of more heroic suggestions, there was Beethoven's "Coriolan" overture, as eloquent a threnody, speaking of the battles and struggles of a great soul, as any in music. I doubt, however, if any connection between the overture and Roger Wolcott's name was intended.

There are all sorts of ways of playing the "Coriolan." As the first of Beethoven's "unsymphonic" overtures, it is a composition essentially dramatic in conception and expression; although one of the most concise things of its kind in existence, every note drawing blood, and not a measure wasted, it is as full of suggestiveness as any elaborate modern tone-poem you please. Yet, with all this dramatic and romantic side, there is a formal, especially a rhythmic, regularity in it such as could almost be danced to. Of all the "modern romantic" readings of this overture I have heard—by Nikisch, Seidl and others—not one has seemed to me quite consonant with the spirit of the work; they have pulled it too much to pieces, lost the main dramatic impression through too great emphasis cast upon details. Especially has the prevailing tendency to slacken and sentimentalize the tempo of the second theme broken the overture's back. Compared with such readings of the "Coriolan," Mr. Gericke's last Saturday evening was distinctly reactionary. The whole spirit of the performance was strictly classical. Only in that downward approach of the first violins to the second theme—and perhaps very slightly in the first few measures of the cantilena itself—did Mr. Gericke hold back the rhythm at all. The performance was exceedingly finished, but none the less full of fire, vigor and force of accent; certain rhythmic effects, too often slurred over, stood out with beautiful clearness. It was a reading and performance of the overture such as I have long wished to hear. And yet—Oh, what insatiable creatures some of us critics are!—now that I have heard it, it does not quite satisfy me. I feel it, in all but that matter of the second theme, to be a little excessive in its own good direction. As the more "romantic" readings of Nikisch and Seidl gave only one-half of the picture, this reading of Mr. Gericke's seems to give only its half.

If this overture to "Coriolan" suggest anything, it is a tooth-and-nail struggle of a strong, imperious will with inexorable Fate. Nikisch and Seidl, with their freedom of rhythm, left Fate out of the picture; Mr. Gericke's iron rhythm speaks so eloquently of the inexorableness of Fate as to throw the opposing will power almost completely into the shade. In the one case, we had the irresistible without the immovable; here we have the immovable without the irresistible. In neither do we find any true conflict; the "immortal smash" is left out! As for that matter of holding back the tempo before the entrance of the second theme, this is the one point in which Mr. Gericke follows in the footsteps of his predecessors, though he holds back much less than they. Would that, just at this point, he did not hold back at all! It may be perfectly logical, on general musical principles; but seems to me very un-Beethovenish. Beethoven was fond of bringing in his second themes unheralded, suddenly, as if you came upon them round the corner; they make irruption, as the French say. And holding back the tempo here seems like a "Here it comes!" almost like that formal bow and flourish with which Weber always greeted the appearance of his second themes. Again, I do not like having the theme itself so strongly insisted on, after it passes out of the first violins into the middle voices; look carefully at the score, and you see that this pathetic cantilena is ever trying to come to the surface, but that, as soon as it shows its head above water, Beethoven immediately pushes it under; it keeps constantly beginning, over and over again, but is not allowed to finish. It seems to me that here is a case in which the general rule—that a cantabile theme should always be given a certain prominence over its "accompaniment"—ought to give way before a special dramatic intention.

Mozart's ever-wonderful G minor symphony—a work which, with all its old-time strictness of form, still stands in the very van of modern musical feeling was played about as nearly to perfection as one ever hears anything played; at once musically and poetically. Every slightest suggestion in the score was given its due weight. Indeed, the work was so perfectly played that one could not but feel the inevitable wrongness of the conditions under which it was given; in too large a hall, with too large an orchestra. The extreme string parts, in particular (first violins and basses), had too much tone. As for the two additional clarinets, I could not see that they made much difference. Certainly Mr. Theodore Thomas played the symphony here in this second version some twenty years before anyone noticed it.

concerto was as perfect in its way as anything he has ever done here. He takes the composition in just the right spirit, showing forth all its genial, serene beauty. Brahms seems, upon the whole, to have been the last refuge for the spirit of serenity and repose in music; he alone, of all the moderns, could paint a blue sky. And this concerto is surely one of his sunniest works. Anything so complete as Mr. Kneisel's embodying of its spirit leaves the critic helpless; you can not talk or write better than such playing. Then why talk at all?

The next program is: Weber, "Jubel-Ouverture"; Liszt, "Les Préludes"; Wagner, "Waldweben," from "Siegfried"; Glazounoff, Symphony No. 5, in B-flat major (first time in Boston). W. F. A.

SUNDAY HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. CIX. NO. 6.

SUNDAY, JAN. 6, 1901.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Well Contrasted Selections in the Programme Presented.

Liszt's "Les Preludes" Effectively Given—Weber's Jubilee Overture Played with Spirit—Mr. and Mrs. Georg Henschel Give Their Last Song Recital.

For the tenth concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra, in Symphony Hall last evening, the programme was:

Jubilee overture.....Weber
"Les Preludes".....Liszt
"Waldweben," from "Siegfried".....Wagner
Symphony No. 6, in C-minor.....Glazounoff

There was nothing new in these selections, but they were well contrasted, and, as both conductor and orchestra were at their very best, the performances were steadily interesting throughout. Of special beauty in interpretation and playing was the Wagner number. No more gracefully poetic and finished rendering of the score has ever been heard here.

The Liszt symphonic poem seemed more vulgarly pretentious and blatantly flimsy than ever, and to have taken on a certain beer-gardeny flavor. The rich color and the impressiveness of the scoring are still interesting, but charity never covered any such multitude of sins as are covered by the orchestration of this work. It was given with inspiriting brilliancy, and reaped the heartiest applause of the concert.

An immensely effective performance of the spirited Weber overture was accorded; but it is singular how thin the orchestration of the coda, introducing "God Save the King" sounded. Time was when this portion of the work was considered a tremendous example of massive and stirring instrumentation. That was before the advent of the bass tuba and valve horns, such potent factors in noise making in modern music.

The Glazounoff symphony gains in interest and clarity on better acquaintance, and if it does not probe as deeply as the symphonies of that other and greater Russian Tschaikowsky it proves to be, nevertheless, a thoughtful, solid and well-made work with many points of excellence that raise it above the more pretentious and empty musical jargon that is coming in such quantity from the land of the Czar. The theme and variations are of particular worth, and are of marked ingenuity in effectiveness in both harmonic and orchestral treatment.

The programme for the next concert is: Overture, Scherzo and Finale, Schumann; Concerto in D for violoncello, Haydn; Symphonic Fantasy, "In Italy," Richard Strauss. The soloist is to be Mr. Hugo Becker.

Established 1813.
The Official Paper of the State.
The Official Paper of the City.

MONDAY MORNING, JAN. 7, 1901.

The Symphony Concert of Saturday presented a programme which was of sustained interest and required no soloist to make it popular. It began with Weber's "Jubel" overture written to celebrate the Jubilee of a king of Saxony; a good, roistering, festival outburst which, however, does not depart from the strict line of sonata-form. Its coda is built of "God Save the Queen" masquerading under the title of "Heil dir im Siegerkranz" and celebrating the Saxon monarch aforesaid.

There never has been a national melody so much borrowed as the English national anthem; Weber and Beethoven have both used it, and both more than once; Germany accepts it as her own under the title given above; Denmark claims it on patriotic occasions; and the United States not only claims it as "America", but has used it from the time of the Revolution. As early as 1779 Philadelphia was singing the tune to patriotic words which had been published in the "Packet" that year; then it was sung as the "Ode on the Fourth of July"; and in 1786 it was sung in Charlestown on the occasion of the opening of the bridge to Boston. After all this, Rev. S. F. Smith, at a Children's celebration in Park St. Church, July 4th, 1832, launched the old melody as "America". We wonder if any auditor imagined that the contrapuntal coda of the "Jubel" overture was intended by Weber as a tribute to America!

Liszt's "Les Preludes" may be considered the best of his compositions; each of his orchestral poems displays a certain mastery of orchestration but in this work the ideas themselves are often lofty and poetic and the work sweeps from the dreaminess of a poetic love to the fire of military ardor with graphic power. In hearing the work one is almost inclined to rank Liszt higher than Wagner seems to have estimated him as a composer. The work was read with an abandon and caprice that served to bring out its best qualities. Mr. Gericke has always been a great and estimable conductor but he has never shown such freedom and "elan" in his readings as he is doing this season.

Now followed Wagner's "Waldesweben", that glorious picture of the myriad-voiced forest. This presents in tones what Keats presents in poetry; the 'shady sadness of a Vale" speaks forth in every measure of the opening portion of this work, and Siegfried's longing and pensiveness grow most naturally out of the painless melancholy of the forest. "Hyperion" and "Endymion" present many passages that could fitingly be printed upon this score and show how "Music and sweet Poetry agree".

For a striking and contrasted end we had Glazounow's sixth symphony, one of the great works of the new Russian school. The composition grows upon acquaintance; familiarity, in this case, breeds respect and enthusiasm. We begin to come more and more under the spell of this new school of composition, while new Germany (with one exception, in the case of Richard Strauss) seems to be stagnant or merely imitative in Music, new Russia is giving forth something that is original, at least so far as the concert-room is concerned. It is not too much to predict that the 20th century may find Russia the leader of the world in the large musical forms. She has a race of natural musicians who have studied all the routine that orchestral Germany can give them, and back of this they possess graphic and striking phases of existence, earnest and wonderfully varied folk-songs, and after all the lyrical expression is the foundation of all our music.

In the midst of all the fiery power of this young creator, Glazounow, we find something of form, and an absence of that spasmodic and hiccoughy treatment which has come to pass for "passion" in recent days.

The first movement has not the entire sonata-form but is not altogether formless; it is as clear as Schumann's symphonic sonata-allegros, for example.

The second movement pleases best and its variations of a striking Andante theme are original and powerful. Such variations often call for individual (obbligato) effects, and we had, therefore, some beautiful oboe and flute playing which deserves to be chronicled. The learning of the composer was evident all through the work, not only in some remarkable counterpoint but in a fine employment of the third Gregorian tone, such as might have been expected in old church music of the strictest school. But passion was not tyrannized over by pedantry; the composer's technical knowledge was a means and not an end.

Oddly enough a phrase of the finale was exactly (although with rhythmic change) the chief phrase of Liszt's "Les Preludes", the one which we have often alluded to as being "We Won't Go Home Till Morning" in disguise. But since "We Won't Go Home Till Morning" is a melody that was sung in the Crusades, since it is the chief folk-song of Egypt, since it is French National music and English convivial melody, we may allow it to pass as belonging to the world in general, like "God Save the Queen".

Perhaps the end of the symphony was extreme, and this is the fault of the Russian school; it dealt in syncopations and "takt rueckungen" until one's head began to swim. Yet it was all very interesting nor was it without its touches of learning either, for it had a regular witch's cauldron of counterpoint at the end, a fugato that suggested all things uncanny and weird.

Altogether then a concert above the normal. Sometime we hope that Mr. Gericke may find it possible to give us a programme with the modern German works placed beside the modern Russian, that the two veins may be compared; Richard Strauss beside Glazounow, Bruckner beside Borodin, that might be an object-lesson worth having. As it is we pin our faith rather upon the Russia than upon the Germany of the future in musical matters,—

"Und das hat mit seinem singen,
Der Bayreuther gethan."

The Germans are all trying to make themselves into Wagnerian chromos.

Louis C. Elson.

[66]

STON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

SUNDAY MORNING, JANUARY 6, 1901.
(Copyright, 1901, Post Publishing Company.)

SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The programme of the tenth Symphony Orchestra concert in Symphony Hall last evening was entirely of orchestral selections, there being no soloist. The first number was Weber's "Jubilee" overture, written in 1818 in commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the King of Saxony. It is not as familiar as the "Freischutz," "Oberon" or "Eurayanthe" overtures, and ranks far below either of these in artistic worth. The work ends in a coda for full orchestra, which makes a brilliant climax. The performance was effective at every point.

The two succeeding numbers were familiar and welcome, these being Liszt's "Preludes" and the "Waldweben" from Wagner's "Siegfried." The "Preludes" used to be often played and once was rather difficult for most every orchestra. Today it sounds just a little passe compared with the ultra-modern tone pictures, but it still pleases and brings back pleasant memories of past days. The "Waldweben" keeps its place as among the finest gems in all the literature for the orchestra, and never fails to make an impression, especially after such ideal performances as was the one last evening. The final number was Glazouneff's Sixth Symphony in C minor, op. 68. The composer's fifth symphony had recently been announced for "first time" at this concert, but for some reason the sixth was substituted.

The second movement with the variations on a pleasing theme is of great interest, and the latter movements are among some of the best musical writing one has yet heard from the younger Russian school. The performance was exceedingly fine.

At the next rehearsal and concert Hugo Becker, the famous 'cellist, will play a concerto by Haydn, this being his first appearance in Boston. The orchestral selections will be Schumann's "Overture, Scherzo and Finale" and Richard Strauss's symphonic fantasy "In Italy."

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, JAN. 6, 1901.

TENTH SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The program for the 10th symphony concert offered no great novelty and was as follows: Weber's "Jubilee" overture, Liszt's symphonic poem, "Les Preludes," "Waldweben," from "Siegfried," by Wagner, and Glazounoff's sixth symphony. There were no soloists. The Glazounoff work is strongly Russian in character and as a whole not interesting. The first movement, despite some striking passages given to the brass instruments, has little, if any, musical value and appears to be but partially developed in thematic material, as if the composer had utilized his musical material to its full advantage. The seven variations on one theme, which made up the second movement, were very well contrasted, and the orchestration was elaborate and deftly scored in part writing, and the scherzo and trio of the third part was generally satisfactory in form. The composer was "at home" in the last movement, which typified the dances of the Russian, and although he carried the symbol to an almost barbaric suggestiveness this part proved to be very effective and certainly the most enjoyable of the four movements. There was so much of musical chaos in the score that the performance by Mr Gericke's men is difficult to analyze, and "an evident success in illustrating the composer's ideas" is about all the commendation that can be set down to their credit, although the ensemble work in the fourth movement was superb and the variations were given with splendid precision.

The "Jubilee" overture was given in perfect style, the final coda on "God Save the King," our so-called "America," closing the piece in a stirring manner and eliciting most hearty applause. The Liszt "Preludes" showed the ability of the orchestra in a more delicate field and the beautiful themes were "sung" with a delicacy and grace that calls for no adverse comments. The brasses in the fifth phase of the chief theme are entitled to special praise for harmony and clarity of tone and the whole orchestra was at its best in the fortessimo finale. The excerpts from "Siegfried" were notably good in the illustrations of the "Bird Song" by the wind contingent and in the "Freia" motive given to the strings.

The German cellist, Hugo Becker, will be the soloist this week. The program will comprise an overture, scherzo and finale by Schumann, Haydn's cello concerto in D and the symphony fantasy, "In Italy," Richard Strauss.

Boston Journal.
SUNDAY, JANUARY 6, 1901.

SYMPHONY NIGHT.

Two Ancient War Horses Prance to the Apparent Delight of the Audience — Glazounoff's Symphony No. 6.

The program of the 10th Symphony Concert, which was given last night in Symphony Hall, Mr. Gericke, conductor, was as follows:

Jubilee overture.....Weber
"The Preludes".....Liszt
"Waldweben".....Wagner
Symphony in C minor, No 6.....Glazounoff

Weber wrote a cantata for the festival that celebrated the 50th anniversary of the reign of Saxony's King, but for some reason or other the monarch and his advisers did not like it, and only with difficulty did Weber succeed in having his Jubilee overture, which was written after the rejection of the cantata, performed at the grand concert. This concert was a singular dish to set before a Saxon King; for the program, with the exception of Weber's overture, was made up of an aria from Moriacchi's "Boadicea," a violin concerto by an Italian, a duet by Nicolini, a clarinet solo and a quartet by Zingarelli. It was for many years the custom to write enthusiastically about the overture. The slow introduction was found to express the deep religious feeling of the nation, and the fast movement said, "How happy we are to live under such a beneficent ruler!" And the coda, with the introduction of the Saxon National Hymn, alias "God Save the King," alias "America," was supposed to reach the highest pitch of enthusiastic patriotism. But this overture now seems to be as perfunctory and commonplace as any piece written expressly for an occasion. "The characteristic Weberish rush" leads to platitudinous measures, the second theme is of beer-garden grace and lightness, and the "free fantasia, in which the working out is largely of a contrapuntal nature"—to quote from the program-book—shows the composer panting over his work. The finale, in spite of all the instruments hard at work, sounds boisterous, not truly sonorous. The old war-horse is lame at last; it no longer adorns the procession: it would be better to turn it out to pasture, where it may spend peacefully the few remaining years.

* * *

Another old war-horse, Liszt's "Preludes," pranced last night to the evident delight of the audience. Mr. Gericke exerted himself, and made much out of this music so far as theatrical effect was concerned. No one will deny that there are some beautiful passages in this symphonic poem; but is there not much that is inherently bombastic and vulgar? The pompous phrase that might have been written by Meyerbeer is superior, however, to the variant of "We won't go home till morning," which is repeated ad nauseam. Perhaps Mr. Gericke is beginning to understand the taste of the older members of the audience who do not wish to be vexed by new music. We may expect to find all the old favorites reappearing. Why not the overture to "Zampa" and the so-called "Largo" by Handel?

* * *

Fortunately the latter half of the program was of a fresher nature. It is always a pleasure to hear "Waldweben" with its ornithological detail, and the Symphony by Glazunoff is one of the most interesting of latter-day symphonies. The fifth by this composer was put in rehearsal, but the sixth was substituted for it. Now the score of the former looks highly colored. It is true there are melodic reminiscences, but it would be interesting to know how this composer of indisputable talent treated them. The fifth symphony is much played in Europe and it has excited warm discussion. Why should we not hear it? The sixth was welcome, for while it is not of great thematic distinction, it is exceedingly well made. The Russians seem to be born with orchestral technic, and Glazunoff is in this respect the most brilliant of the younger school. The impression made by the first performance is only strengthened by subsequent hearings at the Worcester Festival and in this city. The symphony is one of genuine interest. Perhaps the delightful and ingenious variations are the feature of the work, but the first movement is full of vitality, and the last movement—were it not for the sop thrown to the Academy just before the end—is exciting. Truly a symphony worth doing.

Philip Hale.

BOSTON POST.
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.
SUNDAY MORNING, JANUARY 13, 1901.
(Copyright, 1901, Post Publishing Company.)

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The eleventh concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given last evening in Symphony Hall. The programme offered as the first number Schumann's "Overture, Scherzo and Finale," op. 52. This work is nearly of the dimensions of a symphony, lacking only the slow movement. It is in many ways as interesting as anything that Schumann wrote in the larger forms, the scherzo showing especially many of the composer's characteristics, which he showed earlier in life in some of his works for piano. The performance was admirable. The other purely orchestral number was Richard Strauss's so-called symphonic fantasy, "From Italy," op. 16. This was originally produced here by Mr. Gericke at a Symphony concert Dec. 22, 1888. As it has not been heard here since then, it was heard by a large number in the audience for the first time.

The soloist was Hugo Becker, a well-known violoncello virtuoso of Frankfort, Germany, who on this occasion made his first appearance in Boston. He was heard in Haydn's 'cello concerto in D, which Anton Hekking, a former member of the orchestra, brought out many seasons ago.

Boston Transcript
MONDAY, JANUARY 7, 1901

Symphony Hall: Boston Symphony Orchestra

The programme of the tenth symphony concert, given in Symphony Hall last Saturday evening, was:

Weber: Jubel-Ouvertüre.
Liszt: Symphonic Poem No. 3, "Les Préludes."
Wagner: "Waldweben," from "Siegfried," Act II., Scene 2.
Glazounoff: Symphony No. 6, in C minor, opus 58.

A good "romantic" programme, beginning with the arch-romanticist, Weber, then passing through Liszt and Wagner to one of the most characteristic modern Russians.

The "Jubilee" is by no means one of Weber's strongest overtures; it was an occasional piece, and the quality of such is proverbial. It had not been played at the symphony concerts for certainly over ten years, and I must say that I expected to find that it had grown pretty old and withered, that the second theme in particular would sound intolerably trivial. I was most pleasantly disappointed. Whatever Weber may or may not be, he is nearly always easily and naturally brilliant; even when his themes are not of the highest distinction their sparkle is unquestionable. The "Jubilee" fairly carried me away; it is not in any sense great music, now and then it is distinctly trivial; but it breathes an atmosphere of festivity; it has an endimanchée air that is very winning and stimulating. Only that last, "God Save the King" apotheosis made one smile rather sadly.

Neither is "Les Préludes" one of Liszt's strongest works. It may be ranked in the same class with his pianoforte "Bénédiction de Dieu dans la solitude," showing us, not the Liszt of the "Faust" symphony or the "Mephisto" walzt, but the Liszt of fashionable operatic fantasias, where succulent Italian melodies are bedizened with all sorts of ear-caressing finery. But, if "Les Préludes" does not show us Liszt in his more serious nor his more modern vein, it has the advantage, not too common with him, of melodic spontaneity, the themes are really very beautiful, if not particularly distinguished. The development, too, is perfectly clear and coherent; the way he makes his theme pass through manifold transformations—from that luscious love melody of the horns and violas to the warlike march—is exceedingly ingenious, and none the less so for being always natural and unforced. Then, the thing has genuine dash and brilliance. It was excellently well played, with great beauty of tone and all due spiritedness.

From Weber and Liszt at their second-best, we passed on to Wagner at his best. That "Waldweben" is surely one of the most exquisite tone-poems ever put upon paper or played by orchestra. Years ago, when Wagner's third manner was newer to the world than it is now, the technical marvellousness of this scene, its unprecedentedness as an orchestral tour de force, so dazzled people that they were rather blind to its poetic essence; moreover, its "realism" was complained of. This last was really no mean compliment to Wagner; his picturesque suggestiveness was so very vivid that people mistook it for realism! Now there is not a tithe of the realism in the "Waldweben" that there is in Beethoven's "Pastoral"; there is not a bird-note in it that comes from any real bird; the strings do not imitate the rustling of leaves. The scene is not at all realistically treated; neither could it well have been. Given the problem, to make an orchestra suggest the shimmering of noonday sunshine through forest leaves and branches, one sees at once that it could not possibly have been solved realistically, but only through poetic suggestion and analogy. The song birds, to be sure, might have been, to a certain extent, realistically imitated, but Wagner wisely made no such attempt. For did ever bird-catcher's whistle so vividly suggest the sylvan song of birds as Wagner's entirely imaginative flute, oboe and clarinet? Then, beside this vivid and beautiful picturesqueness, take the nobility, the utter distinction of it all! Take, too, the profoundness of the emotion it expresses and awakens! The thing is great, all through and all over. And it was played as it deserved.

After this second hearing of Glazounoff's sixth symphony—it was first played here last season—I should much like to have someone persuade me that the work is not terribly tedious. The first movement I found decidedly interesting, even something more than that; but the second and third movements bored me; I found them nothing but dull. As for the finale, I must own that I do not understand Russian; and the movement is not only written in Russian, but in dialect! I have heard admirers of the symphony call this finale the best movement in it; it may be, but it neither says nor suggests to me anything. And, when you find no meaning in a thing of that sort, you find a good deal of not entirely pleasant noise.

All of which tends to show that it was an excellent idea of Mr. Gericke's to repeat this symphony instead of giving the No. 5 in B-flat major, as at first announced. A man does not win a reputation in his own country, like Glazounoff's, without having a good deal in him; and, when he gives us a tough nut to crack, let us have as many chances as possible to crack it. I shall be perfectly willing, nay, extremely glad, to go through the ordeal as many times as Mr. Gericke pleases; I shall even thank him heartily for every chance he gives me. It is worth while to be bored now and then by something you do not understand, it is not painful, like the ennui that comes from hearing what you feel and know to be poor. Let us have our Glazounoff again; his symphony may make a hole in our thick skulls yet.

W. F. A.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER
Established 1813.
The Official Paper of the State.
The Official Paper of the City.
MONDAY MORNING, JAN. 14, 1901.

Saturday's symphony concert was of the usual high standard of excellence, though dobutless some of the interest in the occasion was due to the presence of a soloist. The concert began with an animated bit of cheerfulness in the shape of Schumann's delightful "Overture, Scherzo and Finale." Although the composer always refused to call it a symphony, yet posterity may well take issue with him, for with the exception of the absence of the slow movement the form is practically symphonic. The material, too, compares well with that of the symphonies, thought the brightness of the first movement may be a trifle more informal than the clear-cut allegro of the Spring Symphony (in B flat), or the dignified introduction to the C-major work. Perhaps this may have influenced the composer in refraining from the symphonic title, but it certainly did not detract one iota from the exquisite enjoyment afforded by the piece last Saturday.

The reviewer must confess to an extreme partiality for Schumann. There seems present through all the composer's work a note of direct joyousness, of happy, healthy sincerity that is absent in the subjective intensity of the Wagnerian imitators or the somewhat turgid glory of the new Russian school. Here is no meaningless search after vague effects, but a frank, inevitable beauty, clear and convincing as the music of the spheres. Here in truth one may say, with Abt Vogler,

"All we have willed or hoped or dreamed of good shall exist;
Not its semblance, but itself; no beauty, nor good, nor power,
Whose voice has gone forth, but each survives for the melodist
When eternity affirms the conception of an hour."

and with this tribute the worshippers may cease burning incense at Schumann's shrine, and proceed to the altars of other gods.

The Haydn concerto for violoncello was of the usual straightforward simplicity, and served as an excellent setting for the solo work of Mr. Hugo Becker. That artist played with a thoroughly delightful directness, and purity of tone, and a delicacy that seemed almost "con sordino" in quality. His natural, easy style showed a thorough and sympathetic musicianship, and won him hearty and well-deserved plaudits. One or two hardly noticeable breaks in tone were the only faults that the most sensitive auditor could find, and with this very slight exception the soloist may be accorded full meed of praise. Most noteworthy in the way of technique was his frequent double-stopping, especially in the trill-passages of the cadenza. At the close of the piece he received many enthusiastic recalls.

Now followed the Symphonic Fantasy, "Aus Italien," of Richard Strauss. This work, fearfully and wonderfully made, has been given here before, but so long ago that it was new to many of its auditors. It is a product of the time when Strauss turned from the leadership of Brahms and other guides in the paths of strict form, and plunged boldly into the tonal sea that has engulfed so many of modern aspirants for musical fame. In this case the sea-change is noticeable in its milder stages, and our tonal impressionist did not display the indifference to form (doubtless his admirers would speak of it as a superiority to form) that is so evident in the strongly-painted emotion-pictures of his later years. Compared with the overpowering harmonic thoughts uttered by the metaphysical Zarathustra, for example, the Italian symphony seems well-defined and easily understood.

The symphony began with a slow movement representing the impression given by the Roman Campagna. The sustained, organ-like harmonies in minor key gave an excellent picture of the vastness of its solitude. The device of using long-continued chords to represent the monotone of nature is not wholly new, but is here employed in a most effective manner to illustrate the thoughts of sombre grandeur aroused by the scene. Mendelssohn's calm at sea is cheerful, Wagner's undertone of the flowing Rhine seems part of an unfamiliar world, Borodin's picture of the Steppes is weird and somewhat oriental; but here was a true picture of the brooding solitude of nature. The device of producing this effect is simple enough in principle, and we may soon look for some of our American composers to write a set of minor chords, held indefinitely, to represent the undiluted woe of a gray day in New England.

The second movement, depicting the vanished splendor of Rome's ruins, was more definitely romantic in character. Full of exquisite thematic material, it did not entirely succeed in reflecting the underlying grief that pervades every joy, and was hardly sombre enough to portray the "Melencolia that transcends all wit." The only noticeable suggestion of ruins came in the prevalence of syncopations, that had a destructive effect on the clearness of some of the later themes.

The third movement, more definite in form than the two preceding, was brimming over with dainty trills and runs that bore a strong suggestion of water in their measures, and at once put the composition on the firm basis of programme-music. The finale, too, with its development of a popular Italian song, kept the musical structure on a concrete foundation, so to speak. We learn from it that the Italian peasants are a race capable of great musical progress. They start by singing one of their best-known street-songs, "funicoli-funicola," with fullest fervor. Gradually the harmonic measures of Strauss show them the error of their ways, and they no longer indulge in direct melody, but cut their theme into small pieces and begin developing these into resounding orchestral climaxes with a fervor that would satisfy the most exacting professor of composition. The movement is somewhat lacking in spontaneity, but is not without its effect, and brings the work to a lively close.

SUNDAY HERALD.
PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. LIX. NO. 13.
SUNDAY, JAN. 13, 1901.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Strauss' "From Italy" Ably Handled by Mr. Gericke.

Second Time That the Symphonic Fantasy Has Been Heard in This City — A Concerto from Haydn Played — The Sembrich Opera Company Gives "Faust."

The programme for the 11th concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall last evening was:

Overture, scherzo and finale, op. 52..Schumann
Concerto in D, for violoncello.....Haydn
Symphonic fantasy, "From Italy"..R. Strauss

The soloist was Mr. Hugo Becker.

The Schumann work, one of the brightest and briefest of his orchestral compositions, wears very well—much better, in fact, than do some of his larger and more ambitious works. It could scarcely have had a more sympathetic, admirably colored and spirited interpretation.

Since the Strauss fantasy was heard here some 12 years ago, for the first and only time, very much of the same kind has been performed, some of it so far in advance of this work, as far as innovation and incoherency are concerned, that on a rehearing of "From Italy" one wonders that it should have been so harshly received, for it is clarity itself compared with what has succeeded it.

Indeed, the fantasy, listened to after an acquaintance with more recent achievements by its composer, really sounds melodious, logical and not infrequently almost genially simple. What was formerly considered vague has attained to comparative lucidity, and what was considered deafening and unnecessary noise now appears to be only half noise—massive, rich and compact noise, but noise nevertheless.

The opening movement is not without a certain imposing nobility, and the slow movement has many moments of exquisite beauty that would have stood out all the more distinctly if the composer had known when he had made it say all there was in it to say, and had stopped then and there, instead of padding it out with scraps of mere instrumentation apropos to nothing in question. The sumptuous coloring of the score was splendidly emphasized by Mr. Gericke, and the whole reading of the fantasy was deeply interesting.

The Haydn concerto is a charmingly graceful work. It seems that M. Gevaert, in addition to writing some discreet and excellent cadenzas for the concerto, has also edited it; but as there was nothing in this edition that sounded unlike Haydn, unless indeed it is in some of the more complex virtuoso passages for the solo instrument, no harm has been done the original.

Mr. Becker has a pure, round and velvety tone; a masterly technique, particularly accented by the surety and the fluency of the bravura passages in double notes, and his intonation was, with the exception of two unlucky slips in the opening movement, faultless. His reading of the concerto as well as his playing of it was daintily artistic, and there was a modest loyalty to the composer that cannot in these days of virtuosity run wild, meet with too warm a reception. Notably beautiful in style and exquisite in taste was his rendering of the slow movement. Mr. Becker made an instant success, was tremendously applauded and was recalled many times.

There will be no rehearsal and concert this week. The next programme is: Symphony in G, No. 6, Haydn; arias from "Idorneneo," Mozart; Rhapsody No. 3, Dvorak; "Sweet Bird," Handel, and "Huldidung's March," Wagner. Mme. Melba is to be the soloist.

Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, was filled on Thursday evening, notwithstanding the storm, for the fifth in the series of Symphony concerts. Mme. Juliette Corden, who made so emphatic a success when she appeared in December with Gabrilowitsch at Symphony Hall, and who has recently returned from a two years' stay in Europe, was the soloist. She wore a smart Parisian gown of white satin and with long train, the skirt draped with flounces of Point de Venise and the bodice studded with brilliants. The necklace was of pearls with diamond pendant. She carried a large bouquet of violets. Miss Corden's reception was most cordial and she well deserved the enthusiasm which both of her selections aroused. Among those there were Mr. Hammond V. Hayes, Mr. and Mrs. William M. Richardson, Mr. George Riddle and Miss Riddle, Prof. and Mrs. John Fiske, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Lucas, Mrs. Edgar Peirce, Mr. and Mrs. Charles S. Dennison, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick S. Converse—Mr. Converse's new work, "The Festival of Pan," was on the programme and he was obliged to bow his thanks from his seat in response to the long continued applause—Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Whittemore, Dr. Henshaw, Mr. and Mrs. Frank M. Holmes, Prof. and Mrs. Marsh and the Rev. Mr. Nichols.

The ice-clad steps of Symphony Hall gave scores of women something else to think about Friday beside the playing of Mr. Hugo Decker. It was about as much as one's life was worth to skip down them through the sleet and get the desired electrics. By the way, that "rehearsal" turmoil at the crossway of the two avenues makes the crowd sigh for the subway stations. After three months' trial of this new music hall, far from the centre of the town, "down town," let me add, or I shall be accused of inaccuracy—I have come to the conclusion that surface cars are desperately inconvenient! They are in everybody's way when there's a crush. Standing over ankles in mud and slush, in danger of being run over by carriages and every sort of vehicle, and unable to hold up one's umbrella, is one of the pleasant experiences of the stormy Symphony rehearsal afternoons. Thank goodness, however, it doesn't always rain and snow as it did last Friday.

[67]

...SUNDAY, ... 1901.

...The program ... Symphony concert, ... night in Symphony ... conductor, was as follows:

Overture, ... Finale.....Schumann
Concerto for ..... Haydn
"From Italy" ..... Richard Strauss

This concert does not call for extended comment.

Mr. Hugo Becker, who played for the first time in Boston, is a 'cellist of large reputation, and he showed that this reputation is deserved. He chose a matter-of-fact concerto by Haydn, to which Gevaert, I understand, added cadenzas. Since the 'cellist did not introduce a cadenza by Reinecke, we should be duly grateful. Mr. Becker played with smooth and beautiful tone and with a technic that was almost always sure and at times brilliant. It was a very pleasant exhibition of the 'cellist's art.

Richard Strauss's impressions of Italy as put into music were revealed to a Boston public over 12 years ago. We also learned what Mr. Arthur Weld thought of Italy in music. Is it not high time that Mr. Gericke should make us acquainted with Gustave Charpentier's "Impressions d'Italie," a suite of marked originality? It has been played at least twice in Chicago, once or twice in New York, and it has been performed with great success in certain German cities, as Dresden and Cologne. This suite by Strauss was the result of a journey to Rome and Naples, and it was the first piece in the line of program-music with which his name is now inseparably associated. Alexander Ritter was the man that urged him to turn his back on absolute music, and so we have the row of more and more fantastic pieces, of which "Don Quixote" and "Ein Heldenleben" are still unknown to us. It would be more to the point to produce one of these two works than to revive the much earlier suits. Yet there are interesting pages, especially in the third movement, where there are curious and successful orchestral effects. The first two movements are not strongly contrasted, and together they beget monotony.

* * *

There will be no concert next week. The program of the concert Jan. 25 will include Haydn's Symphony in G, No. 6; Dvorak's Rhapsody, No. 3; Wagner's "Huldigungsmarsch." Melba will sing an aria from Mozart's "Idomeneo" and Handel's "Sweet Bird."

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, JAN. 13, 1901.

ELEVENTH SYMPHONY CONCERT.

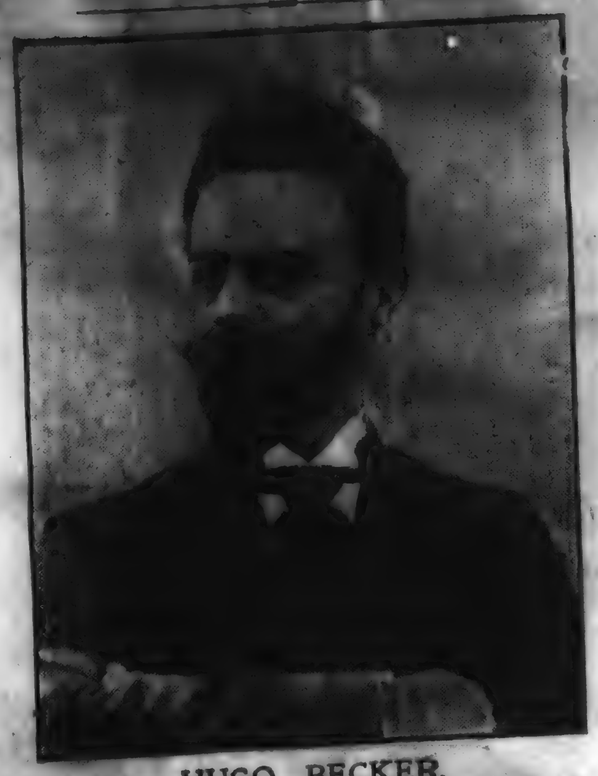
The program for the 11th symphony concert and rehearsal introduced the German cellist, Hugo Becker, as soloist in Haydn's concerto in D for cello. The other numbers were Schumann's overture, scherso and finale, op 52, and the Richard Strauss symphonic fantasy, "From Italy." Mr Becker's American debut was made in a composition in which brilliancy of execution and velocity of finger work are important factors of interpretation; and certainly the technical facility which the artist displayed was surprising in its rapidity of fingering and bowing. His tones are generally of violin quality in the upper strings, but his lower notes are not of unusual power or breadth, although they are not harsh, but appear to be lacking in that "organ" quality which gives to the cello its unique position between the violins and basses, suggesting each in different parts of its register, yet having an individuality of its own.

In the three movements are two cadenzas, slow pieces for the soloist, in which Mr Becker evidenced his skill in an unmistakable manner by trills, double stopping, chords in three and four fingering and exquisite harmonics, excelling in his upper register work, which, though lacking sometimes in delicacy, was excellent in intonation and exceedingly pyrotechnical in form. His fast passage work as a whole surprised his auditors and if at his future recitals here Mr Becker shows equal ability in interpretating compositions of a gentler and more cantabile nature the encomiums in his advance heralding will be found to be justified. He was very cordially received and the plaudits at the close of his performance indicated that he had made a most favorable impression.

The Schumann number was read in a faultless manner by Mr Gericke, who gave to the first movement the suggestion of the theatric overture which this part demands and bringing out all the delicacy and verve of the second part with charming effect. The brilliant finale was as joyous and graceful in treatment as one could wish, and the whole performance was one delightful to hear. The Strauss fantasy went admirably, each "tone picture" being presented in its proper, fantastic color, the finale calling for special commendation, possibly because of its peculiarity in regards to the unusual scoring given to the percussion instruments.

The next concerts will be given Jan 25 and 26, with Mme Melba as soloist. She will sing arias by Mozart and Handel, and the orchestral number will comprise Haydn's sixth symphony, Dvorak's "Rhapsody" No. 3 and the "Huldigung's Marsch," Wagner.

THE SOLOIST AT THE SYMPHONY.



HUGO BECKER.

The celebrated 'cellist who will play with the Symphony orchestra this week, and thus make his first appearance in Boston, was born at Strassburg, Feb. 18, 1864. He is a son of Jean Becker, a violinist, who founded the Florentine Quartet. After his father's death (1884) he was first 'cellist of various orchestras. He now lives at Frankfort, as a teacher in the Hoch Conservatory and a member of the Heermann Quartet.

THE DRAMATIC REVIEW.

Symphony patrons will have a rest this week as the orchestra is away in other cities giving illustrations of the real thing. Mme. Melba sings at the concert the week following. I regret that she is to sing the Handelian scene, "Sweet bird, etc.," for the bird is rather ancient just now and hardly sweet enough for our day, even though there is the well known flute obbligato which Andre Maquarre will play on this occasion.

I don't exactly remember when Mme. Melba has sang anything new, at these or other concerts, but it is a long, long time.

MONDAY, JANUARY 14, 1901.

Symphony Hall: Boston Symphony Orchestra

The programme of the eleventh Symphony concert, last Saturday evening, was as follows:

Schumann: Overture, Scherzo and Finale, opus 52.
Haydn: Concerto for Violoncello, in D major.
Richard Strauss: Symphonic Fantasy, "Aus Italien," opus 16.

Mr. Hugo Becker was the solo 'cellist.

Schumann's Overture, Scherzo and Finale had not been heard here since 1897, when it was played under Mr. Paur. A good deal of water has passed under the bridges since then, as they say in Paris, and one might well have been in some doubt as to how the composition would sound, after so much experience with post-Wagnerians. But it has kept itself very fresh; it sounded admirably. In one way, better than ever before in this city; for, although the acoustics of Symphony Hall do not give it overmuch wealth of tone, the distinctness with which things are heard there allows certain rhythmic details to come to the surface as they never did in the old Music Hall. You now hear the rest (pardon the bull) before the sixteenth note in that triplet figure of the Scherzo; it no longer sounds like an ordinary dotted triplet. By the way, I wonder whether anyone has noticed that this theme of the Scherzo begins as very nearly a minor version of the theme of the coda of the preceding Overture? The performance was exceedingly fine.

Richard Strauss's "Aus Italien," the first large orchestral work in which he struck out into his newer direction, had not been heard here since 1888—not for thirteen years. It seemed something quite terrible then, though, in spite of its apparent extravagance, it gave one a foreboding that they would reckon ill who left Richard Strauss out. Since then we have heard his "Don Juan," "Tod und Verklärung," "Till Eulenspiegel" and "Also sprach Zarathustra;" and, now that we return to this "Aus Italien," we find it to be quite plain sailing, logical, and well-balanced. The poetic essence of the work, to which one could not be entirely blind even at first, now stands out in beautiful clearness. Perhaps each one of the four movements is a little overlong; but that is a common fault in our times. As a piece of coloring it seems to me even finer than any of Strauss's later works; true, he has discovered gorgeous orchestral hues in his more recent compositions such as are not to be found in this one; but here he has more variety. There is a certain monotony of splendor in the coloring of "Don Juan" and "Zarathustra;" it is as if each one of these works were fashioned out of one and the same magnificent web, and the only variety you get comes from different ways of lighting it up—holding it to the light at different angles, now turning up, now turning down the light itself. "Aus Italien," on the other hand, shows more original variety of hue, there is contrast in the colors themselves.

For picturesque suggestiveness this composition can rank with anything you please in music: what a vastness of solicitude there is in that first "Campagna" movement! what a spiritual chill comes from those high tones of the piccolo-flute! It is as if, amid the sunshine splendor of the landscape, you suddenly felt the ice of loneliness. How the retreating waves rattle over the pebbles on the Sorrento beach! And, in the Finale, how admirably the composer has got the swing and lilt of "Iamo, iamo!" without coming near enough to the tune to be trivial; he has retained all its life and spirit, while eliminating its vulgarity. And the tune is a bit of local color in itself; you can hardly go a mile anywhere in Italy without hearing it. The performance was admirable in the extreme; the thing was at once made to "sound well" and given with due life and force. Perhaps somewhat more might have been made of that opening cymbal-stroke in the last movement; it is reported that, when the work was put into rehearsal at the Munich Odeum, Strauss had great difficulty in getting the cymbal-player to hit hard enough, he wished him to play it as loud as he possibly could. This violence was rather toned down last Saturday evening. But this is a detail.

Mr. Hugo Becker made good his high reputation as one of the leading 'cellists of the world. In matters of technique—both left hand and bowing—warm beauty of tone, grace and naturalness of phrasing—he evidently ranks with the very best; he plays with true virtuosity, in the best sense. Of warmth of temperament he seems to have less. But then, even with all the added Gevaert frills, Haydn's concerto does not call for much display of temperament. And, if the truth be told, a 'cello concerto is no longer a source of unmixed enjoyment; one listens to it respectfully, as paying well-earned homage to the performer's artistry and virtuosity, not for one's own pleasure. A player like Mr. Becker deserves to be heard; he has won that right. By dint of native talent and industriously acquired technique and musicianship, he has fully earned the right to play concertos in public; and we, the public, recognize that right by listening to him. But Oh, the lamps have gone out, the lamps have gone out! It should be said, however, that Mr. Becker won a triumphant success with the audience, and was recalled again and again with unaffected ardor.

The next programme—for Friday afternoon, Jan. 25, and Saturday evening, Jan. 26 (there being no rehearsal nor concert this week)—is: Haydn, symphony in G major, "Surprise" (B. & H., No. 6); Mozart, aria from "Idomeneo;" Dvorak, Slavonic rhapsody No. 3, in A-flat major, opus 45; Handel, scena, "Sweet bird that shun'st the noise of folly," from "D'Allegro, il Penseroso ed il Moderato;" Wagner, Huldigungs-Marsch. Madame Melba will be the singer.

W. F. A.

---

[68]

Boston Journal.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 13, 1901.

The program of the 11th Symphony concert, which was given last night in Symphony Hall, Mr. Gericke conductor, was as follows:

Overture, Scherzo, and Finale.....Schumann
Concerto for 'cello in D.....Haydn
"From Italy".....Richard Strauss

This concert does not call for extended comment.

Mr. Hugo Becker, who played for the first time in Boston, is a 'cellist of large reputation, and he showed that this reputation is deserved. He chose a matter-of-fact concerto by Haydn, to which Gevaert, I understand, added cadenzas. Since the 'cellist did not introduce a cadenza by Reinecke, we should be duly grateful. Mr. Becker played with smooth and beautiful tone and with a technic that was almost always sure and at times brilliant. It was a very pleasant exhibition of the 'cellist's art.

Richard Strauss's impressions of Italy as put into music were revealed to a Boston public over 12 years ago. We also learned what Mr. Arthur Weld thought of Italy in music. Is it not high time that Mr. Gericke should make us acquainted with Gustave Charpentier's "Impressions d'Italie," a suite of marked originality? It has been played at least twice in Chicago, once or twice in New York, and it has been performed with great success in certain German cities, as Dresden and Cologne. This suite by Strauss was the result of a journey to Rome and Naples, and it was the first piece in the line of program-music with which his name is now inseparably associated. Alexander Ritter was the man that urged him to turn his back on absolute music, and so we have the row of more and more fantastic pieces, of which "Don Quixote" and "Ein Heldenleben" are still unknown to us. It would be more to the point to produce one of these two works than to revive the much earlier suite. Yet there are interesting pages, especially in the third movement, where there are curious and successful orchestral effects. The first two movements are not strongly contrasted, and together they beget monotony.

* * *

There will be no concert next week. The program of the concert Jan. 26 will include Haydn's Symphony in G, No. 6; Dvorak's Rhapsody, No. 3; Wagner's "Huldigungsmarsch." Melba will sing an aria from Mozart's "Idomeneo" and Handel's "Sweet Bird."

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, JAN. 13, 1901.

ELEVENTH SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The program for the 11th symphony concert and rehearsal introduced the German cellist, Hugo Becker, as soloist in Haydn's concerto in D for cello. The other numbers were Schumann's overture, scherzo and finale, op 52, and the Richard Strauss symphonic fantasy, "From Italy." Mr Becker's American debut was made in a composition in which brilliancy of execution and velocity of finger work are important factors of interpretation; and certainly the technical facility which the artist displayed was surprising in its rapidity of fingering and bowing. His tones are generally of violin quality in the upper strings, but his lower notes are not of unusual power or breadth, although they are not harsh, but appear to be lacking in that "organ" quality which gives to the cello its unique position between the violins and basses, suggesting each in different parts of its register, yet having an individuality of its own.

In the three movements are two cadenzas, slow pieces for the soloist, in which Mr Becker evidenced his skill in an unmistakable manner by trills, double stopping, chords in three and four fingering and exquisite harmonics, excelling in his upper register work, which, though lacking sometimes in delicacy, was excellent in intonation and exceedingly pyrotechnical in form. His fast passage work as a whole surprised his auditors and if at his future recitals here Mr Becker shows equal ability in interpretating compositions of a gentler and more cantabile nature the encomiums in his advance heralding will be found to be justified. He was very cordially received and the plaudits at the close of his performance indicated that he had made a most favorable impression.

The Schumann number was read in a faultless manner by Mr Gericke, who gave to the first movement the suggestion of the theatric overture which this part demands and bringing out all the delicacy and verve of the second part with charming effect. The brilliant finale was as joyous and graceful in treatment as one could wish, and the whole performance was one delightful to hear. The Strauss fantasy went admirably, each "tone picture" being presented in its proper, fantastic color, the finale calling for special commendation, possibly because of its peculiarity in regards to the unusual scoring given to the percussion instruments.

The next concerts will be given Jan 25 and 26, with Mme Melba as soloist. She will sing arias by Mozart and Handel, and the orchestral number will comprise Haydn's sixth symphony, Dvorak's "Rhapsody" No. 3 and the "Huldigung's Marsch," Wagner.

THE SOLOIST AT THE SYMPHONY.

HUGO BECKER.

The celebrated 'cellist who will play with the Symphony orchestra this week, and thus make his first appearance in Boston, was born at Strassburg, Feb. 13, 1864. He is a son of Jean Becker, a violinist, who founded the Florentine Quartet. After his father's death (1884) he was first 'cellist of various orchestras. He now lives at Frankfort, as a teacher in the Hoch Conservatory and a member of the Heermann Quartet.

THE DRAMATIC REVIEW.

Symphony patrons will have a rest this week as the orchestra is away in other cities giving illustrations of the real thing. Mme. Melba sings at the concert the week following. I regret that she is to sing the Handelian scene, "Sweet bird, etc." for the bird is rather ancient just now and hardly sweet enough for our day, even though there is the well known flute obbligato which Andre Maquarre will play on this occasion.

I don't exactly remember when Mme. Melba has sang anything new, at these or other concerts, but it is a long, long time.

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, JANUARY 14, 1901.

Symphony Hall: Boston Symphony Orchestra

The programme of the eleventh Symphony concert, last Saturday evening, was as follows:

Schumann: Overture, Scherzo and Finale, opus 52.
Haydn: Concerto for Violoncello, in D major.
Richard Strauss: Symphonic Fantasy, "Aus Italien," opus 16.

Mr. Hugo Becker was the solo 'cellist.

Schumann's Overture, Scherzo and Finale had not been heard here since 1897, when it was played under Mr. Paur. A good deal of water has passed under the bridges since then, as they say in Paris, and one might well have been in some doubt as to how the composition would sound, after so much experience with post-Wagnerians. But it has kept itself very fresh; it sounded admirably. In one way, better than ever before in this city; for, although the acoustics of Symphony Hall do not give it overmuch wealth of tone, the distinctness with which things are heard there allows certain rhythmic details to come to the surface as they never did in the old Music Hall. You now hear the rest (pardon the bull) before the sixteenth note in that triplet figure of the Scherzo; it no longer sounds like an ordinary dotted triplet. By the way, I wonder whether anyone has noticed that this theme of the Scherzo begins as very nearly a minor version of the theme of the coda of the preceding Overture? The performance was exceedingly fine.

Richard Strauss's "Aus Italien," the first large orchestral work in which he struck out into his newer direction, had not been heard here since 1888—not for thirteen years. It seemed something quite terrible then, though, in spite of its apparent extravagance, it gave one a foreboding that they would reckon ill who left Richard Strauss out. Since then we have heard his "Don Juan," "Tod und Verklärung," "Till Eulenspiegel" and "Also sprach Zarathustra;" and, now that we return to this "Aus Italien," we find it to be quite plain sailing, logical, and well-balanced. The poetic essence of the work, to which one could not be entirely blind even at first, now stands out in beautiful clearness. Perhaps each one of the four movements is a little overlong; but that is a common fault in our times. As a piece of coloring it seems to me even finer than any of Strauss's later works; true, he has discovered gorgeous orchestral hues in his more recent compositions such as are not to be found in this one; but here he has more variety. There is a certain monotony of splendor in the coloring of "Don Juan" and "Zarathustra;" it is as if each one of these works were fashioned out of one and the same magnificent web, and the only variety you get comes from different ways of lighting it up—holding it to the light at different angles, now turning up, now turning down the light itself. "Aus Italien," on the other hand, shows more original variety of hue, there is contrast in the colors themselves.

For picturesque suggestiveness this composition can rank with anything you please in music: what a vastness of solicitude there is in that first "Campagna" movement! what a spiritual chill comes from those high tones of the piccolo-flute! It is as if, amid the sunshine splendor of the landscape, you suddenly felt the ice of loneliness. How the retreating waves rattle over the pebbles on the Sorrento beach! And, in the Finale, how admirably the composer has got the swing and lilt of "Iamo, Iamo!" without coming near enough to the tune to be trivial; he has retained all its life and spirit, while eliminating its vulgarity. And the tune is a bit of local color in itself; you can hardly go a mile anywhere in Italy without hearing it. The performance was admirable in the extreme; the thing was at once made to "sound well" and given with due life and force. Perhaps somewhat more might have been made of that opening cymbal-stroke in the last movement; it is reported that, when the work was put into rehearsal at the Munich Odeum, Strauss had great difficulty in getting the cymbal-player to hit hard enough, he wished him to play it as loud as he possibly could. This violence was rather toned down last Saturday evening. But this is a detail.

Mr. Hugo Becker made good his high reputation as one of the leading 'cellists of the world. In matters of technique—both left hand and bowing—warm beauty of tone, grace and naturalness of phrasing—he evidently ranks with the very best; he plays with true virtuosity, in the best sense. Of warmth of temperament he seems to have less. But then, even with all the added Gevaert frills, Haydn's concerto does not call for much display of temperament. And, if the truth be told, a 'cello concerto is no longer a source of unmixed enjoyment; one listens to it respectfully, as paying well-earned homage to the performer's artistry and virtuosity, not for one's own pleasure. A player like Mr. Becker deserves to be heard; he has won that right. By dint of native talent and industriously acquired technique and musicianship, he has fully earned the right to play concertos in public; and we, the public, recognize that right by listening to him. But Oh, the lamps have gone out, the lamps have gone out! It should be said, however, that Mr. Becker won a triumphant success with the audience, and was recalled again and again with unaffected ardor.

The next programme—for Friday afternoon, Jan. 25, and Saturday evening, Jan. 26 (there being no rehearsal nor concert this week)—is: Haydn, symphony in G major, "Surprise" (B. & H., No. 6); Mozart, aria from "Idomeneo;" Dvorak, Slavonic rhapsody No. 3, in A-flat major, opus 45; Handel, scena, "Sweet bird that shun'st the noise of folly," from "D'Allegro, il Penseroso ed il Moderato;" Wagner, Huldigungs-Marsch. Madame Melba will be the singer.

W. F. A.

[68]

THE MAIL AND EXPRESS

Broadway and Fulton St., New York.

FRIDAY EVENING, JANUARY 18, 1901.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Brings Forward Music Old Enough to Be New Here—Debut of Hugo Becker, the 'Cellist—Harold Bauer Plays Again.

If there be a barrel large enough to contain the repertory of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Gericke must have turned it upside down and picked three parcels from what had been the lowest stratum of its contents, in order to find the scores which lay open on his desk last evening at Carnegie Hall. They were Robert Schumann's overture, scherzo and finale, opus 52; Josef Haydn's concerto for violoncello, in D major, and Richard Strauss's symphonic fantasia, "In Italy," opus 16. All of this music had been played here before, at one time or another, but none of it was familiar.

Besides all this quasi-novelty, there was a completely new factor in last night's doings, in the person of the soloist. Mr. Hugo Becker, the German 'cellist, made his first American appearance last week in Boston, and a New York audience heard him for the first time last night. Mr. Becker, who is fortunate in the possession of a splendid old violoncello, used it with good appreciation of its capacities, and produces from ripened wood and strongly drawn bow a tone of unusual resonance and fullness, liquid and mellow, yet not lacking in masculinity. In the lower register, particularly, the quality of his instrument is singularly noble, while the high notes, instead of sounding thin and attenuated and sentimental, have the rich color of a viol da gamba.

Mr. Becker, however, does not rely upon his beautiful tone. The Haydn concerto, with its clear and placid statement of musical axioms, was played with just the simplicity of style demanded. The phrasing was careful, the scales and arpeggios were generally exact, in spite of an occasional slip, and the soloist made no effort to read into Haydn's pleasant score emotions and problems of which the good old composer little dreamed. In the first cadenza, written by Gevaert long after Haydn's time, one had a glimpse of what Mr. Becker might do in music of a more modern sort, for Gevaert did not scruple to obtain contrast in the cadenza by writing after his own manner, rather than imitating Haydn. This glimpse held good promise of the 'cellist's abilities, which will probably be revealed in newer music, with the Philharmonic Society, not long hence.

* * *

It would take a long bridge to join Schumann's overture, scherzo and finale to Richard Strauss's symphonic fantasia, "In Italy." This Schumann music, which is not characteristic of the composer at his best, is curiously plain spoken, and sometimes rather shallow. Did Mr. Gericke purposely set it ahead of the Haydn concerto? If he thought thus to prepare for the latter, his course was justified, for there are not many passages in this Schumann trilogy, especially in the first movement, which take one deeper into the heart of things than the old Haydn work itself. It does not set forth the real Schumann, who was splendidly emotional, always fighting a hard battle and winning it, or revelling in fantasy and mysterious or capricious beauty.

Richard Strauss was yet in his early twenties when his symphonic fantasia was written, and the four disunited movements of "In Italy" indicate his not wholly withdrawn allegiance to classic forms. Yet in substance, the work looks ahead to the radical days that were coming, which began, one may say, with his "Don Juan" (opus 20), and continued with "Macbeth," "Tod und Verklarung," "Till Eulenspiegel," "Zarathustra," "Don Quixote" and "Ein Heldenleben."

* * *

The four movements of the Italian fantasia are entitled, respectively, "On the Campagna" (andante in G major), "Amid Rome's Ruins" (allegro molto con brio, in C major), "On the Shore of Sorrento" (andantino in A major) and "Neapolitan Folk-Life" (allegro molto in G major).

They are free in form, and are simply tone pictures, in which the composer's emotions, boyish but sometimes poetic, have been sketched out. The first movement, with its clumsy changes from the common chords of one key to those of another, seems younger than the rest, in the sense that the German wonder-boy was less able to translate his impressions into worthy musical themes. Absolute paucity and banality are evident here, more than once, though the grand manner, fairly apostolic in its earnestness, is constantly used.

"Amid Rome's Ruins" has a touch of levity, not ineffective. The best of the four movements, perhaps, is "On the Shore of Sorrento," with its wonderfully expressive suggestion, by rising and falling chromatics on violins and woodwind, of the movement of the Mediterranean waters. As the composer depicts them in music, these waves must have been fairly greasy, so insidiously and without friction do they slip along. "Neapolitan Folk-Life," with its comic use of popular songs of the day, is full of vim. Strauss must have felt about the place as the young Gounod did in 1840, when he wrote that Naples was a "screaming, quarreling, rushing, shrieking, lunching city."

The composition, as a whole, is much too long. Mr. Gericke and his men took forty-five minutes to play it last night, and the audience was depleted before it ended. The performance of this work was as dexterous and delightfully clear as it could have been made. The Boston orchestra is a very perfect piece of machinery, and Mr. Gericke, who helped to make it so, knows its every peculiarity.

The Boston orchestra will give its third matinee to-morrow afternoon, at Carnegie Hall, with a different programme from last night's.

SAMUEL SWIFT.

The Sun.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 18, 1901.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Concert—Harold Bauer's Third Recital.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its third concert of the season in Carnegie Hall last night. Mr. Gericke had prepared a short, sensible and well-contrasted programme; for the Haydn violoncello concerto coming between Schumann's opus 52 and Richard Strauss's "In Italy" was like a picture hung in the best light and position. Schumann's Overture, Scherzo and Finale, literally this composer's Unfinished Symphony, contains most agreeable writing. The scoring of the two first movements is light, airy, delicate. In the Finale there is a modicum of the old Schumann color monotone. Curiously enough, the resemblance in the kernel of the figure which forms the overture's basis may be found in the allegretto of Beethoven's F Major Symphony. Sanity and a Mendelssohnian suavity prevail in much of this work—a genial, though not a work of genius.

Mr. Hugo Becker, a German violoncello virtuoso, with an excellent Continental reputation, played Haydn's musical and effective concerto in D, with almost unimpeachable technics, though without much charm of tone or individuality. Mr. Becker is a tall, soldierly-looking man who takes his art seriously. There was no "scooping," no fond dandling of his instrument, no heroics or fireworks. Even the Gevaert cadenza brought forth no vain digital display or æsthetic posturing. All was dignified, solid, scholarly—and Teutonic. His tone is full, resonant, but not liquid. It is ductile from bottom to top, and its timbre is musical, if not exactly sensuous.

The magnificent Stradivarius 'cello on which he plays is one that must contain angelic voices within its shapely form; but Mr. Becker belongs to the sober school of 'cello players. He aims at interpreting the composer's intentions, so we felt that there were many possibilities and much muted eloquence within the resounding walls of his instrument. Jean Gerardy played this same concerto here some weeks ago and though the German's interpretation is more intellectual, more in the cool key of Haydn, the Belgian youth plucked at your heartstrings. However, of Becker's success last night there was no doubt. He was recalled four or five times but the wise provision which discourages encores at these concerts bade him refuse the flattering invitations. We hope that this sterling artist will later play some of the more modern concertos for violoncello, such as the Lalo and Saint-Saëns or, better still, because of its novelty, the one by Eugen d'Albert.

Thoroughly enjoyable was the Richard Strauss Symphonic Fantasia, which closed the concert. An early work, it contains in solution much that we recognize in the Strauss of to-day. This composition has not been heard here for over a decade; then it was pronounced noisy and unmusical. To-day it sounds as clear as a Mozart rondo. Here is a chance for the anti-Strauss contingent to wag wise heads. "If Strauss had but adhered to this brilliant and comprehensible style"—and in ten years some of us may groan over the decadence of a Strauss whose "Don Quixote," also "Spraeh Zaraflustra" and "Ein Heldenleben" were miracles of music, pure and undefiled! The world moves quickly in its musical grooves, for music is but a disporting dream mirror always slightly in advance of ourselves.

The band played very well, excepting a slip in the wood wind in the second appearance of the trio of Schumann's Scherzo; there was also a false entry among the strings in a Strauss movement. The Fantasia is largely an affair of color, mood and atmosphere. This holds good of the first three sections. In the gay picture of Neapolitan folk life, a very common Neapolitan melody "Funiculi, Funicula" is treated with consummate art. The scoring throughout proclaims the master. Despite critical cavilling Richard Strauss bids fair to become our modern music maker; no longer Schumann, as Robert Browning once sang. There was a large audience present.

The Evening Sun.

Subscriptions by Mail, Post Paid.

THE EVENING SUN, per month..... .50
THE EVENING SUN, per year.....$6.00

FRIDAY, JANUARY 18, 1901.

BOSTON SYMPHONY BENEFITS BY A GOOD PROGRAMME.

Schumann and Richard Strauss in Historical Review—The German 'Cellist, Hugo Becker, Evokes Enthusiasm with Haydn Airs and Puts On No Airs of His Own

